Those who are intrigued by the novel, the garish, or the weird in music may enjoy investigating an odd recording, made by Ducretet-Thomson for London, called Panorama of Musique Concrète (DTL-93090). The "composers" are Henry, Schaeffer, and Arthuys, who have experimented in Paris with the possibility of assembling a kind of music from sounds recorded on tape, after which the sounds are altered through variations in speed.

These sounds are then combined through a montage process in such a way as to be heard in themes, forms, counterpoint, etc. The results have something of a ghastly fascination and appear especially suitable for film scores accompanying science fiction tales.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 17 1957

BOSTON NAME BANKER TRUSTEE OF HUB SYMPHONY

BOSTON (AP)—E. Morton Jennings Jr., a vice president of the First National Bank of Boston, yesterday was elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jennings, a 1928 graduate of Dartmouth College, is a resident of Needham. He has served several terms as treasurer of the New England Council.

E. Morton Jennings Jr. New Symphony Trustee

At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, election to the board of E. Morton Jennings Jr., a vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston, was confirmed.

Jennings, with the First National Bank since 1929 and now vice-president in the Credit-Loan Division, will devote himself to building up support for the orchestra in the business community. The First National Bank has made a substantial contribution to the orchestra, through sponsorship of a concert on the Esplanade last season.

Staats-Zeitung
20 January 1957
MUSIK

Carnegie Hall
Den schwer

Richard Burgin, als Leiter der Boston Symphony ist ein tüchtiger, unbedingt zuverlässiger und vielleicht gerade deswegen wenig aufregender Dirigent. Die Fünfte von Schostakowitsch und — Beethovens Fünfte. Macht man jetzt "numerische" Programme? Um mehr Verehrung für Beethoven wird gebeten. Im zweiten Satz des Schostakowitschwerks erlabte man sich am zweiten Thema (Satz I) als einer der raren Inspirationen heutiger Musik. Leidenschaften und Gedanken der Zeit finden hier Ausdruck, ohne russische oder rassische Einengung. — An den symphonischen Satz "Ruby" des 1955 verstorbenen Honegger kommt das Verständnis leichter heran, wenn man nicht auf Programmmusik eingestellt lauscht. Sportleidenschaften der Zuschauer (und Hörer!) sucht der schweizer Komponist auszudrücken, dabei weckt er zufällig, wie durch das Wettrennen der Streichersechzehntel nach den schmetternden Blechakkorden die Assoziation eines richtigen Rugby-"Gedränges".

Debussys "Rondes de Printemps" ließ Naturweben, Windrauschen, die Vegetation durcheilende Wellen erkennen. Sehr liebevoll nahm sich Ralph Gomberg mit seiner Oboe des chansons "Nous n'irons plus au bois" an — aber mein Turgot, Herr Burgin, rauscht im Lenz in den Stämmen, daß die Säfte überschäumen. Ravels "Pavane" wurde zum Tand nicht als Trauermarsch, sondern als höfischer spanischer Tanz aufgefaßt. Das Morgenständchen eines Narren (Alborado del Gracioso) desselben Ravel stellt man sich närrischer, nachtrunkener, torkelnd eher als träumerisch vor.

Aber das Essentliche kam erst nach der Pause: Die 4. Symphonie in G-Dur mit Sopransolo von Gustav Mahler. Vergessen wir nicht, daß wir dieses Wiederhören den Bostonians verdanken. Mahler beginnt wie Johann Strauß mit sorglosen Walzern, etwas zum Mitsingen klingt auf, Vögel zwitschern dazwischen. Alles ist einfach, diatonisch. "Gemächlich" — "in gemächlicher Bewegung" — "ruhevoll" — "sehr behaglich" steht über den einzelnen Sätzen und so soll uns zumut werden. Im zweiten Satz lieh II. Konzertmeister (der erste ist Richard Burgin) Alfred Krips (Verwandtschaft mit Josef?) eine zweite bereitliegende, primitiver Geige richtig "fideln". Ist's Freund Hein, der da ungebeten aufspielt? Das Thema dieses Teils ist verdächtig tief empfunden.

Aber, leider, kann der Hörer nicht umhin, stärkste Nähe und Abhängigkeit vom langsamen Satz der Neunten (Beethovens) festzustellen. Zuletzt stimmt der Sopran mit viel Koloratur und sinngemäßen Tempiverbreiterungen "Der Himmel hängt voller Geigen" an, aus "Des Knaben Wunderhorn", während das Lämmchen aus der Oboe blökt, die Ochsen mit Fagott- und Kontrabaß-Stimme muhen. Nancy Carr war bemüht, den vorgeschriebenen kindlich staunenden Ton zu finden. Denn wir sind ja im Bauernhimmel, der ein wahres Schlaraffenland zu sein scheint. Petrus — hier verbreitert sich das Tempo — sieht wohlwollend zu. Liturgisch weihevoll wird die Weis', wenn die Englein das Brot backen. Ein langes, melodien erfülltes Orchestervorspiel, dann die letzte lebensfrohe Strophe: "Kein' Musik ist ja nicht auf Erden, die unserer verglichen kann werden". — Voller beglückter Friede tritt ein, wenn Baßgeige und Harfe langsam die Mitternachtsstunde geschlagen haben.

H. P.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 56,950
JAN 17 1957

Concertmaster

During most of the season Richard Burgin, 64, sits unobtrusively at the violin section's first desk of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he has for the past 36 years. At the end of a performance the conductor or guest soloist will shake his hand. If he just happens to be someone as in[illegible] as Leonard Bernstein, he may even [illegible] cheeks. For the rest, the concertmaster's job is done out of the public view, preparing the violins for the effects the conductor wants, marking the bowings, in general setting the tone of the orchestra.

But unlike most other concertmasters in the U.S., Polish-born Richard Burgin gets two or three weeks a year on the podium. Last week he led the Boston Symphony at Manhattan's Carnegie Hall, in a concert of Vaughan Williams, Beethoven and Shostakovich, which he delivered with craftsmanship and no melodrama whatever. "I know what I want, I know how to tell them what I want, and they give it to me," he said, adding as an afterthought: "just as they give it to any other conductor, only maybe to me a little quicker."

The first violinist did not always play second fiddle to the conductor. In the small 18th century [illegible], the other musicians often took [illegible] from the first violin, but growing [illegible] orchestras, complex scores and the [illegible] demand for a good show have made [illegible] conductor virtually irreplaceable [illegible] concertmaster has far more to do with running the orchestra than meets the eye.

Under Conductor Charles Munch, who used to be a concertmaster himself, Concertmaster Burgin's job moves along well-established grooves, but it was different under the late Serge Koussevitzky, whose famous, poetic perorations had to be

Walter Daran

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S BURGIN
First violin was more than second fiddle.

translated into technical terms, e.g., how to make the violins sound like first love or the flutes like ice breaking.

Although Burgin is forgetful in his private life (once he even left his Stradivarius on his commuter train), he has a legendary memory for music. And many times he has saved the situation when a conductor lost his place—by simply playing on until the [illegible] found himself again. In the words of the late Felix Weingartner, Burgin says: "As long as even one piccolo is playing, we don't give up."

Many concertmasters are tempted by a virtuoso's career. But Burgin says: "I know many virtuosos and I do not envy them. They tell me what it's like to play the same few pieces over and over and know they have to go here and then be there. Not for me. I like the orchestra."

Next week, after his spell in the limelight, Concertmaster Burgin will be back at his accustomed chair in Boston. He will mark the bowings efficiently, play his passages beautifully, and go home to Brookline on his usual commuter train, where trainmen have instructions to see that he does not lose his Stradivarius.

TIME, JANUARY 21, 1957

Musical Courier
(NYC)
February, 1957

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, Jan. 15.—Despite a raging blizzard outside, the house was filled with loyal subscribers and admirers of Monteux, who rewarded the bold, the brave, and the frostbitten with his magnificent music making and endearing charm. He comes on stage like nothing so much as a genial walrus whose whiskers you want to tweak, just to hear him laugh. But there is no nonsense when the music starts, as it did delightfully with Stravinsky's reconstruction of Pergolesi tunes, called "Pulcinella," which are touched with Stravinsky's own penetrating intellect and special magic. Then came Brahms' Second Symphony in one of the loveliest, most limpid, and most serene readings we have ever heard, all as vernal as anyone could wish for on a winter night. In the Allegretto grazioso, the strings were especially fine as they swung out a long, lilting phrase as a young girl might swirl out her taffeta at a dance. Monteux kept things moving, but never hurried anything or forced an effect. He was bravoed from the floor and applauded, not with beating bows, but by the respectful bare hands of his men. We fled, glad and glowing, into the snowstorm, confident that Debussy and Wagner, after intermission, would be in good hands.

K.H.

ympho

on Progr

are forever seeking a symbolic light.

In the opera house
underlines the dreaml on the stage, and bot the direction of the d vorced from the drama
sic has the effect of
from darkness to eluci for a few brief momen dispersing itself into starless blue. It is a lo derer, and one wond concert hall is its hom

Perhaps Mr. Mon
long since earned the
play what he pleases,
are certain fundamen
ciples in program bui should be observed, a if ignored, result in
of interest.

We admire and c humanity, his kindl musicianship, and we tinue to look forwa guest appearances a in the past. We also ever, for more of th
we heard yesterday i nificent Elgar variat
he was vivid, dynam

d 11
from De-ction ucles,
n the Strathis oving light
light,
rhaps,
of sun
isande or Deof the night
people

PHONY ORCHE

Is Guest Cond

ORCHES-tonight,
—Saturas guest program
"Claer-Egmont" mony of the pro-om the rgolesi);
Inter-lisande'
(first "Eng-

figure, nforced were a ny Hall
e again musician est conmphony
ears the entirely entirely e to the the con-
mand of seriously the play-almost as e places ween sec-here were rseness of t constant nd conducleadership

tion which their work

of ensem-
orchestral
But it was tent. Strall, Debussy
Variations
, careless in
as none of should bind a string of and much beneath the zzed rather

d why? A r first when tly, in the chestra. His ear, his beat, his ener

mand, these singly or can be involved. W reason, the masterly M
no longer in evidence

It was an interestin play so much of the portion of "Pelleas
sande," but the total
of sameness. In the stage action, the pro drama provide the li
tinuity and variety
missing yesterday. I long and nearly sopo
sion of fragments of without structure or all operatic music, in speaking, is in itself
and this, of "Pelleas
sande" in such quantit
tion did not benefit by

Toscanini Tribute

Before the stated p
Boston Symphony h memory of the late A canini with the largh
is titled "Claerchen's D
the "Egmont" music of
This was an appropr
since Beethoven was canini's most cherished
But somehow the musi
too small for the memo
so huge a figure in Much better (and well
the more dramatic items used for the purpose) w been the slow mover
Beethoven's last Strin
the F major, Op. 135.
himself once made a ve
for massed strings.

By way of footnote,
if any choral group in few days will perform canini's memory the on completely suited to
That is the prevailin
chorus from Verdi's
the "Va, pensiero,"
sung spontaneously by
at one of the funeral s
Verdi.

Charles Munch will week to conduct t premiere of Sir William Cello Concerto, with G

olo The program wi he first pe of Randa
A to Nahant
d with Beethoven
y.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

t as Red Wings In

Unusual Horns Played By Boston Musicians

Recordings

By Harold Rogers

"Spotlight on Brass" is the title of a new Vox album (DL-300) featuring the musicianship of Roger Voisin, Harold Meek, and Joseph Orosz, all of whom are listed in the annotations as members of a "well known" Boston orchestra." This amusing and slightly silly designation is doubtless the result of one of those mysterious professional complications concerning committals and contracts. Why not come right out and say these men are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

In this album the spotlight is truly on the brass—on a gamut of instruments ranging from the elephant horn, through such items as serpents, hunting horns, trumpets, cornets, bugles, trombones, euphoniums, and tubas. It is an illustrational album especially suitable for music libraries, musicologists, the classroom, and for those who have some particular interest in the evolution of brass instruments. Consisting of scales and typical melodies, the program will not appeal to the listener looking for concerted band or brass music.

* * *

If, however, you have the kind of curiosity that has plagued you about the sound of the serpent (several of which are on display in the Symphony Hall collection of antique instruments), you can now satisfy your ambition. The church serpent and calvary serpent, as played by Mr. Orosz, sound much better than they look. In appearance they are almost ferociously reptilian. In sound they are more like a mild-mannered bassoon.

The instruments heard on this disk were chosen mainly from the Belle Skinner collection at Holyoke, Mass., and from the Casadesus Collection in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Háry János, as nearly everyone knows, is that teller of tall tales from Hungarian folklore, preserved since 1926 in the music of an opera by Zoltán Kodály. The "Háry János" Suite, taken from the opera, has long since established itself as a brilliant concert favorite, filled with spirited little marches and swirling gypsy tunes.

This Suite is now available in two recent performances — one for Epic (LC-3290) by the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam under Eduard van Beinum, the other for Decca (DL-9855) by the RIAS Symphony Orchestra of Berlin under Ferenc Fricsay. Both disks are excellently played and recorded, with the van Beinum reading perhaps a bit mellower than the Fricsay, though both are entertainingly done.

These two disks also include works by Stravinsky. Van Beinum conducts the "Firebird" Suite for Epic, and Fricsay the Divertimento (Suite de Ballet, "Le Baiser de la Fée") for Decca. In the first we hear the young Stravinsky of 1910 when he was astonishing the world with his originality; in the latter we find the composer paying charming homage to Tchaikovsky in 1928.

* * *

Angel has just brought out an appealing new recording of Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1, and Prokofiev's "Scythian" Suite, recorded by the Orchestre de la Radiodifusion Française under Igor Markevitch, a conductor especially fitted to interpret the Russian moderns with precision and power.

The Shostakovitch symphony, composed when he was 19 in 1925, is one of those contemporary pieces that almost any music lover can take to his heart. While it is unusual in melodic and formal structure, the dissonant content is low. Prokofiev's "Scythian" Suite, on the other hand, was composed 11 years earlier at a time when Prokofiev was especially audacious. Some conservative ears may yet recoil at his earthy and barbaric sounds.

Vox is continuing its commendable policy of bringing out luxury albums devoted to works by the Italian baroque composers. The latest is devoted to the Twelve Concerti Grossi, Op. 1, for strings by Locatelli (1695-1764), played by I Musici Virtuosi di Milano. The conductor is Dean Eckertsen, the young man who has already produced the de luxe albums of Corelli and Manfredini for Vox.

* * *

This latest album (DL-333) is another welcome addition to the field of recorded music, though one cannot give unstinting praise to the performances of these Locatelli works. The string players do more than a little scrubbing on their instruments, the blame for which Mr. Eckertsen can assume. Italian string players, under sensitive direction, will play like angels when performing Italian music.

This is not to discourage Mr. Eckertsen, whose labors in this direction are much appreciated, but rather to urge him to gain the polish and precision that is the essence of Italian string playing. The biographical and analytical notes by Joseph Braunstein are informatively and entertainingly written.

Those who are intrigued by the novel, the garish, or the weird in music may enjoy investigating an odd recording, made by Ducretet-Thomson for London, called Panorama of Musique Concrète (DTL-93090). The "composers" are Henry, Schaeffer, and Arthuys, who have experimented in Paris with the possibility of assembling a kind of music from sounds recorded on tape, after which the sounds are altered through variations in speed.

These sounds are then combined through a montage process in such a way as to be heard in themes, forms, counterpoint, etc. The results have something of a ghastly fascination and appear especially suitable for film scores accompanying science fiction tales.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 56,950
JAN 17 1957

BOSTON

NAME BANKER TRUSTEE OF HUB SYMPHONY

BOSTON (AP)—E. Morton Jennings Jr., a vice president of the First National Bank of Boston, yesterday was elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jenings, a 1928 graduate of Dartmouth College, is a resident of Needham. He has served several terms as treasurer of the New England Council.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 17

E. Morton Jennings Jr. New Symphony Trustee

At a meeting ... the Boston Sym... yesterday, elected ... E. Morton Jen... president of the ... vice-president of ... Bank of Boston.

Jennings ... Bank since ... president in the Credit-Loan Division, will devote his ... to building up support for the orchestra in the business community. The ... of First National Bank has made a ... estra substantial contribution to the or... d of chestra, through sponsorship of a concert on the Esplanade last sea-

Richard Burgin als Leiter der Boston Symphony ist ein tüchtiger, unbedingt zuverlässiger und vielleicht gerade deswegen wenig aufregender Dirigent. Die Fünfte von Schostakowitsch und — Beethovens Fünfte. Macht man jetzt "numerische" Programme? Um mehr Verehrung für Beethoven wird gebeten. Im zweiten Satz des Schostakowitschwerks erlabte man sich am zweiten Thema (Satz I) als einer der raren Inspirationen heutiger Musik. Leidenschaften und Gedanken der Zeit finden ihren Ausdruck, ohne russische oder rassische Einengung. — An den symphonischen Satz "Ruby" des 1955 verstorbenen Honegger kommt das Verständnis leichter heran, wenn man nicht auf Programmusik eingestellt lauscht. Sportleidenschaften der Zuschauer (und Hörer!) sucht der Schweizer Komponist auszudrücken, dabei weckt er zufällig, wie durch das Wettrennen der Streichersechzehntel nach den schmetternden Blechakkorden die Assoziation eines richtigen Rugby-"Gedränges".

Debussys "Rondes de Printemps" ließ Naturweben, Windrauschen, die Vegetation durcheilende Wellen erkennen. Sehr liebevoll nahm sich Ralph Gomberg mit seiner Oboe des

staats-zeitung
20 January 1957

MUSIK

...negie Hall
...len schwer

chansons "Nous n'irons plus au bois" an — aber mehr Turgor, Herr Burgin, rauscht im Lenz in den Stämmen, daß die Säfte überschäumen . . . Ravels "Pavane" wurde zutreffend nicht als Trauermarsch, sondern als höfischer spanischer Tanz aufgefaßt. Das Morgenständchen eines Narren (Alborado del Gracioso) desselben Ravel stellt man sich närrischer, nachttrunkener, torkelnd eher als träumerisch vor.

Aber das Eigentliche kam erst nach der Pause: Die 4. Symphonie in G-Dur mit Sopransolo von Gustav Mahler. Vergessen wir nicht, daß wir dieses Wiederhören den Bostonians verdanken. Mahler beginnt wie Johann Strauß mit sorglosen Walzern, etwas zum Mitsingen klingt auf, Vögel zwitschern dazwischen. Alles ist einfach, diatonisch. "Gemächlich" — "in gemächlicher Bewegung" — "ruhevoll" — "sehr behaglich" steht über den einzelnen Sätzen und so soll uns zumut werden. Im zweiten Satz ließ II. Konzertmeister (der erste ist Richard Burgin) Alfred Krips (Verwandtschaft mit Josef?) eine zweite bereitliegende, primitivere Geige richtig "fideln". Ist's Freund Hein, der da ungebeten aufspielt? Das Thema dieses Teils ist verdächtig tief empfunden.

Aber, leider, kann der Hörer nicht umhin, stärkste Nähe und Abhängigkeit vom langsamen Satz der Neunten (Beethovens) festzustellen. Zuletzt stimmt der Sopran mit viel Koloratur und sinngemäßen Tempiverbreiterungen "Der Himmel hängt voller Geigen" an, aus "Des Knaben Wunderhorn", während das Lämmchen aus der Oboe blökt, die Ochsen mit Fagott- und Kontrabaß-Stimme muhen. Nancy Carr war bemüht, den vorgeschriebenen kindlich staunenden Ton zu finden. Denn wir sind ja im Bauernhimmel, der ein wahres Schlaraffenland zu sein scheint. Petrus — hier verbreitert sich das Tempo — sieht wohlwollend zu. Liturgisch weihevoll wird die Weis', wenn die Englein das Brot backen. Ein langes, melodien erfülltes Orchestervorspiel, dann die letzte lebensfrohe Strophe: "Kein' Musik ist ja nicht auf Erden, die unserer verglichen kann werden". — Voller beglückter Friede tritt ein, wenn Baßgeige und Harfe langsam die Mitternachtsstunde geschlagen haben.

R. P.

185

Concertmaster

During most of the season Richard Burgin, 64, sits unobtrusively at the violin section's first desk of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he has for the past 36 years. At the end of a performance the conductor or guest soloist will shake his hand. If the guest happens to be someone as important as Leonard Bernstein, he may even kiss his cheeks. For the rest, the concertmaster's job is done out of the public view, preparing the violins for the effects the conductor wants, marking the bowings, in general setting the tone of the orchestra.

But unlike most other concertmasters in the U.S., Polish-born Richard Burgin gets two or three weeks a year on the podium. Last week he led the Boston Symphony at Manhattan's Carnegie Hall, in a concert of Vaughan Williams, Beethoven and Shostakovich, which he delivered with craftsmanship and no melodrama whatever. "I know what I want, I know how to tell them what I want, and they give it to me," he said, adding as an afterthought: "just as they give it to any other conductor, only maybe to me a little quicker."

The first violinist did not always play second fiddle to the conductor. In the small 18th century ensembles, the other musicians often took their lead from the first violin, but growing orchestras, complex scores and the public demand for a good show have made the conductor virtually irreplaceable. So the concertmaster has far more to do with running the orchestra than meets the eye.

Under Conductor Charles Munch, who used to be a concertmaster himself, Concertmaster Burgin's job moves along well-established grooves, but it was different under the late Serge Koussevitzky, whose famous, poetic perorations had to be translated into technical terms, e.g., how to make the violins sound like first love or the flutes like ice breaking.

Walter Daran

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S BURGIN
First violin was more than second fiddle.

Although Burgin is forgetful in his private life (once he even left his Stradivarius on his commuter train), he has a legendary memory for music. And many times he has saved the situation when a conductor lost his place—by simply playing on until the maestro found himself again. In the words of the late Felix Weingartner, Burgin says: "As long as even one piccolo is playing, we don't give up."

Many concertmasters are tempted by a virtuoso's career. But Burgin says: "I know many virtuosos and I do not envy them. They tell me what it's like to play the same few pieces over and over and know they have to go here and then be there. Not for me. I like the orchestra."

Next week, after his spell in the limelight, Concertmaster Burgin will be back at his accustomed chair in Boston. He will mark the bowings efficiently, play his passages beautifully, and go home to Brookline on his usual commuter train, where trainmen have instructions to see that he does not lose his Stradivarius.

TIME, JANUARY 21, 1957

Montreal Courier
(Que)
February, 1957

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, Jan. 15, E.—Despite a raging blizzard outside, the house was filled with loyal subscribers and admirers of Monteux, who rewarded the bold, the brave, and the frostbitten with his magnificent music making and endearing charm. He comes on stage like nothing so much as a genial walrus whose whiskers you want to tweak, just to hear him laugh. But there is no nonsense when the music starts, as it did delightfully with Stravinsky's reconstruction of Pergolesi tunes, called "Pulcinella," which are touched with Stravinsky's own penetrating intellect and special magic. Then came Brahms' Second Symphony in one of the loveliest, most limpid, and most serene readings we have ever heard, all as vernal as anyone could wish for on a winter night. In the Allegretto grazioso, the strings were especially fine as they swung out a long, lilting phrase as a young girl might swirl out her taffeta at a dance. Monteux kept things moving, but never hurried anything or forced an effect. He was bravoed from the floor and applauded, not with beating bows, but by the respectful bare hands of his men. We fled, glad and glowing, into the snowstorm, confident that Debussy and Wagner, after intermission, would be in good hands. K.H.

mpho

on Progr

are forever seeking ai symbolic light.

In the opera house th underlines the dreamlik on the stage, and both the direction of the dra
vorced from the drama,
sic has the effect of
from darkness to elucid for a few brief moment dispersing itself into starless blue. It is a lon derer, and one wonder concert hall is its home

Perhaps Mr. Monte
long since earned the
play what he pleases.
are certain fundamen
ciples in program buil should be observed, an if ignored, result in a
of interest.

We admire and ch humanity, his kindli
musicianship, and we tinue to look forwar guest appearances as in the past. We also h ever, for more of the we heard yesterday in nificent Elgar variati
he was vivid, dynami

MPHONY ORCHE

x Is Guest Cond

NY ORCHES-
repeat tonight,
Friday–Saturteux was guest stated program ghetto ("Claer-the "Egmont" in memory of body of the pro-Suite from the after Pergolesi);
des, Five Inter-
h of Melisande" Melisande" (first ); Elgar, "Enig-

URGIN

rotund figure, the unforced onteux were a mphony Hall
Once again
lder musician as guest conn Symphony ne's ears the not entirely
not entirely
ed one to the
that the con-command of ent seriously

ly the play-
r, almost as were places between sec-there were oarseness of ost constant and conduc-
leadership
ation which their work

of ensem-
orchestral
But it was tent. Stra-
ll, Debussy
Variations
, careless in as none of hould bind string of and much
neath the zed rather why? A first when y, in the estra. His ear, his beat, his energ

mand, these singly or can be involved. W reason, the masterly M
no longer in evidence.

It was as interesting
play so much of the
portion of "Pelleas
sande," but the total
of sameness. In the stage action, the prog
drama provide the li
tinuity and variety
missing yesterday. I long and nearly sopo
sion of fragments of without structure or
all operatic music, in speaking, is in itself
and this, of "Pelleas
sande" in such quantit
tion did not benefit by

Toscanini Tribute

Before the stated p
Boston Symphony h memory of the late canini with the largh
is titled "Claerchen's D
the "Egmont" music of
This was an appropri
since Beethoven was
canini's most cherished
But somehow the musi
too small for the memo
so huge a figure in Much better (and well
the more dramatic item used for the purpose)
been the slow move
Beethoven's last Strin
the F major, Op. 135.
himself once made a v
for massed strings.

By way of footnote,
if any choral group in few days will perfor
canini's memory the o completely suited to
That is the prevailin
chorus from Verdi's
the "Va, pensiero,"
sung spontaneously by
at one of the funeral
Verdi.

Charles Munch will week to conduct premiere of Sir Willia
Cello Concerto, with

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 1 7 1957

t as Red Wings In

Unusual Horns Played By Boston Musicians

Recordings

By Harold Rogers

"Spotlight on Brass" is the title of a new Vox album (DL-300) featuring the musicianship of Roger Voisin, Harold Meek, and Joseph Orosz, all of whom are listed in the annotations as members of a "well known" Boston orchestra." This amusing and slightly silly designation is doubtless the result of one of those mysterious professional complications concerning committals and contracts. Why not come right out and say these men are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

In this album the spotlight is truly on the brass—on a gamut of instruments ranging from the elephant horn, through such items as serpents, hunting horns, trumpets, cornets, bugles, trombones, euphoniums, and tubas. It is an illustrational album especially suitable for music libraries, musicologists, the classroom, and for those who have some particular interest in the evolution of brass instruments. Consisting of scales and typical melodies, the program will not appeal to the listener looking for concerted band or brass music.

* * *

If, however, you have the kind of curiosity that has plagued you about the sound of the serpent (several of which are on display in the Symphony Hall collection of antique instruments), you can now satisfy your ambition. The church serpent and calvary serpent, as played by Mr. Orosz, sound much better than they look. In appearance they are almost ferociously reptilian. In sound they are more like a mild-mannered bassoon.

The instruments heard on this disk were chosen mainly from the Belle Skinner collection at Holyoke, Mass., and from the Casadesus Collection in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Háry János, as nearly everyone knows, is that teller of tall tales from Hungarian folklore, preserved since 1926 in the music of an opera by Zoltán Kodály. The "Háry János" Suite, taken from the opera, has long since established itself as a brilliant concert favorite, filled with spirited little marches and swirling gypsy tunes.

This Suite is now available in two recent performances — one for Epic (LC-3290) by the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam under Eduard van Beinum, the other for Decca (DL-9633) by the RIAS Symphony Orchestra of Berlin under Ferenc Fricsay. Both disks are excellently played and recorded, with the van Beinum reading perhaps a bit mellower than the Fricsay, though both are entertainingly done.

These two disks also include works by Stravinsky. Van Beinum conducts the "Firebird" Suite for Epic, and Fricsay the Divertimento (Suite de Ballet, "Le Baiser de la Fée") for Decca. In the first we hear the young Stravinsky of 1910 when he was astonishing the world with his originality; in the latter we find the composer paying charming homage to Tchaikovsky in 1928.

* * *

Angel has just brought out an appealing new recording of Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1, and Prokofiev's "Scythian" Suite, recorded by the Orchestre de la Radiodifusion Française under Igor Markevitch, a conductor especially fitted to interpret the Russian moderns with precision and power.

The Shostakovitch symphony, composed when he was 19 in 1925, is one of those contemporary pieces that almost any music lover can take to his heart. While it is unusual in melodic and formal structure, the dissonant content is low. Prokofiev's "Scythian" Suite, on the other hand, was composed 11 years earlier at a time when Prokofiev was especially audacious. Some conservative ears may yet recoil at his earthy and barbaric sounds.

Vox is continuing its commendable policy of bringing out luxury albums devoted to works by the Italian baroque composers. The latest is devoted to the Twelve Concerti Grossi, Op. 1, for strings, by Locatelli (1695-1764), played by I Musici Virtuosi di Milano. The conductor is Dean Eckertsen, the young man who has already produced the de luxe albums of Corelli and Manfredini for Vox.

* * *

This latest album (DL-333) is another welcome addition to the field of recorded music, though one cannot give unstinting praise to the performances of these Locatelli works. The string players do more than a little scrubbing on their instruments, the blame for which Mr. Eckertsen can assume. Italian string players, under sensitive direction, will play like angels when performing Italian music.

This is not to discourage Mr. Eckertsen, whose labors in this direction are much appreciated, but rather to urge him to gain the polish and precision that is the essence of Italian string playing. The biographical and analytical notes by Joseph Braunstein are informatively and entertainingly written.

Those who are intrigued by the novel, the garish, or the weird in music may enjoy investigating an odd recording, made by Ducretet-Thomson for London, called Panorama of Musique Concrète (DTL-93090). The "composers" are Henry, Schaeffer, and Arthuys, who have experimented in Paris with the possibility of assembling a kind of music from sounds recorded on tape, after which the sounds are altered through variations in speed.

These sounds are then combined through a montage process in such a way as to be heard in themes, forms, counterpoint, etc. The results have something of a ghastly fascination and appear especially suitable for film scores accompanying science fiction tales.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 56,950
JAN 17 1957

BOSTON

NAME BANKER TRUSTEE OF HUB SYMPHONY

BOSTON (AP)—E. Morton Jennings Jr., a vice president of the First National Bank of Boston, yesterday was elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jennings, a 1928 graduate of Dartmouth College, is a resident of Needham. He has served several terms as treasurer of the New England Council.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 17

E. Morton Jennings Jr. New Symphony Trustee

At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, election to the board of E. Morton Jennings Jr., a vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston, was confirmed.

Jennings, with the First National Bank since 1929 and now vice-president in the Credit-Loan Division, will devote himself to building up support for the orchestra in the business community. The First National Bank has made a substantial contribution to the orchestra, through sponsorship of a concert on the Esplanade last season.

Richard Burgin als Leiter der Boston Symphony ist ein tüchtiger, unbedingt zuverlässiger und vielleicht gerade deswegen wenig aufregender Dirigent. Die Fünfte von Schostakowitsch und — Beethovens Fünfte. Macht man jetzt "numerische" Programme? Um mehr Verehrung für Beethoven wird gebeten. Im zweiten Satz des Schostakowitschwerks erlabte man sich am zweiten Thema (Satz I) als einer der raren Inspirationen heutiger Musik. Leidenschaften und Gedanken der Zeit finden ihren Ausdruck, ohne russische oder rassische Einengung. — An den symphonischen Satz "Ruby" des 1955 verstorbenen Honegger kommt das Verständnis leichter heran, wenn man nicht auf Programmusik eingestellt lauscht. Sportleidenschaften der Zuschauer (und Hörer!) sucht der Schweizer Komponist auszudrücken, dabei weckt er zufällig, wie durch das Wettrennen der Streichersechzehntel nach den schmetternden Blechakkorden die Assoziation eines richtigen Rugby-"Gedränges".

Debussys "Rondes de Printemps" ließ Naturweben, Windrauschen, die Vegetation durcheilende Wellen erkennen. Sehr liebevoll nahm sich Ralph Gomberg mit seiner Oboe des

Concertmaster

During most of the season Richard Burgin, 64, sits unobtrusively at the violin section's first desk of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he has for the past 36 years. At the end of a performance the conductor or guest soloist will shake his hand. If the guest happens to be someone as impulsive as Leonard Bernstein, he may even kiss his cheeks. For the rest, the concertmaster's job is done out of the public view, preparing the violins for the effects the conductor wants, marking the bowings, in general setting the tone of the orchestra.

But unlike most other concertmasters in the U.S., Polish-born Richard Burgin gets two or three weeks a year on the podium. Last week he led the Boston Symphony at Manhattan's Carnegie Hall, in a concert of Vaughan Williams, Beethoven and Shostakovich, which he delivered with craftsmanship and no melodrama whatever. "I know what I want, I know how to tell them what I want, and they give it to

65

185

GENERAL KUTUZOV

A m

Prokofiev & Tolstoy

The U.S. witnessed a major musical event this week: the American première of the late Sergei Prokofiev's War and Peace. Although the composer finished his first version while the Germans were still rumbling toward Stalingrad, the sprawling work, which in one version took eight hours, had been performed only once before outside Russia (in Florence, in 1953). The present 2½-hour edition—brilliantly produced in an English translation by NBC-TV's enterprising Opera Theater, and conducted by Peter Herman Adler—was the version Prokofiev himself approved before his death four years ago. It turned out to be less an opera than a pageant, but it offered some of the best music Prokofiev ever wrote.

The libretto, by Prokofiev and his wife, Poetess Mira Mendelsohn, arbitrarily hacked great chunks out of the Tolstoy epic without ever linking them in true dramatic tension. Tolstoy's own brilliant literary counterpoint—in which he switched from peace to war scenes and back—was abandoned. All the peace was concentrated in the first part, all the war in the second, so that many of the figures in Part I suddenly dropped out of sight. Moreover, the libretto was narrative rather than dramatic, required whole passages of flat prose to be set to music, with the result that long stretches of the score were labored and discursive. In the war scenes the opera stiffened with self-conscious patriotism, which Prokofiev illustrated with military airs that occasionally verged on the banal. But overall, War and Peace was a notable achievement. Whatever it lacked in sustained dramatic effect it made up in color, movement, and the driving force of lyric melody and great choral frescoes.

The music of the first part and the situations that it animated glowed with an almost Latin fervor. Andrey and Natasha (well sung by Morley Meredith and Helena Scott) faced each other across a garden ashiver with moonlight and poured out their yearnings in great warm gusts of melody; Natasha pirouetted giddily at

TIME, JANUARY 21, 1957

staats-zeitung
20 January 1957

USIK 179

cnegie Hall len schwer

chansons "Nous n'irons plus au bois" an — aber mehr Tursor, Herr Burgin, rauscht im Lenz in den Stämmen, daß die Säfte überschäumen . . . Ravels "Pavane" wurde zutreffend nicht als Trauermarsch, sondern als höfischer spanischer Tanz aufgefaßt. Das Morgenständchen eines Narren (Alborado del Gracioso) desselben Ravel stellt man sich närrischer, nachttrunkener, torkelnd eher als träumerisch vor.

Aber das Eigentliche kam erst nach der Pause: Die 4. Symphonie in G-Dur mit Sopransolo von Gustav Mahler. Vergessen wir nicht, daß wir dieses Wiederhören den Bostonians verdanken. Mahler beginnt wie Johann Strauß mit sorglosen Walzern, etwas zum Mitsingen klingt auf, Vögel zwitschern dazwischen. Alles ist einfach, diatonisch. "Gemächlich" — "in gemächlicher Bewegung" — "ruhevoll" — "sehr behaglich" steht über den einzelnen Sätzen und so soll uns zumut werden. Im zweiten Satz ließ II. Konzertmeister (der erste ist Richard Burgin) Alfred Krips (Verwandtschaft mit Josef?) eine zweite bereitliegende, primitivere Geige richtig "fideln". Ist's Freund Hein, der da ungebeten aufspielt? Das Thema dieses Teils ist verdächtig tief empfunden.

Aber, leider, kann der Hörer nicht umhin, stärkste Nähe und Abhängigkeit vom langsamen Satz der Neunten (Beethovens) festzustellen. Zuletzt stimmt der Sopran mit viel Koloratur und sinngemäßen Tempiverbreiterungen "Der Himmel hängt voller Geigen" an, aus "Des Knaben Wunderhorn", während das Lämmchen aus der Oboe blökt, die Ochsen mit Fagott- und Kontrabaß-Stimme muhen. Nancy Carr war bemüht, den vorgeschriebenen kindlich staunenden Ton zu finden. Denn wir sind ja im Bauernhimmel, der ein wahres Schlaraffenland zu sein scheint. Petrus — hier verbreitert sich das Tempo — sieht wohlwollend zu. Liturgisch weihevoll wird die Weis', wenn die Englein das Brot backen. Ein langes, melodien erfülltes Orchestervorspiel, dann die letzte lebensfrohe Strophe: "Kein' Musik ist ja nicht auf Erden, die unserer verglichen kann werden". — Voller beglückter Friede tritt ein, wenn Baßgeige und Harfe langsam die Mitternachtsstunde geschlagen haben.

R. P.

Musical Courier
(NYC)
February, 1957

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, Jan. 15, F.—Despite a raging blizzard outside, the house was filled with loyal subscribers and admirers of Monteux, who rewarded the bold, the brave, and the frostbitten with his magnificent music making and endearing charm. He comes on stage like nothing so much as a genial walrus whose whiskers you want to tweak, just to hear him laugh. But there is no nonsense when the music starts, as it did delightfully with Stravinsky's reconstruction of Pergolesi tunes, called "Pulcinella," which are touched with Stravinsky's own penetrating intellect and special magic. Then came Brahms' Second Symphony in one of the loveliest, most limpid, and most serene readings we have ever heard, all as vernal as anyone could wish for on a winter night. In the Allegretto grazioso, the strings were especially fine as they swung out a long, lilting phrase as a young girl might swirl out her taffeta at a dance. Monteux kept things moving, but never hurried anything or forced an effect. He was bravoed from the floor and applauded, not with beating bows, but by the respectful bare hands of his men. We fled, glad and glowing, into the snowstorm, confident that Debussy and Wagner, after intermission, would be in good hands.

K.H.

186

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 19 1957

Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist in the world première of Sir William Walton's Cello Concerto, to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 25 and 26.

C.S. Monitor
Jan 17, 1957

Gus Manos

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 18 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Literary Spotlight off Boston, Focuses on Philadelphia Society

PHILADELPHIA SOCIETY, instead of Boston society, seems to be in the literary spotlight just now. The Apleys of John P. Marquand's pen have taken a back seat for the Lawrences of Richard Cromwell's "The Philadelphian," recently published by Charles Scribner's Sons. So it's Rittenhouse Square versus Louisburgh Square, although the suburbs are more popular with the younger generation. In an interesting article in the New York Times recently, Philadelphia society was said to be changing, but changeless. For instance, a fox-hunting young matron on the Main Line still rides to hounds when she can get a baby-sitter. A butler of impeccable suavity turns up one night at a home on the Main Line to the surprise of guests who saw him the night before at another house. But the Philadelphia Assembly, which started in 1792, and the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra at the Academy of Music, still continue.

* * *

HERE IN BOSTON, Friday afternoons during the winter are reserved for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall. In order to understand and enjoy the programs fully many members of the Junior League will gather at the Harvard Club this morning to hear the second of the popular lectures by Boris Goldovsky, who interprets the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sponsored by the Junior League of Boston, Inc., for the benefit of its various community projects, these lectures have for several years attracted a coterie of enthusiastic listeners. The lectures start promptly at 11:30 and are preceded by a coffee half-hour at 11. Today's hostesses will be Mrs. Sydney Harwood and Mrs. Walter E. Lovejoy. As the lectures end promptly at 12:30, there's plenty of time to reach Symphony Hall for the concert. Cocktails and luncheon (by reservation) are available at the Harvard Club. In addition to season tickets for the lectures, single tickets for the individual lectures are available at the door. Among this year's season ticket holders are Mrs. Frederick B. Lund, Mrs. Charles W. Dean, Mrs. Peter Woodbury, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow, Jr., Mrs. Arthur W. Bell, Mrs. Alfred F. Donovan, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. H. Bowen White, Miss Dorothy Whitman and Mrs. Henry Wheeler.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

JAN 20 1957

WORLD PREMIERE
Cellist Piatigorsky Plays William Walton Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will present two first performances at its 13th pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on Jan. 25 and 26.

Gregor Piatigorsky will present the postponed world premiere of the Violoncello Concerto by Sir William Walton at the concerts of next Friday and Saturday. The concerto, which was completed last March, is the composer's first for this instrument and is dedicated to Mr. Piatigorsky. It is similar in form to Walton's earlier works for violin and viola and is in three movements of which Sir William has written: "I. Moderato (lyrical and melodic); II. Allegro appassionato (technically more speetacular); III. Lento—Tema con variazione—four 'improvisations,' the second and fourth for solo cello only." The work closes with "the Epilogue which is based on themes from the first and last moments."

"TRIP TO NAHANT"

Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in 1948 and completed in the summer of 1954, will also receive its first Boston performance under the direction of Charles Munch at the concerts of Jan. 25-26. "A Trip to Nahant" is named from an old square dance fiddle tune and is in the form o variations, although the origina tune is not used in the work. I was first performed by the Phila delphia Orchestra in 1955.

Dr. Munch's performance of tw new works fits in with the pro gram of the International Musi Fund which has declared an "In ternational Music Fund Week" i February to further its objective of "the encouragement of contemporary composers and the interchange of their music throughout the world." The International Music Fund was started by the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1948 and was revived on a permanent basis in 1953.

The second half of the program of next Friday and Saturday will be Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 244,295 - S. 284,929

JAN 26 1957

It May Be News

By ARTHUR GRIFFITH

I WAS a speaker at the testimonial dinner given J. A. McGowan, general superintendent of mail at the Miami post office, last week at the Allapattah Lions clubhouse.

The affair was sponsored by post office employes. Nearly three hundred of them were at the dinner. Mr. McGowan retires after 42 years of public service. He steps down officially on February 28.

Nobody can or does become rich on the salaries paid by the Post Office Department. But Mr. McGowan is rich—rich as only such as he can be rich.

He was gathered not with mere acquaintances around a dinner table. These were friends with whom he had worked and dedicated himself to the purpose of solving together the many and continuing problems that crop up each day in the general post office of this great and growing community.

* * *

I'VE heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert many times. I remember Muck and Monteux when these two master conductors lead this great orchestra to the very heights of symphonic production.

Oddly, however, my most vivid memories of the orchestra in those long-gone days are Arthur Fiedler conducting the "Pops" and of changing money at the box office.

Fiedler will conduct the Pops Tour Orchestra Thursday evening at the Dade County Auditorium under the sponsorship of the "University of Miami Presents."

* * *

AS TO my money memory of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A Boston relative of mine and I used to enjoy walking over to Symphony Hall to purchase concert tickets. Finally it struck me that whenever I was handed change at the window, the bills were as clean as if they had just come from the printing press and the coins as shiny as if freshly minted.

I got up courage to ask the ticket seller how this always happened. She raised a quizzical eye at me. She must have sensed that I was not a "proper" Bostonian.

Looking down her pretty nose, she disdainfully explained that the Hall never gave "dirty" money in change to its patrons. She was so pretty and so proud that I did not make the obvious retort that Symphony Hall had no reluctance in taking in "dirty" money.

* * *

THE HISTORICAL Association of Southern Florida will have as its speaker January 30 Dr. William C. Sturtevant of the Smithsonian Institution at Washing is an Eastern

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 25 1957

Harold Farberman, percussionist, will conduct a concert of his own compositions in Jordan Hall Thursday evening, Jan. 31. The players will be the Boston Percussion Ensemble and 30 members of the Boston Symphony.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—TUESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1957

WORLD PREMIERE—Gregor Piatigorsky will play the world premiere of Sir William Walton's new Cello Concerto with the Boston Symphony next Friday and Saturday.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1957 16
THE PROVIDENCE JEWISH HERALD,

Cellist to Play At Tuesday Concert

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's third concert of the season in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence on Tuesday evening. The Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, will conduct the concert.

Mr. Piatigorsky, who will be making his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence, will play Bloch's "Schelomo" (Solomon), Hebrew Rhapsody for Cello and Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will open the program with Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, and the second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, in B flat major.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 19 1957

Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist in the world première of Sir William Walton's Cello Concerto, to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 25 and 26.

S. Monitor
Jan 17, 1957

Gus Manos

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 18 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Literary Spotlight off Boston, Focuses on Philadelphia Society

PHILADELPHIA SOCIETY, instead of Boston society, seems to be in the literary spotlight just now. The Apleys of John P. Marquand's pen have taken a back seat for the Lawrences of Richard Cromwell's "The Philadelphian," recently published by Charles Scribner's Sons. So it's Rittenhouse Square versus Louisburgh Square, although the suburbs are more popular with the younger generation. In an interesting article in the New York Times recently, Philadelphia society was said to be changing, but changeless. For instance, a fox-hunting young matron on the Main Line still rides to hounds when she can get a baby-sitter. A butler of impeccable suavity turns up one night at a home on the Main Line to the surprise of guests who saw him the night before at another house. But the Philadelphia Assembly, which started in 1792, and the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra at the Academy of Music, still continue.

* * *

HERE IN BOSTON, Friday afternoons during the winter are reserved for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall. In order to understand and enjoy the programs fully many members of the Junior League will gather at the Harvard Club this morning to hear the second of the popular lectures by Boris Goldovsky, who interprets the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sponsored by the Junior League of Boston, Inc., for the benefit of its various community projects, these lectures have for several years attracted a coterie of enthusiastic listeners. The lectures start promptly at 11:30 and are preceded by a coffee half-hour at 11. Today's hostesses will be Mrs. Sydney Harwood and Mrs. Walter E. Lovejoy. As the lectures end promptly at 12:30, there's plenty of time to reach Symphony Hall for the concert. Cocktails and luncheon (by reservation) are available at the Harvard Club. In addition to season tickets for the lectures, single tickets for the individual lectures are available at the door. Among this year's season ticket holders are Mrs. Frederick B. Lund, Mrs. Charles W. Dean, Mrs. Peter Woodbury, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow, Jr., Mrs. Arthur W. Bell, Mrs. Alfred F. Donovan, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. H. Bowen White, Miss Dorothy Whitman and Mrs. Henry Wheeler.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 244,295 - S. 284,929

It May Be News

By ARTHUR GRIFFITH

I WAS a speaker at the testimonial dinner given J. A. McGowan, general superintendent of mail at the Miami post office, last week at the Allapattah Lions clubhouse.

The affair was sponsored by post office employes. Nearly three hundred of them were at the dinner. Mr. McGowan retires after 42 years of public service. He steps down officially on February 28.

Nobody can or does become rich on the salaries paid by the Post Office Department. But Mr. McGowan is rich—rich as only such as he can be rich.

He was gathered not with mere acquaintances around a dinner table. These were friends with whom he had worked and dedicated himself to the purpose of solving together the many and continuing problems that crop up each day in the general post office of this great and growing community.

* * *

I'VE heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert many times. I remember Muck and Monteux when these two master conductors lead this great orchestra to the very heights of symphonic production.

Oddly, however, my most vivid memories of the orchestra in those long-gone days are Arthur Fiedler conducting the "Pops" and of changing money at the box office.

Fiedler will conduct the Pops Tour Orchestra Thursday evening at the Dade County Auditorium under the sponsorship of the "University of Miami Presents."

* * *

AS TO my money memory of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A Boston relative of mine and I used to enjoy walking over to Symphony Hall to purchase concert tickets. Finally it struck me that whenever I was handed change at the window, the bills were as clean as if they had just come from the printing press and the coins as shiny as if freshly minted.

I got up courage to ask the ticket seller how this always happened. She raised a quizzical eye at me. She must have sensed that I was not a "proper" Bostonian.

Looking down her pretty nose, she disdainfully explained that the Hall never gave "dirty" money in change to its patrons. She was so pretty and so proud that I did not make the obvious retort that Symphony Hall had no reluctance in taking in "dirty" money.

* * *

THE HISTORICAL Association of Southern Florida will have as its speaker January 30 Dr. William C. Sturtevant of the Smithsonian Institution at Washing[illegible] Sturtevant is an [illegible] of the Eastern [illegible]

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

JAN 20 1957

WORLD PREMIERE
Cellist Piatigorsky Plays William Walton Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will present two first performances at its 13th pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on Jan. 25 and 26.

Gregor Piatigorsky will present the postponed world premiere of the Violoncello Concerto by Sir William Walton at the concerts of next Friday and Saturday. The concerto, which was completed last March, is the composer's first for this instrument and is dedicated to Mr. Piatigorsky. It is similar in form to Walton's earlier works for violin and viola and is in three movements of which Sir William has written: "I. Moderato (lyrical and melodic); II. Allegro appassionato (technically more spectacular); III. Lento—Tema con variazione—four 'improvisations,' the second and fourth for solo cello only." The work closes with "the Epilogue which is based on themes from the first and last moments."

"TRIP TO NAHANT"

Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in 1948 and completed in the summer of 1954, will also receive its first Boston performance under the direction of Charles Munch at the concerts of Jan. 25-26. "A Trip to Nahant" is named from an old square dance fiddle tune and is in the form of variations, although the original tune is not used in the work. It was first performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1955.

Dr. Munch's performance of two new works fits in with the program of the International Music Fund which has declared an "International Music Fund Week" in February to further its objectives of "the encouragement of contemporary composers and the interchange of their music throughout the world." The International Music Fund was started by the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1948 and was revived on a permanent basis in 1953.

The second half of the program of next Friday and Saturday will be Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

25 1957

Harold Farberman, percussionist, will conduct a concert of his own compositions in Jordan Hall Thursday evening, Jan. 31. The players will be the Boston Percussion Ensemble and 30 members of the Boston Symphony.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—TUESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1957

WORLD PREMIERE—Gregor Piatigorsky will play the world premiere of Sir William Walton's new Cello Concerto with the Boston Symphony next Friday and Saturday.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1957 16
THE PROVIDENCE JEWISH HERALD,

Cellist to Play At Tuesday Concert

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's third concert of the season in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence on Tuesday evening. The Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, will conduct the concert.

Mr. Piatigorsky, who will be making his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence, will play Bloch's "Schelomo" (Solomon), Hebrew Rhapsody for Cello and Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will open the program with Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, and the second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, in B flat major.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 21 1957

Ludwig Juht Of Symphony Is Dead at 62

Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 22 years, died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Well-known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky introduced Juht as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzsky's own composition, "Concerto Double-Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double-blass was the instrument Koussevitzsky himself played before becoming a conductor.

From the moment of that aucpicious debut Juht was a member of the orchestra.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, Juht studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra as a soloist and member in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Company from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

Surviving is his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht. Services will be held Wednesday at 2 p.m. at the Waterman Chapel in Kenmore Square. Cremation will follow at Forest Hills cemetery.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

JAN 21 1957

Boston Symphony Player Dies at 62 in Hospital

BOSTON, Jan. 21—Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last 22 years, died yesterday in Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Well known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Mr. Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky introduced him as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzsky's own composition, "Concerto Double Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double bass was the instrument Koussevitzsky himself played before becoming a conductor.

From the moment of that auspicious debute, Mr. Juht was a member of the orchestra.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, he studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Co. from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

He leaves his widow, Amanda Juht. Services will be held at 2 p. m. Wednesday in Waterman Chapel in Kenmore square. Cremation will follow in Forest Hills Cemetery.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

JAN 21 1957

Ludwig Juht, 62, Double Bass Player In Boston Symphony

Ludwig Juht

BOSTON—Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had appeared at the Berkshire Festival concerts since 1936, died yesterday at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. He had been a member of the BSO 22 years.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht. The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 at the Waterman Chapel in Kenmore Square. Cremation will follow at Forest Hills Cemetery.

Well known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky introduced Juht as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzky's own composition, "Concerto Double-Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double-bass was the instrument Koussevitzky himself played before becoming a conductor.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, Juht studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra as a soloist and member in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Company from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

Boston Traveler
Jan 21 '57

Ludwig Juht

Funeral services for Ludwig Juht, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 22 years, will be held Wednesday at 2 P. M. in the Waterman Chapel, Kenmore Sq.

Juht died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. He was 62.

He made his debut with the orchestra in 1934, as soloist in Conductor Serge Koussevitzsky's Concerto for Double-Bass and Orchestra. Koussevitzsky was a double-bass player before becoming a conductor.

Juht was a native of Estonia. He studied in Petrograd (now Leningrad) and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra. He was active in the Estonian Society of Boston.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht.

Boston Globe
Jan. 21 '57

Funerals

Ludwig A. Juht

Ludwig A. Juht, 62, a member of the bass viol section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1934, died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital after a brief illness.

A native of Tartu, Estonia, Mr. Juht made his debut in Boston at a Community Chest benefit under Serge Kousevitsky.

Mr. Juht, who lived at 51 Park drive, Boston, was a member of the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra, Finland, from 1916 to 1918, member and soloist in the Estonian

LUDWIG JUHT

Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and played in the orchestra of the Estonian Opera Company from 1928 to 1930.

Mr. Juht was president of the Boston Estonian Society, director of the Baltic-American Society of New England, Inc.; a member of the advisory board of the International Institute, Boston; director of the Estonian Music Center of the United States, and was an honorary board member of the World Association of Estonians, New York.

He also was a founder of the Estonial Aid, Inc., the Nordic Press, and Estonian House, Inc., all in New York, and an honorary member of the Estonian National Fund in Sweden. Mr. Juht leaves a wife, Amanda (Lamp).

Services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 in the Waterman Chapel, 495 Commonwealth av., Boston. Interment will be in Forest Hills Cemetery.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JAN 2[illegible]

L. Juht, Symphony Veteran, Dies

Ludwig Juht, of 51 Park dr., Back Bay, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 33 years, died yesterday at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital after a short illness. He was 62.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, he studied music in his homeland as well as in Berlin and Leningrad. He was a member of the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra and the Estonia Symphony Orchestra. He is survived by his wife Amanda.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 25 1957

Jennings Elected Trustee

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the election to the board of E. Morton Jennings, Jr., a vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston, was confirmed.

Mr. Jennings, who has been with the First National Bank since 1929, will devote himself to building up support for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the business community. The First National Bank has already made a substantial contribution to the orchestra through the sponsorship of a concert on the Esplanade last season.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

JAN 22 1957

Speaker

MANAGER of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas D. Perry Jr., will address Publicity Club on aspects of the orchestra's international public relations job during recent European tour. He will speak at club's luncheon meeting at Hotel Vendome tomorrow.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

JAN 24 1957

Symphony Official Says Tour 'Sold' Boston Abroad

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert tour last Summer turned out to be a gigantic public-relations campaign for Boston, conducted by 104 agents in 19 European cities, manager Thomas Perry told the Publicity Club at its meeting in the Vendome.

The orchestra "sold" Boston's cultural achievements and New England's friendliness, and in addition distributed on its own thousands of illustrated brochures about Boston. Guests of the club for the meeting were Symphony trustees Talcott Banks and E. Morton Jennings.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 24 1957

Symphony Held Uninspired

To the Editor of The Herald:

I should like to utter a hearty cheer for the recent article by your music critic, Mr. Elie, pointing out that the programs presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have reached a new low ebb this season. I had hoped this "low ebb" had been reached in the season when the Orchestra played 15 especially commissioned new works, of which, on the most charitable judgment, perhaps two or three were worth hearing.

But the programs this season have been even more disappointing, with painfully little to fire the imagination, lift the spirit or touch the heart. The programs, with unhappily rare exceptions, reveal a fear of greatness and an obsession with novelty. Even when the works of great composers are played, which is all too seldom, there seems to be a perverse effort to seek out their less inspired, less successful and more mediocre compositions.

Mr. Elie suggested a long list of neglected compositions that would enrich the current programs; I should like to offer a few such suggestions myself. There is the rich and rewarding literature of Wagner, surely one of music's few immortals, and almost completely boycotted in the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are Liszt's great symphonic poems, "Tasso," "Les Preludes," "Mazeppa." And isn't Smetana's superb tone picture of the Moldau more worth hearing than Thompson's "Journey to Nahant"?

The Boston Orchestra programs also have suffered from disproportionate representation of French impressionist works and from too many choral compositions.

I hope Mr. Elie has lit a fire that will not be put out until the present painful discrepancy between the high musicianship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the low quality of too many of its programs is overcome and Boston audiences can again, as in the time of Gerick and Muck, hear consistently great music greatly performed.

WILLIAM H. CHAMBERLIN,
Cambridge.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 21 1957

Ludwig Juht Of Symphony Is Dead at 62

Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 22 years, died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Well-known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky introduced Juht as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzsky's own composition, "Concerto Double-Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double-blass was the instrument Koussevitzsky himself played before becoming a conductor.

From the moment of that aucpicious debut Juht was a member of the orchestra.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, Juht studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra as a soloist and member in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Company from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

Surviving is his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht. Services will be held Wednesday at 2 p.m. at the Waterman Chapel in Kenmore Square. Cremation will follow at Forest Hills cemetery.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

JAN 21 1957

Boston Symphony Player Dies at 62 in Hospital

BOSTON, Jan. 21—Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last 22 years, died yesterday in Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Well known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Mr. Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky introduced him as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzsky's own composition, "Concerto Double Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double bass was the instrument Koussevitzsky himself played before becoming a conductor.

From the moment of that auspicious debute, Mr. Juht was a member of the orchestra.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, he studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Co. from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

He leaves his widow, Amanda Juht. Services will be held at 2 p. m. Wednesday in Waterman Chapel in Kenmore square. Cremation will follow in Forest Hills Cemetery.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

JAN 21 1957

Ludwig Juht, 62, Double Bass Player In Boston Symphony

Ludwig Juht

BOSTON—Ludwig Juht, 62, of 51 Park Dr., Back Bay, a double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had appeared at the Berkshire Festival concerts since 1936, died yesterday at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. He had been a member of the BSO 22 years.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht. The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 at the Waterman Chapel in Kenmore Square. Cremation will follow at Forest Hills Cemetery.

Well known to concertgoers as probably the tallest and heaviest man in the orchestra, Juht also had the distinction of having made a dramatic and most unusual debut as a member of the Boston Symphony.

It was in the fall of 1934 that the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky introduced Juht as the surprise soloist to play in the premiere of Koussevitzky's own composition, "Concerto Double-Bass and Orchestra," at a special concert in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the then Community Chest—now known as the Community Fund. The double-bass was the instrument Koussevitzky himself played before becoming a conductor.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, Juht studied music there and in Petrograd and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra as a soloist and member in 1916.

He was a member of the Estonia Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and of the Estonia Opera Company from 1928 to 1930. He was an active member of the Estonian Society of Boston.

Boston Traveler
Jan 21 '57

Ludwig Juht

Funeral services for Ludwig Juht, a double-bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 22 years, will be held Wednesday at 2 P. M. in the Waterman Chapel, Kenmore Sq.

Juht died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. He was 62.

He made his debut with the orchestra in 1934, as soloist in Conductor Serge Koussevitzsky's Concerto for Double-Bass and Orchestra. Koussevitzsky was a double-bass player before becoming a conductor.

Juht was a native of Estonia. He studied in Petrograd (now Leningrad) and Berlin before joining the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra. He was active in the Estonian Society of Boston.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Amanda Juht.

Boston Globe
Jan. 21 '57

Funerals

Ludwig A. Juht

Ludwig A. Juht, 62, a member of the bass viol section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1934, died yesterday at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital after a brief illness.

A native of Tartu, Estonia, Mr. Juht made his debut in Boston at a Community Chest benefit under Serge Kousevitsky.

Mr. Juht, who lived at 51 Park drive, Boston, was a member of the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra, Finland, from 1916 to 1918, member and soloist in the Estonian

LUDWIG JUHT

Symphony Orchestra from 1918 to 1920, and played in the orchestra of the Estonian Opera Company from 1928 to 1930.

Mr. Juht was president of the Boston Estonian Society, director of the Baltic-American Society of New England, Inc.; a member of the advisory board of the International Institute, Boston; director of the Estonian Music Center of the United States, and was an honorary board member of the World Association of Estonians, New York.

He also was a founder of the Estonial Aid, Inc., the Nordic Press, and Estonian House, Inc., all in New York, and an honorary member of the Estonian National Fund in Sweden. Mr. Juht leaves a wife, Amanda (Lamp).

Services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 in the Waterman Chapel, 495 Commonwealth av., Boston. Interment will be in Forest Hills Cemetery.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JAN 2[illegible]

L. Juht, Symphony Veteran, Dies

Ludwig Juht, of 51 Park dr., Back Bay, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 33 years, died yesterday at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital after a short illness. He was 62.

Born in Tartu, Estonia, he studied music in his homeland as well as in Berlin and Leningrad. He was a member of the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra and the Estonia Symphony Orchestra. He is survived by his wife Amanda.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JAN 25 1957

Jennings Elected Trustee

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the election to the board of E. Morton Jennings, Jr., a vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston, was confirmed.

Mr. Jennings, who has been with the First National Bank since 1929, will devote himself to building up support for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the business community. The First National Bank has already made a substantial contribution to the orchestra through the sponsorship of a concert on the Esplanade last season.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

JAN 22 1957

Speaker

MANAGER of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas D. Perry Jr., will address Publicity Club on aspects of the orchestra's international public relations job during recent European tour. He will speak at club's luncheon meeting at Hotel Vendome tomorrow.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

JAN 24 1957

Symphony Official Says Tour 'Sold' Boston Abroad

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert tour last Summer turned out to be a gigantic public-relations campaign for Boston, conducted by 104 agents in 19 European cities, manager Thomas Perry Jr. told the Publicity Club at its meeting in the Vendome.

The orchestra "sold" Boston's cultural achievements and New England's friendliness, and in addition distributed on its own thousands of illustrated brochures about Boston. Guests of the club for the meeting were Symphony trustees Talcott Banks and E. Morton Jennings.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 24 1957

Symphony Held Uninspired

To the Editor of The Herald:

I should like to utter a hearty cheer for the recent article by your music critic, Mr. Elie, pointing out that the programs presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have reached a new low ebb this season. I had hoped this "low ebb" had been reached in the season when the Orchestra played 15 especially commissioned new works, of which, on the most charitable judgment, perhaps two or three were worth hearing.

But the programs this season have been even more disappointing, with painfully little to fire the imagination, lift the spirit or touch the heart. The programs, with unhappily rare exceptions, reveal a fear of greatness and an obsession with novelty. Even when the works of great composers are played, which is all too seldom, there seems to be a perverse effort to seek out their less inspired, less successful and more mediocre compositions.

Mr. Elie suggested a long list of neglected compositions that would enrich the current programs; I should like to offer a few such suggestions myself. There is the rich and rewarding literature of Wagner, surely one of music's few immortals, and almost completely boycotted in the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are Liszt's great symphonic poems, "Tasso," "Les Preludes," "Mazeppa." And isn't Smetana's superb tone picture of the Moldau more worth hearing than Thompson's "Journey to Nahant"?

The Boston Orchestra programs also have suffered from disproportionate representation of French impressionist works and from too many choral compositions.

I hope Mr. Elie has lit a fire that will not be put out until the present painful discrepancy between the high musicianship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the low quality of too many of its programs is overcome and Boston audiences can again, as in the time of Gerick and Muck, hear consistently great music greatly performed.

WILLIAM H. CHAMBERLIN,
Cambridge.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

JAN 24 1957

Music in Review

Monteux Conducts BSO

By GERALD A. BERLIN

When Pierre Monteux is not utilizing his guest appearances here as a de facto dress rehearsal for some pending transcontinental or overseas tour with the orchestra, he can draw upon his enormous versatility to adduce some uncommonly arresting programs. Such was the genial happenstance last weekend at Symphony Hall, where the works included Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet "Pulcinella" after Pergolesi), instrumental excerpts from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. As a memorial to Arturo Toscanini Mr. Monteux commenced the concert with the Larghetto, the "Death of Clarchen," from Beethoven's "Egmont."

The "Pulcinella" is a ballet which Stravinsky created from the old Neopolitan comedy and for whose initial production Picasso devised both the scenery and the costumes. It marked Stravinsky's first assay into the neo-classic period of his development. The musical material is based on some then newly discovered scores of what were thought to be some Pergolesi trio sonatas but which are now considered to be spurious. The composer, attacked both for his plagiarism and for the liberties he took with the old music, promptly became a fresh source of controversy. As Nicolas Slonimsky has put it: "Stravinsky, in his use of thematic material from other composers, is never a mere arranger; his ballets after Pergolesi or Tchaikowsky are either perversions or recreation, depending on the viewpoint.' Heard in the retrospect of thirty-seven years, the "Pulcinella" comes through as a marvelously skilled employment of delightful baroque material seasoned with the harmonic astringencies and rhythmic eccentricities that could be no one's but Stravinsky's.

In Debussy's opera, "Pelleas et Melisande," a song text that flows like natural speech is combined with a suggestive orchestral background that has been described as a "tonal envelope." This orchestral portion, which continues from act to act and scene to scene before the closed curtain, contributes prodigiously to sustaining the ineffable mood of the opera, which may well represent the very peak of musical impressionism. The excerpts played here were taken from that continuous music. Whenever I have heard "Pelleas," the audience has tended to stir about and talk so during these orchestral interludes that not only is the mood ruptured but indeed the musical sound itself blotted out. It was therefore gratifying for once to hear these excerpts well enough to find out what the music is like. Lovely though it is, it only hints, when lifted thus out of context, at the spell engendered by this remarkable work.

Edward Elgar is a titan of the English music tradition, but outside of his own country his music is far more often mentioned than played. I have yet to hear, or even hear of, a performance of his admitted masterpiece, "The Dream of Gerontius,' for example, or of his two symphonies; nor can it be complained that his concerto for violin and for 'cello, both works of substance, have become exactly staples of the overworked repertory of those two instruments. The one Elgar piece of large dimensions that has achieved real acceptance in this country is the so-called "Enigma" variations, fourteen variations done more or less in musical portraiture of fourteen friends of the composer on a theme marked "enigma." One wonders what treasures lie buried within those other large works, for in many ways, the majestic, grave, yet tender "Enigma" variations constitute one of the more moving and eloquent restatements of the whole late romantic period.

No phyicist has ever been a more devoted exponent of the law of conservation of energy than the eighty-two-year-old Mr. Monteux and the performance of all of the foregoing works is a case in point. To be sure, there was no fuss, no bother, no extravagant interpolations, no undue dilation on sheer gorgeousness of sound. But in music the line between economy and listlessness is often obscure and I am afraid that Mr. Monteux's readings have more than a tendency to partake of the latter characteristic. On the present occasion, too, the igniting spark was never forthcoming, so that a concert that had the ingredients of something really satisfying ended up as something only adequate.

This week, after a month's vacation, Mr. Munch returns to conduct the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," and the world premiere of Walton's 'Cello Concerto, together with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. The soloist will be Gregor Piatigorsky.

Hadassah on the Air

Mrs. Samuel Fishlyn, president of the Henrietta Szold Evening Group of Hadassah, wil be guest speaker on the Judea Hour, Station WBOS (1600 on the dial) next Sunday, Jan. 27, between 11 and 12 noon. Mrs. Fishlyn will discuss the activities of her group of young matrons in all of Hadassah's projects in Israel and the United States.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,978

JAN 25 1957

My Boston

By Alan Frazer

Family Ties to Symphony Conductor

DR. ALBERT SCHWEITZER, who has devoted his life to curing natives in Africa, states there are still cannibals in his area. He added: "If the cannibals get hold of he, I hope at least they'll put on my tombstone, 'Gone to the Last Morsel.'"

THIS famous humanitarian's brother married a sister of DR. MUNCH, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And Dr. Schweitzer's first book was about his teacher, EUGENE MUNCH, an uncle of the conductor.

JEROME HILL, producer of a movie about Dr. Schweitzer which opens Sunday at the Exeter, is a grandson of JAMES J. HILL, creator of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

THE producer is a grad of Yale '27 but has as many Harvard friends. He says: "I went to Yale but I came to Cambridge."

HILL once toured Paris with his mother who was showing some of her grandchildren the sights, including the Bibliotheque Ste. Genevieve. Hill told her: "That building was copied when they built the Boston Public Library." His mother replied: "The rascals!"

ERICA ANDERSON, photographer of the new movie, said that GLORIA COOLIDGE of Milton found romance through working in Africa as a nurse with Dr. Schweitzer. On a trip up to Holland, she met and married a clergyman brother of another Schweitzer aide.

GLORIA'S paintings and drawings decorate the African hospital profusely, and Dr. Schweitzer has a cat that she raised. Its name is Pansy.

DR. SCHWEITZER, visiting his native Alsace, traveled in a third-class railroad car and, when asked why, he replied: "Because there's no fourth class." In Africa he will permit no thermometers because "If we knew how hot it is, we couldn't stand it."

ERICA ANDERSON, DR. MUNCH: Happy Over Her Film

HE ALLOWED Jerome Hill to make the movie because he saw that Hill was serious-minded. "Just don't make me a jungle doctor," he said. Hill didn't; but the publicity release about the film begins: "'Albert Schweitzer' is the cinema biography of the real jungle doctor."

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

JAN 29 1957

O'S sons is a student at Sacred Heart t Andover. The lad recently said "how to a visitor, JUANITA CANSINO, the was smartly dressed.
d Juanita to her woman companion, nink when he sees it."
tain of waiters at Polynesian Village, told by many customers that he's the CHAN—a Polynesian Charlie Chan.

Sights and Sidelights

By THE SIGHTSEER

AROUND TOWN—Local residents who attended Boston Symphony concerts this past weekend report Randall Thompson's composition, "A Trip to Nahant," which was played for the first time in Boston at the concerts, is a joyful, melodic piece done in folk tune style. The composition by the Harvard professor pictures a trip to the Nahant of 50 years ago of a young couple. The critics liked the work, although noting that its lightness probably means its future performances will be at Pops style concerts. . . . Jim Mathews, former Lynn Coca-Cola executive, still keeps in touch with events in this area. Bob McGarigle, Boston newspaperman known in this area as a former New England League baseball umpire, sends Mathews copies of The Item whenever anything special breaks here. Bob recently sent Jim, now Atlantic Coast district supervisor of a soft drink concern in Camden, N. J., copies of The Item featuring pictures of the Agoos Tannery fire. . . . State Commissioner of Natural Resources Francis W. Sargent, who has been named by President Eisenhower to an international board on North Atlantic fishing problems, spoke at the recent meeting of the West Lynn Fish and Game Club. . . . One of the last visitors at the bedside of William Eythe, Hollywood producer and actor, who died at the age of 38, was actress Carol Channing. Miss Channing, whose parents live in Swampscott, first hit the big time in Eythe's production of "Lend An Ear" on Broadway. . . . Navy Signalman Emerson F. Nolan of Marblehead, back home again while his ship, the U. S. S. Hyman, is at the Boston Navy

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

JAN 27 1957

Gagliano Violin Given Symphony

A valuable Joseph Gagliano violin was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week by Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio of Middletown, Conn.

She is the widow of a member of the Orchestra from 1910 to 1912, and sister-in-law of the late Enrico Fabrizio, 'cellist with the Orchestra from 1918 to 1952.

Conductor Charles Munch and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, accepted the gift in behalf of the Orchestra.

The violin, described as "by Joseph Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, fecit Neap. 1792," is believed to have first appeared in Boston in the possession of Placido Fiumara, a member of the Boston Symphony from 1885 to 1917. It later became the property of the Fabrizio family.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

JAN 26 1957

Symphony Given Violin

After the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, received on behalf of the Orchestra a valuable Joseph Gagliano violin presented by Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio of Middletown, Ct., whose husband was a member of the Boston Symphony between 1910 and 1912. Mrs. Fabrizio is also the sister-in-law of the late Enrico Fabrizio, cellist of the Orchestra between 1918 and 1952.

The violin, which is described as by "Joseph Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, fecit Neap, 1792," was thought to have first appeared in Boston in the possession of Placido Fiumara, a member of the Boston Symphony from 1885 to 1917, and then became the property of Mr. Fabrizio.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

184

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

JAN 24 1957

Music in Review

Monteux Conducts BSO

By GERALD A. BERLIN

When Pierre Monteux is not utilizing his guest appearances here as a de facto dress rehearsal for some pending transcontinental or overseas tour with the orchestra, he can draw upon his enormous versatility to adduce some uncommonly arresting programs. Such was the genial happenstance last weekend at Symphony Hall, where the works included Stravinsky's Suite from the Ballet "Pulcinella" after Pergolesi), instrumental excerpts from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. As a memorial to Arturo Toscanini Mr. Monteux commenced the concert with the Larghetto, the "Death of Clarchen," from Beethoven's "Egmont."

The "Pulcinella" is a ballet which Stravinsky created from the old Neopolitan comedy and for whose initial production Picasso devised both the scenery and the costumes. It marked Stravinsky's first assay into the neo-classic period of his development. The musical material is based on some then newly discovered scores of what were thought to be some Pergolesi trio sonatas but which are now considered to be spurious. The composer, attacked both for his plagiarism and for the liberties he took with the old music, promptly became a fresh source of controversy. As Nicolas Slonimsky has put it: "Stravinsky, in his use of thematic material from other composers, is never a mere arranger; his ballets after Pergolesi or Tchaikowsky are either perversions or recreation, depending on the viewpoint.' Heard in the retrospect of thirty-seven years, the "Pulcinella" comes through as a marvelously skilled employment of delightful baroque material seasoned with the harmonic astringencies and rhythmic eccentricities that could be no one's but Stravinsky's.

In Debussy's opera, "Pelleas et Melisande," a song text that flows like natural speech is combined with a suggestive orchestral background that has been described as a "tonal envelope." This orchestral portion, which continues from act to act and scene to scene before the closed curtain, contributes prodigiously to sustaining the ineffable mood of the opera, which may well represent the very peak of musical impressionism. The excerpts played here were taken from that continuous music. Whenever I have heard "Pelleas," the audience has tended to stir about and talk so during these orchestral interludes that not only is the mood ruptured but indeed the musical sound itself blotted out. It was therefore gratifying for once to hear these excerpts well enough to find out what the music is like. Lovely though it is, it only hints, when lifted thus out of context, at the spell engendered by this remarkable work.

Edward Elgar is a titan of the English music tradition, but outside of his own country his music is far more often mentioned than played. I have yet to hear, or even hear of, a performance of his admitted masterpiece, "The Dream of Gerontius,' for example, or of his two symphonies; nor can it be complained that his concerto for violin and for 'cello, both works of substance, have become exactly staples of the overworked repertory of those two instruments. The one Elgar piece of large dimensions that has achieved real acceptance in this country is the so-called "Enigma" variations, fourteen variations done more or less in musical portraiture of fourteen friends of the composer on a theme marked "enigma." One wonders what treasures lie buried within those other large works, for in many ways, the majestic, grave, yet tender "Enigma" variations constitute one of the more moving and eloquent restatements of the whole late romantic period.

No phyicist has ever been a more devoted exponent of the law of conservation of energy than the eighty-two-year-old Mr. Monteux and the performance of all of the foregoing works is a case in point. To be sure, there was no fuss, no bother, no extravagant interpolations, no undue dilation on sheer gorgeousness of sound. But in music the line between economy and listlessness is often obscure and I am afraid that Mr. Monteux's readings have more than a tendency to partake of the latter characteristic. On the present occasion, too, the igniting spark was never forthcoming, so that a concert that had the ingredients of something really satisfying ended up as something only adequate.

This week, after a month's vacation, Mr. Munch returns to conduct the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," and the world premiere of Walton's 'Cello Concerto, together with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. The soloist will be Gregor Piatigorsky.

Hadassah on the Air

Mrs. Samuel Fishlyn, president of the Henrietta Szold Evening Group of Hadassah, wil be guest speaker on the Judea Hour, Station WBOS (1600 on the dial) next Sunday, Jan. 27, between 11 and 12 noon. Mrs. Fishlyn will discuss the activities of her group of young matrons in all of Hadassah's projects in Israel and the United States.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,978

JAN 25 1957

My Boston

By Alan Frazer

Family Ties to Symphony Conductor

DR. ALBERT SCHWEITZER, who has devoted his life to curing natives in Africa, states there are still cannibals in his area. He added: "If the cannibals get hold of he, I hope at least they'll put on my tombstone, 'Gone to the Last Morsel.'"

THIS famous humanitarian's brother married a sister of DR. MUNCH, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And Dr. Schweitzer's first book was about his teacher, EUGENE MUNCH, an uncle of the conductor.

JEROME HILL, producer of a movie about Dr. Schweitzer which opens Sunday at the Exeter, is a grandson of JAMES J. HILL, creator of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

THE producer is a grad of Yale '27 but has as many Harvard friends. He says: "I went to Yale but I came to Cambridge."

HILL once toured Paris with his mother who was showing some of her grandchildren the sights, including the Bibliotheque Ste. Genevieve. Hill told her: "That building was copied when they built the Boston Public Library." His mother replied: "The rascals!"

ERICA ANDERSON, photographer of the new movie, said that GLORIA COOLIDGE of Milton found romance through working in Africa as a nurse with Dr. Schweitzer. On a trip up to Holland, she met and married a clergyman brother of another Schweitzer aide.

GLORIA'S paintings and drawings decorate the African hospital profusely, and Dr. Schweitzer has a cat that she raised. Its name is Pansy.

DR. SCHWEITZER, visiting his native Alsace, traveled in a third-class railroad car and, when asked why, he replied: "Because there's no fourth class." In Africa he will permit no thermometers because "if we knew how hot it is, we couldn't stand it."

ERICA ANDERSON, DR. MUNCH: Happy Over Her Film

HE ALLOWED Jerome Hill to make the movie because he saw that Hill was serious-minded. "Just don't make me a jungle doctor," he said. Hill didn't; but the publicity release about the film begins: "'Albert Schweitzer' is the cinema biography of the [illegible]ned jungle doctor."

Item
LYNN, Ma[illegible]
Republican
Circ. 21,915

JAN 29 1957

[illegible]V. FURCOLO'S sons is a student at Sacred Heart [illegible] Boys at Andover. The lad recently said "how [illegible]v to a visitor, JUANITA CANSINO, the [illegible] was smartly dressed.
[illegible]d Juanita to her woman companion, [illegible]nink when he sees it."
[illegible]tain of waiters at Polynesian Village, [illegible] told by many customers that he's the [illegible] CHAN—a Polynesian Charlie Chan.

Sights and Sidelights

By THE SIGHTSEER

AROUND TOWN—Local residents who attended Boston Symphony concerts this past weekend report Randall Thompson's composition, "A Trip to Nahant," which was played for the first time in Boston at the concerts, is a joyful, melodic piece done in folk tune style. The composition by the Harvard professor pictures a trip to the Nahant of 50 years ago of a young couple. The critics liked the work, although noting that its lightness probably means its future performances will be at Pops style concerts. . . . Jim Mathews, former Lynn Coca-Cola executive, still keeps in touch with events in this area. Bob McGarigle, Boston newspaperman known in this area as a former New England League baseball umpire, sends Mathews copies of The Item whenever anything special breaks here. Bob recently sent Jim, now Atlantic Coast district supervisor of a soft drink concern in Camden, N. J., copies of The Item featuring pictures of the Agoos Tannery fire. . . . State Commissioner of Natural Resources Francis W. Sargent, who has been named by President Eisenhower to an international board on North Atlantic fishing problems, spoke at the recent meeting of the West Lynn Fish and Game Club. . . . One of the last visitors at the bedside of William Eythe, Hollywood producer and actor, who died at the age of 38, was actress Carol Channing. Miss Channing, whose parents live in Swampscott, first hit the big time in Eythe's production of "Lend An Ear" on Broadway. . . . Navy Signalman Emerson F. Nolan of Marblehead, back home again while his ship, the U. S. S. Hyman, is at the Boston Navy

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

JAN 27 1[illegible]

Gagliano Violin Given Symphony

A valuable Joseph Gagliano violin was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week by Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio of Middletown, Conn.

She is the widow of a member of the Orchestra from 1910 to 1912, and sister-in-law of the late Enrico Fabrizio, 'cellist with the Orchestra from 1918 to 1952.

Conductor Charles Munch and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, accepted the gift in behalf of the Orchestra.

The violin, described as by "Joseph Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, fecit Neap, 1792," is believed to have first appeared in Boston in the possession of Placido Fiumara, a member of the Boston Symphony from 1885 to 1917. It later became the property of the Fabrizio family.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

JAN 26 1957

Symphony Given Violin

After the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, received on behalf of the Orchestra a valuable Joseph Gagliano violin presented by Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio of Middletown, Ct., whose husband was a member of the Boston Symphony between 1910 and 1912. Mrs. Fabrizio is also the sister-in-law of the late Enrico Fabrizio, cellist of the Orchestra between 1918 and 1952.

The violin, which is described as by "Joseph Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, fecit Neap, 1792," was thought to have first appeared in Boston in the possession of Placido Fiumara, a member of the Boston Symphony from 1885 to 1917, and then became the property of Mr. Fabrizio.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JAN 26 1957

Two Premières on Symphony Program

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
JAN 26 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the fifth program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist. The program:

"A Trip to Nahant", Randall Thompson
Violoncello Concerto ..... Walton
Symphony No. 4 in B flat, Op. 60 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Sir William Walton's Violoncello Concerto, receiving its world premiere at yesterday's concert with Gregor Piatigorsky (to whom it is dedicated) as soloist, is a most difficult work to evaluate at a first hearing, one of the most difficult in recent years.

It is in the first place an immense and lofty conception, perhaps the most complicated work for the cello in the literature. Although it is cyclical in its architecture, the material of the opening appearing at the end in an epilogue of a melancholy character verging on stark tragedy, the outlines of the work remain deeply enshadowed: it seems on first hearing to be a continuous revelation, moving forward without structure, without form, without a point of reference and without the slightest concession to melodic felicity whatever. It is, moreover, much too long; it seems to go on and on forever, and all the more so for the fact there isn't a touch of lightness, save in atmosphere at the very beginning, to relieve the overall severity of mood.

Inner Character

Yet there is more to it than meets the casual ear, and it is more than possible that repeated hearings of the work would reveal that the inner character of the music is much more meaningful than it seems. It was certainly clear that Mr. Piatigorsky has every conviction in the true value of the work: he played with all his customary technical security and bravura, but it was evident he was grateful for the opportunity to explore new horizons in cello concertos.

The result was a performance of enormous conviction. It was not a conviction I could share since I found myself bored much of the time, but I am charging this off, for the present, anyway, to inability to crack this musical nut the first time around. In any case, the cellist enjoyed a tremendous personal success being called back to the stage four times, meanwhile characteristically waving his cello around as if it were a violin.

Randall Thompson's "A Trip to Nahant" receiving its first performance in Boston, was a world apart from the Walton. A genial and very witty essay depicting a young couple on a day's outing to the Nahant of a half century ago, it is a kaleidescope of exhuberant impressions.

Mr. Thompson captures everything from a square dance to a choir rehearsal, but over all hovers the warm romantic theme (and it is a very beautiful one) of the young lovers as they wander, hand in hand, from the amusements to a tryst by the seaside. The atmosphere is one of nostalgia and of charming candor, yet the composer never descends to sentimentality. The work may be a little too long for its content, but it is a very attractive occasional piece to say the least, beautifully and sensitively scored

The program ended with a very clean and vivacious performance of Beethoven's Fourth, one of the towering marvels of musical architecture, and a joy from beginning to end. It seemed to me the finale was awfully fast for an allegro ma non troppo, but this is more than likely to be Mr. Munch's way with the Beethoven finales anyway, and no one can deny its effectiveness.

Nicole Henriot returns next week to do Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto. The same composer's "Romeo and Juliet" suite is also included, and there will be the first performance of Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 26 1957

Piatigorsky Plays New Walton Concerto

By Harold Rogers

Two premières—one for Boston and one for the world—grace the concerts this weekend by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall Charles Munch conducted the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant." The world première—and by far the more important of the two—was of Sir William Watson's Violoncello Concerto, dedicated to Gregor Piatigorsky, the soloist.

Sir William composed this, his first concerto for the instrument, last year while on the island of Ischia, and one wonders if some of the softer moods of the Mediterranean have found their way into his score. It is thoroughly romantic in the best and highest sense of the word, though occasionally colored with impressionistic orchestral effects more Latin than Anglo-Saxon.

* * *

It is a masterful piece of writing throughout. Opening with a Moderato tempo, it strikes a strolling pace over which the cello soars in a tender, aspiring melody, almost in the manner of a free improvisation. Mr. Piatigorsky's lustrous tone came forth with a shining brilliance, firm, strong, and pure.

Sir William saved the tour de force for the middle movement, an Allegro appassionato. Here he gives the cello some fiddling flourishes over simple rhythmic figures. The scoring is always economical, yet appealing in its deft patches of color.

The final movement—Lento; Allegro molto; Adagio—opens with a plaintive, singing melody, muted and eloquent. Sir William features the soloist at all times and gives the instrument the music that displays it to best advantage.

This movement is interrupted twice by improvizations for unaccompanied cello. The first of these puts the soloist to the test with the usual complications of doublestops, pizzicato chords, and harmonics. The second is more thoughtful, more introspective. The concerto then returns to the opening mood, and the final utterance is intense, lofty, and quiet.

Mr. Piatogorsky's listeners gave both him and his work a warm reception, recalling him four times to the stage with bravos.

* * *

Mr. Thompson's "A Trip to Nahant," which opened the concert, derives its title from an old square-dance tune which the composer once heard and has since forgotten. With the title as his basis, however, he devised some folk music of his own in pure American style, plus an ingenuous story to go along with it.

The piece opens with zippy hoe-down energy as a young couple at Nahant take in a square dance. Then, as they wander along, we hear the hurdy-gurdy of a merry-go-round, the rehearsal of a church choir, and wind sweeping the lonely beach. Here Mr. Thompson provides some impassioned music as the two "declare their undying love." As they retrace their steps we hear a recapitulation of the themes that have gone before.

This "Visit to Nahant" takes almost half an hour, which at times seems overlong for the lightness of the material. But it is preeminently youthful, always pleasant, and often entertaining. Mr. Munch beckoned for the composer to rise twice from his seat to acknowledge the applause.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 is the concluding selection for the concerts this weekend.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
JAN 25 1957

Symphony Soloist

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY will be 'cello soloist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 26 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Premiere of Walton Concerto

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, performed at Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 13th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted the first performance in Boston of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant"; the world premiere of Sir William Walton's Cello Concerto, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and the Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, of Beethoven.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch returned to the conductor's stand of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, following an absence of five weeks. The highlight of the concert was the world premiere of the Cello Concerto which Sir William Walton wrote for the soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky. This long-awaited performance had been scheduled for last Fall, but illness of Mr. Piatigorsky forced postponement.

The new work is a fine, warm and songful piece for the solo instrument, but is much more a rhapsody than a concerto. It is written superbly well in the idiom of the cello and is displayful both of certain difficult effects, and of the singing quality and the variety of tone colors through the long range of the instrument.

Furthermore this is music peculiarly suited to Mr. Piatigorsky's personal manner of playing, and yesterday his bow swept the strings with a glorious poetic eloquence, and with a magnificent depth and richness of sound. I cannot recall ever having heard Mr. Piatigorsky play better.

The nomenclature of musical structure, these days, is not so strict as once it was. All sorts of music have been called symphonies and concertos, and because there is no Federal Composition Commission, or some such, composers can get away with it. What Walton has created here is not a symphonic concerto characterized by interplay between orchestra and solo instrument, but a large rhapsody, with the cello doing practically all of the rhapsodizing and the orchestra, for the most part, providing a meagre and a static accompaniment. But since Sir William calls it Concerto we can do no less than courteously follow his example.

Notably Slow, Soft

This is a notably slow and soft Concerto. While there is a good deal of subtle rhythm, a considerable portion of the forward motion is in the cello part, and that carries the orchestra along. The beginning is very quiet, so is the conclusion. Never once did Walton make it difficult for the cello to be heard above the orchestra, much less ever drown it in a flood of resonance.

If the Concerto is soft dynamically, it is gentle as custard in its harmonic basis. What dissonance there is would not alarm an elderly aunt or an old-fashioned professor of music. There are few bright colors in the instrumentation; the texture is mainly blends of pastel tints. Perhaps the sun was not shining fiercely upon the island of Ischia when Walton was composing.

The cello is the whole show here, and if you follow the reasoning that the greatest concertos of the past have been those which pit orchestra against soloist in a spectacular scuffle, the conclusion is that Walton's new piece is rather too pacific for the Symphonic Big League. But that is prophecy, and only time will tell. At any rate, all seemed to go well. Mr. Piatigorsky was roundly and deservedly cheered for his prowess, conductor and orchestra gave him utmost hospitality, and we all had a good time.

A Trip to Nahant

New to Boston, and first music of the afternoon was "A Trip to Nahant" by Randall Thompson of the Harvard music department. This Fantasy was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in 1948, and it was created with an abundance of old-fashioned tunes of Mr. Thompson's invention. There is—miraculous in 1957!—even a program which tells of a young boy and girl in love, one Summer afternoon, years ago, who enjoyed a visit to Nahant.

The piece is quite light, a trifle too long for its substance, altogether ingratiating, but, taking all in all, a trifle. I have been wondering whether, had a less august name than that of Mr. Thompson been affixed to the score, it would have been deemed substantial enough for a symphonic concert.

Not that its facture is indifferent—far from it! Mr. Thompson has a highly polished technic, and if there is one note too many, I didn't hear it. All is clear as well-washed glass, everything "sounds," and if it sounds pretty much like Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, that may be ascribed to the premise that this trip to Nahant occurred long, long ago. The composer was in the audience and bowed to cordial applause.

Beethoven's Fourth received from Mr. Munch and the orchestra a brisk, taut performance that seemed to arouse general delight.

Next week Mr. Munch will present Leo Smit's First Symphony, in E-flat (first performance), and two works by Prokofieff—the G minor Piano Concerto with Nicole Henriot as soloist, and a Suite from the Ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
JAN 30 1957

Music In Review

Audience Cheers Piatigorsky At Boston Symphony Concert

Gregor Piatigorsky, cello virtuoso, produced cheers and bravos from a clamorous audience after playing with deep emotion and rare beauty the Hebrew Rhapsody "Schelomo" by Ernst Bloch last night with the Boston Symphony. The near-capacity audience recalled the soleist five times at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Mr. Piatigorsky produced a quality of tone rarely heard here, and the mournful and melancholy phrases of this classic were played with breathtaking artistry. The orchestra was brilliant in painting the magnificence of King Solomon's court and the nobility of the golden era of history. The soloist depicted the lamentations, the prayers, hopes and sorrows of the people with superb lyricism.

Charles Munch conducted with his usual skill and color. The opening work was Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge," a series of brief musical hors d'oeuvres that gave the audience nibbles of adagio, march, aria Italiana, Bourree classique, moto perpetuo, marche funebre and fugue. It was a delightful assortment of melodic and harmonic treats that ranged from the slow and sweet, through the saucy and spicy to the somber moods of the funeral march. In the aria Italiana, the viola players tucked their instruments under their arms and played them like mandolins in a merry melody.

The after-intermission work was Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4 in B-Flat Major, opus 60." The opening was a sort of reverie on a sober, almost grave, theme that soon changed to a staccato gaiety. The second movement, adagio, is perfect melody in a chaste, dreamy mood which, in the opinion of many, is the most beautiful Beethoven ever wrote. It is filled with a singing softness of radiant joy.

The next two movements were allegro vivace and allegro, ma non troppo, in an exciting fluency with winds and strings exchanging phrases that brought a feeling of ecstacy to music lovers. Stormy applause brought Dr. Munch back to the center stage several times.

C.H.L.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
JAN 27 1957

gliano olin Given
mphony

luable Joseph Gagliano was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio Middletown, Conn.

the widow of a member the Orchestra from 1910 and sister-in-law of the Enrico Fabrizio, cellist the Orchestra from 1918 uctor Charles Munch and B. Cabot, president of the accepted the gift in of the Orchestra.

Violin, described as by Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, eap, 1792," is believed to st appeared in Boston in session of Placido Fiu- a member of the Boston ny, from 1885 to 1917. It came the property of the o family.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 26 1957

phony Given Violin

the concert of the Boston ony Orchestra yesterday, rles Munch, music director, enry B. Cabot, president of stees, received on behalf of chestra a valuable Joseph o violin presented by Mrs. e Fabrizio of Middletown, ose husband was a member Boston Symphony between d 1912. Mrs. Fabrizio is also r-in-law of the late Enrico o, cellist of the Orchestra n 1918 and 1952.

iolin, which is described as eph Gagliano, Filius Nico- Neap, 1792," was thought first appeared in Boston in ession of Placido Fiumara, er of the Boston Symphony 5 to 1917, and then became perty of Mr. Fabrizio.

SEER

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
JAN 27 19

agliano olin Given mphony

luable Joseph Gagliano was presented to the Bos- mphony Orchestra last y Mrs. Carmine Fabrizio nletown, Conn. s the widow of a mem- the Orchestra from 1910 and sister-in-law of the nrico Fabrizio, 'cellist he Orchestra from 1918 uctor Charles Munch and B. Cabot, president of s, accepted the gift in of the Orchestra. violin, described as by n Gagliano, Filius Nicolai, eap, 1792," is believed to rst appeared in Boston in ssession of Placido Fiu- a member of the Boston ny from 1885 to 1917. It ecame the property of the family.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 26 1957

phony Given Violin

the concert of the Boston ony Orchestra yesterday, rles Munch, music director, enry B. Cabot, president of stees, received on behalf of chestra a valuable Joseph no violin presented by Mrs. e Fabrizio of Middletown, ose husband was a member Boston Symphony between d 1912. Mrs. Fabrizio is also er-in-law of the late Enrico o, cellist of the Orchestra n 1918 and 1952. iolin, which is described as eph Gagliano, Filius Nico- Neap, 1792," was thought first appeared in Boston in ession of Placido Fiumara, er of the Boston Symphony 85 to 1917, and then became perty of Mr. Fabrizio.

SEER

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
JAN 26 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the opening set of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist. The program

"A Trip to Nahant", Randall Thompson
Violoncello Concerto ..... Walton
Symphony No. 4 in B flat, Op. 60 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Sir William Walton's Violoncello Concerto, receiving its world premiere at yesterday's concert with Gregor Piatigorsky (to whom it is dedicated) as soloist, is a most difficult work to evaluate at a first hearing, one of the most difficult in recent years.

It is in the first place an immense and lofty conception, perhaps the most complicated work for the cello in the literature. Although it is cyclical in its architecture, the material of the opening appearing at the end in an epilogue of a melancholy character verging on stark tragedy, the outlines of the work remain deeply enshadowed: it seems on first hearing to be a continuous revelation, moving forward without structure, without form, without a point of reference and without the slightest concession to melodic felicity whatever. It is, moreover, much too long; it seems to go on and on forever, and all the more so for the fact there isn't a touch of lightness, save in atmosphere at the very beginning, to relieve the overall severity of mood.

Inner Character

Yet there is more to it than meets the casual ear, and it is more than possible that repeated hearings of the work would reveal that the inner character of the music is much more meaningful than it seems. It was certainly clear that Mr. Piatigorsky has every conviction in the true value of the work: he played with all his customary technical security and bravura, but it was evident he was grateful for the opportunity to explore new horizons in cello concertos.

The result was a performance of enormous conviction. It was not a conviction I could share since I found myself bored much of the time, but I am charging this off, for the present, anyway, to inability to crack this musical nut the first time around. In any case, the cellist enjoyed a tremendous personal success being called back to the stage four times, meanwhile characteristically waving his cello around as if it were a violin.

Randall Thompson's "A Trip to Nahant" receiving its first performance in Boston, was a world apart from the Walton. A genial and very witty essay depicting a young couple on a day's outing to the Nahant of a half century ago, it is a kaleidescope of exhuberant impressions.

Mr. Thompson captures everything from a square dance to a choir rehearsal, but over all hovers the warm romantic theme (and it is a very beautiful one) of the young lovers as they wander, hand in hand, from the amusements to a tryst by the seaside. The atmosphere is one of nostalgia and of charming candor, yet the composer never descends to sentimentality. The work may be a little too long for its content, but it is a very attractive occasional piece to say the least, beautifully and sensitively scored

The program ended with a very clean and vivacious performance of Beethoven's Fourth, one of the towering marvels of musical architecture, and a joy from beginning to end. It seemed to me the finale was awfully fast for an allegro ma non troppo, but this is more than likely to be Mr. Munch's way with the Beethoven finales anyway, and no one can deny its effectiveness.

Nicole Henriot returns next week to do Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto. The same composer's "Romeo and Juliet" suite is also included, and there will be the first performance of Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JAN 26 1957

Two Premières on Symphony Program

Piatigorsky Plays New Walton Concerto

By Harold Rogers

Two premières—one for Boston and one for the world—grace the concerts this weekend by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall Charles Munch conducted the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant." The world première—and by far the more important of the two—was of Sir William Watson's Violoncello Concerto, dedicated to Gregor Piatigorsky, the soloist.

Sir William composed this, his first concerto for the instrument, last year while on the island of Ischia, and one wonders if some of the softer moods of the Mediterranean have found their way into his score. It is thoroughly romantic in the best and highest sense of the word, though occasionally colored with impressionistic orchestral effects more Latin than Anglo-Saxon.

* * *

It is a masterful piece of writing throughout. Opening with a Moderato tempo, it strikes a strolling pace over which the cello soars in a tender, aspiring melody, almost in the manner of a free improvisation. Mr. Piatigorsky's lustrous tone came forth with a shining brilliance, firm, strong, and pure.

Sir William saved the tour de force for the middle movement, an Allegro appassionato. Here he gives the cello some fiddling flourishes over simple rhythmic figures. The scoring is always economical, yet appealing in its deft patches of color.

The final movement—Lento; Allegro molto; Adagio—opens with a plaintive, singing melody, muted and eloquent. Sir William features the soloist at all times and gives the instrument the music that displays it to best advantage.

This movement is interrupted twice by improvizations for unaccompanied cello. The first of these puts the soloist to the test with the usual complications of doublestops, pizzicato chords, and harmonics. The second is more thoughtful, more introspective. The concerto then returns to the opening mood, and the final utterance is intense, lofty, and quiet.

Mr. Piatogorsky's listeners gave both him and his work a warm reception, recalling him four times to the stage with bravos.

* * *

Mr. Thompson's "A Trip to Nahant," which opened the concert, derives its title from an old square-dance tune which the composer once heard and has since forgotten. With the title as his basis, however, he devised some folk music of his own in pure American style, plus an ingenuous story to go along with it.

The piece opens with zippy hoe-down energy as a young couple at Nahant take in a square dance. Then, as they wander along, we hear the hurdy-gurdy of a merry-go-round, the rehearsal of a church choir, and wind sweeping the lonely beach. Here Mr. Thompson provides some impassioned music as the two "declare their undying love." As they retrace their steps we hear a recapitulation of the themes that have gone before.

This "Visit to Nahant" takes almost half an hour, which at times seems overlong for the lightness of the material. But it is preeminently youthful, always pleasant, and often entertaining. Mr. Munch beckoned for the composer to rise twice from his seat to acknowledge the applause.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 is the concluding selection for the concerts this weekend.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
JAN 25 1957

Symphony Soloist

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY will be 'cello soloist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JAN 26 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Premiere of Walton Concerto

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, performed at Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 13th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted the first performance in Boston of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant"; the world premiere of Sir William Walton's Cello Concerto, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and the Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, of Beethoven.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch returned to the conductor's stand of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, following an absence of five weeks. The highlight of the concert was the world premiere of the Cello Concerto which Sir William Walton wrote for the soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky. This long-awaited performance had been scheduled for last Fall, but illness of Mr. Piatigorsky forced postponement.

The new work is a fine, warm and songful piece for the solo instrument, but is much more a rhapsody than a concerto. It is written superbly well in the idiom of the cello and is displayful both of certain difficult effects, and of the singing quality and the variety of tone colors through the long range of the instrument.

Furthermore this is music peculiarly suited to Mr. Piatigorsky's personal manner of playing, and yesterday his bow swept the strings with a glorious poetic eloquence, and with a magnificent depth and richness of sound. I cannot recall ever having heard Mr. Piatigorsky play better.

The nomenclature of musical structures these days, is not so strict as once it was. All sorts of music have been called symphonies and concertos, and because there is no Federal Composition Commission, or some such, composers can get away with it. What Walton has created here is not a symphonic concerto characterized by interplay between orchestra and solo instrument, but a large rhapsody, with the cello doing practically all of the rhapsodizing and the orchestra, for the most part, providing a meagre and a static accompaniment. But since Sir William calls it Concerto we can do no less than courteously follow his example.

Notably Slow, Soft

This is a notably slow and soft Concerto. While there is a good deal of subtle rhythm, a considerable portion of the forward motion is in the cello part, and that carries the orchestra along. The beginning is very quiet, so is the conclusion. Never once did Walton make it difficult for the cello to be heard above the orchestra, much less ever drown it in a flood of resonance.

If the Concerto is soft dynamically, it is gentle as custard in its harmonic basis. What dissonance there is would not alarm an elderly aunt or an old-fashioned professor of music. There are few bright colors in the instrumentation; the texture is mainly blends of pastel tints. Perhaps the sun was not shining fiercely upon the island of Ischia when Walton was composing.

The cello is the whole show here, and if you follow the reasoning that the greatest concertos of the past have been those which pit orchestra against soloist in a spectacular scuffle, the conclusion is that Walton's new piece is rather too pacific for the Symphonic Big League. But that is prophecy, and only time will tell. At any rate, all seemed to go well. Mr. Piatigorsky was roundly and deservedly cheered for his prowess, conductor and orchestra gave him utmost hospitality, and we all had a good time.

A Trip to Nahant

New to Boston, and first music of the afternoon was "A Trip to Nahant" by Randall Thompson of the Harvard music department. This Fantasy was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in 1948, and it was created with an abundance of old-fashioned tunes of Mr. Thompson's invention. There is—miraculous in 1957!—even a program which tells of a young boy and girl in love, one Summer afternoon, years ago, who enjoyed a visit to Nahant.

The piece is quite light, a trifle too long for its substance, altogether ingratiating, but, taking all in all, a trifle. I have been wondering whether, had a less august name than that of Mr. Thompson been affixed to the score, it would have been deemed substantial enough for a symphonic concert.

Not that its facture is indifferent—far from it! Mr. Thompson has a highly polished technic, and if there is one note too many, I didn't hear it. All is clear as well-washed glass, everything "sounds," and if it sounds pretty much like Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, that may be ascribed to the premise that this trip to Nahant occurred long, long ago. The composer was in the audience and bowed to cordial applause.

Beethoven's Fourth received from Mr. Munch and the orchestra a brisk, taut performance that seemed to arouse general delight.

Next week Mr. Munch will present Leo Smit's First Symphony, in E-flat (first performance), and two works by Prokofieff—the G minor Piano Concerto with Nicole Henriot as soloist, and a Suite from the Ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
JAN 30 1957

Music In Review

Audience Cheers Piatigorsky At Boston Symphony Concert

Gregor Piatigorsky, cello virtuoso, produced cheers and bravos from a clamorous audience after playing with deep emotion and rare beauty the Hebrew Rhapsody "Schelomo" by Ernst Bloch last night with the Boston Symphony. The near-capacity audience recalled the soloist five times at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Mr. Piatigorsky produced a quality of tone rarely heard here, and the mournful and melancholy phrases of this classic were played with breathtaking artistry. The orchestra was brilliant in painting the magnificence of King Solomon's court and the nobility of the golden era of history. The soloist depicted the lamentations, the prayers, hopes and sorrows of the people with superb lyricism.

Charles Munch conducted with his usual skill and color. The opening work was Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge," a series of brief musical hors d'oeuvres that gave the audience nibbles of adagio, march, aria Italiana, Bourree classique, moto perpetuo, marche funebre and fugue. It was a delightful assortment of melodic and harmonic treats that ranged from the slow and sweet, through the saucy and spicy to the somber moods of the funeral march. In the aria Italiana, the viola players tucked their instruments under their arms and played them like mandolins in a merry melody.

The after-intermission work was Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4 in B-Flat Major, opus 60." The opening was a sort of reverie on a sober, almost grave, theme that soon changed to a staccato gaiety. The second movement, adagio, is perfect melody in a chaste, dreamy mood which, in the opinion of many, is the most beautiful Beethoven ever wrote. It is filled with a singing softness of radiant joy.

The next two movements were allegro vivace and allegro, ma non troppo, in an exciting fluency with winds and strings exchanging phrases that brought a feeling of ecstacy to music lovers. Stormy applause brought Dr. Munch back to the center stage several times.

C.H.L.

TIGHT BINDING

190

KOUSSEVITZKY LEGACY

International Music Fund Week Carries Out His Interest in Living Composer

Jan 31 '57 N Times

By JOHN BRIGGS

THE United States, which already observes among other things National Invest in America Week, National Children's Dental Health Week and National Coffee Week, will soon have the opportunity for still another observance, that of "International Music Fund Week."

This celebration (not to be confused with National Music Week, which occurs later in the spring) will be opened by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at their Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Friday. On that occasion they will present the first performances of Jan Meyerowitz' Symphony "Midrash Esther."

Also during this week the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of C. Charles Munch, will play first performances of Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 in Boston, this city and Washington.

In Philadelphia, Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will play first performances of Louis Gesensway's tone-poem, "Now Let the Night Be Dark for All of Me," and in Cincinnati [illegible] live performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

In so doing Koussevitzky was continuing his long interest in aiding the cause of the living composer.

In 1948, through a benefit concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky began the International Music Fund. The money raised at this concert, and at a similar concert in 1949, was turned over to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which supervised distribution of the money in the form of fellowships to composers and commissions for new works.

In May, 1951, Mr. Munch, Koussevitzky's successor in Boston, led the National Orchestra of Paris in a similar benefit concert, the proceeds again being turned over to UNESCO for distribution to worthy composers.

The establishment of "International Music Fund Week" represents the continuation of a campaign to establish the fund on a permanent, continuing basis.

The table of organization of the proposed permanent organization is complex. It will operate in connection with the International Music Council, an organization founded in Paris in 1949 on the initiative of UNESCO, which receives from the U. N. body a yearly subsidy of $25,000. Headquarters of the Council are at UNESCO House in Paris.

Aid to Composers

The International Music Fund will turn over a portion of the funds it collects to the Council, but also will undertake its own independent projects. The Council is interested in student-exchange programs and similar international-goodwill activities, whereas the Fund will devote itself to aiding composers.

A close affiliation already exists between the Fund and the Council. Domingo Santa Cruz of Chile, president of the Council, is a member of the executive committee of the Fund, as are Sir Steuart Wilson, immediate past president of the Council, and Henry Barraud and Marcel Cuvelier, vice persident and secretary of the Council. Jack Bornoff is executive secretary of both organizations.

The Fund itself is divided into two branches. One, the International Fund proper, has Mrs. Koussevitzky as its president. There is also an American International Music Fund, Inc., which has Mrs. Koussevitzky, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Seymour Siegel and Carleton Sprague Smith as directors.

Assuming that the necessary funds are forthcoming, the Fund will endeavor to carry on in the spirit of Koussevitzky. The Fund likes to quote from a speech the conductor made at Unesco House in May 1950, that "the composer is the ultimate creator and source of our great and living art. To him we are indebted for the spiritual wealth of music; the cultural wealth of musical literature; part [illegible] the material wealth of the expanding musical profession and industry."

JAN. 27, 57

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE

Concert News -- Opera Repertory

Nicole Henriot Symphony Soloist; Premiere of Leo Smit Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who has recently returned from a mid-winter vacation in Paris. Nicole Henriot, the young French pianist, will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto by Serge Prokofieff.

This concerto, which was composed in 1912-13 and received its first performance in 1913 with the composer as soloist, has not been heard at these concerts since its United States premiere on Jan. 31, 1930, when the composer was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The original score was lost and Prokofieff rewrote the work from a piano sketch. This revised version was performed by the composer under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with the pianist Jorge Bolet.

Mlle. Henriot made her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, and has been heard here frequently, both with the orchestra and in recital, since that time.

Dr. Munch will open the program of Feb. 1-2 with the first performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit. The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the Summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary, and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

SYMPHONY SOLOIST—Nicole Henriot, gifted young French pianist, will be the soloist at the Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Symphony in Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto. Charles Munch conducts.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
JAN 31 1957

Munch to Conduct Performance Of Smit Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, February 1 and 2, will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who has recently returned from a mid-winter vacation in Paris. Nicole Henriot, the young French pianist, will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto by Serge Prokofieff. This con-

Continued on Page Six

poser under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with the pianist Jorge Bolet. Mlle. Henriot made her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, and has been heard here frequently, both with the Orchestra and in recital, since that time.

Dr. Munch will open the program of February 1-2 with the first performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit. The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The program will close with a concert suite from Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet." The movements of the suite are as follows: Montagues and Capulets; Young Juliet; Friar Laurence; Dance; Scene; Masks; Hybalt's Death. The ballet was composed for the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow in 1935 and received its Russian premiere in Leningad in 1950 with the great ballerina, Ulanova, in the leading role. The score has also served as the basis for a Russian film which features members of the Bolshoi Theatre ballet and has received a wide circulation in this country.

The Orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

On the Aisle BROWN DAILY HERALD

Piatigorsky Sings

Tuesday evening's concert at the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium provided Providence listeners with the rare combination of a great cellist and orchestra, Gregor Piatigorsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch.

Piatigorsky performed Ernest Block's "Schelomo". The opportunities for artistic expression in this work are manifold and Mr. Piatigorsky took full advantage of the lyricism and ample breadth of phrasing in the score to give one of the finest performances of the work we have heard. Needless to say it was warmly received. Here's hoping that the B.S.O. will bring more artists of Piatigorsky's calibre to Providence in the future.

The opening work, Benjamin Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge", was not up to our expectations. Despite many displays of technical proficiency, the orchestra showed lack of good ensemble which leads us to suspect that the work was not thoroughly rehearsed. Though the strings were brilliant in certain passages, there was absent an intangible singing quality which the Boston orchestra can achieve when it is at its best.

In contrast to the two contemporary works of Block and Britten, the program concluded with the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven. It is noteworthy that a lesser known symphony of a great composer still holds its own against the most ambitious works of good contemporary composers. The interpretation of the Symphony was vigorous, and Mr. Munch's stressing of the rhythmic and dynamic elements of the work enhanced the melodic line. Beethoven gave the woodwinds their share of technical problems in this work and when in the third movement, "Allegro vicace", the clarinet attempted to answer an upward arpeggio, the resulting sound was more like a sneeze!

KENNETH S. LATCHIS AND DAVID C. LEWIS

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
JAN 31 1957

Music in

Piatigorsky

What with the new cello concerto by Thompson's Fantasy, weekend's program [illegible] That it did not was well in the company which shared the pro[illegible]

The Concerto, [illegible] only three months [illegible] dedicated to the dis[illegible] soloist of the evenin[illegible] Piatigorsky. Since Si[illegible] has a proven capa[illegible] lyrical, poignant exp[illegible] general, and since [illegible] violin and viola con[illegible] previously demon[illegible] particularly felicitous [illegible] writing for solo st[illegible] instruments, the chance [illegible] providing a permane[illegible] to the impoverish[illegible] cello repertory of t[illegible] seemed good. Unfortu[illegible] new work, at least [illegible] listening, does not [illegible] that attains that end. [illegible] is spacious and large [illegible] and there are in it s[illegible] moments, as in the b[illegible] trospective opening [illegible] rather tender, charact[illegible] ly Waltonian restate[illegible] the concluding Adag[illegible] the long development [illegible] first movement failed [illegible] the initial promise; in

TIGHT BINDING

190

KOUSSEVITZKY LEGACY

International Music Fund Week Carries Out His Interest in Living Composer

Jan 27 '57 Bkt Times

By JOHN BRIGGS

THE United States, which already observes among other things National Invest-in-America Week, National Children's Dental Health Week and National Coffee Week, will soon have the opportunity for still another observance, that of "International Music Fund Week."

This celebration (not to be confused with National Music Week, which occurs later in the spring) will be opened by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at their Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Friday. On that occasion they will present the first performances of Jan Meyerowitz' Symphony "Midrash Esther."

Also during this week the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will play first performances of Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 in Boston, this city and Washington.

In Philadelphia, Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will play first performances of Louis Gesensway's tone-poem, "Now Let the Night Be Dark for All of Me," and in Cincinnati, the proceeds again being turned over to UNESCO for distribution to worthy composers.

The establishment of "International Music Fund Week" represents the continuation of a campaign to establish the fund on a permanent, continuing basis.

The table of organization of the proposed permanent organization is complex. It will operate in conjunction with the International Music Council, an organization founded in Paris in 1949 on the initiative of UNESCO, which receives from the U. N. body a yearly subsidy of $25,000. Headquarters of the Council are at UNESCO House in Paris.

Aid to Composers

The International Music Fund will turn over a portion of the funds it collects to the Council, but also will undertake its own independent projects. The Council is interested in student-exchange programs and similar international-goodwill activities, whereas the Fund will devote itself to aiding composers.

A close affiliation already exists between the Fund and the Council. Domingo Santa Cruz of Chile, president of the Council, is a member of the executive committee of the Fund, as are Sir Steuart Wilson, immediate past president of the Council, and Henry Barraud and Marcel Cuvelier, vice persident and secretary of the Council. Jack Bornoff is executive secretary of both organizations.

The Fund itself is divided into two branches. One, the International Fund proper, has Mrs. Koussevitzky as its president. There is also an American International Music Fund, Inc., which has Mrs. Koussevitzky, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Seymour Siegel and Carleton Sprague Smith as directors.

Assuming that the necessary funds are forthcoming, the Fund will endeavor to carry on in the spirit of Koussevitzky. The Fund likes to quote from a speech the conductor made at Unesco House in May 1950, that "the composer is the ultimate creator and source of our great and living art. To him we are indebted for the spiritual wealth of music; the cultural wealth of musical literature, past and present; the material wealth of the expanding musical profession and industry."

live performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

In so doing Koussevitzky was continuing his long interest in aiding the cause of the living composer.

In 1948, through a benefit concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky began the International Music Fund. The money raised at this concert, and at a similar concert in 1949, was turned over to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which supervised distribution of the money in the form of fellowships to composers and commissions for new works.

In May, 1951, Mr. Munch, Koussevitzky's successor in Boston, led the National Orchestra of Paris in a similar benefit concert, the proceeds again being turned over to UNESCO for distribution to worthy composers.

The table of organization of the proposed permanent organization is complex. It will operate in conjunction with the International Music Council, an organization founded in Paris in 1949 on the initiative of UNESCO, which receives from the U. N. body a yearly subsidy of $25,000. Headquarters of the Council are at UNESCO House in Paris.

Aid to Composers

The International Music Fund will turn over a portion of the funds it collects to the Council, but also will undertake its own independent projects. The Council is interested in student-exchange programs and similar international-goodwill activities, whereas the Fund will devote itself to aiding composers.

A close affiliation already exists between the Fund and the Council. Domingo Santa Cruz of Chile, president of the Council, is a member of the executive committee of the Fund, as are Sir Steuart Wilson, immediate past president of the Council, and Henry Barraud and Marcel Cuvelier, vice persident and secretary of the Council. Jack Bornoff is executive secretary of both organizations.

The Fund itself is divided into two branches. One, the International Fund proper, has Mrs. Koussevitzky as its president. There is also an American International Music Fund, Inc., which has Mrs. Koussevitzky, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Seymour Siegel and Carleton Sprague Smith as directors.

Assuming that the necessary funds are forthcoming, the Fund will endeavor to carry on in the spirit of Koussevitzky. The Fund likes to quote from a speech the conductor made at Unesco House in May 1950, that "the composer is the ultimate creator and source of our great and living art. To him we are indebted for the spiritual wealth of music; the cultural wealth of musical literature, past and present; the material wealth of the expanding musical profession and industry."

JAN. 27, 57
THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE

Concert News -- Opera Repertory

Nicole Henriot Symphony Soloist; Premiere of Leo Smit Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who has recently returned from a mid-Winter vacation in Paris. Nicole Henriot, the young French pianist, will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto by Serge Prokofieff.

This concerto, which was composed in 1912-13 and received its first performance in 1913 with the composer as soloist, has not been heard at these concerts since its United States premiere on Jan. 31, 1930, when the composer was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The original score was lost and Prokofieff rewrote the work from a piano sketch. This revised version was performed by the composer under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with the pianist Jorge Bolet.

Mlle. Henriot made her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, and has been heard here frequently, both with the orchestra and in recital, since that time.

Dr. Munch will open the program of Feb. 1-2 with the first performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit. The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the Summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary, and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

SYMPHONY SOLOIST—Nicole Henriot, gifted young French pianist, will be the soloist at the Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Symphony in Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto. Charles Munch conducts.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
JAN 31 1957

Munch to Conduct Performance Of Smit Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, February 1 and 2, will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who has recently returned from a mid-winter vacation in Paris. Nicole Henriot, the young French pianist, will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto by Serge Prokofieff. This con-

Continued on Page Six

poser under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with the pianist Jorge Bolet. Mlle. Henriot made her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, and has been heard here frequently, both with the Orchestra and in recital, since that time.

Dr. Munch will open the program of February 1-2 with the first performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit. The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The program will close with a concert suite from Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet." The movements of the suite are as follows: Montagues and Capulets; Young Juliet; Friar Laurence; Dance; Scene; Masks; Hybalt's Death. The ballet was composed for the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow in 1935 and received its Russian premiere in Leningad in 1950 with the great ballerina, Ulanova, in the leading role. The score has also served as the basis for a Russian film which features members of the Bolshoi Theatre ballet and has received a wide circulation in this country.

The Orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

On the Aisle BROWN DAILY HERALD

Piatigorsky Sings

Tuesday evening's concert at the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium provided Providence listeners with the rare combination of a great cellist and orchestra, Gregor Piatigorsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch.

Piatigorsky performed Ernest Block's "Schelomo". The opportunities for artistic expression in this work are manifold and Mr. Piatigorsky took full advantage of the lyricism and ample breadth of phrasing in the score to give one of the finest performances of the work we have heard. Needless to say it was warmly received. Here's hoping that the B.S.O. will bring more artists of Piatigorsky's calibre to Providence in the future.

The opening work, Benjamin Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge", was not up to our expectations. Despite many displays of technical proficiency, the orchestra showed lack of good ensemble which leads us to suspect that the work was not thoroughly rehearsed. Though the strings were brilliant in certain passages, there was absent an intangible singing quality which the Boston orchestra can achieve when it is at its best.

In contrast to the two contemporary works of Block and Britten, the program concluded with the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven. It is noteworthy that a lesser known symphony of a great composer still holds its own against the most ambitious works of good contemporary composers. The interpretation of the Symphony was vigorous, and Mr. Munch's stressing of the rhythmic and dynamic elements of the work enhanced the melodic line. Beethoven gave the woodwinds their share of technical problems in this work and when in the third movement, "Allegro vicace", the clarinet attempted to answer an upward arpeggio, the resulting sound was more like a sneeze!

KENNETH S. LATCHIS AND DAVID C. LEWIS

Music

Boston Symphony, Led By Charles Munch, Gives Third Concert

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played the third concert in the Providence series last night at the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium. The occasion was marked by the return after a [illegible] absence of Gregor Piatigorsky [illegible] solo in [illegible]

[illegible] Munch assembled a [illegible] usually interesting program [illegible] with Benjamin Britten's [illegible] for String Orchestra [illegible] by Frank Bridge, Op. [illegible] ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, Op. 60. It would seem [illegible] a new alignment of the "three Bs" in music. Bloch, Britten certainly held their own with Beethoven thanks to the [illegible] of the Boston orchestra [illegible] its brilliant conductor.

The Bloch piece, written 30 years ago, is one of the giants of the 'cello repertoire and its plaintive singing of Hebrew melodies alternates with descriptive passages of orchestral splendor. As we heard it played last evening it was a pageant of history reaching from Bible times into our own [illegible] ion. Piatigorsky made it vital and real and the orchestra was inspired to match his conception of the score. There were some memorable moments in this music [illegible] ts close the audience recalled soloist and conductor several times.

The Britten Theme and Variations, only 20 years old, was [illegible] rinating to follow. A clear [illegible] tion of the thematic material [illegible] the mood. The interesting [illegible] quence of variations held the interest throughout. Transparent [illegible] leading displayed the virtuosity [illegible] the strings and throughout the [illegible] the listener was aware of the [illegible] grasp of counterpoint which Britten has. The little section with a [illegible] dolin accompaniment figure [illegible] gay. The rhythmic sweep of [illegible] playing was no small part of [illegible] teresting presentation and near [illegible] close the trio of first desk players delivering gossamer [illegible] over the rich texture of the [illegible] chestral tone made an exci[illegible] bit of listening.

The Beethoven Fourth [illegible] hardly have been played [illegible] greater refinement of tone or [illegible] skillful shading of color. There [illegible] special beauty in the slow movement and here it was a pleasure to let the familiar music drift [illegible] with no effort to dissect and analyze. The fast sections were [illegible] liant and once again the audience showed its hearty approval by [illegible] longed applause.

The fourth concert of the series will be given on Feb. 28 when [illegible] Markevitch will be the guest conductor.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
JAN 31 1957

Music in

Piatigorsky

By

What with the [illegible] new 'cello concerto a[illegible] Thompson's Fantasy [illegible] weekend's program [illegible] That it did not was well in the company which shared the pro[illegible]

The Concerto, c[illegible] only three months [illegible] dedicated to the dis[illegible] soloist of the evenin[illegible] Piatigorsky. Since Si[illegible] has a proven capa[illegible] lyrical, poignant exp[illegible] general, and since [illegible] violin and viola con[illegible] has previously demon[illegible] particularly felicitous in writing for solo str[illegible] struments, the chanc[illegible] providing a permane[illegible] tion to the impoveris[illegible] cello repertory of t[illegible] seemed good. Unhap[illegible] new work, at least o[illegible] listening, does not s[illegible] that attains that end. [illegible] is spacious and large [illegible] and there are in it s[illegible] moments, as in the b[illegible] trospective opening [illegible] rather tender, charact[illegible] ly Waltonian restate[illegible] the concluding Adag[illegible] the long development [illegible] first movement failed [illegible] the initial promise; in

TIGHT BINDING

190

KOUSSEVITZKY LEGACY

International Music Fund Week Carries Out His Interest in Living Composer

Jan 27 '57 NY Times

By JOHN BRIGGS

THE United States, which already observes among other things National Invest-in-America Week, National Children's Dental Health Week and National Coffee Week, will soon have the opportunity for still another observance, that of "International Music Fund Week."

This celebration (not to be confused with National Music Week, which occurs later in the spring) will be opened by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at their Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Friday. On that occasion they will present the first performances of Jan Meyerowitz' Symphony "Midrash Esther."

Also during this week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will play first performances of Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 in Boston, this city and Washington.

In Philadelphia, Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will play first performances of Louis Gesensway's tone-poem, "Now Let the Night Be Dark for All of Me," and in Cincinnati [illegible] live performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

In so doing Koussevitzky was continuing his long interest in aiding the cause of the living composer.

In 1948, through a benefit concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky began the International Music Fund. The money raised at this concert, and at a similar concert in 1949, was turned over to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which supervises distribution of the money in the form of fellowships to composers and commissions for new works.

In May, 1951, Mr. Munch, Koussevitzky's successor in Boston, led the National Orchestra of Paris in a similar benefit concert, the proceeds again being turned over to UNESCO for distribution to worthy composers.

The establishment of "International Music Fund Week" represents the continuation of a campaign to establish the fund on a permanent, continuing basis.

The table of organization of the proposed permanent organization is complex. It will operate in conjunction with the International Music Council, an organization founded in Paris in 1949 on the initiative of UNESCO, which receives from the U. N. body a yearly subsidy of $25,000. Headquarters of the Council are at UNESCO House in Paris.

Aid to Composers

The International Music Fund will turn over a portion of the funds it collects to the Council, but also will undertake its own independent projects. The Council is interested in student-exchange programs and similar international-goodwill activities, whereas the Fund will devote itself to aiding composers.

A close affiliation already exists between the Fund and the Council. Domingo Santa Cruz of Chile, president of the Council, is a member of the executive committee of the Fund, as are Sir Steuart Wilson, immediate past president of the Council, and Henry Barraud and Marcel Cuvelier, vice persident and secretary of the Council. Jack Bornoff is executive secretary of both organizations.

The Fund itself is divided into two branches. One, the International Fund proper, has Mrs. Koussevitzky as its president. There is also an American International Music Fund, Inc., which has Mrs. Koussevitzky, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Seymour Siegel and Carleton Sprague Smith as directors.

Assuming that the necessary funds are forthcoming, the Fund will endeavor to carry on in the spirit of Koussevitzky. The Fund likes to quote from a speech the conductor made at Unesco House in May 1950, that "the composer is the ultimate creator and source of our great and living art. To him we are indebted for the spiritual wealth of music; the cultural wealth of musical literature, past and present; the material wealth of the expanding musical profession and industry."

JAN. 27, 57
THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE

Concert News -- Opera Repertory

Nicole Henriot Symphony Soloist; Premiere of Leo Smit Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who has recently returned from a mid-Winter vacation in Paris. Nicole Henriot, the young French pianist, will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto by Serge Prokofieff.

This concerto, which was composed in 1912-13 and received its first performance in 1913 with the composer as soloist, has not been heard at these concerts since its United States premiere on Jan. 31, 1930, when the composer was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The original score was lost and Prokofieff rewrote the work from a piano sketch. This revised version was performed by the composer under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho with the performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit. The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the Summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary, and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

SYMPHONY SOLOIST—Nicole Henriot, gifted young French pianist, will be the soloist at the Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Symphony in Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto. Charles Munch conducts.

LAM
Suitts Pren
ON—DO NOT CLIP
Febr 5
JOUR
Gaulke's
R ADS IN

Munch to Conduct

Continued from Page One

certo, which was composed in 1912-13 and received its first performance in 1913 with the composer as soloist, has not been heard at these concerts since its United States premiere on January 31, 1930, when the composer was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The original score was lost and Prokofieff rewrote the work from a piano sketch. This revised version was performed by the composer under Dr. Koussevitzky in Paris in 1923. It was heard at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1951, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with the pianist Jorge Bolet. Mlle. Henriot made her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, and has been heard here frequently, both with the Orchestra and in recital, since that time.

Dr. Munch will open the program of February 1-2 with the first performance of the Symphony by the American composer, Leo Smit, The Symphony, which was begun in 1951 and completed in the summer of 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the League of Composers on the occasion of its 30th anniversary and Mr. Smit has dedicated the work to Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It is therefore singularly appropriate that its first performance at these concerts should be the second in a series of observances by Charles Munch of International Music Fund Week, since the International Music Fund was established by Dr. Koussevitzky to aid composers through performance, publication, recording and broadcasting of their compositions.

The program will close with a concert suite from Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet." The movements of the suite are as follows: Montagues and Capulets; Young Juliet; Friar Laurence; Dance; Scene; Masks; Hybalt's Death. The ballet was composed for the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow in 1935 and received its Russian premiere in Leningad in 1950 with the great ballerina, Ulanova, in the leading role. The score has also served as the basis for a Russian film which features members of the Bolshoi Theatre ballet and has received a wide circulation in this country.

The Orchestra will be out of town in the following week, touring to Troy, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

On the Aisle

BROWN DAILY HERALD

Piatigorsky Sings

Tuesday evening's concert at the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium provided Providence listeners with the rare combination of a great cellist and orchestra, Gregor Piatigorsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch.

Piatigorsky performed Ernest Block's "Schelomo". The opportunities for artistic expression in this work are manifold and Mr. Piatigorsky took full advantage of the lyricism and ample breadth of phrasing in the score to give one of the finest performances of the work we have heard. Needless to say it was warmly received. Here's hoping that the B.S.O. will bring more artists of Piatigorsky's calibre to Providence in the future.

The opening work, Benjamin Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge", was not up to our expectations. Despite many displays of technical proficiency, the orchestra showed lack of good ensemble which leads one to suspect that the work was not thoroughly rehearsed. Though the strings were brilliant in certain passages, there was absent an intangible singing quality which the Boston orchestra can achieve when it is at its best.

In contrast to the two contemporary works of Block and Britten, the program concluded with the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven. It is noteworthy that a lesser known symphony of a great composer still holds its own against the most ambitious works of good contemporary composers. The interpretation of the Symphony was vigorous, and Mr. Munch's stressing of the rhythmic and dynamic elements of the work enhanced the melodic line. Beethoven gave the woodwinds their share of technical problems in this work and when in the third movement, "Allegro vicace", the clarinet attempted to answer an upward arpeggio, the resulting sound was more like a sneeze!

KENNETH S. LATCHIS AND DAVID C. LEW

Music

Boston Symphony, Led By Charles Munch, Gives Third Concert

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played the third concert in the Pops series last [illegible] at Symphony Memorial. Au[illegible] occasion was marked [illegible] ...

... Nos. 1, Op. 30. It would seem to give a new alignment of the "three Bs" in music. Bloch and Britten certainly held their own with Beethoven thanks to the virtuosity of the Boston orchestra and its brilliant conductor.

The Bloch piece, written 30 years ago, is one of the giants of the cello repertoire and its plaintive singing of Hebrew melodies alternates with descriptive passages of orchestral splendor. As we heard it played last evening it was a pageant of history reaching from Bible times into our own troubled tion. Piatigorsky made it vital and real and the orchestra was inspired by a match his conception of the score. There were some memorable moments in this music and it's close the audience recalled the soloist and conductor several times.

The Britten Theme and Variations, only 20 years old, was fascinating to follow. A clear definition of the thematic material and the mood. The interesting sequence of variations held the interest throughout. Transparent scoring displayed the virtuosity of the strings and throughout the work the listener was aware of the firm grasp of counterpoint which Britten has. The little section with a mandolin accompaniment figured gay. The rhythmic sweep of the playing was no small part of the interesting presentation and near close the trio of first desk players delivering gossamer harmony over the rich texture of the orchestral tone made an exciting bit of listening.

The Beethoven Fourth could hardly have been played with greater refinement of tone or more skillful shading of color. There was special beauty in the slow movement and here it was a pleasure to let the familiar music drift with no effort to dissect and analyze. The fast sections were brilliant and once again the audience showed its hearty approval by prolonged applause.

The fourth concert of the series will be given on Feb. 28 when Markevitch will be the guest conductor.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass
Weekly Non-Pa
Circ. 20,000
JAN 31 195

Music in

Piatigorsky

B

What with the new cello concerto a Thompson's Fantasy weekend's program That it did not was well in the company which shared the pro The Concerto, c only three months dedicated to the dis soloist of the evenin Piatigorsky. Since Si has a proven capa lyrical, poignant exp general, and since violin and viola con previously memor particularly felicitous interesting for solo st ruments, the chanc providing a permane tion to the impoveris cello repertory of t seemed good. Unhap new work, at least listening, does not that attains that end. is spacious and large and there are in it moments, as in the b trospective opening rather tender, charact ly Waltonian restate the concluding Adag the long development first movement failed the initial promise; in

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

JAN 30 1957

Music

Boston Symphony, Led By Charles Munch, Gives Third Concert

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played the third concert of their series series last evening at Symphony Memorial Auditorium. The occasion was marked by the return after a long absence of Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, who gave solos in Bloch's [illegible] assembled an unusually interesting program which opened with Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a theme by Frank Bridge, Op. 10, followed by Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, Op. 60. It would seem to be a new alignment of the "three Bs" in music. Bloch and Britten certainly held their own with Beethoven thanks to the virtuosity of the Boston orchestra and its brilliant conductor.

The Bloch piece, written 40 years ago, is one of the giants of the cello repertoire and its plaintive singing of Hebrew melodies alternates with descriptive passages of orchestral splendor. As we heard it played last evening it was a pageant of history reaching from Bible times into our own generation. Piatigorsky made it vital and real and the orchestra was inspired to match his conception of the rich score. There were some memorable moments in this music and at its close the audience recalled soloist and conductor several times.

The Britten Theme and Variations, only 20 years old, was fascinating to follow. A clear definition of the thematic material set the mood. The interesting sequence of variations held the interest throughout. Transparent part leading displayed the virtuosity of the strings and throughout the piece the listener was aware of the firm grasp of counterpoint which Britten had. The little section with a mandolin accompaniment figure was gay. The rhythmic sweep of the playing was no small part of its interesting presentation and near the close the trio of first desk players delivering gossamer harmonics over the rich texture of the orchestral tone made an exciting bit of listening.

The Beethoven Fourth could hardly have been played with greater refinement of tone or more skillful shading of color. There was special beauty in the slow movement and here it was a pleasure to let the familiar music drift past with no effort to dissect and analyze. The fast sections were brilliant and once again the audience showed its hearty approval by prolonged applause.

The fourth concert of the series will be given on Feb. 28 when Igor Markevitch will be the guest conductor.

Weather means nothing to loyal devotees of the Boston Symphony, some of whom are seen entering auditorium.

Music lovers say the Boston Symphony even sounds good when tuning up.
—Staff Photos by J. David Lamontagne

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

JAN 31 1957

Music in Review

Piatigorsky in Walton Premiere

By GERALD A. BERLIN

What with the world premiere of Sir William Walton's new 'cello concerto and the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," last weekend's program might have constituted something of a gala. That it did not was because neither newcomer stood up too well in the company of the other genial but infrequent visitor which shared the program, the Beethoven 4th Symphony.

The Concerto, completed only three months ago, was dedicated to the distinguished soloist of the evening, Gregor Piatigorsky. Since Sir William has a proven capability for lyrical, poignant expression in general, and since with his violin and viola concertos he has previously demonstrated a particularly felicitous capacity in writing for solo stringed instruments, the chances of his providing a permanent addition to the impoverished concerto repertory of the 'cello seemed good. Unhappily, this new work, at least on a first listening, does not seem one that attains that end. True, it is spacious and large sinewed and there are in it some fine moments, as in the broad, introspective opening and the rather tender, characteristically Waltonian restatement in the concluding Adagio. But the long development of the first movement failed to fulfill the initial promise; in the second movement the passage work in the lower registers for the solo instrument did not penetrate through the hall, though it may well have in the broadcast; while the first of the two unaccompanied "improvisations" in the third movement sounded like a joltingly superfluous cadenza. Mr. Piatigorsky, who has been unaccountably absent from the concert stage of late, was his old self, which means high style, a big tone, suavity of execution, perhaps a note here and there of dubious parentage and an extravagant attitude for holding on to terminal pianissimos that borders on barefaced theatricality.

Randall Thompson knows his way around American folksong material and an orchestra. As a result he has developed a knack for the type of "color" music that is used in documentary films of a certain sort or for period-piece ballets on native themes. Typically, a "Trip to Nahant" takes its name from an old square-dance fiddle tune and is intended to be a sort of musical depiction of an outing many years ago, of a young boy and girl to that resort town. The hoe-down and old hymnal sources and extended fugal climaxes could just as well have served for something called "A Trip to Texarkana." In small doses such music can prove extremely listenable. This composition, however, is no small dose; it goes on for twenty-five minutes, with one climax piled atop another. For this listener irreversible boredom began to set in somewhere this side of Pulpit Rock. As a model of how this type of thing can really be done, I would commend to Mr. Thompson's attention Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring."

As I suggested, then, all this left the honors of the evening to Beethoven's 4th. Perhaps there is some poetic justice in this circumstance, for appreciation for the "Greek-like, slender one in B-flat major," as Schumann termed this symphony, is usually siphoned off by its two towering siblings, the "Eroica" and the 5th. But as the great J. W. N. Sullivan has pointed out, "Beethoven could find plenty of good music in himself without sounding to the depths and in the 4th Beethoven had temporarily turned aside from the fundamental line of his spiritual development to enjoy his art for its own sake." The "rich adult warmth and vigor" of this work is something that speaks eloquently for itself and Mr. Munch's reading was properly straightforward. He chose his tempi sensibly and adhered to them strictly. All told, it was a joyous conclusion to the evening.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

JAN 30 1957

Music

Boston Symphony, Led By Charles Munch, Gives Third Concert

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played the third concert of their Providence series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. The occasion was marked by the orchestra's return after a long absence and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was soloist in Bloch's "Schelomo."

Mr. Munch assembled an unusually interesting program which began with Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, Op. 10, and ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, Op. 60. It would seem to be a new alignment of the "three Bs" in music. Bloch and Britten certainly held their own with Beethoven thanks to the virtuosity of the Boston orchestra and its brilliant conductor.

The Bloch piece, written 40 years ago, is one of the giants of the cello repertoire and its plaintive singing of Hebrew melodies alternates with descriptive passages of orchestral splendor. As we heard it played last evening it was a pageant of history reaching from Bible times into our own generation. Piatigorsky made it vital and real and the orchestra was inspired to match his conception of the rich score. There were some memorable moments in this music and at its close the audience recalled soloist and conductor several times.

The Britten Theme and Variations, only 20 years old, was fascinating to follow. A clear definition of the thematic material set the mood. The interesting sequence of variations held the interest throughout. Transparent part leading displayed the virtuosity of the strings and throughout the piece the listener was aware of the firm grasp of counterpoint which Britten has. The little section with a mandolin accompaniment figure was gay. The rhythmic sweep of the playing was no small part of its interesting presentation and near the close the trio of first desk players delivering gossamer harmonics over the rich texture of the orchestral tone made an exciting bit of listening.

The Beethoven Fourth could hardly have been played with greater refinement of tone or more skillful shading of color. There was special beauty in the slow movement and here it was a pleasure to let the familiar music drift past with no effort to dissect and analyze. The fast sections were brilliant and once again the audience showed its hearty approval by prolonged applause.

The fourth concert of the series will be given on Feb. 26 when Igor Markevitch will be the guest conductor.

Weather means nothing to loyal devotees of the Boston Symphony, some of whom are seen entering auditorium.

Music lovers say the Boston Symphony even sounds good when tuning up.

—Staff Photos by J. David Lamontagne

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

JAN 31 1957

Music in Review

Piatigorsky in Walton Premiere

By GERALD A. BERLIN

What with the world premiere of Sir William Walton's new 'cello concerto and the first Boston performance of Randall Thompson's Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," last weekend's program might have constituted something of a gala. That it did not was because neither newcomer stood up too well in the company of the other genial but infrequent visitor which shared the program, the Beethoven 4th Symphony.

The Concerto, completed only three months ago, was dedicated to the distinguished soloist of the evening, Gregor Piatigorsky. Since Sir William has a proven capability for lyrical, poignant expression in general, and since with his violin and viola concertos he has previously demonstrated a particularly felicitous capacity in writing for solo stringed instruments, the chances of his providing a permanent addition to the impoverished concerto repertory of the 'cello seemed good. Unhappily, this new work, at least on a first listening, does not seem one that attains that end. True, it is spacious and large sinewed and there are in it some fine moments, as in the broad, introspective opening and the rather tender, characteristically Waltonian restatement in the concluding Adagio. But the long development of the first movement failed to fulfill the initial promise; in the second movement the passage work in the lower registers for the solo instrument did not penetrate through the hall, though it may well have in the broadcast; while the first of the two unaccompanied "improvisations" in the third movement sounded like a joltingly superfluous cadenza. Mr. Piatigorsky, who has been unaccountably absent from the concert stage of late, was his old self, which means high style, a big tone, suavity of execution, perhaps a note here and there of dubious parentage and an extravagant attitude for holding on to terminal pianissimos that borders on barefaced theatricality.

Randall Thompson knows his way around American folksong material and an orchestra. As a result he has developed a knack for the type of "color" music that is used in documentary films of a certain sort or for period-piece ballets on native themes. Typically, a "Trip to Nahant" takes its name from an old square-dance fiddle tune and is intended to be a sort of musical depiction of an outing many years ago, of a young boy and girl to that resort town. The hoe-down and old hymnal sources and extended fugal climaxes could just as well have served for something called "A Trip to Texarkana." In small doses such music can prove extremely listenable. This composition, however, is no small dose; it goes on for twenty-five minutes, with one climax piled atop another. For this listener irreversible boredom began to set in somewhere this side of Pulpit Rock. As a model of how this type of thing can really be done, I would commend to Mr. Thompson's attention Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring."

As I suggested, then, all this left the honors of the evening to Beethoven's 4th. Perhaps there is some poetic justice in this circumstance, for appreciation for the "Greek-like, slender one in B-flat major," as Schumann termed this symphony, is usually siphoned off by its two towering siblings, the "Eroica" and the 5th. But as the great J. W. N. Sullivan has pointed out, "Beethoven could find plenty of good music in himself without sounding to the depths and in the 4th, Beethoven had temporarily turned aside from the fundamental line of his spiritual development to enjoy his art for its own sake." The "rich adult warmth and vigor" of this work is something that speaks eloquently for itself and Mr. Munch's reading was properly straightforward. He chose his tempi sensibly and adhered to them strictly. All told, it was a joyous conclusion to the evening.

192

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

JAN 31 1957

Boston Symphony Players Gourmets And Chefs, Too!

Charles Munch Likes 'Charcuterie'

By ELEANOR ROBERTS

Don't ask conductor Charles Munch what his favorite dish is. He'll hedge!

And can you blame him? The poor man once made the mistake of confiding to the press that he liked kidneys. He hasn't been able to live it down since.

Everywhere the famous Boston Symphony conductor went, after that . . . he was served kidneys. Actually, Mr. Munch who's a native of Alsace, likes to vary his menu with a sort of Alsatian delicatessen called "charcuterie."

But hostesses, hold those cold cuts! You just can't compete with the luscious slices of cold pork, sausage and ham his cook serves.

Like most musicians, Boston Symphony men are both gourmets and skilled chefs. Violinist Stanley Benson and his wife Clara are happiest in the kitchen.

Stanley is Swedish. Clara is Italian . . . a cousin of James Stagliano, the "first horn" in the orchestra.

Her favorite dish? Swedish meatballs. His pet concoction? Veal Cutlets alla Parmigiana and Linguine alla Marinara.

Oboist John Holmes whips up a wonderful Collop of veal with wine and mushrooms. Rosario Mazzeo, the base clarinetist, makes Steak Tartare as they do in Sacher's in Vienna. Raw scraped beef, raw egg, chopped onion and capers . . . wow!

First bassoonist, Sherman Walt was so impressed with the caviar he ate in Moscow he came home with 12 half-pound jars!

The Symphony players who sampled Chicken Ragout in an obscure Paris restaurant liked it so much they dreamed up an Americanized version. We're handing it on to you, today.

VEAL CUTLETS ALLA PARMIGIANA

2 pounds veal cutlets, cut wafer-thin
1 pound Mozzarella cheese, cut in thin slices
4 cups tomato puree
½ cup Parmesan cheese

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

JAN 31 1957

and broil to an even brownness. Cover with a slice of Mozzarella cheese, slide back under broiler until cheese is brown. Top with hot tomato sauce, sprinkle with Parmesan cheese and serve with plain buttered spaghetti.

(Note:) Cutlets may be dipped in egg and bread crumbs and fried before covering with cheese, instead of broiling.

CHICKEN RAGOUT

1 package frozen chicken drumsticks
1 package frozen chicken breasts
¼ pound bacon, cut in 1-inch pieces
½ cup flour
4 carrots, cut in 1-inch lengths
1 cup chopped celery
10 small white onions
⅓ cup button mushrooms, drained
½ cup dry white wine
1 can condensed chicken bouillon
2 cups canned tomatoes
2 whole cloves and 1 bay leaf
½ teaspoon dry thyme

Thaw chicken as directed on package. Fry bacon in heavy kettle until crisp; remove bacon and save. Flour chicken; brown in bacon drippings. Add carrots, celery, onions and mushrooms. Brown lightly. Add ½ cup wine and remaining ingredients. Cover and cook over low heat for 1 hour. Remove cover; cook 30 minutes longer. Add remaining ¼ cup wine 15 minutes before serving. Serves 6 to 8.

Society:

Symphony Musicians to Speak At Pre-Concert Lunch Friday

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Meeting the public is a growing tendency of professional people in orchestras, theaters and hospitals, whose operation and maintenance problems were once complete mysteries to all but their directors. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will themselves help tell the story of what goes on backstage at Symphony Hall to Friday afternoon concert subscribers at a luncheon on Friday which will launch a series.

Subscribers, arriving at Symphony Hall at 12:30 Friday afternoon, will be greeted in the room housing the orchestra's Casadesus Collection of Ancient Instruments by Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, wife of the president of the Symphony's trustees. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, will also greet guests at the Dutch treat luncheon.

Speakers will include Mr. Cabot, Rosario Mazzeo, who plays bass clarinet in the orchestra and is its personnel manager, and violinist Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of the popular children's concerts.

Among the first to accept invitations to Friday's luncheon were Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Stone, Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Mrs. N. S. Bartlett, Mrs. W. B. Felton, C. Comstock Clayton, A. D. Fay, Reginald Gray, Mrs. Seth E. Guild, Miss Marian Homans, Frank Hatch Jr., Mrs. Charles P. Lyman and Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 31 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Ernest Hendersons to Entertain Carroll M. Shanks This Afternoon

A COCKTAIL PARTY from 5 to 7 o'clock this afternoon will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Henderson at their home on Louisburg Square in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol M. Shanks of Montclair, N. J. Mr. Shanks is president of the Prudential Insurance Company of America. He and Mrs. Shanks arrived in Boston yesterday and are staying at the Sheraton Plaza. Among the guests this afternoon will be Harold E. Dow, who will be the head of the northeastern home of Prudential when it opens in Boston, and Mrs. Dow. Mr. Dow is a native New Englander and was born in New Haven. Among others at the cocktail party will be the George Browns, the A. Page Brownes, the Forrester A. Clarks, Mr. and Mrs. C. Rodgers Burgin, the William J. Birds, the Byron K. Elliotts, the William D. Irelands, the Sidney Sholleys, the W. Latimer Grays, the Everett Popes, the Richard P. Chapmans, the Ernest Hoftizers, the Donald J. Hurleys, the Thomas M. Hennessys, the Adrian O'Keeffes, Miss Margaret Divver and Albert Hunter.

MR. SHANKS

* * *

SOMETHING NEW has been added to the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts. The first in a series of Dutch Treat luncheons to acquaint subscribers with the operation and aims of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place tomorrow at Symphony Hall. The informal luncheon, served at small tables with red checked tablecloths, will be held in the room housing the orchestra's well-known Casadesus collection of ancient instruments. Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover, wife of the president of the trustees of the orchestra, will be hostess. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, will greet the guests and introduce to them two members of the orchestra who will speak. They are Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player, personnel manager of the orchestra, photographer and ornithologist; and Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of successful children's concerts. Mr. Cabot also will speak briefly. Among those who will attend the luncheon are Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., C. Comstock Clayton, Reginald Gray, Arthur D. Fay, Mrs. Winslow B. Felton, Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, Miss Marian Homans, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Charles P. Lyman, Frank Hatch, Jr., the Stephen Paines, Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Sr., Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton and the Edward C. Stones.

* * *

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JAN 31 1957

SMART SET—By ROSE WALSH

'Dutch Treat' at Symphony

Friday afternoon Symphony Concert devotees may step from luncheon right into the concert hall following the second in a series of 2:30 o'clock Dutch Treat informal luncheons in the room housing the orchestra's well-known Casadeus Collection of Ancient Instruments.

Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover, wife of the President of the Trustees of Symphony, will be hostess in the effective setting where small tables with red-checked cloths will be set up. The idea is to acquaint the subscribers with the operation and aims of the world-famous Orchestra.

Not only will Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Symphony manager, greet the guests, but he will introduce Rosario Mazeo, bass clarinet player, personnel manager of the Orchestra, photographer and ornithologist; and Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of the very successful children's concerts, who will address the group. Mr. Cabot will also give a short talk.

Planning to attend the pleasurable "Treat" are Mrs. N. S. Bartlett, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., C. Comstock Clayton, A. D. Fay, Mrs. W. B. Felton, Reginald Gray, Mrs. S. E. Guild, Frank Hatch, Jr., Miss Marian Homans, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Charles P. Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Paine, Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Sr., Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton and Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Stone.

* * *

GIRLS' CLUBS 20th annual meeting at Algonquin Club was attended by Mrs. Georges Doriot, assistant treasurer, left, chatting with Mrs. Edward J. Mitton, chairman of the house committee.

(Record-American, Lee Renaitan)

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

JAN 31 1957

Boston Symphony Players Gourmets And Chefs, Too!

Charles Munch Likes 'Charcuterie'

By ELEANOR ROBERTS

Don't ask conductor Charles Munch what his favorite dish is. He'll hedge!

And can you blame him? The poor man once made the mistake of confiding to the press that he liked kidneys. He hasn't been able to live it down since.

Everywhere the famous Boston Symphony conductor went, after that . . . he was served kidneys. Actually, Mr. Munch who's a native of Alsace, likes to vary his menu with a sort of Alsatian delicatessen called "charcuterie."

But hostesses, hold those cold cuts! You just can't compete with the luscious slices of cold pork, sausage and ham his cook serves.

Like most musicians, Boston Symphony men are both gourmets and skilled chefs. Violinist Stanley Benson and his wife Clara are happiest in the kitchen.

Stanley is Swedish. Clara is Italian . . . a cousin of James Stagliano, the "first horn" in the orchestra.

Her favorite dish? Swedish meatballs. His pet concoction? Veal Cutlets alla Parmigiana and Linguine alla Marinara.

Oboist John Holmes whips up a wonderful Collop of veal with wine and mushrooms. Rosario Mazzeo, the base clarinetist, makes Steak Tartare as they do in Sacher's in Vienna. Raw scraped beef, raw egg, chopped onion and capers . . . wow!

First bassoonist Sherman Walt was so impressed with the caviar he ate in Moscow he came home with 12 half-pound jars!

The Symphony players who sampled Chicken Ragout in an obscure Paris restaurant liked it so much they dreamed up an Americanized version. We're handing it on to you, today.

VEAL CUTLETS ALLA PARMIGIANA

2 pounds veal cutlets, cut wafer-thin
1 pound Mozzarella cheese, cut in thin slices
4 cups tomato puree
½ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
1 tablespoon olive oil

Brush cutlets with olive oil and broil to an even brownness. Cover with a slice of Mozzarella cheese, slide back under broiler until cheese is brown. Top with hot tomato sauce, sprinkle with Parmesan cheese and serve with plain buttered spaghetti.

(Note:) Cutlets may be dipped in egg and bread crumbs and fryed before covering with cheese, instead of broiling.

CHICKEN RAGOUT

1 package frozen chicken drumsticks
1 package frozen chicken breasts
¼ pound bacon, cut in 1-inch pieces
½ cup flour
4 carrots, cut in 1-inch lengths
1 cup chopped celery
10 small white onions
⅓ cup button mushrooms, drained
¾ cup dry white wine
1 can condensed chicken bouillon
2 cups canned tomatoes
2 whole cloves and 1 bay leaf
¼ teaspoon dry thyme

Thaw chicken as directed on package. Fry bacon in heavy kettle until crisp; remove bacon and save. Flour chicken; brown in bacon drippings. Add carrots, celery, onions and mushrooms. Brown lightly. Add ½ cup wine and remaining ingredients. Cover and cook over low heat for 1 hour. Remove cover; cook 30 minutes longer. Add remaining ¼ cup wine 15 minutes before serving. Serves 6 to 8.

Society:

Symphony Musicians to Speak At Pre-Concert Lunch Friday

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Meeting the public is a growing tendency of professional people in orchestras, theaters and hospitals, whose operation and maintenance problems were once complete mysteries to all but their directors. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will themselves help tell the story of what goes on backstage at Symphony Hall to Friday afternoon concert subscribers at a luncheon on Friday which will launch a series.

Subscribers, arriving at Symphony Hall at 12:30 Friday afternoon, will be greeted in the room housing the orchestra's Casadesus Collection of Ancient Instruments by Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, wife of the president of the Symphony's trustees. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, will also greet guests at the Dutch treat luncheon.

Speakers will include Mr. Cabot, Rosario Mazzeo, who plays bass clarinet in the orchestra and is its personnel manager, and violinist Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of the popular children's concerts.

Among the first to accept invitations to Friday's luncheon were Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Stone, Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Mrs. N. S. Bartlett, Mrs. W. B. Felton, C. Comstock Clayton, A. D. Fay, Reginald Gray, Mrs. Seth E. Guild, Miss Marian Homans, Frank Hatch Jr., Mrs. Charles P. Lyman and Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JAN 31 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Ernest Hendersons to Entertain Carroll M. Shanks This Afternoon

A COCKTAIL PARTY from 5 to 7 o'clock this afternoon will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Henderson at their home on Louisburg Square in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol M. Shanks of Montclair, N. J. Mr. Shanks is president of the Prudential Insurance Company of America. He and Mrs. Shanks arrived in Boston yesterday and are staying at the Sheraton Plaza. Among the guests this afternoon will be Harold E. Dow, who will be the head of the northeastern home of Prudential when it opens in Boston, and Mrs. Dow. Mr. Dow is a native New Englander and was born in New Haven. Among others at the cocktail party will be the George Browns, the A. Page Brownes, the Forrester A. Clarks, Mr. and Mrs. C. Rodgers Burgin, the William J. Birds, the Byron K. Elliotts, the William D. Irelands, the Sidney Sholleys, the W. Latimer Grays, the Everett Popes, the Richard P. Chapmans, the Ernest Hoftizers, the Donald J. Hurleys, the Thomas M. Hennessys, the Adrian O'Keeffes, Miss Margaret Divver and Albert Hunter.

MR. SHANKS

* * *

SOMETHING NEW has been added to the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts. The first in a series of Dutch Treat luncheons to acquaint subscribers with the operation and aims of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place tomorrow at Symphony Hall. The informal luncheon, served at small tables with red checked tablecloths, will be held in the room housing the orchestra's well-known Casadesus collection of ancient instruments. Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover, wife of the president of the trustees of the orchestra, will be hostess. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, will greet the guests and introduce to them two members of the orchestra who will speak. They are Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player, personnel manager of the orchestra, photographer and ornithologist; and Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of successful children's concerts. Mr. Cabot also will speak briefly. Among those who will attend the luncheon are Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., C. Comstock Clayton, Reginald Gray, Arthur D. Fay, Mrs. Winslow B. Felton, Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, Miss Marian Homans, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Charles P. Lyman, Frank Hatch, Jr., the Stephen Paines, Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Sr., Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton and the Edward C. Stones.

* * *

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JAN 31 1957

SMART SET--By ROSE WALSH

'Dutch Treat' at Symphony

Friday afternoon Symphony Concert devotees may step from luncheon right into the concert hall following the second in a series of 2:30 o'clock Dutch Treat informal luncheons in the room housing the orchestra's well-known Casadeus Collection of Ancient Instruments.

Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover, wife of the President of the Trustees of Symphony, will be hostess in the effective setting where small tables with red-checked cloths will be set up. The idea is to acquaint the subscribers with the operation and aims of the world-famous Orchestra.

Not only will Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Symphony manager, greet the guests, but he will introduce Rosario Mazeo, bass clarinet player, personnel manager of the Orchestra, photographer and ornithologist; and Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and conductor of the very successful children's concerts, who will address the guests. Mr. Cabot will also give a short talk.

Planning to attend the pleasurable "Dutch" are Mrs. N. S. Bartlett, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., C. Comstock Clayton, A. D. Fay, Mrs. W. B. Felton, Reginald Gray, Mrs. S. E. Guild, Frank Hatch, Jr., Miss Marian Homans, Mrs. Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mrs. Charles P. Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Paine, Mrs. Franklin H. Palmer, Mrs. James Perkins, Mrs. Renouf Russell, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Sr., Mrs. Roger Preston, Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. Philip Stockton and Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Stone.

* * *

GIRLS' CLUBS 20th annual meeting at Algonquin Club was attended by Mrs. Georges Doriot, assistant treasurer, left, chatting with Mrs. Edward J. Mitton, chairman of the house committee.

(Record-American, Leo Renaud)

Globe Feb 15 57

SITTING IN WITH TED ASHBY

Fanning With Laning

LANING HUMPHREY, erudite public relations representative for the Boston Symphony Orchestra (though strictly a choral man himself), uttered a startling revealment. It demonstrated that the obvious not infrequently is the most obscure. "All that was necessary to do in order to avoid all that fuss," he mused, "was to get a cat and let it listen."

★ ★ ★

LANING had been discussing the family out in California that thought a cat was imprisoned within one of the walls in the dwelling. For 24 days the Vincent Carta household knocked holes in the plaster, pleaded with the cat to emerge, set out food and tiptoed away. Nothing. Finally a sound engineer and a water system expert discovered the noise was a meowing meter.

★ ★ ★

"ANY MATURE CAT," Humphrey pointed out, "would instantly have known whether the noise heard by the Carta family was made by a cat. If they had brought in a cat, and it ignored what they believed was a 'meow,' the Cartas could have bet their bottom dollar there was none in the wall. The 24-day mystery could have been solved as easily as that."

★ ★ ★

LANING IS, of course, indisputably right. It is utterly impossible to fool a cat with an imitation 'meow.' Or an imitation anything else. For example, when a cat sees its reflection in a mirror, it doesn't recognize itself, but it instinctively knows that the reflection has no substance. It completely ignores what it conceivably could think was another cat.

★ ★ ★

THE CAT doesn't know that the one in the mirror is a reflection of itself. If it did, it would stare admiringly at the glass, straighten every hair in disarray, perhaps note a fleck of dust on an ear and carefully brush it off with a paw. Furthermore, it would insist on its own mirror, and not infrequently sit or stand before it to carefully groom itself.

★ ★ ★

THIS IS NOT TRUE of other animals. Humphrey, himself, has proof. "I recall an occasion when I took several children to the Benson Animal Farm," he recounted. "There was a seal or two thrashing about in the water. I experimentally barked like a seal. Now, I do not contend that I sounded so much like a seal that an Eskimo would have come a-running with a harpoon.

★ ★ ★

"BE THAT as it may, one of the seals immediately tore through the water toward me, half-emerged and, with great flapping of its flippers, seemed about to embrace me. It cast enough water over me so that I, myself, had I been suitably attired, might have gone for a dip. The point is that the seal was thoroughly misled by my bark.

★ ★ ★

"FURTHERMORE, we later picked up another child which had not seen the seals, and returned to the basin. Again, perhaps carried away by my previous success, I barked. Same thing happened. The seal came tearing toward me, again failed to recognize me as not of the marine carnivore family, and once more doused me with water until, I fear, I dripped most of the day."

TIGHT BINDING

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAR 1957

First Symphony [illegible] mit Has Boston Pr[illegible]

Boston.—One of the most stimulating pairs of concerts of the Boston Symphony season thus far was that of Feb. 1 and 7 at Symphony Hall when Charles Munch conducted first performances of the Symphony No. [illegible] in E flat, by Leo Smit and two superscores of Prokofieff—the Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, with Nicole Henriot as soloist, and seven numbers drawn from the two suites from the ballet "Romeo and Juliet".

Smit's new work, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, is a most uncommon score, for it is a curious blend of what seems to be a basic conservatism with devices and a feeling of modernity. The structure is spare and carefully wrought, there is always something going on amid the steady forward motion, and that something is unfailingly interesting. The rhythmic play is as discernible as the instrumentation is clear. There are influences of the past in this symphony, to be sure, and Smit is not a bold innovator. But he is obviously a real musician, with a sensitive "inward ear".

Miss Henriot fully [illegible] over the two audiences with her performance of Prokofieff's G minor Concerto. A greater virtuoso and better musician than Miss Henriot [illegible] received a huge ovation.

Greeted [illegible] by Charles Munch, and the Boston Symphony gave the first performance anywhere of Sir [illegible] Concerto No. 25, [illegible] written [illegible] 1st. [illegible] to his [illegible] now sw[illegible] [illegible] poet [illegible] [illegible] indeed [illegible] [illegible] much more [illegible] [illegible] idiom of the [illegible] both of [illegible] effects and of [illegible] [illegible] range of [illegible] In the main, this [illegible] slow and soft concerto, [illegible] relatively few pages where the tempo accelerates or the dynamic level rises high. The beginning is very quiet, [illegible] the conclusion. While there is a good deal of subtle rhythm, a considerable portion of the forward motion is in the cello part, and it has the effect of carrying the orchestra along. Never once did Walton make it difficult for the cello to be heard above the orchestra, much less ever drown it in a flood of resonance.

If the concerto is soft dynamically, it is gentle as custard in its harmonic basis. What dissonance there is would scarcely alarm an elderly aunt, perhaps not even an old-fashioned professor of music. There are few bright colors in the instrumentation, mostly the texture is blends of pastel tints.

(Continued on page 18)

(Continued from page 16)

First music of the program, and new to Boston, was the Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant", by Randall Thompson, of the Harvard University music department. The piece is quite light, a bit too long for its substance, altogether inoffensive, but, taking all in all, a trifle.

The remaining [illegible] Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, given a brisk, taut performance that seemed to arouse general delight.

Monteux Is Guest

The week previously, Pierre Monteux was guest conductor, and, unhappily, did not show his usual mastery. He did not seem to be in full control of the orchestra, and matters were often indifferent or untidy. Frankly, it was a dull afternoon, though the program consisted of Stravinsky's "Pulcinella" Suite, a string of preludes and interludes from Debussy's "Pelléas et Mélisande", and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. "The Death of Claerchen", from Beethoven's "Egmont" music, was performed in memory of Arturo Toscanini.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, to my taste the paragon of all two-piano teams, provided one of the season's finest concerts at Symphony Hall on Feb. 13. Highlights of the event were Aram Khatchaturian's Suite, new to Boston; and a Luboshutz-Nemenoff arrangement after Moscheles, "Hommage à Handel".

Violinist Carroll Glenn and pianist Eugene List, another admirable husband-and-wife musical team, enthralled the subscribers to the Boston Morning Musicales in the Hotel Statler on Jan. 23. The Boston Cecilian Society, still progressing steadily toward excellence of former days, appeared under the direction of Theodore Marier at Jordan Hall, on Jan. 24.

Percussion Ensemble Plays

Harold Farberman, percussionist of the Boston Symphony, together with a sizable number of his colleagues and the Boston Percussion Ensemble, has given the town one of the biggest musical lifts it has enjoyed in years. At Jordan Hall, the night of Jan. 31, Mr. Farberman conducted a program of his own compositions, music which puts the accent upon percussion. All four works were composed between 1955 and 1956, with "Evolution", already known from recording, the eldest of them all. Here is a marvelous tapestry of rhythm and the color contrasts of struck chords, plus a soprano singing voice without words, and the cool melodic sonority of the horn. There is something really primal about this piece.

The opening piece, "Three and Three Developments", is dryer in texture but a fascinating contrast between the near-squeakings of strings in high positions and the lower sound of a solo bassoon. There might be a touch of Stravinsky here, but mostly the music is Farberman. In a structural sense, his Symphony No. 1 was the biggest piece of all, again a setting of percussion qualities against strings and vice versa, in tempo fast and slow, straight and syncopated beat, and even the triple meter of the waltz. The Quartet for two higher woodwind voices and the middle and lower strings is less free-flowing, rythmically, for the continuity is interspersed with bravura solos which have an improvisational nature. Here, once more, are pungent tonal contrast and blend. The whole occasion was off-beat, and it was wonderfully fresh and livening.

Renata Tebaldi returned to Symphony Hall Feb. 3, where she had made a tumultuously successful debut a year ago nearly to the day. She was accompanied, and most ably, by Martin Rich, in a program wholly Italian save for arias by Handel and

Harold Farberman, conductor of the Boston Percussion Ensemble

Mozart. Her singing was better poised, more refined, but no less expressive than before.

[illegible] Pinto is not much known [illegible] metropolitan Boston at the [illegible] but if he experiences the [illegible] he deserves, one day he will [illegible] known across continents and seas. Mr. Pinto is a Brazilian, now in his [illegible]'s and a pupil of Richard Fu[illegible]. He has an enormous musical [illegible] terms of the violin. He gave [illegible] Hall concert on Jan. 30 [illegible] of the conditions as candidates for the artists' diploma of the [illegible]land Conservatory. The excellence of his technique, though considerable, was not any greater than his command of style and legato, steady rhythm and real musical [illegible] phrase and period. The [illegible]franck Sonata; a new sonata by John Bavicchi; the great [illegible] Bach's formidable, unaccompanied Chaconne; and the "Ballade" of Ernest Bloch made up [illegible]

Durgin

Leo Smit's Symphony in World Première

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB -2 1957

Talbot.

Leo Smit, whose new Symphony is being given its world premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend.

Mlle Henriot Soloist in Prokofiev Concerto

By Harold Rogers

No matter how you look at the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend, the program—both in substance and performance—is stimulating. There is an arresting first performance of a new symphony by Leo Smit. There is a dazzling traversal of Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto by Nicole Henriot. And Charles Munch closes the program with a flamboyant reading of seven parts from Prokofiev's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Thus ran the general impressions in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Smit's Symphony No. 1, in E-flat, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and completed in 1955, makes the usual obeisance to Stravinsky, only Mr. Smit is more independent than many of his colleagues. He has almost fought his way clear of obvious influences. His style is somewhat ascetic, rather dry in a neo-classical way, yet there are passages that sing a convincing song—as in the Andante sostenuto, for instance.

Mr. Smit shows his greatest originality in the structure of his orchestral fabric. Little melodic lines overlap, starting on some unexpected off-beat and ending just as whimsically. Chords do not always resolve at an obvious moment, but gradually change their character voice by voice. Thus he weaves a tapestry, but it is not very colorful. When the finished product is held up at full length, the beholder is surprised to find it done in tones of gray.

Yesterday afternoon the composer was in the audience. He rose twice at Dr. Munch's bidding to accept the warm applause.

* * *

Mlle Henriot, it will easily be recalled by those who have heard her, is a French pianist of the Gallic school. Her wire is fine, her touch is light, her style is of the finest French finishing. Though she has been noted as a dynamic artist who can easily cleave obscuring orchestral forces, there was a new dimension in her playing yesterday—the ability to reign in, to refine, to fashion a true pianissimo.

The Prokofiev Second, however, requires little in this sensitive area. It is a tour de force almost from the first to the finale; it snaps, growls, roars; it scatters fire in a shower of sparks. Then again it smiles, chirps, bursts into a fit of chattering laughter; and in the final Allegro tempestoso Mlle Henriot's fingers are flashing like trip hammers. Her delighted audience gave her a stamping, shouting ovation. She deserved every decibel of it.

* * *

In the "Romeo and Juliet" ballet music we find Prokofiev at the height of his powers as a composer of descriptive music. How vividly he sums up the hatred between the Capulets and the Montagues in those great acidic chords we hear at the outset! And then there's the ball in all its pomp and splendor, evoked magnificently under Dr. Munch's majestic baton. There is a mercurial portion devoted to the young Juliet, and a short prayerful episode sketches the figure of Friar Laurence.

Three ingratiating parts—called Dance, Scene, and Masks—are not easily tied into the story by the listener who has not seen the ballet performed. The suite, as played yesterday, concludes with the slaying of Tybalt. Here one could easily imagine the clash of swords, the staccato pacing, the lunges. Prokofiev employs a stark, repetitious rhythmic pattern through which a keening melody strikes home. It is a stunning piece of writing, and it was stunningly played.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB -2 1957

Boston Herald
February 2, 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 14th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Nicole Henriot, pianist. The program:
Symphony No. 1 ..... Leo Smit
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 16 ..... Prokofieff
"Romeo and Juliet" ..... Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Three vital works, one of them a symphony in its first performance, yesterday swept away the mid-winter program doldrums to restore a bracing, exciting atmosphere to Symphony Hall.

The new symphony, and an impressive one it is, is the work of Leo Smit, known to us largely as a brilliant piano virtuoso, but whose overture "The Parcae" was given four years ago. It is a work on a large scale in a highly personal idiom though one evidently derived in part from Stravinsky and, in a lesser degree, Copland. The texture is fresh and strong and exceptionally melodic considering the times.

Elegiac Quality

Indeed, the slow movement of this symphony certainly ranks among the most beautiful in any contemporary composition, progressing, with an elegiac quality almost Mahlerian in its repose. The two ensuing movements are also interesting, the scherzo having a light, good natured mood without being too overdrawn, as many contemporary orchestral scherzos are, and the finale has a sense of real culmination in all that has gone before.

It is the first movement that provides the trip over the threshold here, however. After a fine introduction awakening the senses for what might follow, there begins a movement so disjointed, so jagged in its rhythms and so aggressive in its harmonies that it seems to have no destination whatever. One fancied one could hear the gaps where the composer had left off work one day to pick it up another.

The material was assimilable enough, though it had none of the distinction of the other three movements; it merely leaped about in wild intervals from one voice to another pausing between leaps to gulp for air. It is, in any case, not at all worthy of the beautiful adagio, whose presence alone would indicate the potential of this 36-year-old composer, for a truism of the day is that almost anyone can write a loud and fast movement employing fierce orchestral techniques, but few can write a sustained adagio that is at the same time a work of melodic rather than atmospheric beauty. The composer was in the audience and was given a splendid reception by the audience.

Incredible Effect

It is not easy to convey the measure of success attained by Nicole Henriot, returning for another appearance with this orchestra yesterday. She played one of the two or three gigantic piano concertos of the 20th century, a work of incredible difficulty but incredible effect as well. It was Prokofieff's Second Concerto in G minor, not heard here since Prokofieff himself gave it its American premiere at these concerts 27 years ago. The reason, of course, lies in the formidable problems on the keyboard it presents (though it is said to pose fewer than the Fourth, which has never been done). But they certainly didn't trouble this attractive young blonde girl, who skips on and off the stage in the most winning manner.

She brought enormous power to bear without conveying a sense of pounding and executed the rapid scalewise passages in the fleetest way. It was, in short, a breath-taking performance of a breath-taking work and she was called back to the stage five times. Mr. Munch and the orchestra, it may be said, provided her with a brilliant accompaniment, but the orchestra really came into its own in Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet."

This is one of the composer's most engaging pieces, filled at once with vivid coloration, melodic felicity of the most attractive sort, with an abundance and an orchestral ingenuity not less than dazzling in its invention. This is the first time Mr. Munch has conducted it here but he captured the swift changing mood of the suite as if he had done this work all his life. All in all a great concert, one of the real high points of the season so far.

The orchestra is out of town next week, returning Feb. 15 to do the Overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and his Clarinet Concerto (Gino Cioffi, soloist) and Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAR 1957

Munch Conducts Symphony by Smit

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Nicole Henriot, pianist. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 6:

Symphony No. 1 in E flat .... Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. [illegible] in [illegible] ..... Beethoven

This concert at which Charles Munch introduced a new symphony by the 36-year-old American composer Leo Smit to New York, and at which Nicole Henriot played the piano concerto produced by Prokofieff when he was a young firebrand of 22, was enormously refreshing.

Mr. Smit is an able pianist as well as a composer, and he has for many years been known as a particularly sympathetic interpreter of contemporary music. His Symphony No. 1 owes much to Stravinsky, with lesser echoes of Mahler and others, but its frank eclecticism does not obscure Mr. Smit's own musical personality. It is obvious that he is a fertile inventor, and if, in this first essay, he has let himself be carried away by the sheer exhilaration of writing clever, effective, facile music, there is good reason to believe that his second symphony may be more original, more searching in content, and more closely integrated.

Mr. Smit has many things to his advantage: a keen sense of harmony (he understands the language of tonality as few young composers do these days); a melodic abundance that is almost embarrassing at times; and a real mastery of orchestration (the transparency of his orchestral writing was a delight, especially in the Allegretto scherzando movement). Now that he has shown us how intelligently he has studied Stravinsky and other modern masters, let us hope that he will trust more fully to his own wings. The performance was superb, and the audience gave the conductor, orchestra, and composer an ovation.

Miss Henriot took the savagely energetic G minor Concerto of Prokofieff exuberantly in her stride. What imagination, what furious energy, what romantic excitement there is in this music! Sure of finger, unerring in her sense of the central ideas of the work, and surcharged with the necessary abandon of spirit, Miss Henriot made it tremendously exciting. At times, one wished for greater volume and roundness of tone in the more clangorous passages, but this was a small matter, in view of so expert a performance. Mr. Munch and the orchestra provided a sumptuous accompaniment. —R. S.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music by Prokofieff and Smit

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA This gave a Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 14th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Leo Smit: Symphony No. 1, in E-flat (first performance); Prokofieff: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor (Nicole Henriot, soloist); Prokofieff: Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin? This concert proved one of the most stimulating of the Boston Symphony season, endlessly fascinating and with not a dull moment. It reached its peak in the brilliant Concerto of Prokofieff and the truly marvelous "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts, but the First Symphony by Leo Smit was a most uncommon score and highly enjoyable.

It is most uncommon because, though the first symphony of a composer just over 36, it is a curious blend of tradition and modernity. Beneath the play of dissonance and contrapuntal decoration (relatively mild in their "bite"), is a striking fundamental conservatism. Mr. Smit has learned a lot from the past, as may plainly be heard in the largely diatonic idiom, the spare, carefully-wrought structure, the suggestions of Richard Strauss, Brahms and even Tchaikovsky; the introduction to the first movement, which is of an order established by Haydn; some rhythmic elements derived from Stravinsky, and a scherzo not too far removed from Beethoven. Indeed, the orchestra employed is of no more than Beethoven proportions.

Here is a man with respect for classic achievements. But—and this is a large but—Mr. Smit's work is no musical taxidermy but a hearty, substantial and individual score. There is always something going on, and that something is always interesting. There is consistent forward motion here, and the rhythmic play is as discernible as the instrumentation is clear.

A real musician with a sensitive "inward ear" wrote this Symphony, a musician probably not a bold experimenter, but one who grasps the essential nature of the symphony, and one who in his present and for his future has built upon the past. His next Symphony or two ought to show him—and us—where he is going, creatively, and they ought to be more important than his first. But his initial attempt shows much promise. Mr. Smit was in the audience and bowed to applause.

Audience Bowled Over

Nicole Henriot, more dashing and flashing than ever as a keyboard magician, fairly bowled over the audience with her performance of this little-known G minor Piano Concerto of Prokofieff. She has given us memorable playing before, but this, unless my memory is all wrong, was most dazzling of all. The Concerto is a big, displayful and very difficult score, written (in its original, and lost, version) when Prokofieff was 22. That would account for the echoes of Rachmaninoff and his Slavic luxuriance in the first movement. But the rest is pure, if early Prokofieff, with his characteristic turns of tune, phrase and harmony, and the restless, driving urge of his rhythm. It is a superb work and ought to be in the active repertory. Why it is not, who can tell? The last Boston performance was by the composer and Koussevitzky in 1930.

Miss Henriot received a merited ovation when it was over. Her performance, really, was as "big" and brilliant and powerful as the music itself.

Through the afternoon Charles Munch and the Orchestra gave a superb display of virtuoso playing, as much in Smit as in Prokofieff. If anything went wrong, it was not discernible to one listening out in front, unless you insist upon noting that the strings in the portamenti in the "Montagues and Capulets" sections were not absolutely together. (There's always a carper in the house!)

In the "Romeo and Juliet" Suite this virtuosity counted for everything, for Prokofieff here created a score whose enormous power of depiction is equaled only by its trickiness of detail. What a perfect musical mirror of Shakespeare's play is this music! Time was when I was very young and said otherwise, but perhaps that will be forgiven me!

Next week the orchestra will journey again to New York. At the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Munch will present Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio," Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major (K. 622), with the Boston Symphony's admirable Gino Cioffi as soloist, and Richard Strauss' Tone Poem, "A Hero's Life."

Leo Smit's Symphony in World Première

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB -2 1957

Talbot

Leo Smit, whose new Symphony is being given its world première by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend.

Boston Herald
February 2, 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 14th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Nicole Henriot, pianist. The program:

Symphony No. 1 ..... Leo Smit
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 16 ..... Prokofieff
"Romeo and Juliet" ..... Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Three vital works, one of them a symphony in its first performance, yesterday swept away the mid-winter program doldrums to restore a bracing, exciting atmosphere to Symphony Hall.

The new symphony, and an impressive one it is, is the work of Leo Smit, known to us largely as a brilliant piano virtuoso, but whose overture "The Parcae" was given four years ago. It is a work on a large scale in a highly personal idiom though one evidently derived in part from Stravinsky and, in a lesser degree, Copland. The texture is fresh and strong and exceptionally melodic considering the times.

Elegiac Quality

Indeed, the slow movement of this symphony certainly ranks among the most beautiful in any contemporary composition, progressing, with an elegiac quality almost Mahlerian in its repose. The two ensuing movements are also interesting, the scherzo having a light, good natured mood without being too overdrawn, as many contemporary orchestral scherzos are, and the finale has a sense of real culmination in all that has gone before.

It is the first movement that provides the trip over the threshold here, however. After a fine introduction awakening the senses for what might follow, there begins a movement so disjointed, so jagged in its rhythms and so aggressive in its harmonies that it seems to have no destination whatever. One fancied one could hear the gaps where the composer had left off work one day to pick it up another.

The material was assimilable enough, though it had none of the distinction of the other three movements; it merely leaped about in wild intervals from one voice to another pausing between leaps to gulp for air. It is, in any case, not at all worthy of the beautiful adagio, whose presence alone would indicate the potential of this 36-year-old composer, for a truism of the day is that almost anyone can write a loud and fast movement employing fierce orchestral techniques, but few can write a sustained adagio that is at the same time a work of melodic rather than atmospheric beauty. The composer was in the audience and was given a splendid reception by the audience.

Incredible Effect

It is not easy to convey the measure of success attained by Nicole Henriot, returning for another appearance with this orchestra yesterday. She played one of the two or three gigantic piano concertos of the 20th century, a work of incredible difficulty but incredible effect as well. It was Prokofieff's Second Concerto in G minor, not heard here since Prokofieff himself gave it its American premiere at these concerts 27 years ago. The reason of course, lies in the formidable problems on the keyboard it presents (though it is said to pose fewer than the Fourth, which has never been done). But they certainly didn't trouble this attractive young blonde girl, who skips on and off the stage in the most winning manner.

She brought enormous power to bear without conveying a sense of pounding and executed the rapid scalewise passages in the fleetest way. It was, in short, a breath-taking performance of a breath-taking work and she was called back to the stage five times. Mr. Munch and the orchestra, it may be said, provided her with a brilliant accompaniment, but the orchestra really came into its own in Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet."

This is one of the composer's most engaging pieces, filled at once with vivid coloration, melodic felicity of the most attractive sort, with an abundance and an orchestral ingenuity not less than dazzling in its invention. This is the first time Mr. Munch has conducted it here but he captured the swift changing mood of the suite as if he had done this work all his life. All in all a great concert, one of the real high points of the season so far.

The orchestra is out of town next week, returning Feb. 15 to do the overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio," and his Clarinet Concerto (Gino Cioffi, soloist) and Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

Mlle Henriot Soloist in Prokofiev Concerto

By Harold Rogers

No matter how you look at the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend, the program—both in substance and performance—is stimulating. There is an arresting first performance of a new symphony by Leo Smit. There is a dazzling traversal of Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto by Nicole Henriot. And Charles Munch closes the program with a flamboyant reading of seven parts from Prokofiev's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Thus ran the general impressions in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Smit's Symphony No. 1 in E-flat, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and completed in 1955, makes the usual obeisance to Stravinsky, only Mr. Smit is more independent than many of his colleagues. He has almost fought his way clear of obvious influences. His style is somewhat ascetic, rather dry in a neo-classical way, yet there are passages that sing a convincing song—as in the Andante sostenuto, for instance.

Mr. Smit shows his greatest originality in the structure of his orchestral fabric. Little melodic lines overlap, starting on some unexpected off-beat and ending just as whimsically. Chords do not always resolve at an obvious moment, but gradually change their character voice by voice. Thus he weaves a tapestry, but it is not very colorful. When the finished product is held up at full length, the beholder is surprised to find it done in tones of gray.

Yesterday afternoon the composer was in the audience. He rose twice at Dr. Munch's bidding to accept the warm applause.

* * *

Mlle Henriot, it will easily be recalled by those who have ench her- wire. her ce of nish- ment and respect. Though she has been noted as a dynamic artist who can easily cleave obscuring orchestral forces, there was a new dimension in her playing yesterday—the ability to reign in, to refine, to fashion a true pianissimo.

The Prokofiev Second, however, requires little in this sensitive area. It is a tour de force almost from the first to the finale; it snaps, growls, roars; it scatters fire in a shower of sparks. Then again it smiles, chirps, bursts into a fit of chattering laughter; and in the final Allegro tempestoso Mlle Henriot's fingers are flashing like trip hammers. Her delighted audience gave her a stamping, shouting ovation. She deserved every decibel of it.

* * *

In the "Romeo and Juliet" ballet music we find Prokofiev at the height of his powers as a composer of descriptive music. How vividly he sums up the hatred between the Capulets and the Montagues in those great acidic chords we hear at the outset! And then there's the ball in all its pomp and splendor, evoked magnificently under Dr. Munch's majestic baton. There is a mercurial portion devoted to the young Juliet, and a short prayerful episode sketches the figure of Friar Laurence.

Three ingratiating parts—called Dance, Scene, and Masks—are not easily tied into the story by the listener who has not seen the ballet performed. The suite, as played yesterday, concludes with the slaying of Tybalt. Here one could easily imagine the clash of swords, the staccato pacing, the lunges. Prokofiev employs a stark, repetitious rhythmic pattern through which a keening melody strikes home. It is a stunning piece of writing, and it was stunningly played.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB -2 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music by Prokofieff and Smit

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA gave at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 14th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Leo Smit: Symphony No. 1, in E-flat (first performance); Prokofieff: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor (Nicole Henriot, soloist); Prokofieff: Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin? This concert proved one of the most stimulating of the Boston Symphony season, endlessly fascinating and with not a dull moment. It reached its peak in the brilliant Concerto of Prokofieff and the truly marvelous "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts, but the First Symphony by Leo Smit was a most uncommon score and highly enjoyable.

It is most uncommon because, though the first symphony of a composer just over 36, it is a curious blend of tradition and modernity. Beneath the play of dissonance and contrapuntal decoration (relatively mild in their "bite"), is a striking fundamental conservatism. Mr. Smit has learned a lot from the past, as may plainly be heard in the largely diatonic idiom, the spare, carefully-wrought structure; the suggestions of Richard Strauss, Brahms and even Tchaikovsky; the introduction to the first movement, which is of an order established by Haydn, some rhythmic elements derived from Stravinsky, and a scherzo not too far removed from Beethoven. Indeed, the orchestra employed is of no more than Beethoven proportions.

Here is a man with respect for classic achievements. But—and this is a large but—M. Smit's work is no musical taxidermy but a hearty, substantial and individual score. There is always something going on, and that something is always interesting. There is consistent forward motion here, and the rhythmic play is as discernible as the instrumentation is clear.

A real musician with a sensitive "inward ear" wrote this Symphony, a musician probably not a bold experimenter, but one who grasps the essential nature of the symphony, and one who in his present and for his future has built upon the past. His next Symphony or two ought to show him—and us—where he is going, creatively, and they ought to be more important than his first. But his initial attempt shows much promise. Mr. Smit was in the audience and bowed to applause.

Audience Bowled Over

Nicole Henriot, more dashing and flashing than ever as a keyboard magician, fairly bowled over the audience with her performance of this little-known G minor Piano Concerto of Prokofieff. She has given us memorable playing before, but this, unless my memory is all wrong, was most dazzling of all. The Concerto is a big, displayful and very difficult score, written (in its original, and lost, version) when Prokofieff was 22. That would account for the echoes of Rachmaninoff and his Slavic luxuriance in the first movement. But the rest is pure, if early Prokofieff, with his characteristic turns of tune, phrase and harmony, and the restless, driving urge of his rhythm. It is a superb work and ought to be in the active repertory. Why it is not, who can tell? The last Boston performance was by the composer and Koussevitzky in 1930.

Miss Henriot received a merited ovation when it was over. Her performance, really, was as "big" and brilliant and powerful as the music itself.

Through the afternoon Charles Munch and the Orchestra gave a superb display of virtuoso playing, as much in Smit as in Prokofieff. If anything went wrong, it was not discernible to one listening out in front, unless you insist upon noting that the strings in the portamenti in the "Montagues and Capulets" sections were not absolutely together. (There's always a carper in the house!)

In the "Romeo and Juliet" Suite this virtuosity counted for everything, for Prokofieff here created a score whose enormous power of depiction is equaled only by its trickiness of detail. What a perfect musical mirror of Shakespeare's play is this music! Time was when I was very young and said otherwise, but perhaps that will be forgiven me!

Next week the orchestra will journey again to New York. At the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Munch will present Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio"; Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major (K. 622), with the Boston Symphony's admirable Gino Cioffi as soloist, and Richard Strauss' Tone Poem, "A Hero's Life."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

1957

Munch Conducts Symphony by Smit

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Nicole Henriot, pianist. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 6:

Symphony No. 1 in E flat ..... Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, G minor ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven

This concert at which Charles Munch introduced a new symphony by the 36-year-old American composer Leo Smit to New York, and at which Nicole Henriot played the piano concerto produced by Prokofieff when he was a young firebrand of 22, was enormously refreshing.

Mr. Smit is an able pianist as well as a composer, and he has for many years been known as a particularly sympathetic interpreter of contemporary music. His Symphony No. 1 owes much to Stravinsky, with lesser echoes of Mahler and others, but its frank eclecticism does not obscure Mr. Smit's own musical personality. It is obvious that he is a fertile inventor, and if, in this first essay, he has let himself be carried away by the sheer exhilaration of writing clever, effective, facile music, there is good reason to believe that his second symphony may be more original, more searching in content, and more closely integrated.

Mr. Smit has many things to his advantage: a keen sense of harmony (he understands the language of tonality as few young composers do these days); a melodic abundance that is almost embarrassing at times; and a real mastery of orchestration (the transparency of his orchestral writing was a delight, especially in the Allegretto scherzando movement). Now that he has shown us how intelligently he has studied Stravinsky and other modern masters, let us hope that he will trust more fully to his own wings. The performance was superb, and the audience gave the conductor, orchestra, and composer an ovation.

Miss Henriot took the savagely energetic G minor Concerto of Prokofieff exuberantly in her stride. What imagination, what furious energy, what romantic excitement there is in this music! Sure of finger, unerring in her sense of the central ideas of the work, and surcharged with the necessary abandon of spirit, Miss Henriot made it tremendously exciting. At times, one wished for greater volume and roundness of tone in the more clangorous passages, but this was a small matter, in view of so expert a performance. Mr. Munch and the orchestra provided a sumptuous accompaniment. —R. S.

Leo Smit's Symphony in World Première

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB -2 1957

Talbot

Leo Smit, whose new Symphony is being given its world premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend.

Mlle Henriot Soloist in Prokofiev Concerto

By Harold Rogers

No matter how you look at the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend, the program—both in substance and performance—is stimulating. There is an arresting first performance of a new symphony by Leo Smit. There is a dazzling traversal of Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto by Nicole Henriot. And Charles Munch closes the program with a flamboyant reading of seven parts from Prokofiev's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Thus ran the general impressions in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Smit's Symphony No. 1 in E-flat, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and completed in 1955, makes the usual obeisance to Stravinsky, only Mr. Smit is more independent than many of his colleagues. He has almost fought his way clear of obvious influences. His style is somewhat ascetic, rather dry in a neo-classical way, yet there are passages that sing a convincing song—as in the Andante sostenuto, for instance.

Mr. Smit shows his greatest originality in the structure of his orchestral fabric. Little melodic lines overlap, starting on some unexpected off-beat and ending just as whimsically. Chords do not always resolve at an obvious moment, but gradually change their character voice by voice. Thus he weaves a tapestry, but it is not very colorful. When the finished product is held up at full length, the beholder is surprised to find it done in tones of gray.

Yesterday afternoon the composer was in the audience. He rose twice at Dr. Munch's bidding to accept the warm applause.

* * *

Mlle Henriot, it will easily be recalled by those who have heard her, is the petite French pianist who plays as if she herself is strung with piano wire. The amount of volume at her command, plus the brilliance of her attack, compels astonishment and respect. Though she has been noted as a dynamic artist who can easily cleave obscuring orchestral forces, there was a new dimension in her playing yesterday—the ability to reign in, to refine, to fashion a true pianissimo.

The Prokofiev Second, however, requires little in this sensitive area. It is a tour de force almost from the first to the finale; it snaps, growls, roars; it scatters fire in a shower of sparks. Then again it smiles, chirps, bursts into a fit of chattering laughter; and in the final Allegro tempestoso Mlle Henriot's fingers are flashing like trip hammers. Her delighted audience gave her a stamping, shouting ovation. She deserved every decibel of it.

* * *

In the "Romeo and Juliet" ballet music we find Prokofiev at the height of his powers as a composer of descriptive music. How vividly he sums up the hatred between the Capulets and the Montagues in those great acidic chords we hear at the outset! And then there's the ball in all its pomp and splendor, evoked magnificently under Dr. Munch's majestic baton. There is a mercurial portion devoted to the young Juliet, and a short prayerful episode sketches the figure of Friar Laurence.

Three ingratiating parts—called Dance, Scene, and Masks—are not easily tied into the story by the listener who has not seen the ballet performed. The suite, as played yesterday, concludes with the slaying of Tybalt. Here one could easily imagine the clash of swords, the staccato pacing, the lunges. Prokofiev employs a stark, repetitious rhythmic pattern through which a keening melody strikes home. It is a stunning piece of writing, and it was stunningly played.

Boston Herald
February 2, 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 14th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Nicole Henriot, pianist. The program:

Symphony No. 1 ..... Leo Smit
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 16 ..... Prokofieff
"Romeo and Juliet" ..... Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Three vital works, one of them a symphony in its first performance, yesterday swept away the mid-winter program doldrums to restore a bracing, exciting atmosphere to Symphony Hall.

The new symphony, and an impressive one it is, is the work of Leo Smit, known to us largely as a brilliant piano virtuoso, but whose overture "The Parcae" was given four years ago. It is a work on a large scale in a highly personal idiom though one evidently derived in part from Stravinsky and, in a lesser degree, Copland. The texture is fresh and strong and exceptionally melodic considering the times.

Elegiac Quality

Indeed, the slow movement of this symphony certainly ranks among the most beautiful in any contemporary composition, progressing, with an elegiac quality almost Mahlerian in its repose. The two ensuing movements are also interesting, the scherzo having a light, good natured mood without being too overdrawn, as many contemporary orchestral scherzos are, and the finale has a sense of real culmination in all that has gone before.

It is the first movement that provides the trip over the threshold here, however. After a fine introduction awakening the senses for what might follow, there begins a movement so disjointed, so jagged in its rhythms and so aggressive in its harmonies that it seems to have no destination whatever. One fancied one could hear the gaps where the composer had left off work one day to pick it up another.

The material was assimilable enough, though it had none of the distinction of the other three movements; it merely leaped about in wild intervals from one voice to another pausing between leaps to gulp for air. It is, in any case, not at all worthy of the beautiful adagio, whose presence alone would indicate the potential of this 36-year-old composer, for a truism of the day is that almost anyone can write a loud and fast movement employing fierce orchestral techniques, but few can write a sustained adagio that is at the same time a work of melodic rather than atmospheric beauty. The composer was in the audience and was given a splendid reception by the audience.

Incredible Effect

It is not easy to convey the measure of success attained by Nicole Henriot, returning for another appearance with this orchestra yesterday. She played one of the two or three gigantic piano concertos of the 20th century, a work of incredible difficulty but incredible effect as well. It was Prokofieff's Second Concerto in G minor, not heard here since Prokofieff himself gave it its American premiere at these concerts 27 years ago. The reason of course, lies in the formidable problems on the keyboard it presents (though it is said to pose fewer than the Fourth, which has never been done). But they certainly didn't trouble this attractive young blonde girl, who skips on and off the stage in the most winning manner.

She brought enormous power to bear without conveying a sense of pounding and executed the rapid scalewise passages in the fleetest way. It was, in short, a breath-taking performance of a breath-taking work and she was called back to the stage five times. Mr. Munch and the orchestra, it may be said, provided her with a brilliant accompaniment, but the orchestra really came into its own in Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet."

This is one of the composer's most engaging pieces, filled at once with vivid coloration, melodic felicity of the most attractive sort, with an abundance and an orchestral ingenuity not less than dazzling in its invention. This is the first time Mr. Munch has conducted it here but he captured the swift changing mood of the suite as if he had done this work all his life. All in all a great concert, one of the real high points of the season so far.

The orchestra is out of town next week, returning Feb. 15 to do the overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio," and his Clarinet Concerto (Gino Cioffi, soloist) and Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB -2 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music by Prokofieff and Smit

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA gave at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 14th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Leo Smit: Symphony No. 1, in E-flat (first performance); Prokofieff: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor (Nicole Henriot, soloist); Prokofieff: Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin? This concert proved one of the most stimulating of the Boston Symphony season, endlessly fascinating and with not a dull moment. It reached its peak in the brilliant Concerto of Prokofieff and the truly marvelous "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts, but the First Symphony by Leo Smit was a most uncommon score and highly enjoyable.

It is most uncommon because, though the first symphony of a composer just over 36, it is a curious blend of tradition and modernity. Beneath the play of dissonance and contrapuntal decoration (relatively mild in their "bite"), is a striking fundamental conservatism. Mr. Smit has learned a lot from the past, as may plainly be heard in the largely diatonic idiom, the spare, carefully-wrought structure; the suggestions of Richard Strauss, Brahms and even Tchaikovsky; the introduction to the first movement, which is of an order established by Haydn, some rhythmic elements derived from Stravinsky, and a scherzo not too far removed from Beethoven. Indeed, the orchestra employed is of no more than Beethoven proportions.

Here is a man with respect for classic achievements. But—and this is a large but—Mr. Smit's work is no musical taxidermy but a hearty, substantial and individual score. There is always something going on, and that something is always interesting. There is consistent forward motion here, and the rhythmic play is as discernible as the instrumentation is clear.

A real musician with a sensitive "inward ear" wrote this Symphony, a musician probably not a bold experimenter, but one who grasps the essential nature of the symphony, and one who in his present and for his future has built upon the past. His next Symphony or two ought to show him—and us—where he is going, creatively, and they ought to be more important than his first. But his initial attempt shows much promise. Mr. Smit was in the audience and bowed to applause.

Audience Bowled Over

Nicole Henriot, more dashing and flashing than ever as a keyboard magician, fairly bowled over the audience with her performance of this little-known G minor Piano Concerto of Prokofieff. She has given us memorable playing before, but this, unless my memory is all wrong, was most dazzling of all. The Concerto is a big, displayful and very difficult score, written (in its original, and lost, version) when Prokofieff was 22. That would account for the echoes of Rachmaninoff and his Slavic luxuriance in the first movement. But the rest is pure, if early Prokofieff, with his characteristic turns of tune, phrase and harmony, and the restless, driving urge of his rhythm. It is a superb work and ought to be in the active repertory. Why it is not, who can tell? The last Boston performance was by the composer and Koussevitzky in 1930.

Miss Henriot received a merited ovation when it was over. Her performance, really, was as "big" and brilliant and powerful as the music itself.

Through the afternoon Charles Munch and the Orchestra gave a superb display of virtuoso playing, as much in Smit as in Prokofieff. If anything went wrong, it was not discernible to one listening out in front, unless you insist upon noting that the strings in the portamenti in the "Montagues and Capulets" sections were not absolutely together. (There's always a carper in the house!)

In the "Romeo and Juliet" Suite this virtuosity counted for everything, for Prokofieff here created a score whose enormous power of depiction is equaled only by its trickiness of detail. What a perfect musical mirror of Shakespeare's play is this music! Time was when I was very young and said otherwise, but perhaps that will be forgiven me!

Next week the orchestra will journey again to New York. At the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Munch will present Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio"; Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major (K. 622), with the Boston Symphony's admirable Gino Cioffi as soloist, and Richard Strauss' Tone Poem, "A Hero's Life."

Symphony No. 1 in E flat ..... Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, G minor ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven

This concert, at which Charles Munch introduced a new symphony by the 36-year-old American composer Leo Smit to New York, and at which Nicole Henriot played the piano concerto produced by Prokofieff when he was a young firebrand of 22, was enormously refreshing.

Mr. Smit is an able pianist as well as a composer, and he has for many years been known as a particularly sympathetic interpreter of contemporary music. His Symphony No. 1 owes much to Stravinsky, with lesser echoes of Mahler and others, but its frank eclecticism does not obscure Mr. Smit's own musical personality. It is obvious that he is a fertile inventor, and if, in this first essay, he has let himself be carried away by the sheer exhilaration of writing clever, effective, facile music, there is good reason to believe that his second symphony may be more original, more searching in content, and more closely integrated.

Mr. Smit has many things to his advantage: a keen sense of harmony (he understands the language of tonality as few young composers do these days); a melodic abundance that is almost embarrassing at times; and a real mastery of orchestration (the transparency of his orchestral writing was a delight, especially in the Allegretto scherzando movement). Now that he has shown us how intelligently he has studied Stravinsky and other modern masters, let us hope that he will trust more fully to his own wings. The performance was superb, and the audience gave the conductor, orchestra, and composer an ovation.

Miss Henriot took the savagely energetic G minor Concerto of Prokofieff exuberantly in her stride. What imagination, what furious energy, what romantic excitement there is in this music! Sure of finger, unerring in her sense of the central ideas of the work, and surcharged with the necessary abandon of spirit, Miss Henriot made it tremendously exciting. At times, one wished for greater volume and roundness of tone in the more clangorous passages, but this was a small matter, in view of so expert a performance. Mr. Munch and the orchestra provided a sumptuous accompaniment. —R. S.

196

NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 99,506
FEB 3 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Features Nicole Henriot As Soloist

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will make its second and last appearance here this season in the sixth program of the Woolsey series on Tuesday evening. The soloist of the concert is to be the brilliant young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, who has thrilled audiences in Woolsey Hall on two previous occasions. The Boston Orchestra introduced her to a local audience in 1950 and two years later we were fortunate in hearing her perform as soloist with the New Haven Symphony.

Mlle. Henriot, who made her American debut in 1948, was billed as "the Frail Thunderer" when she first came here with the Boston Orchestra to perform the Ravel Piano Concerto in the final concert of the 1949-50 Woolsey series. She lived up to that name in the performance of the difficult Ravel work, projecting a power in octave passages that was amazing for a woman pianist and particularly for one of her slight build. Though she was but 25 years old at that time, she displayed a mature and sensitive musicianship as well as brilliant technical powers in that performance.

In her later Woolsey Hall appearance with the New Haven Symphony, the young French artist proved to be a "real trouper" in the best sense of the word. Unwittingly she broke up an all-Beethoven program in which she was scheduled to perform the composer's Fourth Piano Concerto by substituting the Schumann A minor Concerto. It turned out that Mlle. Henriot was going against her doctor's orders in keeping this engagement at all. She had a badly bruised and very painful thumbnail on one hand but despite this drawback she gave a highly impressive performance of the great romantic concerto. The reason for the program change was that the young pianist wanted to favor her injured finger and this was made possible because she said that less rehearsing was involved due to her better acquaintance with the Schumann work. The writer learned all this in a talk with Mlle. Henriot after the performance which was actually an ordeal for her.

As a matter of fact, a complete program change is involved in Tuesday's concert which is completely different from the original one planned. Works by Britten, Ibert, and Brahms were listed in the program submitted to the manager of the Woolsey series, Daggett M. Lo[illegible] month ago. This was an all-orchestral program requiring no soloist.

It is therefore a stroke of good fortune for us that Mlle. Henriot will appear with the Boston musicians here this week when she will be heard as the soloist in the Prokofieff Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor. This work is to be included in the orchestra's concerts in New York and Washington following Tuesday's performance in Woolsey Hall.

NICOLE HENRIOT

Charles Munch, the regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will be on the podium for this seasonal farewell by the Hub musicians. Two symphonies, one familiar and one unfamiliar, are also listed in the program. In the former category is the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 while the work to be heard here for the first time is the Symphony No. 1 by Smit. Presumably the newer work is among the contemporary ventures of the orchestra this season. We shall have to wait for the concert's program notes for substantiation of this conjecture.

Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall on Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 250,086 - S. 278,877
FEB 3 1957

NEWS OF MUSIC

Nicole Henriot Artist For Boston Symphony

By DAY THORPE

"The President of France and the President of the United States went out to a concert last night, and both got a big hand from the crowd. But is was a blond who really stole the show. Her name is Nicole Henriot, and she played a piano concerto so well that she not only won the plaudits of President Truman and President Auriel, but was forced to repeat the last part. That hasn't happened in a concert here in years!"

The quotation is from The Star in the spring of 1951. Nicole Henriot has had a successful career since then, both on records and in concert. She returns to Washington Thursday with the Boston Symphony. This time it is the Prokofieff concerto in G minor; in 1951, if I remember correctly, it was the Ravel concerto.

The Capitol Woodwind Quintet, in its concert today at the Meserole Studios, will play the Beethoven variations on the Giovanni Paisiello duet

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
1957

Munch Leads Britten Work

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Nicole Henriot, pianist. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 9, 2:30:

Variations for String Orchestra on a theme by Frank Bridge ..... Britten
Piano Concerto No. 2 ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms

This was an afternoon of impressive music-making, the keen tonal brilliance for which the orchestra is famous sounding at its best.

The string section opened the program with an effective, moving performance of the Britten variations. The playing was clean and the blend mellow, and Mr. Munch moulded the contours of phrases with a sensitive grasp of their nuances. Contrasts of mood among variations were pointed up.

Miss Henriot interpreted the Prokofieff concerto with solidity and precision, everything ordered, well-shaped, and secure. Her tone, however, lacked depth.

The reading of the Brahms symphony raised some debatable points. It was, to be sure, a vital performance, making the most of the mounting climaxes and broad dimensions of the form. But in terms of style and tradition, some things seemed out of line. There was a strange tendency to hover before entering phrases in the introduction—a romanticism that fits Brahms not at all. This and an over-concern with details obscured some long-span lines. And the brilliant, French-style sound of the orchestra seemed to miss the mellow spirit of the work, parts often standing out as separate strands, rather than blending for a full over-all sound.

Yet this was a forceful reading, and the stunning final climax brought on a big audience response. This listener simply wondered how much tradition—in style and sound—affects the core of this music. —D. M. E.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 250,086 - S. 278,877
FEB 3 1957

PIANIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY—Nicole Henriot, who will be heard Thursday night in the second concerto of Prokofieff. The concert of the Boston Symphony is in Constitution Hall.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 99,506

FEB 3 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Features Nicole Henriot As Soloist

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will make its second and last appearance here this season in the sixth program of the Woolsey series on Tuesday evening. The soloist of the concert is to be the brilliant young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, who has thrilled audiences in Woolsey Hall on two previous occasions. The Boston Orchestra introduced her to a local audience in 1950 and two years later we were fortunate in hearing her perform as soloist with the New Haven Symphony.

Mlle. Henriot, who made her American debut in 1948, was billed as "The Frail Thunderer" when she first came here with the Boston Orchestra to perform the Ravel Piano Concerto in the final concert of the 1949-50 Woolsey series. She lived up to that name in the performance of the difficult Ravel work, projecting a power in octave passages that was amazing for a woman pianist and particularly for one of her slight build. Though she was but 25 years old at that time, she displayed a mature and sensitive musicianship as well as brilliant technical powers in that performance.

In her later Woolsey Hall appearance with the New Haven Symphony, the young French artist proved to be a "real trouper" in the best sense of the word. Unwittingly she broke up an all-Beethoven program in which she was scheduled to perform the composer's Fourth Piano Concerto by substituting the Schumann A minor Concerto. It turned out that Mlle. Henriot was going against her doctor's orders in keeping this engagement at all. She had a badly bruised and very painful thumbnail on one hand but despite this drawback she gave a highly impressive performance of the great romantic concerto. The reason for the program change was that the young pianist wanted to favor her injured finger and this was made possible because she said that less rehearsing was involved due to her better acquaintance with the Schumann work. The writer learned all this in a talk with Mlle. Henriot after the performance which was actually an ordeal for her.

As a matter of fact, a complete program change is involved in Tuesday's concert which is completely different from the original one planned. Works by Britten, Ibert, and Brahms were listed in the program first submitted to the manager of the Woolsey series, Daggett M. Lee, a month ago. This was an all-orchestral program requiring no soloist.

It is therefore a stroke of good fortune for us that Mlle. Henriot will appear with the Boston musicians here this week when she will be heard as the soloist in the Prokofieff Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor. This work is to be included in the orchestra's concerts in New York and Washington following Tuesday's performance in Woolsey Hall.

NICOLE HENRIOT

Charles Munch, the regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will be on the podium for this seasonal farewell by the Hub musicians. Two symphonies, one familiar and one unfamiliar, are also listed in the program. In the former category is the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 while the work to be heard here for the first time is the Symphony No. 1 by Smit. Presumably the newer work is among the contemporary ventures of the orchestra this season. We shall have to wait for the concert's program notes for substantiation of this conjecture.

Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall on Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

[illegible] leads [illegible] York

[illegible] Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] conductor, Nicole [illegible] Carnegie Hall, Feb.

[illegible] for String Orchestra on [illegible] by Frank Bridge — Britten
[illegible] Concerto No. 2 — Prokofieff
[illegible] No. 1 — Brahms

[illegible] was an afternoon of impressive music-making, the keen tonal [illegible] for which the orchestra is [illegible] sounding at its best.

[illegible] string section opened the program with an effective, moving performance of the Britten variations. The playing was clean and the blend mellow, and Mr. Munch moulded the contours of phrases with a sensitive grasp of their nuances. Contrasts of mood among variations were pointed up.

Miss Henriot interpreted the Prokofieff concerto with solidity and precision, everything ordered, well-shaped, and secure. Her tone, however, lacked depth.

The reading of the Brahms symphony raised some debatable points. It was, to be sure, a vital performance, making the most of the mounting climaxes and broad dimensions of the form. But in terms of style and tradition, some things seemed out of line. There was a strange tendency to hover before entering phrases in the introduction—a romanticism that fits Brahms not at all. This and an over-concern with details obscured some long-spun lines. And the brilliant, French-style sound of the orchestra seemed to miss the mellow spirit of the work, parts often standing out as separate strands, rather than blending for a full over-all sound.

Yet this was a forceful reading, and the stunning final climax brought on a big audience response. This listener simply wondered how much tradition—in style and sound—affects the core of this music. —D. M. E.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 250,086 - S. 278,877

FEB 3 1957

NEWS OF MUSIC

Nicole Henriot Artist For Boston Symphony

By DAY THORPE

"The President of France and the President of the United States went out to a concert last night, and both got a big hand from the crowd. But is was a blond who really stole the show. Her name is Nicole Henriot, and she played a piano concerto so well that she not only won the plaudits of President Truman and President Auriel, but was forced to repeat the last part. That hasn't happened in a concert here in years!"

The quotation is from The Star in the spring of 1951. Nicole Henriot has had a successful career since then, both on records and in concert. She returns to Washington Thursday with the Boston Symphony. This time it is the Prokofieff concerto in G minor; in 1951, if I remember correctly, it was the Ravel concerto. . . .

The Capitol Woodwind Quintet, in its concert today at the Meserole Studios, will play the Beethoven variations on the Giovanni-Zerlina duet

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 250,086 - S. 278,877

FEB 3 1957

PIANIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY—Nicole Henriot, who will be heard Thursday night in the second concerto of Prokofieff. The concert of the Boston Symphony is in Constitution Hall.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467

FEB 3 1957

THREE CONDUCTORS AND AN ORCHESTRA PAY HOMAGE TO ARTURO TOSCANINI

Three conductors have volunteered their services to lead the Symphony of the Air in a memorial concert tonight at Carnegie Hall. Pierre Monteux, top inset, will conduct Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. Bruno Walter, middle, will direct Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica." Charles Munch, at bottom, has chosen Debussy's "La Mer."

The New York Times (by Sam Falk), Gus Manos, Dr. I. W. Schmidt

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

FEB 4 1957

Walter, Munch, Monteux, Conduct Tocanini Concert

By Jay S. Harrison

It is only fitting that a great man be honored by great men. In support of this view the Symphony of the Air last night presented a concert in Carnegie Hall dedicated to the memory of Arturo Toscanini and directed by three of the Maestro's most illustrious colleagues — Bruno Walter, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux.

Each of these three renowned musicians chose to conduct a work with which Toscanini himself was closely allied and which during his career in America he had often sent hurtling to his audience's ears. Mr. Walter led the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony in E flat, the "Eroica," a symphony which Toscanini conducted more frequently than any other; Mr. Munch was responsible for Debussy's "La Mer" and Mr. Monteux took charge for Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

Strangely enough, though it is likely there was no intention of the kind, the three programmed pieces provided something of a capsule portrait-in-tone of Toscanini and his inimitable personality. Certainly he was as mercurial and tumultuous as the sea, and his genius, in common with the genius of all heaven-trained interpreters, was an enigma not to be unravelled by the cool processes of mortal logic. And heroic also was Toscanini, heroic and bold and uncompromising in all matters of the spirit. In short, the program fit him, summed him up, gave us his picture, laid out the measure of the man.

Owing to the nature of the occasion it would be sheer effrontery to comment critcally on the performances, since three master musicians were at work doing what they know best to do. By now, in fact, Mr. Walter's "Eroica" and Mr. Munch's "La Mar" have grown to the status of classic renditions, and the performances last eveninig had behind them so massive a weight of authority that cavilling words, were there a necessity for any, would budge them not a jot. At any rate, many in the still audience—no applause was allowed—were brougt to tears by the readings.

Proceeds of the concert are to go to the Symphony Foundation of America, which supports the Symphony of the Air, and the Casa Verdi, an organization in Milan for old and destitute musincians. The distribution of monies thus received, like the concert itself, would surely have met with Toscanini's approval.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 4 - 1957

In Defense of American Music

To the Editor of The Herald:

Mr. William H. Chamberlin has favored this page with his annual condemnation of Dr. Munch's program-making with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. How curious that he so regularly jousts with Harvard composers—last season the adversary was Walter Piston, this time it is Randall Thompson

More curious, however, is the fact that he cannot see how his constant attacks on American music are striking at the development of a native culture itself. To ask whether Smetana's "Die Moldau" (indeed a masterpiece) is not more worth hearing than Thompson's "A Trip to Nahant" is to say that we had better continue to find our secured edification in music travelogues about Czech rivers than about our Atlantic coast. This is a view as short-sighted and tragicomic as that of the critics who in 1892 expressed their hope that Dvorak, just arrived here, would help create a national American music! The composer, we learn, found the idea ridiculous. Whether Thompson's piece can match Smetana's (ten versions available on LP!) is therefore quite irrelevant. What counts is that it is a music deeply rooted in native folklore, by an acknowledged American artist of international stature, and that a musical person with an open mind should at least be interested to find out what it is like!

Yet most curious of all is this fact: his letter was written before he had heard the Thompson piece—in advance of the first local performance! This is in line with a school of thought political as well as artistic which passes judgment first and then attends to the evidence.

And for heaven's sake, let's not wish ourselves back into the eras of Gericke (before 1906) and Muck (before 1918). Those men would stop at nothing; disregarding the fierce opposition of the Chamberlins of their day, they would insist on playing music by such dangerous modernists as Reger, Strauss, Mahler, and Debussy!

K. G. ROY

Newton Centre.

199

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
FEB 4 1957

Music: Toscanini Tribute

The New York Times

Pierre Monteux, left, Bruno Walter, center, and Charles Munch at last night's memorial concert at Carnegie Hall.

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

MUSIC was Arturo Toscanini's language, and it sang glowingly and passionately in his memory at Carnegie Hall last night. Three of the world's most famous conductors joined with the Symphony of the Air, which for seventeen years had been the maestro's orchestra, in a tribute expressed exclusively through the art that Toscanini served so triumphantly.

The concert was for the benefit of the Symphony Foundation of America, Inc., which helps to maintain the Symphony of the Air, and for the Casa Verdi in Milan, home for retired musicians, which Toscanini often befriended.

Each conductor—Bruno Walter, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux—brought not only his great gifts but a special intensity to this tribute. It was as though each were doing what he knew best and felt most deeply to keep green the memory of an honored colleague.

Each conductor dealt with an outstanding work with which Toscanini's career as an orchestral conductor had been identified. All three of these pieces the maestro had conducted with the New York Philharmonic and the N. B. C. Symphony, the ensembles he had directed in this country, as well as with orchestras he had led as guest conductor abroad.

Mr. Walter, who is 80 and who is cutting down his public appearances, directed Beethoven's "Eroica" with a sweep and fire remarkable even in his extensive experience with the work. His interpretation caught the spiritual drama that is the essence of this symphony. Here were rugged grandeur and healing compassion. There were a few ragged details of execution, but they were insignificant beside the depth of the conception. One mentions them only to point out that where there is enkindling imagination little else matters.

ARTURO TOSCANINI MEMORIAL CONCERT, Symphony of the Air, Pierre Monteux, Charles Munch and Bruno Walter conducting, at Carnegie Hall.
Eroica Symphony ..... Beethoven
La Mer ..... Debussy
Enigma Variations ..... Elgar

Mr. Munch conducted Debussy's "La Mer" with exceptional breadth and fervor. The colors in the orchestra shimmered and sparkled, while the rhythms pulsated as insistently as the sea itself. Toscanini had a healthy respect for the subtleties and intricacies of Debussy's music, and he approached each performance of "La Mer" warily and determinedly. Mr. Munch's approach had a great deal of this quality of self-searching and dedication.

Elgar's "Enigma" Variations was conducted by Mr. Monteux, who is also an octogenarian, with the sort of spaciousness and repose that this nobly conceived music requires. Mr. Monteux' sympathies as a conductor range through many styles. One should not be surprised at his diversity, and yet one was astonished and deeply moved by the understanding he brought to this distinctively English composer.

The orchestra responded to each conductor with an eagerness that would have pleased its old leader. It was still a courageous band. After the maestro's retirement it refused to fade away, and despite crushing obstacles it has survived as a cooperative. That it was still on hand last night was in itself an eloquent tribute to Toscanini, who often sang the unconquerable spirit of man.

TROY, N. Y., RECORD
FEB 5 1957

4,000 Attend Symphony Recital

By KEITH MARVIN

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch, its conductor since the 1949-50 season, presented a very fine concert at the RPI Field House last night—its fourth there since 1950. An audience estimated at 4,000 persons sat back and heard an exceptional treatment of works by Britten, Prokofieff and Brahms.

A new phase in concert attendance was introduced by H. L. Garren, managing director of the RPI Field House, who sent out flyers to ticket purchasers explaining that late arrivals would be kept standing at the rear of the hall until the conclusion of the first number. The rule was enforced.

The Benjamin Britten "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge," Op. 10, opened the evening's selections. It was a good choice for it brought to the attention of a goodly number a work which is relatively unknown in this country and should be better known.

Mr. Munch led his group through the adagio, march, Aria Italiana, bouree classique, motor perpetuo, march funebre, fugue and finale. Two movements the 'Wiener Waltz' and the 'chant' were deleted from the performance. The sections of the work are interesting and of considerable variety, ranging from the tuneful and airy opening movement, through the lovely 'Aria Italiana' with one of the most elusive tunes we've ever heard, through the imposing funeral march, to the conclusion.

Sergei Prokofieff's suite from the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," followed. This is a fantastic set of pieces, starting out with two crashing chords and a sort of echo effect immediately following on the part of the strings. This refers to the "Montagues and Capulets" section, but in the next piece, "Young Juliet," we found the most delicate thing we've ever heard from the pen of the late Russian Prokofieff, this gem resembling rather closely the "Miranda" theme from "The Tempest" music by Sibelius. Odd that Shakespearian heroines should attract such a similarity of style from two very different types of composers.

The finale, "Tybalt's Death" was loud and brassy for the most parts, lots of fun to hear and a pleasure to watch the orchestra. One gets the amazing impression that Prokofieff wanted to get across the idea that Tybalt died violently (as interpreted by the percussion section).

Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor" Op. 68 concluded the evening. The strings were good, conducting excellent, and orchestral balance, particularly between strings and brasses and percussion in the finale, very fine indeed.

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,161
FEB 6 1957

Music

FRENCH PIANIST PROVIDES 'BONUS' AT WOOLSEY HALL

The sensational young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, had the featured role in yesterday's farewell concert of the season by the Boston Symphony in Woolsey Hall. Her appearance in this sixth event of the Woolsey series was an unexpected "bonus" for listeners since the Prokofieff Second Piano Concerto was not originally scheduled for this concert. The performance of the work by Mlle. Henriot here last evening increased, if that is possible, her stature in the minds of a local audience.

The Boston Symphony first introduced "The Frail Thunderer," as she has been so aptly nicknamed, to a Woolsey Hall audience in 1950 when she displayed her pianistic prowess in Ravel's Concerto. A few years later she came here again to play the Schumann A minor Concerto with the New Haven Symphony. The latter performance was accomplished in virtuoso fashion despite the fact that Mlle. Henriot had a painfully bruised thumb on one hand though listeners were totally unaware of the fact. It later was revealed that she had given the performance against her doctor's orders!

We thought we had "heard everything" with regard to the capabilities of this amazing young woman pianist but her performance of the Prokofieff work proved to be the most astonishing of all. Surely, no great pianist of either sex plays with more assurance than Mlle. Henriot and no artist in our experience brushes aside the most formidable technical obstacles with equal nonchalance.

The emphasis is definitely on technical dexterity in a soloist's performance of last evening's concerto for there are few moments in any of the work's four movements when a performer is not "on the run." In the second movement, Scherzo, Mlle. Henriot's precision playing seemed as effortless as it was astonishing and her figurations in the following Intermezzo were equally impressive in the delicacy of touch with which they were consummated. The young artist had the power to project the bravura passages in the Finale with all their dramatic implications, all of which added up to a memorable performance beautifully integrated with that of Charles Munch and the Boston musicians. The work was enthusiastically received by yesterday's audience.

The concert provided a first hearing of the Symphony No. 1 by the young American composer, Leo Smit. The work, completed in 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers. Obviously a work of integrity by a former winner of the Fulbright Scholarship and a Guggenheim Fellowship, the symphony somewhat naturally evidences influences of styles of several composers from Bach to Hindemith. Despite its obscurity in design and structure at an initial acquaintance, the work was well received last evening and the composer was present to share audience acclaim with conductor and orchestra.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony received a dynamic and elegant performance as the concluding work of the program. Surely even the most discerning listener went happily along with the Munch interpretation up to the last movement—Allegro, ma non troppo. From there on in it was fast but judging from audience reaction, non troppo!

G.E.A.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 40,429
FEB 6 1957

4,000 at Munch Concert Hear End of RPI Series

By D. E. RITZ

A brilliant program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch concluded this season's RPI Field House Celebrity series Monday evening.

PLAYING to an audience of well over 4,000 persons the orchestra brought a magnificent program of unusual interest and played in a most masterful manner.

From the opening bars of the "Star Spangled Banner" to the final note of the Brahms "Symphony Number 1" the program held the audience captivated. Benjamin Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, opus 10" and the Prokofieff "Suite from the Ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet'" made up the balance of the program.

Both the Britten and Prokofieff numbers were completely new to the reviewer and the opportunity to hear them played by the Bostonians was much appreciated.

The Brahms needs no push from us but was, needless to state, the major offering of the evening.

MR. MUNCH PACED the opening "un poco sostenuto" at a more vigorous tempo than we usually have heard it and it made a fine impression. Brahms' music has a substantial quality and many faceted themes, and each was given its particular nuance and tempo. The noble simplicity of the "Andante sostenuto" movement was highlighted by concertmaster Richard Burgin's solo passages.

The Britten number is truly a field day for the string players who use about every device even thought up during its theme and seven variations. Subdued generally and quite British in concept, its appeal is through the composer's fine knowledge of string capacity. The number was composed in 1937 and had its first performance the same year at the Salzburg Festival.

MODERN ORCHESTRAL coloring in brilliant hues with a strong dash of dissonance feature the Prokofieff suite. Unusual rhythms, cacophonic wind effects and at other times subtle coloring are included.

The Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch opened the Field House seven years ago. That was in October with perfect weather and Conductor Munch, in his first local appearance, played to 6,000 persons. Mid-February is another weather picture yet over 4,000 persons heard the orchestra Monday night. In the meantime Mr. Munch has achieved an ever finer control of the magnificent instrument known as the Boston Symphony—as the exquisite presentation proved.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
FEB 7 1957

Music

Boston Symphony's Turn at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

This seems to be Orchestra Week in New York—the Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, the Boston, the Symphony of the Air, the Little Orchestra—some of them billed for two and three concerts!

Last night it was the turn of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall, the fourth visit this season, and again conducted by Charles Munch, with Nicole Henriot as soloist in Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto.

The concerto had a rousing and well-integrated reading. It is by no means Prokofieff at his best, his best in this medium beginning with the Third Concerto. But it packs plenty of action into its four movements.

Time was when the Russian critics pounced on this score "a babble of insane sounds, a musical mess, the work of a cubist and futurist." It must have been news to the 22-year-old Prokofieff that the cats on one critic's roof "made better music than this."

There are bold melodic leaps and sly grating harmonies in this music, but little that strikes the average pair of ears today as "scandalous." The music is eventful, fresh, always in some kind of turmoil on one or other.

Mr. Munch exerted firm control over the concerto. The orchestra painted in the background sharply and fully, and Miss Henriot applied herself energetically, if somewhat metallically, to the keyboard.

Prokofieff was surrounded on one side last night by Beethoven's fourth and on the other by the local premiere of a First Symphony by the 36-year-old Philadelphia composer, Leo Smit.

The new symphony proved to be sprightly stuff, the work of a master craftsman who not only knows his way about an orchestra but about traditional symphonic procedures as well.

A note of irrepressible high spirits dominates the symphony. There is a respite for airy meditation in the slow movement before the music reverts to its main theme of carefree swagger and frolic.

Mr. Smit knows how to keep a good thing going. Episodes of fresh interest are crowding in all the time, some in jazz, some atonal, some little more than abstract splatters of color—all moving inevitably to a point of rest.

The performance was all the music asked—and perhaps more.

199

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467

FEB 4 1957

Music: Toscanini Tribute

The New York Times

Pierre Monteux, left, Bruno Walter, center, and Charles Munch at last night's memorial concert at Carnegie Hall.

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

MUSIC was Arturo Toscanini's language, and it sang glowingly and passionately in his memory at Carnegie Hall last night. Three of the world's most famous conductors joined with the Symphony of the Air, which for seventeen years had been the maestro's orchestra, in a tribute expressed exclusively through the art that Toscanini served so triumphantly.

The concert was for the benefit of the Symphony Foundation of America, Inc., which helps to maintain the Symphony of the Air, and for the Casa Verdi in Milan, home for retired musicians, which Toscanini often befriended.

Each conductor—Bruno Walter, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux—brought not only his great gifts but a special intensity to this tribute. It was as though each were doing what he knew best and felt most deeply to keep green the memory of an honored colleague.

Each conductor dealt with an outstanding work with which Toscanini's career as an orchestral conductor had been identified. All three of these pieces the maestro had conducted with the New York Philharmonic and the N. B. C. Symphony, the ensembles he had directed in this country, as well as with orchestras he had led as guest conductor abroad.

Mr. Walter, who is 80 and who is cutting down his public appearances, directed Beethoven's "Eroica" with a sweep and fire remarkable even in his extensive experience with the work. His interpretation caught the spiritual drama that is the essence of this symphony. Here were rugged grandeur and healing compassion. There were a few ragged details of execution, but they were insignificant beside the depth of the conception. One mentions them only to point out that where there is enkindling imagination little else matters.

ARTURO TOSCANINI MEMORIAL CONCERT, Symphony of the Air, Pierre Monteux, Charles Munch and Bruno Walter conducting, at Carnegie Hall.
Eroica Symphony ..... Beethoven
La Mer ..... Debussy
Enigma Variations ..... Elgar

Mr. Munch conducted Debussy's "La Mer" with exceptional breadth and fervor. The colors in the orchestra shimmered and sparkled, while the rhythms pulsated as insistently as the sea itself. Toscanini had a healthy respect for the subtleties and intricacies of Debussy's music, and he approached each performance of "La Mer" warily and determinedly. Mr. Munch's approach had a great deal of this quality of self-searching and dedication.

Elgar's "Enigma" Variations was conducted by Mr. Monteux, who is also an octogenarian, with the sort of spaciousness and repose that this nobly conceived music requires. Mr. Monteux' sympathies as a conductor range through many styles. One should not be surprised at his diversity, and yet one was astonished and deeply moved by the understanding he brought to this distinctively English composer.

The orchestra responded to each conductor with an eagerness that would have pleased its old leader. It was still a courageous band. After the maestro's retirement it refused to fade away, and despite crushing obstacles it has survived as a cooperative. That it was still on hand last night was in itself an eloquent tribute to Toscanini, who often sang the unconquerable spirit of man.

TROY, N. Y., RECORD

FEB 5 1957

4,000 Attend Symphony Recital

By KEITH MARVIN

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch, its conductor since the 1949-50 season, presented a very fine concert at the RPI Field House last night—its fourth there since 1950. An audience estimated at 4,000 persons sat back and heard an exceptional treatment of works by Britten, Prokofieff and Brahms.

A new phase in concert attendance was introduced by H. L. Garren, managing director of the RPI Field House, who sent out flyers to ticket purchasers explaining that late arrivals would be kept standing at the rear of the hall until the conclusion of the first number. The rule was enforced.

The Benjamin Britten "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge," Op. 10, opened the evening's selections. It was a good choice for it brought to the attention of a goodly number a work which is relatively unknown in this country and should be better known.

Mr. Munch led his group through the adagio, march, Aria Italiana, bouree classique, motor perpetuo, march funebre, fugue and finale. Two movements the 'Wiener Waltz' and the 'chant' were deleted from the performance. The sections of the work are interesting and of considerable variety, ranging from the tuneful and airy opening movement, through the lovely 'Aria Italiana' with one of the most elusive tunes we've ever heard, through the imposing funeral march, to the conclusion.

Sergei Prokofieff's suite from the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," followed. This is a fantastic set of pieces, starting out with two crashing chords and a sort of echo effect immediately following on the part of the strings. This refers to the "Montagues and Capulets" section, but in the next piece, "Young Juliet," we found the most delicate thing we've ever heard from the pen of the late Russian Prokofieff, this gem resembling rather closely the "Miranda" theme from "The Tempest" music by Sibelius. Odd that Shakespearian heroines should attract such a similarity of style from two very different types of composers.

The finale, "Tybalt's Death" was loud and brassy for the most parts, lots of fun to hear and a pleasure to watch the orchestra. One gets the amazing impression that Prokofieff wanted to get across the idea that Tybalt died violently (as interpreted by the percussion section).

Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor" Op. 68 concluded the evening. The strings were good, conducting excellent, and orchestral balance, particularly between strings and brasses and percussion in the finale, very fine indeed.

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,161

FEB 6 1957

Music

FRENCH PIANIST PROVIDES 'BONUS' AT WOOLSEY HALL

The sensational young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, had the featured role in yesterday's farewell concert of the season by the Boston Symphony in Woolsey Hall. Her appearance in this sixth event of the Woolsey series was an unexpected "bonus" for listeners since the Prokofieff Second Piano Concerto was not originally scheduled for this concert. The performance of the work by Mlle. Henriot here last evening increased, if that is possible, her stature in the minds of a local audience.

The Boston Symphony first introduced "The Frail Thunderer," as she has been so aptly nicknamed, to a Woolsey Hall audience in 1950 when she displayed her pianistic prowess in Ravel's Concerto. A few years later she came here again to play the Schumann A minor Concerto with the New Haven Symphony. The latter performance was accomplished in virtuoso fashion despite the fact that Mlle. Henriot had a painfully bruised thumb on one hand though listeners were totally unaware of the fact. It later was revealed that she had given the performance against her doctor's orders!

We thought we had "heard everything" with regard to the capabilities of this amazing young woman pianist but her performance of the Prokofieff work proved to be the most astonishing of all. Surely, no great pianist of either sex plays with more assurance than Mlle. Henriot and no artist in our experience brushes aside the most formidable technical obstacles with equal nonchalance.

The emphasis is definitely on technical dexterity in a soloist's performance of last evening's concerto for there are few moments in any of the work's four movements when a performer is not "on the run." In the second movement, Scherzo, Mlle. Henriot's precision playing seemed as effortless as it was astonishing and her figurations in the following Intermezzo were equally impressive in the delicacy of touch with which they were consummated. The young artist had the power to project the bravura passages in the Finale with all their dramatic implications, all of which added up to a memorable performance beautifully integrated with that of Charles Munch and the Boston musicians. The work was enthusiastically received by yesterday's audience.

The concert provided a first hearing of the Symphony No. 1 by the young American composer, Leo Smit. The work, completed in 1955, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers. Obviously a work of integrity by a former winner of the Fulbright Scholarship and a Guggenheim Fellowship, the symphony somewhat naturally evidences influences of styles of several composers from Bach to Hindemith. Despite its obscurity in design and structure at an initial acquaintance, the work was well received last evening and the composer was present to share audience acclaim with conductor and orchestra.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony received a dynamic and elegant performance as the concluding work of the program. Surely even the most discerning listener went happily along with the Munch interpretation up to the last movement—Allegro, ma non troppo. From there on in it was fast but judging from audience reaction—non troppo!

G.E.A.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 40,429

FEB

4,000 at Munch Concert Hear End of RPI Series

By D. E. RITZ

A brilliant program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch concluded this season's RPI Field House Celebrity series Monday evening.

PLAYING to an audience of well over 4,000 persons the orchestra brought a magnificent program of unusual interest and played in a most masterful manner.

From the opening bars of the "Star Spangled Banner" to the final note of the Brahms "Symphony Number 1" the program held the audience captivated. Benjamin Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, opus 10" and the Prokofieff "Suite from the Ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet'" made up the balance of the program.

Both the Britten and Prokofieff numbers were completely new to the reviewer and the opportunity to hear them played by the Bostonians was much appreciated.

The Brahms needs no push from us but was, needless to state, the major offering of the evening.

MR. MUNCH PACED the opening "un poco sostenuto" at a more vigorous tempo than we usually have heard it and it made a fine impression. Brahms' music has a substantial quality and many faceted themes, and each was given its particular nuance and tempo. The noble simplicity of the "Andante sostenuto" movement was highlighted by concertmaster Richard Burgin's solo passages.

The Britten number is truly a field day for the string players who use about every device ever thought up during its theme and seven variations. Subdued generally and quite British in concept, its appeal is through the composer's fine knowledge of string capacity. The number was composed in 1937 and had its first performance the same year at the Salzburg Festival.

MODERN ORCHESTRAL coloring in brilliant hues with a strong dash of dissonance feature the Prokofieff suite. Unusual rhythms, cacophonic wind effects and at other times subtle coloring are included.

The Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch opened the Field House seven years ago. That was in October with perfect weather and Conductor Munch, in his first local appearance, played to 6,000 persons. Mid-February is another weather picture yet over 4,000 persons heard the orchestra Monday night. In the meantime Mr. Munch has achieved an ever finer control of the magnificent instrument known as the Boston Symphony—as the exquisite presentation proved.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502

FEB 7 1957

Music

Boston Symphony's Turn at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

This seems to be Orchestra Week in New York—the Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, the Boston, the Symphony of the Air, the Little Orchestra—some of them billed for two and three concerts!

Last night it was the turn of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall, the fourth visit this season, and again conducted by Charles Munch, with Nicole Henriot as soloist in Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto.

The concerto had a rousing and well-integrated reading. It is by no means Prokofieff at his best, his best in this medium beginning with the Third Concerto. But it packs plenty of action into its four movements.

Time was when the Russian critics pounced on this score "a babble of insane sounds, a musical mess, the work of a cubist and futurist." It must have been news to the 22-year-old Prokofieff that the cats on one critic's roof "made better music than this."

There are bold melodic leaps and sly grating harmonies in this music, but little that strikes the average pair of ears today as "scandalous." The music is eventful, fresh, always in some kind of turmoil or other.

Mr. Munch exerted firm control over the concerto. The orchestra painted in the background sharply and fully, and Miss Henriot applied herself energetically, if somewhat metalically, to the keyboard.

Prokofieff was surrounded on one side last night by Beethoven's fourth and on the other by the local premiere of a First Symphony by the 36-year-old Philadelphia composer, Leo Smit.

The new symphony proved to be sprightly stuff, the work of a master craftsman who not only knows his way about an orchestra but about traditional symphonic procedures as well.

A note of irrepressible high spirits dominates the symphony. There is a respite for airy meditation in the slow movement before the music reverts to its main theme of carefree swagger and frolic.

Mr. Smit knows how to keep a good thing going. Episodes of fresh interest are crowding in all the time, some in jazz, some atonal, some little more than abstract splatters of color—all moving inevitably to a point of rest.

The performance was all the music asked—and perhaps more.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 23 1957

MUSIC TO

Bruckne

The week's visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, provided a first hearing of Leo Smit's energetic, well-written First Symphony, and two performances of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot as soloist. Recalling the effect made with this infrequently played work two years ago by Pietro Scarpini, one could admire Miss Henriot's effort for the energy disposed, and for keyboard agility, but not for more than superficial statement of the music it contains.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. M. 387,044 - S. 256,
FEB 7 1957

WORDS and

By Harriett

Bostonians Play Smit

Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 formance last night by the Bost Hall, is a four-movement work which contributes an interesting piece to the repertory.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. Smit, born in Philadelphia, and just past his 36th birthday, completed the symphony in 1955.

The first movement is the most difficult to comprehend on first hearing and gave the impression of diffuseness, but, after hearing the rest of the score, I prefer to reserve judgment until a second opportunity for reviewing presents itself.

Smit's style grows out of a feeling for the long, flowing line of melody which his considerable imagination and skill enables him to develop into music of significance. The slow movement varies a beautiful theme with ingenuity, while the allegretto scherzando contributes a buoyant interlude climaxed by the final brilliant, musically valid allegro vivace.

This is a score to be enjoyed upon first hearing, while it constantly maintains interest. It never becomes banal, yet it is human in its emotional appeal. Smit's idiom is complex without being raucous or sterile in effect.

Charles Munch, conducting the Bostonians, gave the symphony a performance sensitive and dynamic in its communication.

The young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, looking almost too ethereal to attack an instrument of percussion, was the soloist in the Second Piano Concerto in G Minor, Op. 16, by Prokofieff. Completed in 1915, it was revised in 1923. Though the piece is rarely performed, it is typically Prokofieff in style, with some sections reminiscent of other themes.

Miss Henriot, blond and slender, is an efficient pianist, who is more ingratiating to look at than to hear. She has a tone on the light and thin side and obviously is a well-schooled musician. But she communicates little, so far as personality goes, and she wasn't conscious enough of the dramatic or imaginative values of the music. This Prokofieff music needs more sense of humor, more color and more verve, so far as projection of ideas goes. The audience, however, was fervent in its enthusiasm for the performance.

The Bostonians will play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Miss Henriot will be soloist again in the Prokofieff on both occasions.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 26,613
FEB 6 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Presents Second Woolsey Concert

The flashing piano artistry of Nicole Henriot was a high point in the second visit this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Woolsey Hall. This amazing young French woman's brilliant piano technique has amazed audiences ever since she made her debut in this country nine years ago.

It was her third appearance here. She has been soloist with both the Boston and New Haven Symphonies.

Mme. Henriot electrified her audience with a spectacular presentation of Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto, a work which permits the pianist a great display of virtuosity while the orchestra remains for the most part in the background. She made the most of the sudden shifts of tonality, which alternate with rather leaping melodic intervals.

Playing in a sharp, percussive manner, the pianist was as fascinating to watch as to hear. It was this same type of playing which won for her the "frail thunderer" pseudonym when she presented the Ravel Concerto. She was recalled a half-dozen times by an enthusiastic audience, with the orchestra joining in the general approbation.

Another young artist was also projected at last night's concert when Charles Munch conducted the First Symphony of Leo Smit, who at 36 is well on the road to fame. His symphony, commissioned in 1955 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Played here for the first time, the work is essentially poetic in concept, with lyric qualities which seem to fall in pleasant contrast against the rather solid dissonance. Smit was present last night and Munch presented him to the crowded hall.

The Boston Symphony's Beethoven contribution was the composer's Fourth Symphony. Interpreted by this great organization of skilled musicians, the symphony's elaborate underlay of background music sharply identified the lovely themes which predominate the work. —F. R. L.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN RECORD
Circ. W. 9,300
FEB 22 1957

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By Charles Richman

WITH THE CONCERT SET: They were out, they were in. The fourth concert of the B[illegible] Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music [illegible] Nicole Henriot was the featured soloist at the piano [illegible] was well received by the attentive audience. It was a most pleasurable evening with the audience filled with names well known in all walks of Brooklyn life. The next concert has been scheduled for March 22 at 8:30 p.m.

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor; Nicole Henriot, pianist, Feb. 9, A—At about four o'clock in the afternoon, Brahms' First Symphony was turned into a massive, rubato piece of French impressionism. What Mr. Munch does to Debussy's "La Mer" makes it one of the most exciting works in the orchestral repertoire, but when he pummels each phrase of Brahms, or sets it palpitating, we object. There were times when we thought we were in the middle of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" or "Scheherezade." The brasses blazed and the strings shimmered, but poor Brahms was beaten into shapeless putty. The rest of the program was much more satisfactory, with Nicole Henriot performing Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto brilliantly, and Mr. Munch taking his beat judiciously from her. There is little depth or expressivity in this work, but Miss Henriot swung through its percussive pyrotechnics with flashing ease. Britten's "Variations on a Theme by Frank Bridge," which opened the program, were played in the best Boston string style, and with respect for the composer's austere sensuousness. K. H.

Rarely does this organization disappoint its many New York devotees, either as to programmatic material or its performance. Somebody or other once remarked that any orchestra plays better in a strange auditorium than it does at home. Whether or not this is axiomatic, one has no way of knowing, unless, that is, one should make a career of traveling back and forth with the group.

Anyway, kudos to the Bostonians for their latest efforts in turning in, so efficiently, so interesting a list of works, comprising the aforesaid Smit Symphony, the Second Piano Concerto of Prokofieff, with Miss Henriot as soloist, and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven.

But "efficiently" is not really the best description of their work, though it was certainly all of that. There were subtleties, for example, peculiar to the warp and woof, to the rise and fall, to the color and rhythm and expression native to the Smit Symphony. It is a work that "sounds." It derives formally from both fairly recent and older viewpoints. It is especially construed to sing its songful measures, of which there are oodles. Truly Mr. Smit may compliment himself on having written a work deserving such a performance. Dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky, the Symphony was a commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and specifically addressed to the 30th birthday of the League of Composers.

The orchestra's beautiful support of Miss Henriot naturally spurred her to greater efforts. In a situation of that sort the thing works both ways and with benefits all too obviously accruing to the music itself. This may be said to have continued through the whole length of the composition, a camaraderie of give-and-take, a producing of pure and exciting ensemble.

Hector Berlioz said remarkable things in his time. Something he wrote down anent the Second Movement of the Beethoven Fourth came to your reporter's mind as he listened to its unreeling by Charles Munch, et al. One took the trouble to look up the quotation and presents it here as a vivid, terse word picture of the movement: "As for the Adagio, it escapes analysis. It is so pure in form, the melodic expression is so angelic and of such irresistible tenderness, that the prodigious art of the workmanship disappears completely." Berlioz speaks, and one may add "Amen!" for such the music was in the Bostonian rendering. It may well be that the Beethoven attained the evening's zenith in performance. R. B.

ORK, N. Y.
IMES
1957

: A New Symphony

st Is Played
nians Here

Leo Smit

in 1951 and completed it in 1955. At every point the piece exhibits careful workmanship and an awareness of the uses of an orchestra. The disarming modesty of the symphony makes its honesty of expression all the more appealing.

Mr. Munch and his orchestra gave Mr. Smit's work the benefit of their best support, performing it with glowing tone and rhythmic vitality. Then came a somewhat older contemporary piece — Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Since Mr. Munch had taken the precaution to schedule Beethoven's solid and endearing Fourth Symphony as his concluding work, he could risk two modern compositions.

•

Prokofieff wrote this concerto in his early twenties, and when the score disappeared during the Russian Revolution, he rewrote it from sketches of the piano part. He probably did not change its essence, though his expanding mastery must have given the music a new precision of effect. In any case, the work has jauntiness, brilliance and enough lyricism to make it ingratiating.

Nicole Henriot was the soloist, and played with gusto and technical security. In the flying octaves of the second movement, for example, her pianism was exciting in its exuberance. Her percussive tone suited the music for the most part. With Mr. Munch and the orchestra providing a rousing accompaniment, the French pianist, who has not had too much luck here in the past, made a lovely occassion of her appearance.

Because Mr. Smit seems to have confidence in what he has to say, he has written with directness and clarity. His first movement has a slow introduction which, in mood and [illegible]ity, has an almost [illegible]ile. The main [illegible] movement takes [illegible] terial stated in [illegible] tion and manipu[illegible] brightness and dext[illegible] rhythms here have [illegible] flavor, and the sh[illegible] motives give touches [illegible] to what might be a [illegible] process. The move[illegible] on a shade too long [illegible] skillful juggling act [illegible] not know how to quit.

In the slow movement, Mr. Smit is almost Brahmsian in his broad, singing theme, which has a long line and a strong, romantic inclination. The three variations and coda sustain the mood. One accustomed to so much problematic writing might be suspicious of the merits of such unashamed songfulness.

The scherzo is feathery and transparent in instrumentation. And the finale, in sonata form, moves with color and vivacity. It brings the thirty-minute work to a brisk and cheerful conclusion.

•

Mr. Smit was commissioned to write this symphony by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the thirtieth anniversary of the League of Composers, and he dedicated it to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. He began thinking about the work

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 23 1957

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Bruckne

The week's visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch provided a first hearing of Leo Smit's energetic, well-written First Symphony, and two performances of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot as soloist. Recalling the effect made with this infrequently played work two years ago by Pietro Scarpini, one could admire Miss Henriot's effort for the energy disposed, and for keyboard agility, but not for more than superficial statement of the music it contains.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN RECORD
Circ. W. 9,300
FEB 22 1957

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By Charles Rich

WITH THE CONCERT SET: They were out, they were for the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music the [illegible] Nicole Henriot was the featured soloist at the piano [illegible] was well received by the attentive audience. It was a most pleasurable evening with the audience filled with names well known in all walks of Brooklyn life. The next concert has been scheduled for March 22 at 8:30 p.m.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST

WORDS and

By Harriett

Bostonians Play Smit

Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 [illegible] formance last night by the Boston [illegible] Hall, is a four-movement work which contributes an interesting piece to the repertory.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. Smit, born in Philadelphia, and just past his 36th birthday, completed the symphony in 1955.

The first movement is the most difficult to comprehend on first hearing and gave the impression of diffuseness, but, after hearing the rest of the score, I prefer to reserve judgment until a second opportunity for reviewing presents itself.

Smit's style grows out of a feeling for the long, flowing line of melody which his considerable imagination and skill enables him to develop into music of significance. The slow movement varies a beautiful theme with ingenuity, while the allegretto scherzando contributes a buoyant interlude climaxed by the final brilliant, musically valid allegro vivace.

This is a score to be enjoyed upon first hearing, while it constantly maintains interest. It never becomes banal, yet it is human in its emotional appeal. Smit's idiom is complex without being raucous or sterile in effect.

Charles Munch, conducting the Bostonians, gave the symphony a performance sensitive and dynamic in its communication.

The young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, looking almost too ethereal to attack an instrument of percussion, was the soloist in the Second Piano Concerto in G Minor, Op. 16, by Prokofieff. Completed in 1915, it was revised in 1923. Though the piece is rarely performed, it is typically Prokofieff in style, with some sections reminiscent of other themes.

Miss Henriot, blond and slender, is an efficient pianist, who is more ingratiating to look at than to hear. She has a tone on the light and thin side and obviously is a well-schooled musician. But she communicates little, so far as personality goes, and she wasn't conscious enough of the dramatic or imaginative values of the music. This Prokofieff music needs more sense of humor, more color and more verve, so far as projection of ideas goes. The audience, however, was fervent in its enthusiasm for the performance.

The Bostonians will play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Miss Henriot will be soloist again in the Prokofieff on both occasions.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613
FEB 6 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Presents Second Woolsey Concert

The flashing piano artistry of Nicole Henriot was a high point in the second visit this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Woolsey Hall. This amazing young French woman's brilliant piano technique has amazed audiences ever since she made her debut in this country nine years ago.

It was her third appearance here. She has been soloist with both the Boston and New Haven Symphonies.

Mme. Henriot electrified her audience with a spectacular presentation of Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto, a work which permits the pianist a great display of virtuosity while the orchestra remains for the most part in the background. She made the most of the sudden shifts of tonality, which alternate with rather leaping melodic intervals.

Playing in a sharp, percussive manner, the pianist was as fascinating to watch as to hear. It was this same type of playing which won for her the "frail thunderer" pseudonym when she presented the Ravel Concerto. She was recalled a half-dozen times by an enthusiastic audience, with the orchestra joining in the general approbation.

Another young artist was also projected at last night's concert when Charles Munch conducted the First Symphony of Leo Smit, who at 36 is well on the road to fame. His symphony, commissioned in 1955 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Played here for the first time, the work is essentially poetic in concept, with lyric qualities which seem to fall in pleasant contrast against the rather solid dissonance. Smit was present last night and Munch presented him to the crowded hall.

The Boston Symphony's Beethoven contribution was the composer's Fourth Symphony. Interpreted by this great organization of skilled musicians, the symphony's elaborate underlay of background music sharply identified the lovely themes which predominate the work. —F. R. J.

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony, Feb. 6, E—The Boston Symphony, together with Charles Munch, solo pianist Nicole Henriot, and a new symphony by Leo Smit (his first), arrived in Carnegie Hall and, with an accustomed nonchalance, took over the musical scene for an evening. Rarely does this organization disappoint its many New York devotees, either as to programmatic material or its performance. Somebody or other once remarked that any orchestra plays better in a strange auditorium than it does at home. Whether or not this is axiomatic, one has no way of knowing, unless, that is, one should make a career of traveling back and forth with the group.

Anyway, kudos to the Bostonians for their latest efforts in turning in, so efficiently, so interesting a list of works, comprising the aforesaid Smit Symphony, the Second Piano Concerto of Prokofieff, with Miss Henriot as soloist, and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven.

But "efficiently" is not really the best description of their work, though it was certainly all of that. There were subtleties, for example, peculiar to the warp and woof, to the rise and fall, to the color and rhythm and expression native to the Smit Symphony. It is a work that "sounds." It derives formally from both fairly recent and older viewpoints. It is especially construed to sing its songful measures, of which there are oodles. Truly Mr. Smit may compliment himself on having written a work deserving such a performance. Dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky, the Symphony was a commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and specifically addressed to the 30th birthday of the League of Composers.

The orchestra's beautiful support of Miss Henriot naturally spurred her to greater efforts. In a situation of that sort the thing works both ways and with benefits all too obviously accruing to the music itself. This may be said to have continued through the whole length of the composition, a camaraderie of give-and-take, a producing of pure and exciting ensemble.

Hector Berlioz said remarkable things in his time. Something he wrote down anent the Second Movement of the Beethoven Fourth came to your reporter's mind as he listened to its unreeling by Charles Munch, et al. One took the trouble to look up the quotation and presents it here as a vivid, terse word picture of the movement: "As for the Adagio, it escapes analysis. It is so pure in form, the melodic expression is so angelic and of such irresistible tenderness, that the prodigious art of the workmanship disappears completely." Berlioz speaks, and one may add "Amen!" for such the music was in the Bostonian rendering. It may well be that the Beethoven attained the evening's zenith in performance. R. B.

ORK, N. Y.
IMES
1957

: A New Symphony

t Is Played
nians Here

Leo Smit

Because Mr. Smit seems to have confidence in what he has to say, he has written with directness and clarity. His first movement has a slow introduction which, in mood [illegible] ity, has an almost [illegible] file. The main movement takes [illegible] terial stated in [illegible] tion and manipulation [illegible] brightness and decisiveness. The rhythms here have [illegible] flavor, and the [illegible] motives give touches [illegible] to what might be a [illegible] dry process. The movement goes on a shade too long [illegible] a skillful juggling act that does not know how to quit.

In the slow movement, Mr. Smit is almost Brahmsian in his broad, singing theme, which has a long line and a strong, romantic inclination. The three variations and coda sustain the mood. One accustomed to so much problematic writing might be suspicious of the merits of such unashamed songfulness.

The scherzo is feathery and transparent in instrumentation. And the finale, in sonata form, moves with color and vivacity. It brings the thirty-minute work to a brisk and cheerful conclusion.

Mr. Smit was commissioned to write this symphony by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the thirtieth anniversary of the League of Composers, and he dedicated it to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. He began thinking about the work in 1951 and completed it in 1955. At [illegible] the piece exhibits careful workmanship and an awareness of the uses of an orchestra. The disarming modesty of the symphony makes its honesty of expression all the more appealing.

Mr. Munch and his orchestra gave Mr. Smit's work the benefit of their best support, performing it with glowing tone and rhythmic vitality. Then came a somewhat older contemporary piece — Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Since Mr. Munch had taken the precaution to schedule Beethoven's solid and endearing Fourth Symphony as his concluding work, he could risk two modern compositions.

Prokofieff wrote this concerto in his early twenties, and when the score disappeared during the Russian Revolution, he rewrote it from sketches of the piano part. He probably did not change its essence, though his expanding mastery must have given the music a new precision of effect. In any case, the work has jauntiness, brilliance and enough lyricism to make it ingratiating.

Nicole Henriot was the soloist, and played with gusto and technical security. In the flying octaves of the second movement, for example, her pianism was exciting in its exuberance. Her percussive tone suited the music for the most part. With Mr. Munch and the orchestra providing a rousing accompaniment, the French pianist, who has not had too much luck here in the past, made a lovely occasion of her appearance.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 23 1957

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Bruckne

The week's visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Charles Munch provided a first hearing of Leo Smit's energetic, well-written First Symphony, and two performances of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot as soloist. Recalling the effect made with this infrequently played work two years ago by Pietro Scarpini, one could admire Miss Henriot's effort for the energy disposed, and for keyboard agility, but not for more than superficial statement of the music it contains.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN RECORD
Circ. W. 9,300
FEB 22 1957

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By Charles Richman

WITH THE CONCERT SET: They were out, they were for the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music the other night. Nicole Henriot was the featured soloist at the piano and she was well received by the attentive audience. It was a most pleasurable evening with the audience filled with names well known in all walks of Brooklyn life. The next concert has been scheduled for March 22 at 8:30 p.m.

MUSICAL COURIER
(NEW YORK CITY)
MAR 15 1957

CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Symphony, Feb. 6, E—The Boston Symphony, together with Charles Munch, solo pianist Nicole Henriot, and a new symphony by Leo Smit (his first), arrived in Carnegie Hall and, with an accustomed nonchalance, took over the musical scene for an evening. Rarely does this organization disappoint its many New York devotees, either as to programmatic material or its performance. Somebody or other once remarked that any orchestra plays better in a strange auditorium than it does at home. Whether or not this is axiomatic, one has no way of knowing, unless, that is, one should make a career of traveling back and forth with the group.

Anyway, kudos to the Bostonians for their latest efforts in turning in, so efficiently, so interesting a list of works, comprising the aforesaid Smit Symphony, the Second Piano Concerto of Prokofieff, with Miss Henriot as soloist, and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven.

But "efficiently" is not really the best description of their work, though it was certainly all of that. There were subtleties, for example, peculiar to the warp and woof, to the rise and fall, to the color and rhythm and expression native to the Smit Symphony. It is a work that "sounds." It derives formally from both fairly recent and older viewpoints. It is especially construed to sing its songful measures, of which there are oodles. Truly Mr. Smit may compliment himself on having written a work deserving such a performance. Dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky, the Symphony was a commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and specifically addressed to the 30th birthday of the League of Composers.

The orchestra's beautiful support of Miss Henriot naturally spurred her to greater efforts. In a situation of that sort the thing works both ways and with benefits all too obviously accruing to the music itself. This may be said to have continued through the whole length of the composition, a camaraderie of give-and-take, a producing of pure and exciting ensemble.

Hector Berlioz said remarkable things in his time. Something he wrote down anent the Second Movement of the Beethoven Fourth came to your reporter's mind as he listened to its unreeling by Charles Munch, et al. One took the trouble to look up the quotation and presents it here as a vivid, terse word picture of the movement: "As for the Adagio, it escapes analysis. It is so pure in form, the melodic expression is so angelic and of such irresistible tenderness, that the prodigious art of the workmanship disappears completely." Berlioz speaks, and one may add "Amen!" for such the music was in the Bostonian rendering. It may well be that the Beethoven attained the evening's zenith in performance.

R. B.

through ad-
n. onductor and top form. at Tintagel"
ew York City
t City Center around Trisd, it tells a Diana Adams
ely. She was night. Herbert ram ably supcast.

ORK, N. Y.
IMES
376 - S. 1,149,467
1957

:: A New Symphony

st Is Played
nians Here

ONY ORCHESTRA
nducting, Nicole Hen-
Carnegie Hall.
E flat (first nce) .....Leo Smi
2 .....Prokofiev
.....Beethoven

D TAUBMAN
-year-old Amer-ser, has written
First Symphony. and the Boston
rchestra intro-
w York at Cart night.
had the temeris symphony a ion—it is in E know that this nable procedure
ut he does not Indeed, his symphony makes no drastic departures from the conventions of the nineteenth century. He has taken the form as he found it, seeking only to inform it with such personal feeling as he can muster.

•

Because Mr. Smit seems to have confidence in what he has to say, he has written with directness and clarity. His first movement has a slow introduction which, in mood and utility, has an almost classic profile. The main part of the movement takes thematic material stated in the introduction and manipulates it with brightness and dexterity. The rhythms here have a modern flavor, and the short melodic motives give touches of luster to what might be a fairly dry process. The movement goes on a shade too long, like a skillful juggling act that does not know how to quit.

In the slow movement, Mr. Smit is almost Brahmsian in his broad, singing theme, which has a long line and a strong, romantic inclination. The three variations and coda sustain the mood. One accustomed to so much problematic writing might be suspicious of the merits of such unashamed songfulness.

The scherzo is feathery and transparent in instrumentation. And the finale, in sonata form, moves with color and vivacity. It brings the thirty-minute work to a brisk and cheerful conclusion.

•

Mr. Smit was commissioned to write this symphony by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the thirtieth anniversary of the League of Composers, and he dedicated it to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. He began thinking about the work in 1951 and completed it in 1955. At every point the piece exhibits careful workmanship and an awareness of the uses of an orchestra. The disarming modesty of the symphony makes its honesty of expression all the more appealing.

Leo Smit

Mr. Munch and his orchestra gave Mr. Smit's work the benefit of their best support, performing it with glowing tone and rhythmic vitality. Then came a somewhat older contemporary piece — Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Since Mr. Munch had taken the precaution to schedule Beethoven's solid and endearing Fourth Symphony as his concluding work, he could risk two modern compositions.

•

Prokofieff wrote this concerto in his early twenties, and when the score disappared during the Russian Revolution, he rewrote it from sketches of the piano part. He probably did not change its essence, though his expanding mastery must have given the music a new precision of effect. In any case, the work has jauntiness, brilliance and enough lyricism to make it ingratiating.

Nicole Henriot was the soloist, and played with gusto and technical security. In the flying octaves of the second movement, for example, her pianism was exciting in its exuberance. Her percussive tone suited the music for the most part. With Mr. Munch and the orchestra providing a rousing accompaniment, the French pianist, who has not had too much luck here in the past, made a lovely occassion of her appearance.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 389,011 - S. 258,545
FEB 7 1957

WORDS and

By Harriett Jo

Bostonians Play Smit

Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, g formance last night by the Boston
Hall, is a four-movement work which contributes an interesting piece to the repertory.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. Smit, born in Philadelphia, and just past his 36th birthday, completed the symphony in 1955.

The first movement is the most difficult to comprehend on first hearing and gave the impression of diffuseness, but, after hearing the rest of the score, I prefer to reserve judgment until a second opportunity for reviewing presents itself.

Smit's style grows out of a feeling for the long, flowing line of melody which his considerable imagination and skill enables him to develop into music of significance. The slow movement varies a beautiful theme with ingenuity, while the allegretto scherzando contributes a buoyant interlude climaxed by the final brilliant, musically valid allegro vivace.

This is a score to be enjoyed upon first hearing, while it constantly maintains interest. It never becomes banal, yet it is human in its emotional appeal. Smit's idiom is complex without being raucous or sterile in effect.

Charles Munch, conducting the Bostonians, gave the symphony a performance sensitive and dynamic in its communication.

The young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, looking almost too ethereal to attack an instrument of percussion, was the soloist in the Second Piano Concerto in G Minor, Op. 16, by Prokofieff. Completed in 1915, it was revised in 1923. Though the piece is rarely performed, it is typically Prokofieff in style, with some sections reminiscent of other themes.

Miss Henriot, blond and slender, is an efficient pianist, who is more ingratiating to look at than to hear. She has a tone on the light and thin side and obviously is a well-schooled musician. But she communicates little, so far as personality goes, and she wasn't conscious enough of the dramatic or imaginative values of the music. This Prokofieff music needs more sense of humor, more color and more verve, so far as projection of ideas goes. The audience, however, was fervent in its enthusiasm for the performance.

The Bostonians will play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Miss Henriot will be soloist again in the Prokofieff on both occasions.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 26,613
FEB 6 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Presents Second Woolsey Concert

The flashing piano artistry of Nicole Henriot was a high point in the second visit this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Woolsey Hall. This amazing young French woman's brilliant piano technique has amazed audiences ever since she made her debut in this country nine years ago.

It was her third appearance here. She has been soloist with both the Boston and New Haven Symphonies.

Mme. Henriot electrified her audience with a spectacular presentation of Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto, a work which permits the pianist a great display of virtuosity while the orchestra remains for the most part in the background. She made the most of the sudden shifts of tonality, which alternate with rather leaping melodic intervals.

Playing in a sharp, percussive manner, the pianist was as fascinating to watch as to hear. It was this same type of playing which won for her the "frail thunderer" pseudonym when she presented the Ravel Concerto. She was recalled a half-dozen times by an enthusiastic audience, with the orchestra joining in the general approbation.

Another young artist was also projected at last night's concert when Charles Munch conducted the First Symphony of Leo Smit, who at 36 is well on the road to fame. His symphony, commissioned in 1955 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Played here for the first time, the work is essentially poetic in concept, with lyric qualities which seem to fall in pleasant contrast against the rather solid dissonance. Smit was present last night and Munch presented him to the crowded hall.

The Boston Symphony's Beethoven contribution was the composer's Fourth Symphony. Interpreted by this great organization of skilled musicians, the symphony's elaborate underlay of background music sharply identified the lovely themes which predominate the work. —F. R. J.

BY C ON
progr
Symp
last n perfor
Sympl
Second
the au about Beethc came after.
Smit positiv work full of is cons also r to spin ate a sense mansh

H
Of t first ha
It reve influen long but about it. Smit appears best in a gay mood. Thus the scherzo and finale have the most appeal.

It was obvious that his music pleased the audience. He was present to acknowledge its applause. The performance was associated with International Music Fund Week.

The Prokofieff allowed Nicole Henriot to use here facile technique, give full range to her strong rhythmic sense, and carry off her performance with showmanship. Some 30 to 40 years old, the concerto retains its boldness though not all of Prokofieff's sharpness came through in this performance.

Miss Henriot had momentum without drive. Her playing grew a bit noisy at times. Between the rhythmic excitement of the music and her brand of playing, the audience enjoyed the performance. Munch made it the

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 23 1957

MUSIC TO

Bruckne

The week's visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Charles Munch provided a first hearing of Leo Smit's energetic, well-written First Symphony, and two performances of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot as soloist. Recalling the effect made with this infrequently played work two years ago by Pietro Scarmini, one could admire Miss Henriot's effort for the energy disposed, and for keyboard agility, but not for more than superficial statement of the music it contains.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 389,011 - S. 258,515
FEB 7 1957

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Smit Symphony

Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, given its first N. Y. performance last night by the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall, is a four-movement work which contributes an interesting piece to the repertory.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. Smit, born in Philadelphia, and just past his 36th birthday, completed the symphony in 1955.

The first movement is the most difficult to comprehend on first hearing and gave the impression of diffuseness, but, after hearing the rest of the score, I prefer to reserve judgment until a second opportunity for reviewing presents itself.

Smit's style grows out of a feeling for the long, flowing line of melody which his considerable imagination and skill enables him to develop into music of significance. The slow movement varies a beautiful theme with ingenuity, while the allegretto scherzando contributes a buoyant interlude climaxed by the final brilliant, musically valid allegro vivace.

This is a score to be enjoyed upon first hearing, while it constantly maintains interest. It never becomes banal, yet it is human in its emotional appeal. Smit's idiom is complex without being raucous or sterile in effect.

Charles Munch, conducting the Bostonians, gave the symphony a performance sensitive and dynamic in its communication.

The young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, looking almost too ethereal to attack an instrument of percussion, was the soloist in the Second Piano Concerto in G Minor, Op. 16, by Prokofieff. Completed in 1915, it was revised in 1923. Though the piece is rarely performed, it is typically Prokofieff in style, with some sections reminiscent of other themes.

Miss Henriot, blond and slender, is an efficient pianist, who is more ingratiating to look at than to hear. She has a tone on the light and thin side and obviously is a well-schooled musician. But she communicates little, so far as personality goes, and she wasn't conscious enough of the dramatic or imaginative values of the music. This Prokofieff music needs more sense of humor, more color and more verve, so far as projection of ideas goes. The audience, however, was fervent in its enthusiasm for the performance.

The Bostonians will play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Miss Henriot will be soloist again in the Prokofieff on both occasions.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613
FEB 6 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Presents Second Woolsey Concert

The flashing piano artistry of Nicole Henriot was a high point in the second visit this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Woolsey Hall. This amazing young French woman's brilliant piano technique has amazed audiences ever since she made her debut in this country nine years ago.

It was her third appearance here. She has been soloist with both the Boston and New Haven Symphonies.

Mme. Henriot electrified her audience with a spectacular presentation of Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto, a work which permits the pianist a great display of virtuosity while the orchestra remains for the most part in the background. She made the most of the sudden shifts of tonality, which alternate with rather leaping melodic intervals.

Playing in a sharp, percussive manner, the pianist was as fascinating to watch as to hear. It was this same type of playing which won for her the "frail thunderer" pseudonym when she presented the Ravel Concerto. She was recalled a half-dozen times by an enthusiastic audience, with the orchestra joining in the general approbation.

Another young artist was also projected at last night's concert when Charles Munch conducted the First Symphony of Leo Smit, who at 36 is well on the road to fame. His symphony, commissioned in 1955 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Played here for the first time, the work is essentially poetic in concept, with lyric qualities which seem to fall in pleasant contrast against the rather solid dissonance. Smit was present last night and Munch presented him to the crowded hall.

The Boston Symphony's Beethoven contribution was the composer's Fourth Symphony. Interpreted by this great organization of skilled musicians, the symphony's elaborate underlay of background music sharply identified the lovely themes which predominate the work. —F. R. J.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,991 - S. 855,847
FEB 7 1957

CARNEGIE HALL:

Smit's Opus in Debut

BY MILES KASTENDIECK

CONTEMPORARY music set up Charles Munch's program for the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night. The first New York performance of Leo Smit's First Symphony and Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto gave the audience something to talk about during the intermission. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony came as compensation thereafter.

Smit's symphony leaves a positive impression. It is the work of a fresh, young spirit full of potentialities. His style is conservatively modern. It is also romantic. He knows how to spin a melodic line and create a mood. He has structural sense and shows solid craftsmanship.

Has Gay Mood

Of the four movements, the first has the least individuality. It reveals a strong Stravinsky influence. The andante runs too long but has a nice lyricism about it. Smit appears best in a gay mood. Thus the scherzo and finale have the most appeal.

It was obvious that his music pleased the audience. He was present to acknowledge its applause. The performance was associated with International Music Fund Week.

The Prokofieff allowed Nicole Henriot to use here facile technique, give full range to her strong rhythmic sense, and carry off her performance with showmanship. Some 30 to 40 years old, the concerto retains its boldness though not all of Prokofieff's sharpness came through in this performance.

Miss Henriot had momentum without drive. Her playing grew a bit noisy at times. Between the rhythmic excitement of the music and her brand of playing, the audience enjoyed the performance. Munch made it the more successful through admirable integration.

Needless to say, conductor and orchestra were in top form.

Ashton's "Picnic at Tintagel" strengthened the New York City Ballet's repertory at City Center last night. Built around Tristram-Iseult legend, it tells a story into which Diana Adams fits quite effectively. She was its star again last night. Herbert Bliss danced Tristram ably supported by a solid cast.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
FEB 7 1957

Music: A New Symphony

Smit's First Is Played By Bostonians Here

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Charles Munch conducting. Nicole Henriot, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.
Symphony No. 1 in E flat (first New York performance) ..... Leo Smit
Piano Concerto No. 2 ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

LEO SMIT, 36-year-old American composer, has written an attractive First Symphony. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced it to New York at Carnegie Hall last night.

Mr. Smit has had the temerity to give his symphony a tonal designation—it is in E flat. He must know that this is not a fashionable procedure these days, but he does not seem to care. Indeed, his symphony makes no drastic departures from the conventions of the nineteenth century. He has taken the form as he found it, seeking only to inform it with such personal feeling as he can muster.

Because Mr. Smit seems to have confidence in what he has to say, he has written with directness and clarity. His first movement has a slow introduction which, in mood and utility, has an almost classic graceful. The main part of the movement takes the introductory material stated in the introduction and manipulates it with brightness and dexterity. The rhythms here have a modern flavor, and the short melodic motives give touches of levity to what might be a fairly dry process. The movement goes on a shade too long, like a skillful juggling act that does not know how to quit.

In the slow movement, Mr. Smit is almost Brahmsian in his broad, singing theme, which has a long line and a strong, romantic inclination. The three variations and coda sustain the mood. One accustomed to so much problematic writing might be suspicious of the merits of such unashamed songfulness.

The scherzo is feathery and transparent in instrumentation. And the finale, in sonata form, moves with color and vivacity. It brings the thirty-minute work to a brisk and cheerful conclusion.

•

Mr. Smit was commissioned to write this symphony by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the thirtieth anniversary of the League of Composers, and he dedicated it to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. He began thinking about the work in 1951 and completed it in 1955. At every point the piece exhibits careful workmanship and an awareness of the uses of an orchestra. The disarming modesty of the symphony makes its honesty of expression all the more appealing.

Leo Smit

Mr. Munch and his orchestra gave Mr. Smit's work the benefit of their best support, performing it with glowing tone and rhythmic vitality. Then came a somewhat older contemporary piece — Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Since Mr. Munch had taken the precaution to schedule Beethoven's solid and endearing Fourth Symphony as his concluding work, he could risk two modern compositions.

•

Prokofieff wrote this concerto in his early twenties, and when the score disappeared during the Russian Revolution, he rewrote it from sketches of the piano part. He probably did not change its essence, though his expanding mastery must have given the music a new precision of effect. In any case, the work has jauntiness, brilliance and enough lyricism to make it ingratiating.

Nicole Henriot was the soloist, and played with gusto and technical security. In the flying octaves of the second movement, for example, her pianism was exciting in its exuberance. Her percussive tone suited the music for the most part. With Mr. Munch and the orchestra providing a rousing accompaniment, the French pianist, who has not had too much luck here in the past, made a lovely occasion of her appearance.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
2 3 1957

MUSIC TO N

Bruckne

The week's visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Charles Munch provided a first hearing of Leo Smit's energetic, well-written First Symphony, and two performances of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot as soloist. Recalling the effect made with this infrequently played work two years ago by Pietro Scarpini, one could admire Miss Henriot's effort for the energy disposed, and for keyboard agility, but not for more than superficial statement of the music it contains.

METROPOLITAN OPERA

La Traviata, Feb. 21. E—For one of its world-famous prima donne the Metropolitan Opera brought forward a production of Verdi's "La Traviata" whose investiture was lavish. In his many years of operatic coverage at the Met your reporter remembers no presentation so opulently furbished or, in the costuming, so expensively capariso[illegible]. The First Act set alone was something to gape at, with an arched ceiling so high that one's imagination was

NEW YORK CONCERT AND

OOKLYN

were out, they were for hony Orchestra at the night. Nicole Henriot and she was well re-
as a most pleasurable names well known in ncert has been sched-

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,991 - S. 855,847
FEB 7 1957

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 389,011 - S. 258,545
FEB 7 1957

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Smit Symphony

Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, given its first N. Y. performance last night by the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall, is a four-movement work which contributes an interesting piece to the repertory.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. Smit, born in Philadelphia, and just past his 36th birthday, completed the symphony in 1955.

The first movement is the most difficult to comprehend on first hearing and gave the impression of diffuseness, but, after hearing the rest of the score, I prefer to reserve judgment until a second opportunity for reviewing presents itself.

Smit's style grows out of a feeling for the long, flowing line of melody which his considerable imagination and skill enables him to develop into music of significance. The slow movement varies a beautiful theme with ingenuity, while the allegretto scherzando contributes a buoyant interlude climaxed by the final brilliant, musically valid allegro vivace.

This is a score to be enjoyed upon first hearing, while it constantly maintains interest. It never becomes banal, yet it is human in its emotional appeal. Smit's idiom is complex without being raucous or sterile in effect.

Charles Munch, conducting the Bostonians, gave the symphony a performance sensitive and dynamic in its communication.

The young French pianist, Nicole Henriot, looking almost too ethereal to attack an instrument of percussion, was the soloist in the Second Piano Concerto in G Minor, Op. 16, by Prokofieff. Completed in 1915, it was revised in 1923. Though the piece is rarely performed, it is typically Prokofieff in style, with some sections reminiscent of other themes.

Miss Henriot, blond and slender, is an efficient pianist, who is more ingratiating to look at than to hear. She has a tone on the light and thin side and obviously is a well-schooled musician. But she communicates little, so far as personality goes, and she wasn't conscious enough of the dramatic or imaginative values of the music. This Prokofieff music needs more sense of humor, more color and more verve, so far as projection of ideas goes. The audience, however, was fervent in its enthusiasm for the performance.

The Bostonians will play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Miss Henriot will be soloist again in the Prokofieff on both occasions.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613
FEB 6 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Presents Second Woolsey Concert

The flashing piano artistry of Nicole Henriot was a high point in the second visit this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Woolsey Hall. This amazing young French woman's brilliant piano technique has amazed audiences ever since she made her debut in this country nine years ago.

It was her third appearance here. She has been soloist with both the Boston and New Haven Symphonies.

Mme. Henriot electrified her audience with a spectacular presentation of Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto, a work which permits the pianist a great display of virtuosity while the orchestra remains for the most part in the background. She made the most of the sudden shifts of tonality, which alternate with rather leaping melodic intervals.

Playing in a sharp, percussive manner, the pianist was as fascinating to watch as to hear. It was this same type of playing which won for her the "frail thunderer" pseudonym when she presented the Ravel Concerto. She was recalled a half-dozen times by an enthusiastic audience, with the orchestra joining in the general approbation.

Another young artist was also projected at last night's concert when Charles Munch conducted the First Symphony of Leo Smit, who at 36 is well on the road to fame. His symphony, commissioned in 1955 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 30th anniversary of the League of Composers, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Played here for the first time, the work is essentially poetic in concept, with lyric qualities which seem to fall in pleasant contrast against the rather solid dissonance. Smit was present last night and Munch presented him to the crowded hall.

The Boston Symphony's Beethoven contribution was the composer's Fourth Symphony. Interpreted by this great organization of skilled musicians, the symphony's elaborate underlay of background music sharply identified the lovely themes which predominate the work. —F. R. J.

CARNEGIE HALL:

Smit's Opus in Debut

BY MILES KASTENDIECK

CONTEMPORARY music set up Charles Munch's program for the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night. The first New York performance of Leo Smit's First Symphony and Prokofieff's Second Piano Concerto gave the audience something to talk about during the intermission. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony came as compensation thereafter.

Smit's symphony leaves a positive impression. It is the work of a fresh, young spirit full of potentialities. His style is conservatively modern. It is also romantic. He knows how to spin a melodic line and create a mood. He has structural sense and shows solid craftsmanship.

Has Gay Mood

Of the four movements, the first has the least individuality. It reveals a strong Stravinsky influence. The andante runs too long but has a nice lyricism about it. Smit appears best in a gay mood. Thus the scherzo and finale have the most appeal.

It was obvious that his music pleased the audience. He was present to acknowledge its applause. The performance was associated with International Music Fund Week.

The Prokofieff allowed Nicole Henriot to use here facile technique, give full range to her strong rhythmic sense, and carry off her performance with showmanship. Some 30 to 40 years old, the concerto retains its boldness though not all of Prokofieff's sharpness came through in this performance.

Miss Henriot had momentum without drive. Her playing grew a bit noisy at times. Between the rhythmic excitement of the music and her brand of playing, the audience enjoyed the performance. Munch made it the more successful through admirable integration.

Needless to say, conductor and orchestra were in top form.

Ashton's "Picnic at Tintagel" strengthened the New York City Ballet's repertory at City Center last night. Built around Tristram-Iseult legend, it tells a story into which Diana Adams fits quite effectively. She was its star again last night. Herbert Bliss danced Tristram ably supported by a solid cast.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
FEB 7 1957

Music: A New Symphony

Smit's First Is Played By Bostonians Here

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conducting. Nicole Henriot, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.
Symphony No. 1 in E flat (first New York performance) ..... Leo Smit
Piano Concerto No. 2 ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

LEO SMIT, 36-year-old American composer, has written an attractive First Symphony. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced it to New York at Carnegie Hall last night.

Mr. Smit has had the temerity to give his symphony a tonal designation—it is in E flat. He must know that this is not a fashionable procedure these days, but he does not seem to care. Indeed, his symphony makes no drastic departures from the conventions of the nineteenth century. He has taken the form as he found it, seeking only to inform it with such personal feeling as he can muster.

•

Because Mr. Smit seems to have confidence in what he has to say, he has written with directness and clarity. His first movement has a slow introduction which, in mood and utility, has an almost classic profile. The main part of the movement takes thematic material stated in the introduction and manipulates it with brightness and dexterity. The rhythms here have a modern flavor, and the short melodic motives give touches of luster to what might be a fairly dry process. The movement goes on a shade too long, like a skillful juggling act that does not know how to quit.

In the slow movement, Mr. Smit is almost Brahmsian in his broad, singing theme, which has a long line and a strong, romantic inclination. The three variations and coda sustain the mood. One accustomed to so much problematic writing might be suspicious of the merits of such unashamed songfulness.

The scherzo is feathery and transparent in instrumentation. And the finale, in sonata form, moves with color and vivacity. It brings the thirty-minute work to a brisk and cheerful conclusion.

•

Mr. Smit was commissioned to write this symphony by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the thirtieth anniversary of the League of Composers, and he dedicated it to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. He began thinking about the work in 1951 and completed it in 1955. At every point the piece exhibits careful workmanship and an awareness of the uses of an orchestra. The disarming modesty of the symphony makes its honesty of expression all the more appealing.

Leo Smit

Mr. Munch and his orchestra gave Mr. Smit's work the benefit of their best support, performing it with glowing tone and rhythmic vitality. Then came a somewhat older contemporary piece — Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Since Mr. Munch had taken the precaution to schedule Beethoven's solid and endearing Fourth Symphony as his concluding work, he could risk two modern compositions.

•

Prokofieff wrote this concerto in his early twenties, and when the score disappared during the Russian Revolution, he rewrote it from sketches of the piano part. He probably did not change its essence, though his expanding mastery must have given the music a new precision of effect. In any case, the work has jauntiness, brilliance and enough lyricism to make it ingratiating.

Nicole Henriot was the soloist, and played with gusto and technical security. In the flying octaves of the second movement, for example, her pianism was exciting in its exuberance. Her percussive tone suited the music for the most part. With Mr. Munch and the orchestra providing a rousing accompaniment, the French pianist, who has not had too much luck here in the past, made a lovely occassion of her appearance.

200

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
FEB 8 1957

Leo Smit's First Symphony Is Played at Carnegie Hall

By Jay S. Harrison

BOSTON SYMPHONY
CARNEGIE HALL
Orchestral concert Wednesday night. Conductor: Charles Munch. Piano soloist: Nicole Henriot. The program:
Symphony No. 1, in E flat.....Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor.....Prokofiev
(Miss Henriot)
Symphony No. 4, in B flat.....Beethoven

Pianist Leo Smit, long an active champion of contemporary music, gave up his keyboard activity Wednesday night and sat back and listened. What he heard was the New York premiere of his own first Symphony played by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall. He must have been pleased with the result—certainly the audience was; for Mr. Smit has written a real, honest-to-goodness symphony, which in length, dimension and content is everywhere a "big" work in the best sense of the term.

Stravinsky is its generic influence, the Symphony in C its precise model. In fact, in its formal outlay and overall structure, Mr. Smit's First seems almost a calculated homage to his peer so closely does it resemble the piece from which it derives its main inspiration. Its technique is polytonal, its expressivity neo-classic, and dislocations of rhythm within mostly common meters pricks the symphony alive and keeps its moving. Moreover, the work's general scheme is neat in its proportion, compact in its scaffolding and unified by a homogeneous sonority.

It is, however, in the matter of sonority that Mr. Smit has let us down. As presented last night, the piece emerged as a chamber work blown up to concert-hall proportions. It is string-heavy, the fiddles especially covering much of the detail aloted to other instruments, and since the woodwind writing is rather low the thematic filagrees accorded them were often smothered or lost. Furthermore, the tunes themselves — indeed the whole texture of the piece — appear to have been conceived on a scale from which grandiosity is happily absent; why then a large orchestra to blur the edge of ideas that are basically as crisp as toast?

That, of course, is a question which Mr. Smit will have to work out for himself. Already he has worked out a method allowing him, through disciplined development procedures, to spin out a long work that neither sags nor splinters. Regarded in any way, to write a First Symphony that is in no wis tentative or hesitant is quite something of a snappy feat. Mr. Smit has entered a difficult area of composition; but he has entered it bravely.

As for the solo business of the evening, it is only necessary to report that Nicole Henriot floated to the stage as though she were out to gather buttercups, and then proceeded to prove that she is any man's match in string sparks from the piano. The Prokofieff Second Concerto is a virtuoso vehicle through and through, and if chills are not sent up the listener's spine through roulades of sound, pinwheels of color and vast digital wizardry the piece has been hopelessly misrepresented.

Miss Henriot is clearly aware of this and she dug into the work at the start, retreating not an inch till its conclusion. And what a relief it is to hear a Prokofiev concerto played as though the solo instrument were a piano, not an anvil. In all, Miss Henriot treated the work with a mixture of fire and tenderness. The concerto needs nothing less and nothing more

MUSICAL LEADER
MAR. 1957

The Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, featured Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2 at its Carnegie Hall concert, Feb. 9. This earlier work has shades of impressionism as well as the beginnings of the satirical style which we associate with Prokofieff. We are much impressed with Nicola Henriot, who performed the piano solo. Her playing had controlled force and clarity, and her technical command is tremendous. As frosting on the cake, Mlle. Henriot is a slender, attractive blonde, and it was a pleasure to watch her as well as to listen to her marvelous performance. Dr. Munch opened with Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme of Frank Bridge," a work which delightfully brought out the technical skill of the orchestra. The program closed with Brahms' First Symphony. As we had heard this work only a few days before by the Philadelphia Orchestra, it was interesting to note that it could be interpreted so differently and that both readings could be equally valid. Dr. Munch's approach was stirring and vigorous, and his pacing was a good deal faster than Ormandy's. The audience was so excited, that at its conclusion, many rose to their feet and cheered. This is why we prefer live performances to recordings. Each performance is different, fresh in approach, and gives a work endless variations. Bravo Ormandy, Bravo Munch . . . The twentieth season of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home) will take place from July 3 through Aug. 11. At the same time, the Berkshire Music Center will have its 15th session this summer, from July 1 to Aug. 11. Charles Munch will direct most of the Festival Concerts during the six week-ends, with Pierre Monteux and Carl Schuricht as guest conductors. The Music Center, consisting of five major departments, features department heads Boris Goldovsky, Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, Ludwig Zirner, and the School's Director, Dr. Munch.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 8 1957

Symphony Friends Meet

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 14, at 4 o'clock in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, of the United Press News Pictures in the New England area, who accompanied the orchestra as official photographer.

TIME
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 25 1957

FEB 6

MUSIC

Moderns at Work

New music is enjoying a booming season. Audiences have a chance to shop among [illegible] many by well-known [illegible] composers, some by composers [illegible] before in the public eye or ear. [illegible] successes and more ambitious [illegible]

¶ A [illegible] treatment of Honoré [illegible] La Grande Bretèche [illegible] by California-born Stanley [illegible] pupil [illegible] tégé [illegible] Mignotte [illegible] sioned [illegible] Opera [illegible] Bretèche [illegible] shows the B[illegible] a bedroom [illegible] even the G[illegible] treatment [illegible] a wife who [illegible] ceals her [illegible] a closet, st[illegible] husband t[illegible] no one there, [illegible] stands by [illegible] less horror as t[illegible] band has [illegible] closet [illegible] ked up. [illegible] much of the [illegible] ginal [illegible] rength derived from the ca[illegible] und[illegible]ted manner in which Balzac [illegible] unfolds [illegible]t, the operatic version stagger[illegible] forward [illegible] in a spasmodic series of contrived musical climaxes held together by a score that is pleasant, tuneful but inherently undramatic.

¶ A 20-minute symphonic poem by Chicago-born Pulitzer Prize-winning Composer Ernst Bacon, [illegible] with narration based on Paul Horgan's Pulitzer Prize-winning book Great River: The Rio Grande. Commissioned two years ago by the Dallas Symphony and perf[illegible] Walter Hendl, Rio Grande [illegible] a collection of twelve then [illegible] A River Created, Deser[illegible] Texas-Mexico, Soldiers b[illegible] ebrat[illegible] River's [illegible] scen[illegible] liberally [illegible] and harp, [illegible] is occasionally brilliantly evocative, e.g., in the [illegible]tra accompanying [illegible] hung like a drop[illegible] falling star [illegible] in the sky" [illegible] ince. In other sections the music is fragmented by the necessities of text and sounds merely like a bland movie sound track.

¶ Symphony No. 1, by Philadelphia-born Pianist Leo Smit, 36, performed by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. The work, which was four years in the writing, is solidly constructed and pricked by a series of adroit, Stravinsky-like dislocations of rhythm. The strings are almost continually and often trickily active—so much so that they tend to drown out [illegible] and blur [illegible]

¶ [illegible], by Morton [illegible] premiered by the New York Philh[illegible] The piece, consisting of a theme and 13 variations, subtly—if obviously—evokes the opposite moods of the Stevenson story with calm melodic passages alternating with turbulent climaxes. In an epilogue of glib, quiet harmonies, Gould mirrors the release through death of Stevenson's tortured hero.

¶ An 18-minute, four-part symphonic jazz suite by veteran Jazzman Lionel Hampton, 41, entitled King David and premièred under Dimitri Mitropoulos in Manhattan's Town Hall. Inspired and flavored by Hampton's recent tours of Israel ("I visited King David's tomb, and it meant just [illegible]"), the music tells of a plaintive hard-luck story of the Old Testament tribulations of the Jews, "blows down the Wailing Wall" in a mighty, jumping blast of brass, moves through a lively vibraphone dance to a deafening, full-orchestra crescendo of triumph.

¶ The Poet's Requiem, [illegible] by Ned Rorem, 33, premiered in Manhattan by the Amer-

THE TIMES, FEBRUARY 25, 1957

WASHINGTON
POST & TIMES HERALD
FEB 7 1957

Postlude

Packed House Applauds The Boston Symphony

By Paul Hume

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the second of its two Washington concerts this season, again played to a sold-out Constitution Hall last night, with people turned away from the box office wishing they had bought tickets sooner.

The program prepared and given with extraordinary brilliance by Munch and his musicians was one that would have been rejected by many conductors because it had no big attraction on it, and was made up of items often thought "poor box office," a new symphony by the young American Leo Smit; the 2d, and virtually unknown piano concerto of Prokofieff, and the 4th symphony of Beethoven, the latter not generally held to be one of Beethoven's more popular works.

Yet the house was packed to the rafters and the rafters rang with the ovation Nicole Henriot won in her playing of the highly ungratifying Prokofieff. Nor was the reception for Smit's symphony less than resounding.

It was an evening of solid music making from an orchestra the Washington public love to hear, and wishes would come more often. The National Symphony must presently be making plans for next season, and while we shall take up many related matters in the near few Sunday, we hope they will not pass up this very important capacity concert, and its many implications.

The new symphony is full of energy, with taut lines in the opening movement, and a full-throated romantic slow movement directly after. Smit moves his forces forward with the hand of a skilled general when he is going at a jolly pace, as in his scherzo. But for his slow movement he turns on the orchestra's most alluring sounds, giving them new plangency.

The finale comes off at every point, but its blazing climax is one of the better pages in current symphonic writing. The symphony is a valuable addition to the repertoire, and we hope conductors will take it up and let us hear it regularly. We need to hear more music by men still in their early years.

Miss Henriot played the not too fascinating concerto with spiky accuracy. If her tone was dry and biting that is the kind of tone the composer wanted, and little else would cut through the orchestration, clear though it is. As for the vagrantly charming orchestral portion, Munch led it with easy assurance, making the whole seem more impressive than it really is.

The Beethoven symphony, rounding out an evening of works all in the classical mold, complete to four movements each, was warmly tinged, hard driven in the opening, but sung with affection thereafter, and dashing in its finale. What a great score, and what a relief from some of the others!

Leo Smit's First Symphony Is Played at Carnegie Hall

By Jay S. Harrison

BOSTON SYMPHONY
CARNEGIE HALL
Orchestral concert last night. Conductor: Charles Munch. Piano soloist: Nicole Henriot. The program:
Symphony No. 1, in E flat.....Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor.....Prokofiev
(Miss Henriot)
Symphony No. 4, in B flat.....Beethoven

Pianist Leo Smit, long an active champion of contemporary music, gave up his keyboard activity last night and sat back and listened. What he heard was the New York premiere of his own First Symphony played by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall. He must have been pleased with the result—certainly the audience was; for Mr. Smit has written a real, honest-to-goodness symphony which in length, dimension and content is everywhere a "big" work in the best sense of the term.

Stravinsky is its generic influence, the Symphony in C its precise model. In fact, in its formal outlay and overall structure, Mr. Smit's First seems almost a calculated homage to his peer so closely does it resemble the piece from which it derives its main inspiration. Its technique is polytonal, its expressivity neo-classic, and dislocations of rhythm within mostly common meters pricks the symphony alive and keeps its moving. Moreover, the work's general scheme is neat in its proportion, compact in its scaffolding and unified by a homogeneous sonority.

It is, however, in the matter of sonority that Mr. Smit has let us down. As presented last night, the piece emerged as a chamber work blown up to concert-hall proportions. It is string-heavy, the fiddles especially covering much of the detail aloted to other instruments, and since the woodwind writing is rather low the thematic filagrees accorded them were often smothered or lost. Furthermore, the tunes themselves — indeed the whole texture of the piece — appear to have been conceived on a scale from which grandiosity is happily absent; why then a large orchestra to blur the edge of ideas that are basically as crisp as toast?

That, of course, is a question which Mr. Smit will have to work out for himself. Already he has worked out a method allowing him, through disciplined development procedures, to spin out a long work that neither sags nor splinters. Regarded in any way, to write a First Symphony that is in no wis tentative or hesitant is quite something of a snappy feat. Mr. Smit has entered a difficult area of composition; but he has entered it bravely.

As for the solo business of the evening, it is only necessary to report that Nicole Henriot floated to the stage as though she were out to gather buttercups, and then proceeded to prove that she is any man's match in string sparks from the piano. The Prokofieff Second Concerto is a virtuoso vehicle through and through, and if chills are not sent up the listener's spine through roulades of sound, pinwheels of color and vast digital wizardry the piece has been hopelessly misrepresented.

Miss Henriot is clearly aware of this and she dug into the work at the start, retreating not an inch till its conclusion. And what a relief it is to hear a Prokofiev concerto played as though the solo instrument were a piano, not an anvil. In all, Miss Henriot treated the work with a mixture of fire and tenderness. The concerto needs nothing less and nothing more.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

FEB 8 1957

Leo Smit's First Symphony Is Played at Carnegie Hall

By Jay S. Harrison

BOSTON SYMPHONY

CARNEGIE HALL
Orchestral concert Wednesday night. Conductor: Charles Munch. Piano soloist: Nicole Henriot. The program:
Symphony No. 1, in E flat.....Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor..Prokofiev
(Miss Henriot)
Symphony No. 4, in B flat.....Beethoven

Pianist Leo Smit, long an active champion of contemporary music, gave up his keyboard activity Wednesday night and sat back and listened. What he heard was the New York premiere of his own first Symphony played by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall. He must have been pleased with the result—certainly the audience was; for Mr. Smit has written a real, honest-to-goodness symphony which in length, dimension and content is everywhere a "big" work in the best sense of the term.

Stravinsky is its generic influence, the Symphony in C its precise model. In fact, in its formal outlay and overall structure, Mr. Smit's First seems almost a calculated homage to his peer so closely does it resemble the piece from which it derives its main inspiration.. Its technique is polytonal, its expressivity neo-classic, and dislocations of rhythm within mostly common meters pricks the symphony alive and keeps its moving. Moreover, the work's general scheme is neat in its proportion, compact in its scaffolding and unified by a homogeneous sonority.

It is, however, in the matter of sonority that Mr. Smit has let us down. As presented last night, the piece emerged as a chamber work blown up to concert-hall proportions. It is string-heavy, the fiddles especially covering much of the detail aloted to other instruments, and since the woodwind writing is rather low the thematic filagrees accorded them were often smothered or lost. Furthermore, the tunes themselves — indeed the whole texture of the piece—appear to have been conceived on a scale from which grandiosity is happily absent; why then a large orchestra to blur the edge of ideas that are basically as crisp as toast?

That, of course, is a question which Mr. Smit will have to work out for himself. Already he has worked out a method allowing him, through disciplined development procedures, to spin out a long work that neither sags nor splinters. Regarded in any way, to write a First Symphony that is in no wis tentative or hesitant is quite something of a snappy feat. Mr. Smit has entered a difficult area of composition; but he has entered it bravely.

As for the solo business of the evening, it is only necessary to report that Nicole Henriot floated to the stage as though she were out to gather buttercups, and then proceeded to prove that she is any man's match in string sparks from the piano. The Prokofiev Second Concerto is a virtuoso vehicle through and through, and if chills are not sent up the listener's spine through roulades of sound, pinwheels of color and vast digital wizardry the piece has been hopelessly misrepresented.

Miss Henriot is clearly aware of this and she dug into the work at the start, retreating not an inch till its conclusion. And what a relief it is to hear a Prokofiev concerto played as though the solo instrument were a piano, not an anvil. In all, Miss Henriot treated the work with a mixture of fire and tenderness. The concerto needs nothing less and nothing more

TIME
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 25 1957

MUSIC

Moderns at Work

New music is enjoying a booming season. Audiences have a chance to shop among dozens of new works, many by well-known U.S. composers, some by composers seldom before in the public eye or ear. Some of the successes and more ambitious failures:

¶ A 45-minute operatic treatment of Honoré de Balzac's spine-tingler La Grande Bretêche, with music by California-born Stanley Hollingsworth, 32, pupil and protégé of Gian Carlo Menotti. Commissioned by the NBC Opera Company, Bretêche closely follows the Balzac tale—a bedroom farce given the Grand Guignol treatment—about a wife who hastily conceals her lover in a closet, swears to her husband there is no one there, and then stands by in helpless horror as the husband has the closet bricked up. While much of the original's strength derived from the calm, understated manner in which Balzac unfolded it, the operatic version staggers forward in a spasmodic series of contrived musical climaxes held together by a score that is pleasant, tuneful but inherently undramatic.

¶ A 20-minute symphonic poem by Chicago-born Pulitzer Prizewinning Composer Ernst Bacon, 58, with narration based on Paul Horgan's Pulitzer Prizewinning book Great River: The Rio Grande. Commissioned two years ago by the Dallas Symphony and performed under Walter Hendl, Rio Grande proved to be a collection of twelve thematic snippets—A River Created, Desert and Canyon: Texas-Mexico, Soldiers by Firelight—celebrating the river's history and lurid scenery. Composer Bacon's music, liberally scored for piano, vibraphone and harp, illuminates the text and is occasionally brilliantly evocative, e.g., in the tiny, clear sounds of the orchestra accompanying the words "The evening hung like a drop of water in the . . . following an Indian rain dance. In other sections the music is fragmented by necessities of text and sounds merely a grand movie sound track.

¶ Symphony No. 1, by Philadelphia-Pianist Leo Smit, 36, performed by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. The work, which was four years in the writing, is solidly constructed and pricked by a series of adroit, Stravinsky-like dislocations of rhythm. The strings are almost continually and often trickily active—so much so that they tend to drown out the detail of other instruments and blur the musical ideas.

¶ Jekyll and Hyde Variations, by Morton Gould, premièred by the New York Philharmonic. The piece, consisting of a theme and 13 variations, wittily—if obviously—evokes the opposing moods of the Stevenson story with calm, melodic passages alternating with turbulent climaxes. In an epilogue of glib, quiet harmonies, Gould mirrors the release through death of Stevenson's tortured hero.

¶ An 18-minute, four-part symphonic jazz suite by veteran Jazzman Lionel Hampton, 41, entitled King David and premièred under Dimitri Mitropoulos in Manhattan's Town Hall. Inspired and flavored by Hampton's recent tours of Israel ("I visited King David's tomb, and a chant just came to me"), the music tells in a plaintive harp opening of the Old Testament tribulations of the Jews, "blows down the Wailing Wall" in a mighty, jumping blast of brass, moves through a lively vibraphone dance to a deafening, full-orchestra crescendo of triumph.

¶ The Poet's Requiem, by Ned Rorem, 33, premièred in Manhattan by the Amer-

TIME FEBRUARY 25, 1957

MUSICAL LEADER
MAR. 1957

The Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, featured Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2 at its Carnegie Hall concert, Feb. 9. This earlier work has shades of impressionism as well as the beginnings of the satirical style which we associate with Prokofieff. We are much impressed with Nicola Henriot, who performed the piano solo. Her playing had controlled force and clarity, and her technical command is tremendous. As frosting on the cake, Mlle. Henriot is a slender, attractive blonde, and it was a pleasure to watch her as well as to listen to her marvelous performance. Dr. Munch opened with Britten's "Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme of Frank Bridge," a work which delightfully brought out the technical skill of the orchestra. The program closed with Brahms' First Symphony. As we had heard this work only a few days before by the Philadelphia Orchestra, it was interesting to note that it could be interpreted so differently and that both readings could be equally valid. Dr. Munch's approach was stirring and vigorous, and his pacing was a good deal faster than Ormandy's. The audience was so excited, that at its conclusion, many rose to their feet and cheered. This is why we prefer live performances to recordings. Each performance is different, fresh in approach, and gives a work endless variations. Bravo Ormandy, Bravo Munch . . . The twentieth season of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home) will take place from July 3 through Aug. 11. At the same time, the Berkshire Music Center will have its 15th session this summer, from July 1 to Aug. 11. Charles Munch will direct most of the Festival Concerts during the six week-ends, with Pierre Monteux and Carl Schuricht as guest conductors. The Music Center, consisting of five major departments, features department heads Boris Goldovsky, Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, Ludwig Zirner, and the School's Director, Dr. Munch.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 8 1957

Symphony Friends Meet

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 14, at 4 o'clock in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald of the United Press News Pictures for the New England area, who accompanied the orchestra as official photographer.

FEB 7 1957

Leo Smit's First Symphony Is Played at Carnegie Hall

By Jay S. Harrison

BOSTON SYMPHONY

CARNEGIE HALL
Orchestral concert last night. Conductor: Charles Munch. Piano soloist: Nicole Henriot. The program:
Symphony No. 1, in E flat.....Leo Smit
(First New York performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor..Prokofiev
(Miss Henriot)
Symphony No. 4, in B flat.....Beethoven

Pianist Leo Smit, long an active champion of contemporary music, gave up his keyboard activity last night and sat back and listened. What he heard was the New York premiere of his own First Symphony played by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall. He must have been pleased with the result—certainly the audience was; for Mr. Smit has written a real, honest-to-goodness symphony which in length, dimension and content is everywhere a "big" work in the best sense of the term.

Stravinsky is its generic influence, the Symphony in C its precise model. In fact, in its formal outlay and overall structure, Mr. Smit's First seems almost a calculated homage to his peer so closely does it resemble the piece from which it derives its main inspiration.. Its technique is polytonal, its expressivity neo-classic, and dislocations of rhythm within mostly common meters pricks the symphony alive and keeps its moving. Moreover, the work's general scheme is neat in its proportion, compact in its scaffolding and unified by a homogeneous sonority.

It is, however, in the matter of sonority that Mr. Smit has let us down. As presented last night, the piece emerged as a chamber work blown up to concert-hall proportions. It is string-heavy, the fiddles especially covering much of the detail aloted to other instruments, and since the woodwind writing is rather low the thematic filagrees accorded them were often smothered or lost. Furthermore, the tunes themselves — indeed the whole texture of the piece—appear to have been conceived on a scale from which grandiosity is happily absent; why then a large orchestra to blur the edge of ideas that are basically as crisp as toast?

That, of course, is a question which Mr. Smit will have to work out for himself. Already he has worked out a method allowing him, through disciplined development procedures, to spin out a long work that neither sags nor splinters. Regarded in any way, to write a First Symphony that is in no wis tentative or hesitant is quite something of a snappy feat. Mr. Smit has entered a difficult area of composition; but he has entered it bravely.

As for the solo business of the evening, it is only necessary to report that Nicole Henriot floated to the stage as though she were out to gather buttercups, and then proceeded to prove that she is any man's match in string sparks from the piano. The Prokofiev Second Concerto is a virtuoso vehicle through and through, and if chills are not sent up the listener's spine through roulades of sound, pinwheels of color and vast digital wizardry the piece has been hopelessly misrepresented.

Miss Henriot is clearly aware of this and she dug into the work at the start, retreating not an inch till its conclusion. And what a relief it is to hear a Prokofiev concerto played as though the solo instrument were a piano, not an anvil. In all, Miss Henriot treated the work with a mixture of fire and tenderness. The concerto needs nothing less and nothing more.

WASHINGTON POST + TIMES HERALD
Feb 8, 1957

Postlude

Packed House Applauds The Boston Symphony

By Paul Hume

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the second of its two Washington concerts this season, again played to a sold-out Constitution Hall last night, with people turned away from the box office wishing they had bought tickets sooner.

The program prepared and given with extraordinary brilliance by Munch and his musicians was one that would have been rejected by many conductors because it had no big attraction on it, and was made up of items often thought "poor box office:" a new symphony by the young American Leo Smit; the 2d, and virtually unknown piano concerto of Prokofieff, and the 4th symphony of Beethoven, the latter not generally held to be one of Beethoven's more popular works.

Yet the house was packed to the rafters and the rafters rang with the ovation Nicole Henriot won in her playing of the highly ungratifying Prokofieff. Nor was the reception for Smit's symphony less than resounding.

It was an evening of solid music making from an orchestra the Washington public loves to hear, and wishes would come more often. The National Symphony must presently be making plans for next season, and while we shall take up many related matters in the next few Sunday, we hope they will not pass up this very important capacity concert, and its many implications.

The new symphony is full of energy, with taut lines in the opening movement, and a full-throated romantic slow movement directly after it. Smit moves his forces forward with the hand of a skilled general when he is going at a jolly pace, as in his scherzo. But for his slow movement he turns on the orchestra's most alluring sounds, giving them new plangency.

The finale comes off at every point, but its blazing climax is one of the better pages in current symphonic writing. The symphony is a valuable addition to the repertoire, and we hope conductors will take it up and let us hear it regularly. We need to hear more music by men still in their early years.

Miss Henriot played the not too fascinating concerto with spiky accuracy. If her tone was dry and biting that is the kind of tone the composer wanted, and little else would cut through the orchestration, clear though it is. As for the vagrantly chaotic orchestral portion, Munch led it with easy assurance, making the whole seem more impressive than it really is.

The Beethoven symphony, rounding out an evening of works all in the classical mold, complete to four movements each, was warmly fingered, hard driven in the opening, but sung with affection thereafter, and dashing in its finale. What a great score, and what a relief from some of the others!

Back Bay Ledger
2/7/57

BEACON HILL TIMES

BACK BAY DAY

WHEN THOMAS PERRY, business manager of the Boston Symphony was guest speaker at The Publicity Club luncheon held recently, it became almost unwittingly "Back Bay Day," for in the photograph of those at the speakers table, above, all are residents of this area. Left to right, Mr. Perry; Floyd L. Bell (Hotel Statler); president of the Publicity Club, Miss Marie Houlahan (WEEI), vice-president; Laning Humphreys (Symphony publicist), program chairman of the day; and Jack Lynne, who has just announced his retirement from active service with the Curtis Circulation Company after a half century of serving Curtis Publications. Jack is a former president of The Publicity Club and yesterday the club honored him with a testimonial luncheon. Since the luncheon was held during New England Sportsmens and Boat Show week, Ted Williams and Jack Sharkey were invited to attend as were the Governors of three New England states.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

FEB 8 1957

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

FEB 10 1957

BEFORE GOING TO the Friday Symphony Concert in Symphony Hall (left to right), C. Comstock Clayton, Mrs. Renouff Russell, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., and Harry E. Dickson, violinist in the Symphony Orchestra, enjoy a Dutch Treat Luncheon in the Casadesus room.
(Advertiser photo by Dick Thomson)

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

FEB 10 1957

(Photos by Globe Photographer Louis Russo)

DISCUSSING FUTURE PROGRAMS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra while they examine the instruments of centuries before at the Friday afternoon subscribers' luncheon at Symphony Hall are Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Cabot, and Mrs. James Perkins. The series is planned to cover as many subscribers as possible in groups invited to luncheons every other Friday; next on the calendar, Friday, February 15.

Bridal Party Entertained

By ROSE WALSH

Following last evening's wedding rehearsal for the Marie Louise Albiani-David Ambrose Buckley nuptials tomorrow, Mrs. Seth Albiani, mother of the bride-elect, entertained the bridal party at a supper at her Dorchester home. The bridesmaids' group included Laetitia Albiani, who will be her sister's maid of honor; Virginia Albiani, also a sister; Claire Houle of Laconia, N. H., Patricia Haley of Randolph, Roberta Flynn of Amesbury, Elaine Capone of Belmont and Mrs. William P. Foran of Walpole.

Dr. and Mrs. George A. Buckley of Brockton, parents of the bridegroom-elect, were among the guests as were Richard McCormick, who will be best man; David Cary, Edward Cassidy, T. Clark Hallisey, Frederick Kavanaugh, Francis Daley, Jr., and James Finnegan, all of Brockton, who are sharing the usher duties.

The ceremony, at which Msgr. Richard J. Haberlin will officiate, will take place at an 11 o'clock nuptial mass in St. Brendan's Church, Dorchester. The Louis XIV ballroom of the Hotel Somerset will be the setting for the reception.

Miss Albiani is a graduate of Jeanne d'Arc Academy Milton, and Regis College, class of 1954. Her bridegroom-to-be is an alumnus of Phillips Academy, Andover, Brown University, class of 1951, and attended Boston University Law School.

★ ★ ★

SYMPHONY CONCERT devotees attending last week's Dutch Treat luncheon in the Casadeus Collection Room of Symphony Hall before the concert, enjoyed hearing "the other side of the picture" discussion by some of the players. Harry Ellis Dickson (violinist and assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra) revealed that the musicians do not always like the music chosen for the programs.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and orchestra personnel manager whose hobbies include photography and ornithology, related one of his interesting experiences on a trip that landed him up near Baffam Island. At a weather station there he found the man in charge playing the Boston Symphony's recording of Brahms 4th Symphony on a very expensive Hi Fi, so he sat in for the informal concert and got a kick out of hearing himself in the solo parts.

★ ★ ★

SCENES OF ROCKPORT by Iver J. Matheson will be shown in the interesting exhibition opening Sunday afternoon at the Copley Society galleries from 3 to 6 o'clock. Portrait drawings by post-debutante, Junior [illegible] and Vincent Club member Josephine Harding will occupy the middle gallery. Assisting Mrs. Horton L. White dispense hospitality in the way of sherry and sauterne will be Mrs. Harry Higgins, Mrs. Harvey Hilton, Mrs. Charles E. Tibbetts, Mrs. Chester Reed, Mrs. Gladys C. Park, Mrs. Arthur R. Stafford and Mrs. Goodwin R. Prentiss. The exhibition continues through March 1.

USHERING at the recent benefit of the Dr. Albert Schweitzer color film, sponsored by the French Centre, at Exeter St. Theater, were debutante Judy Cabot, left, and Francoise Biermann.
(Record-American, Jim McDevitt)

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

FEB 10 1957

MUSIC TO BE BY 'REQUEST'

Dame Myra Hess' "Request Program" concert next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall is bringing out a distinguished audience of Boston music lovers. It is expected that the great works of Bach and Beethoven will be well represented in the "requests."

Planning to attend are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Weeks, Mrs. Joseph K. Milliken, Mrs. Thomas G. Rice, Mrs. Sidney Harwood, William E. Aldrich, Miss Rebekah Hobbs, Walter S. Fox, Jr., Mrs. William E. Park, Mrs. Martin Simmons, Mrs. Carl Priestley, Mrs. W. F. [illegible] Lane, [illegible] Mrs. Charles S. Jeffrey and Mrs. John W. Perry.

Also Ralph Baker, Mrs. Charles Jenney, Jr., Mrs. Walter C. Lewis, Miss Sylvia H. Knowles, Mrs. Stephen Howe, Mrs. Herbert E. Hawkes, Jr., Mrs. Robert B. Day, Mrs. Louis H. Langenberg, Mrs. Otto C. Bohlander, Miss E. W. McKibbin, Miss Barbara E. Haskell, Miss Caroline P. Hill, Mrs. Anita Castiglione, Dr. Alfred H. Stanton, Mary Louise Hancock, Mrs. Walter Easter, Susan M. Andrews, Mrs. Mark Crane, Mrs. Lawrence Olson, Mrs. C. E. Armstrong and Mrs. Francis Carroll.

★ ★ ★

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held Thursday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the Orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald of the United Press News Pictures.

Back Bay Sedgwick
2/7/57

BEACON HILL TIMES

BACK BAY DAY

WHEN THOMAS PERRY, business manager of the Boston Symphony was guest speaker at The Publicity Club luncheon held recently, it became almost unwittingly "Back Bay Day," for in the photograph of those at the speakers table, above, all are residents of this area. Left to right, Mr. Perry; Floyd L. Bell (Hotel Statler); president of the Publicity Club, Miss Marie Houlahan (WEEI), vice-president; Laning Humphreys (Symphony publicist), program chairman of the day; and Jack Lynne, who has just announced his retirement from active service with the Curtis Circulation Company after a half century of serving Curtis Publications. Jack is a former president of The Publicity Club and yesterday the club honored him with a testimonial luncheon. Since the luncheon was held during New England Sportsmens and Boat Show week, Ted Williams and Jack Sharkey were invited to attend as were the Governors of three New England states.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

FEB 9 1957

Bridal Party Entertained

By ROSE WALSH

Following last evening's wedding rehearsal for the Marie Louise Albiani-David Ambrose Buckley nuptials tomorrow, Mrs. Seth Albiani, mother of the bride-elect, entertained the bridal party at a supper at her Dorchester home. The bridesmaids' group included Laetitia Albiani, who will be her sister's maid of honor; Virginia Albiani, also a sister; Claire Houle of Laconia, N. H., Patricia Haley of Randolph, Roberta Flynn of Amesbury, Elaine Capone of Belmont and Mrs. William P. Foran of Walpole.

Dr. and Mrs. George A. Buckley of Brockton, parents of the bridegroom-elect, were among the guests as were Richard McCormick, who will be best man; David Cary, Edward Cassidy, T. Clark Hallisey, Frederick Kavanaugh, Francis Daley, Jr., and James Finnegan, all of Brockton, who are sharing the usher duties.

The ceremony, at which Msgr. Richard J. Haberlin will officiate, will take place at an 11 o'clock nuptial mass in St. Brendan's Church, Dorchester. The Louis XIV ballroom of the Hotel Somerset will be the setting for the reception.

Miss Albiani is a graduate of Jeanne d'Arc Academy Milton, and Regis College, class of 1954. Her bridegroom-to-be is an alumnus of Phillips Academy, Andover, Brown University, class of 1951, and attended Boston University Law School.

★ ★ ★

SYMPHONY CONCERT devotees attending last week's Dutch Treat luncheon in the Casadeus Collection Room of Symphony Hall before the concert, enjoyed hearing "the other side of the picture" discussion by some of the players. Harry Ellis Dickson (violinist and assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra) revealed that the musicians do not always like the music chosen for the programs.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and orchestra personnel manager whose hobbies include photography and ornithology, related one of his interesting experiences on a trip that landed him up near Baffam Island. At a weather station there he found the man in charge playing the Boston Symphony's recording of Brahms 4th Symphony on a very expensive Hi Fi, so he sat in for the informal concert and got a kick out of hearing himself in the solo parts.

★ ★ ★

SCENES OF ROCKPORT by Iver J. Matheson will be shown in the interesting exhibition opening Sunday afternoon at the Copley Society galleries from 3 to 6 o'clock. Portrait drawings by post-debutante, Junior League and Vincent Club member Josephine Harding will occupy the middle gallery. Assisting Mrs. Horton L. White dispense hospitality in the way of sherry and sauterne will be Mrs. Harry Higgins, Mrs. Harvey Hilton, Mrs. Charles E. Tibbetts, Mrs. Chester Reed, Mrs. Gladys C. Park, Mrs. Arthur R. Stafford and Mrs. Goodwin R. Prentiss. The exhibition continues through March 1.

USHERING at the recent benefit of the Dr. Albert Schweitzer color film, sponsored by the French Centre, at Exeter St. Theater, were debutante Judy Cabot, left, and Francoise Biermann.
(Record-American, Jim McDevitt)

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

FEB 10 1957

BEFORE GOING TO the Friday Symphony Concert in Symphony Hall (left to right), C. Comstock Clayton, Mrs. Renouff Russell, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Jr., and Harry E. Dickson, violinist in the Symphony Orchestra, enjoy a Dutch Treat Luncheon in the Casadesus room.
(Advertiser photo by Dick Thomson)

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

FEB 10 1957

(Photos by Globe Photographer Louis Russo)

DISCUSSING FUTURE PROGRAMS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra while they examine the instruments of centuries before at the Friday afternoon subscribers' luncheon at Symphony Hall are Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra; Mrs. Cabot, and Mrs. James Perkins. The series is planned to cover as many subscribers as possible in groups invited to luncheons every other Friday; next on the calendar, Friday, February 15.

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

FEB 10 1957

MUSIC TO BE BY 'REQUEST'

Dame Myra Hess' "Request Program" concert next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall is bringing out a distinguished audience of Boston music lovers. It is expected that the great works of Bach and Beethoven will be well represented in the "requests."

Planning to attend are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Weeks, Mrs. Joseph K. Milliken, Mrs. Thomas G. Rice, Mrs. Sidney Harwood, William E. Aldrich, Miss Rebekah Hobbs, Walter S. Fox, Jr., Mrs. William E. Park, Mrs. Martin Simmons, Mrs. Carl Priestley, Mrs. W. F. [illegible] Lane, [illegible] Booth, Mrs. Charles S. Jeffrey and Mrs. John W. Perry.

Also Ralph Baker, Mrs. Charles Jenney, Jr., Mrs. Walter C. Lewis, Miss Sylvia H. Knowles, Mrs. Stephen Howe, Mrs. Herbert E. Hawkes, Jr., Mrs. Robert B. Day, Mrs. Louis H. Langenberg, Mrs. Otto C. Bohlander, Miss E. W. McKibbin, Miss Barbara E. Haskell, Miss Caroline P. Hill, Mrs. Anita Castiglione, Dr. Alfred H. Stanton, Mary Louise Hancock, Mrs. Walter Easter, Susan M. Andrews, Mrs. Mark Crane, Mrs. Lawrence Olson, Mrs. C. E. Armstrong and Mrs. Francis Carroll.

★ ★ ★

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held Thursday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the Orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald of the United Press News Pictures.

TIGHT BINDING

202

BOSTON TRAVELER
February 14, 1957

Chic' These Days

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

roe." The first part of the trip will take them from New York to San Francisco, via the Panama Canal.

They'll reappear on the Boston scene in July.

SECOND SYMPHONY LUNCHEON PLANNED

Many Bostonians are making plans to have lunch at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, before the regular Friday concert. The second in a series of "Know-Your-Symphony" Dutch treat luncheons will be held there in the Ancient Instrument Room.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address luncheon guests, as will Roger Voisin, principal trumpet player.

Mmes. Michael T. Kelleher and Palfrey Perkins will serve as hostesses at the affair.

TO STUDY IN FRANCE

Judith Knights of Lexington sails from New York tomorrow morning for a year of study abroad. She'll study in Paris under the auspices of Hollins College, where she is a sophomore.

Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Wallace G. Knights.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
FEB 13 1957

FRIENDS MEET

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, chief of the United Press News Pictures for New England, who accompanied the orchestra as official photographer.

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1957

Musicale Thrills Guests

PRE-SYMPHONY concert recent luncheon guests at Casadeus room, Symphony Hall, l. to r., Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mr. Cabot and Mrs. James Perkins. Second luncheon takes place tomorrow at 12:30 p. m. •

(Record-American, Dick Thomson)

By ROSE WALSH

nouncement inserted in the program of next season's artists. Luboshutz and Nemenoff (duo-pianists) will open the musicales on Oct. 30. The other artists include Leopold Simoneau, Victoria de Los Angeles, Artur Rubinstein, Adele Addison and Leonard Warren.

★ ★ ★

MRS. ALEXANDER STEINERT, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. James J. Phelan and Mrs. John Gorham Palfrey were among those enjoying Miss Gueden's concert. Mrs. Mason T. Whiting, who is leaving tomorrow for a holiday with her sister, Mrs. Marvin W. Bridges in Omaha, Neb., stayed on for luncheon in the Terrace Room as did Mrs. Martin T. Caulfield, Mrs. J. Fred Curran, Mrs. Richard Sullivan, Mrs. John O'Donoghue, Mrs. Raymond McLay, Mrs. E. J. Butler, Mrs. James C. Scanlan and Mrs. William A. McCarthy.

★ ★ ★

MRS. MICHAEL T. KELLEHER and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins will hostess tomorrow a second series of 12:30 invitation luncheons in the Casadeus Room in Symphony Hall, planned to acquaint subscribers of the Boston Symphony with the other side of the footlights. Planning to attend are Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. F. J. Lawless, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Howe, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd, Mrs. Henry Lyman, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, Mrs. Albert Clement Titcomb, Miss Sarah Walmsley, Mrs. C. A. Weyerhauser, Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Henry Wheeler III.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

LUNCHING TOGETHER at the Pavia a series of Friday gatherings at Symphony Hall planned to acquaint subscribers with players' and administrators' problems are G. Campbell Clayton, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Mrs. Renout Russell, and Harry E. Dickson, conductor of the orchestra's youth concerts.

GOING OVER THE ITINERARY of concert tours with Mrs. Augustus L. Putnam to show his number of concerts given in a season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
FEB 13 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Ar

Sallie White Will Open Exhibit Of Her Paintings in London Toda

NEWS FROM ABROAD reveals that the opening of an exhibition by the well-known American painter, Sallie White, takes place today at the Wildenstein Gallery in London. On Sunday, the artist flew to London from Rome, where she has been working for four years. This one-man show will be her first major exhibition outside Italy. She was invited to show at the prominent Wildenstein Gallery after the success of her first one-man show at Rome's Schneider Gallery last June. About half the paintings are of horses, especially circus and bullfight horses. The other half is Italian landscapes. Italian art critics say her paintings are "reminiscent of El Greco." Her first work in art dates back to Boston where she studied with George Demetrios and Anthony Thieme. Later she studied in New York. She's the wife of the blue water sailor, William Albert Robinson, author of "10,000 Leagues Over the Sea." In 1943 the Robinsons sailed the brigantine schooner, Varua, from Gloucester to Tahiti and lived on the island for nine years.

• • •

THE ARTIST is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Laurence White of "Laursalmire," Beverly Farms. In 1943 she was married to William Robinson four days before his first wife, the former Florence Crane, daughter of the Richard T. Cranes of "Castle Hill," Ipswich, became the wife of Prince Serge Belosselsky-Belozersky. It was Sallie's third marriage. Her first husband was Samuel G. Houghton of Chestnut Hill. John S. McLennan, son of a member of the Canadian Parliament, was her second husband. She was divorced from both. Many will remember how William Robinson was stricken with acute appendicitis when he and his first wife were returning from a year's honeymoon cruise aboard his 32 ft. ketch, Swaap. He was rescued by the U. S. Navy and an emergency operation was performed on the USS Hale off Balboa in the Canal Zone.

• • •

THE SECOND IN THE SERIES of invitation luncheons aimed at giving Boston Symphony subscribers a closer acquaintance with their orchestra "from the other side of the footlights" will take place Friday afternoon at 12:30, in the Casadesus Room in Symphony Hall. Hostesses will be Mrs. Pafrey Perkins and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, wives of two of the trustees. Subscribers who have accepted the invitation include Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Frederick J. Bradlee, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Howe, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd, Mrs. Henry Lyman, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, Mrs. Albert Clement Titcomb, Miss Sarah Walmsley, Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Henry Wheeler, 3rd.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
FEB 11 1957

Speaking Of

By MAGGIE WELLS,
Society Editor

When members of the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts speak of "the ex-president", they don't mean Harry Truman. Or even Herbert Hoover.

The person they have in mind is THEIR ex-president, Mrs. Charles P. Howard of Beacon street.

This distinguished lady is special adviser to the Federal Civil Defense Administrator and Permanent Alternate U.S. Delegate to the NATO Civil Defense Committee.

TO ADDRESS LUNCHEON

On Valentine's Day, she'll address members of the club at their monthly luncheon at Joy street headquarters. Talking about happenings in Washington, she will report on the recent meetings and current goings-on in the capital.

Sponsors include Mmes. Rutherford Bingham, John T. Bottomley, Robert F. Herrick, Eugene T. Redmond and Carl P. White.

Head table guests will be Maj. Gen. John J. Maginnis, director of civil defense in Massachusetts, Charles Gibbons and Mrs. Harold Putnam.

SYMPHONY FRIENDS TO SEE SLIDES

Lady Republicans aren't the only ones planning a party for Valentine's Day.

The Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra will gather in Symphony Hall that afternoon to view colored slides of the recent European tour. This, of course, includes the orchestra's visit to the Soviet Union.

The pictures will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, who served as official photographer on the trip.

The next day, many Symphony-minded socialites will attend the second Dutch Treat luncheon before the Friday afternoon concert. Like the first, it will be held in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall.

The invitation list includes the names of Mmes. William T. Aldrich, John E. Boit, Charles E. Cotting and Willian Stanley Parker. Also, Mrs. Edward Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley R. Howe and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph S. Richmond.

Other social events on Hearts-and-Flowers Day in-

FEB 10 1957

AT THE FIRST LUNCHEON of a series before the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts for subscribers and friends of the orchestra invited to meet the players. Mrs. James Jackson Jr., Rosario Mazzeo, Mrs. Philips Ketchum and Mrs. Charles Lyman share a table.

Boston Traveler, Wednesday, Feb. 13, 1957

Dutch Treat Luncheon

THE SECOND in a series of pre-Symphony Dutch Treat luncheons for socialites and members of the orchestra will take place Friday. Mrs. Henry Cabot (left), her husband, president of BSO trustees, and Mrs. James Perkins, attended the first party.

TIGHT BINDING

202

957

BOSTON TRAVELER
February 14, 1957

Chic' These Days

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

FEB 13 1957

FRIENDS MEET

A special metting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, chief of the United Press News Pictures for New England, who accompanied the orchestra as official photorrapher.

roe." The first part of the trip will take them from New York to San Francisco, via the Panama Canal.

They'll reappear on the Boston scene in July.

SECOND SYMPHONY LUNCHEON PLANNED

Many Bostonians are making plans to have lunch at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, before the regular Friday concert. The second in a series of "Know-Your-Symphony" Dutch treat luncheons will be held there in the Ancient Instrument Room.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address luncheon guests, as will Roger Voisin, principal trumpet player.

Mmes. Michael T. Kelleher and Palfrey Perkins will serve as hostesses at the affair.

TO STUDY IN FRANCE

Judith Knights of Lexington sails from New York tomorrow morning for a year of study abroad. She'll study in Paris under the auspices of Hollins College, where she is a sophomore.

Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Wallace G. Knights.

LUNCHING TOGETHER at the first in a series of Friday gatherings at Symphony Hall planned to acquaint subscribers with players' and administrators' problems are C. Comstock Clayton, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Mrs. Renouf Russell, and Harry E. Dickson, conductor of the orchestra's youth concerts.

GOING OVER THE ITINERARY of concert tours with Mrs. Augustus L. Putnam to show hte number of concerts given in a season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 13 1957

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1957

Musicale Thrills Guests

PRE-SYMPHONY concert recent luncheon guests at Casadeus room, Symphony Hall, l. to r., Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mr. Cabot and Mrs. James Perkins. Second luncheon takes place tomorrow at 12:30 p. m.

(Record-American, Dick Thomson)

By ROSE WALSH

nouncement inserted in the program of next season's artists. Luboshutz and Nemenoff (duo-pianists) will open the musicales on Oct. 30. The other artists include Leopold Simoneau, Victoria de Los Angeles, Artur Rubinstein, Adele Addison and Leonard Warren.

* * *

MRS. ALEXANDER STEINERT, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. James J. Phelan and Mrs. John Gorham Palfrey were among those enjoying Miss Gueden's concert. Mrs. Mason T. Whiting, who is leaving tomorrow for a holiday with her sister, Mrs. Marvin W. Bridges in Omaha, Neb., stayed on for [illegible] in the Terrace Room as did Mrs. Martin T. Canfield, Mrs. J. Fred Curran, Mrs. Richard Sullivan, Mrs. John O'Donoghue, Mrs. Raymond McLay, Mrs. E. J. Butler, Mrs. James C. Scanlan and Mrs. William A. McCarthy.

* * *

MRS. MICHAEL T. KELLEHER and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins [illegible] hostess tomorrow's second [illegible] of 12:30 invitation [illegible] in the Casadeus [illegible] Symphony Hall. [illegible] subscribers [illegible] Boston Symphony with [illegible] side of the footlights. [illegible] to attend are Mrs. [illegible] E. Beal, Mrs. F. J. [illegible] Mrs. John L. Grandin, [illegible] and Mrs. Dudley Howe, [illegible] D. Howe, Mr. [illegible] George E. Judd, Mrs. [illegible] Lyman, Mrs. George R. [illegible] Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, [illegible] Clement Titcomb, [illegible] Sarah Walmsley, Mrs. [illegible] A. Weyerhauser, Mrs. Henry [illegible] and Mrs. Henry [illegible] III.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

FEB 1[illegible]

AT THE FIRST LUNCHEON of a series before the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts for subscribers and friends of the orchestra invited to meet the players, Mrs. James Jackson Jr., Rosario Mazzeo, Mrs. Phillips Kotcham and Mrs. Charles Luman share a table.

Social Chatter

By Alison Ar[illegible]

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

FEB 11 1957

Sallie White Will Open Exhibit Of Her Paintings in London Toda[illegible]

NEWS FROM ABROAD reveals that the opening of an exhibition by the well-known American painter, Sallie White, takes place today at the Wildenstein Gallery in London. On Sunday, the artist flew to London from Rome, where she has been working for four years. This one-man show will be her first major exhibition outside Italy. She was invited to show at the prominent Wildenstein Gallery after the success of her first one-man show at Rome's Schneider Gallery last June. About half the paintings are of horses, especially circus and bullfight horses. The other half is Italian landscapes. Italian art critics say her paintings are "reminiscent of El Greco." Her first work in art dates back to Boston where she studied with George Demetrios and Anthony Thieme. Later she studied in New York. She's the wife of the blue water sailor, William Albert Robinson, author of "10,000 Leagues Over the Sea." In 1943 the Robinsons sailed the brigantine schooner, Varua, from Gloucester to Tahiti and lived on the island for nine years.

* * *

THE ARTIST is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Laurence White of "Laursalshire," Beverly Farms. In 1943 she was married to William Robinson four days before his first wife, the former Florence Crane, daughter of the Richard T. Cranes of "Castle Hill," Ipswich, became the wife of Prince Serge Belosselsky-Belozersky. It was Sallie's third marriage. Her first husband was Samuel G. Houghton of Chestnut Hill. John S. McLennan, son of a member of the Canadian Parliament, was her second husband. She was divorced from both. Many will remember how William Robinson was stricken with acute appendicitis when he and his first wife were returning from a year's honeymoon cruise aboard his 32 ft. ketch, Swaap. He was rescued by the U. S. Navy and an emergency operation was performed on the USS Hale off Balboa in the Canal Zone.

* * *

THE SECOND IN THE SERIES of invitation luncheons aimed at giving Boston Symphony subscribers a closer acquaintance with their orchestra "from the other side of the footlights" will take place Friday afternoon at 12:30, in the Casadesus Room in Symphony Hall. Hostesses will be Mrs. Pafrey Perkins and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, wives of two of the trustees. Subscribers who have accepted the invitation include Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Frederick J. Bradlee, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Howe, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd, Mrs. Henry Lyman, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, Mrs. Albert Clement Titcomb, Miss Sarah Walmsley, Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Henry Wheeler, 3rd.

Speaking Of

By MAGGIE WELLS,
Society Editor

When members of the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts speak of "the ex-president", they don't mean Harry Truman. Or even Herbert Hoover.

The person they have in mind is THEIR ex-president, Mrs. Charles P. Howard of Beacon street.

This distinguished lady is special adviser to the Federal Civil Defense Administrator and Permanent Alternate U.S. Delegate to the NATO Civil Defense Committee.

TO ADDRESS LUNCHEON

On Valentine's Day, she'll address members of the club at their monthly luncheon at Joy street headquarters. Talking on "Happenings in Washington," she will report on the recent [illegible] and current goings on in the capital.

Sponsors include Mmes. Rutherford Bingham, John T. Bottomley, Robert F. Herrick, Eugene T. Redmond and Carl P. White.

Head table guests will be Maj. Gen. John J. Maginnis, director of civil defense in Massachusetts, Charles Gibbons and Mrs. Harold Putnam.

SYMPHONY FRIENDS TO SEE SLIDES

Lady Republicans aren't the only ones planning a party for Valentine's Day.

The Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra will gather in Symphony Hall that afternoon to view colored slides of the recent European tour. This, of course, includes the orchestra's visit to the Soviet Union.

The pictures will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, who served as official photographer on the trip.

The next day, many Symphony-minded socialites will attend the second Dutch Treat luncheon before the Friday afternoon concert. Like the first, it will be held in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall.

The invitation list includes the names of Mmes. William T. Aldrich, John E. Boit, Charles E. Cotting and Willian Stanley Parker. Also, Mrs. Edward Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley R. Howe and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph S. Richmond.

Other social events on Hearts-and-Flowers Day in-

Boston Traveler, Wednesday, Feb. 13, 1957

Dutch Treat Luncheon

THE SECOND in a series of pre-Symphony Dutch Treat luncheons for socialites and members of the orchestra will take place Friday. Mrs. Henry Cabot (left), her husband, president of BSO trustees, and Mrs. James Perkins, attended the first party.

TIGHT BINDING

202

957

BOSTON TRAVELER
February 14, 1957

Chic' These Days

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

FEB 13 1957

FRIENDS MEET

A special metting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, chief of the United Press News Pictures for New England, who accompanied the orchestra as official photorapher.

roe." The first part of the trip will take them from New York to San Francisco, via the Panama Canal.

They'll reappear on the Boston scene in July.

SECOND SYMPHONY LUNCHEON PLANNED

Many Bostonians are making plans to have lunch at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, before the regular Friday concert. The second in a series of "Know-Your-Symphony" Dutch treat luncheons will be held there in the Ancient Instrument Room.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address luncheon guests, as will Roger Voisin, principal trumpet player.

Mmes. Michael T. Kelleher and Palfrey Perkins will serve as hostesses at the affair.

TO STUDY IN FRANCE

Judith Knights of Lexington sails from New York tomorrow morning for a year of study abroad. She'll study in Paris under the auspices of Hollins College, where she is a sophomore.

Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Wallace G. Knights.

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1957

Musicale Thrills Guests

PRE-SYMPHONY concert recent luncheon guests at Casadeus room, Symphony Hall, l. to r., Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mr. Cabot and Mrs. James Perkins. Second luncheon takes place tomorrow at 12:30 p. m.

(Record-American, Dick Thomson)

By ROSE WALSH

nouncement inserted in the program of next season's artists. Luboshutz and Nemenoff (duo-pianists) will open the musicales on Oct. 30. The other artists include Leopold Simoneau, Victoria de Los Angeles, Artur Rubinstein, Adele Addison and Leonard Warren.

* * *

MRS. ALEXANDER STEINERT, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. James J. Phelan and Mrs. John Gorham Palfrey were among those enjoying Miss Gueden's concert. Mrs. Mason T. Whiting, who is leaving tomorrow for a holiday with her sister, Mrs. Marvin W. Bridges in Omaha, Neb., stayed on for luncheon in the Terrace Room as did Mrs. Martin T. Caulfield, Mrs. J. Fred Curran, Mrs. Richard Sullivan, Mrs. John O'Donoghue, Mrs. Raymond McLay, Mrs. E. J. Butler, Mrs. James C. Scanlan and Mrs. William A. McCarthy.

* * *

MRS. MICHAEL T. KELLEHER and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins are hostesses tomorrow's second-series of 12:30 invitation [illegible] in the Casadeus [illegible] Symphony Hall. [illegible] subscribers [illegible] Boston Symphony with [illegible] of the footlights. [illegible] to attend are Mrs. [illegible] P. Beal, Mrs. F. J. [illegible] Mrs. John L. Grandin, [illegible] Mrs. Dudley Howe, [illegible] D. Howe, Mr. [illegible] George E. Judd, Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. George R. [illegible] Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, [illegible] Clement Titcomb, [illegible] Walmsley, Mrs. [illegible] A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. Henry [illegible] and Mrs. Henry [illegible] III.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

LUNCHING TOGETHER at the first in a series of Friday gatherings at Symphony Hall planned to acquaint subscribers with players' and administrators' problems are C. Comstock Clayton, Mrs. George L. Batchelder, Mrs. Renouf Russell, and Harry E. Dickson, conductor of the orchestra's youth concerts.

GOING OVER THE ITINERARY of concert tours with Mrs. Augustus L. Putnam to show hte number of concerts given in a season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 13 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Sallie White Will Open Exhibit Of Her Paintings in London Today

NEWS FROM ABROAD reveals that the opening of an exhibition by the well-known American painter, Sallie White, takes place today at the Wildenstein Gallery in London. On Sunday, the artist flew to London from Rome, where she has been working for four years. This one-man show will be her first major exhibition outside Italy. She was invited to show at the prominent Wildenstein Gallery after the success of her first one-man show at Rome's Schneider Gallery last June. About half the paintings are of horses, especially circus and bullfight horses. The other half is Italian landscapes. Italian art critics say her paintings are "reminiscent of El Greco." Her first work in art dates back to Boston where she studied with George Demetrios and Anthony Thieme. Later she studied in New York. She's the wife of the blue water sailor, William Albert Robinson, author of "10,000 Leagues Over the Sea." In 1943 the Robinsons sailed the brigantine schooner, Varua, from Gloucester to Tahiti and lived on the island for nine years.

* * *

THE ARTIST is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Laurence White of "Laursalshire," Beverly Farms. In 1943 she was married to William Robinson four days before his first wife, the former Florence Crane, daughter of the Richard T. Cranes of "Castle Hill," Ipswich, became the wife of Prince Serge Belosselsky-Belozersky. It was Sallie's third marriage. Her first husband was Samuel G. Houghton of Chestnut Hill. John S. McLennan, son of a member of the Canadian Parliament, was her second husband. She was divorced from both. Many will remember how William Robinson was stricken with acute appendicitis when he and his first wife were returning from a year's honeymoon cruise aboard his 32 ft. ketch, Swaap. He was rescued by the U. S. Navy and an emergency operation was performed on the USS Hale off Balboa in the Canal Zone.

* * *

THE SECOND IN THE SERIES of invitation luncheons aimed at giving Boston Symphony subscribers a closer acquaintance with their orchestra "from the other side of the footlights" will take place Friday afternoon at 12:30, in the Casadesus Room in Symphony Hall. Hostesses will be Mrs. Pafrey Perkins and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, wives of two of the trustees. Subscribers who have accepted the invitation include Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Frederick J. Bradlee, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Howe, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd, Mrs. Henry Lyman, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert M. Tappan, Mrs. Albert Clement Titcomb, Miss Sarah Walmsley, Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Henry Wheeler, 3rd.

AT THE FIRST LUNCHEON of a series before the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts for subscribers and friends of the orchestra invited to meet the players, Mrs. James Jackson [illegible], Rosario Mazzeo, Mrs. Phillips Kernan and Mrs. Carl Lyman share a table.

ler (e)
V, Mass.
epublican
749

1957

Speaking Of

By MAGGIE WELLS,
Society Editor

When members of the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts speak of "the ex-president", they don't mean Harry Truman. Or even Herbert Hoover.

The person they have in mind is THEIR ex-president, Mrs. Charles P. Howard of Beacon street.

This distinguished lady is special adviser to the Federal Civil Defense Administrator and Permanent Alternate U.S. Delegate to the NATO Civil Defense Committee.

TO ADDRESS LUNCHEON

On Valentine's Day, she'll address members of the club at their monthly luncheon at Joy street headquarters. Talking on "Happenings in Washington," she'll report on the recent inauguration and current goings-on in the capital.

Sponsors include Mmes. Rutherford Bingham, John T. Bottomley, Robert F. Herrick, Eugene T. Redmond and Carl P. White.

Head table guests will be Maj. Gen. John J. Maginnis, director of civil defense in Massachusetts, Charles Gibbons and Mrs. Harold Putnam.

SYMPHONY FRIENDS TO SEE SLIDES

Lady Republicans aren't the only ones planning a party for Valentine's Day.

The Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra will gather in Symphony Hall that afternoon to view colored slides of the recent European tour. This, of course, includes the orchestra's visit to the Soviet Union.

The pictures will be shown by J. Edward Fitzgerald, who served as official photographer on the trip.

The next day, many Symphony-minded socialites will attend the second Dutch Treat luncheon before the Friday afternoon concert. Like the first, it will be held in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall.

The invitation list includes the names of Mmes. William T. Aldrich, John E. Boit, Charles E. Cotting and Willian Stanley Parker. Also, Mrs. Edward Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley R. Howe and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph S. Richmond.

Other social events on Hearts-and-Flowers Day in-

Boston Traveler, Wednesday, Feb. 13, 1957

Dutch Treat Luncheon

THE SECOND in a series of pre-Symphony Dutch Treat luncheons for socialites and members of the orchestra will take place Friday. Mrs. Henry Cabot (left), her husband, president of BSO trustees, and Mrs. James Perkins, attended the first party.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 8 1957

Gino Cioffi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday and Saturday, Feb. 15 and 16. He will also play at the open rehearsal Thursday night, Feb. 14.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
FEB 10 1957

Gino Cioffi Symphony Soloist In Mozart Clarinet Concerto

At the 15th pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony [redacted] afternoon and Saturday evening Charles Munch will present performances of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto. Gino Cioffi, first clarinet of the orchestra since 1950, will be the soloist and will play his own cadenza for the work.

Mr. Cioffi was born in Naples, Italy, graduated from the Naples Conservatory and arrived in the United States in 1937. Prior to joining the Boston Symphony, he was a principal in the Orchestras of Pittsburgh, Cleveland, New York Radio City, the Metropolitan Opera and the N.B.C. Symphony under the late Arturo Toscanini. In addition to his duties with the orchestra, Mr. Cioffi is an instructor in clarinet at the New England Conservatory of Music and the Boston University College of Music.

Dr. Munch will open the programs of next Friday and Saturday with Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and close with the Tone Poem of Richard Strauss, "Ein Heldenleben," in which the violin solo will be played by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

Dr. Munch will also conduct the orchestra's fifth concert of the Tuesday evening series in Symphony Hall on Feb. 12. The program will consist of Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme of Frank Bridge; a suite from Prokofieff's ballet "Romeo and Juliet"; Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

The movements of the Prokofieff suite, which are drawn from his two published suites, are different from those performed by Dr. Munch at the concerts of Feb. 1 and 2, and are as follows: Romeo and Juliet's Parting; Romeo at the Fountain; Morning Dance; Aubade; Romeo at Juliet's Tomb, and Juliet's Death.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the season will take place on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 7:30, when Charles Munch will conduct and Gino Cioffi will be the soloist.

Friends Meeting

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held on Thursday afternoon in Symphony Hall at 4 o'clock. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by Edward Fitzgerald, Boston chief of United Press News Pictures, who accompanied the orchestra as [redacted] photographer.

GINO CIOFFI, principal clarinet of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at the concerts of next Friday and Saturday.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
FEB 10 1957

MUNCH CONDUCTS PROKOFIEFF WORK

Boston Orchestra, With Nicole Henriot as Soloist, Repeats Piano Concerto No. 2

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, with the pianist Nicole Henriot again appearing as soloist in the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2. The work had been heard on Boston Symphony programs earlier in the week.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra also played Britten's "Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge" and the Brahms First Symphony, two works that could well have been written expressly to display the brilliant, elastic string tone of the Boston players.

In the "Aria Italiana" section of the Britten work the Boston violins managed a feat achieved by few orchestras—that of performing with the precision and unanimity of a single immensely magnified violin. "String tone" as a rule is just sufficiently out of unison to make hearers conscious of the instrumental mass, but on this occasion it was no exaggeration to say that the violins played as one. Even the sustained harmonic at the close of the section was not marred by a single unsteady bow.

Mr. Munch, most urbane of conductors, as usual gave the impression of guiding the orchestra rather than propelling it forcibly through the music. The Brahms First was done with real splendor of sound. J. B.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Dienstag, 12. Februar 1957

Munch dirigiert neue Symphonie

Ein neuer Symphoniker ist geboren: das war das Hauptergebnis des siebenten diesjährigen Konzerts der Boston Symphony, dieses Mal wieder unter ihrem ständigen Dirigenten Charles Munch. Das neue Werk, das bei dieser Gelegenheit aus der Taufe gehoben wurde, war die 1. Symphonie (in Es-Dur) des 35jährigen Pianisten Leo Smit, dessen sauber gearbeitete Klavierstücke schon bei früheren Gelegenheiten auffielen, der sich jetzt aber, gewissermaßen über Nacht, als beachtlicher Symphoniker erwies.

Noch ist es kein Meisterwerk und die Anlehnung an Strawinsky wird dem Hörer mitunter peinlich bewußt: doch dessen ungeachtet hat diese Symphonie Format; sie ist treffsicher gebaut, hat reiches Melodiengut und nimmt das Ohr des Hörers gefangen. Gelegentlich weist sie kammermusikalische Feinheit auf: man merkt dann, daß Leo Smit von der kleinen Form her kommt und sich im makroskopischen Bereich der Symphonie noch nicht voll auskennt, weshalb er es auch zuläßt — und Munch tat nichts, um dies zu ändern — daß die Instrumentengruppen einander gelegentlich zu stark überschatten. Die Hauptsache: Smit denkt symphonisch, er hat musikalisch frische Ideen, den Rest wird er sich, dessen sind wir gewiß, noch erarbeiten.

Die französische Pianistin Nicole Henriot war dann die sehr mitmenschlich wirkende Solistin in Prokofieffs 2. Klavierkonzert. Sie gab diesem virtuosen Werk, was ihm gebührt: Virtuosität, von Anfang bis Ende. Man bewunderte sie und empfand es gleichzeitig dankbar, daß sie sich durch die gewaltigen technischen Schwierigkeiten nicht verleiten ließ, die Seele des Werks außer Acht zu lassen (wie es so oft das Schicksal Prokofieffs ist). Hier spielte eine Künstlerin, die machtvoll in die Tasten griff und dennoch Wesen und Wert dieses Werks empfindsam darstellte. Starken Beifall lohnte sie.

Charles Munch und das Orchester beendeten den Abend mit einer gut gelungenen Wiedergabe der 4. Symphonie Beethovens.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Post & Times Herald
Circ. D. 380,624 - S. 410,185
FEB 24 1957

Symphony Music Has Been Greatly Diminished

(This is the second in a series of articles on the future of the National Symphony.)

By Paul Hume

LAST WEEK we raised the question of how many concerts the National Symphony Orchestra might provide its subscribers for next season.

This present year it offered a series of fifteen concerts, in pairs, to Tuesday and Wednesday night subscribers. Of these, the National Symphony played eleven, the Philadelphia two, and the Boston one, with one ballet program by the Royal Danish Ballet.

Hume

In the season 1955-56, the National Symphony sold 3888 season tickets for its own concerts. This season it sold around 4800 season tickets for its National-Philadelphia-Boston series. But these concerts are played in pairs, meaning that the audience is divided each time into two audiences.

Thus there have been some fairly lean houses a number of nights this winter, though the two Boston Symphony concerts sold out, and the Philadelphia concerts on the series were very well filled also. But on the night of the first two concerts the Philadelphia Orchestra is playing here this year NOT on the series, there were only 1800 paid admissions. So 1300 free tickets were given out because the National Symphony did not want Constitution Hall to be less than half full for the Philadelphia Orchestra.

AS WE HAVE already pointed out, the second Boston Symphony concert was sold out and people turned away for a program of two very modern works, plus the 4th symphony of Beethoven. Taking these various facts together, we come to some definite conclusions, and to some that are opinions we hold strongly.

We think that the people of Washington want to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra whatever it plays, and would welcome it, ON the series, for several more than two concerts. We think the people of Washington want to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra, almost without regard for what it plays, ON the series, but will not buy tickets in large quantity for its single non-series concerts.

We think the people of Washington would buy a longer series with more programs by the National Symphony if there were not pairs of concerts, and would give a fuller house each concert than is produced for most of the paired concerts.

We continue to think what we said last year: that the National Symphony management is way off the beam if they don't think this city can support an orchestral concert every week during the regular winter season.

THE NATIONAL Symphony is second to none in the country in the number of concerts it plays for younger audiences. Its children's concerts and the unique series so generously provided by Mrs. Merriweather Post for high school students give the orchestra a distinctive position of leadership in the entire field of concerts for the coming generation.

We feel, on the other hand, that it is the adults in the area that the National Symphony is neglecting. For one thing, the orchestra simply cannot play enough pieces of music in a season of eleven major subscription concerts to give the city an adequate sampling of the vast literature available.

We do hope, in view of the fact that concerts in pairs are a decided economic success for the National Symphony, that if it is determined on a policy of retaining the dual programs each week, it will substantially increase the number of weeks it plays, starting next fall. The central core of our concert life should be the symphonic music we hear in live performances at regular intervals. As serious a diminishing of this core as we have suffered during the present season is not to be tolerated another year.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
FEB 12 1957

Humor

Munch

Two slightly daft people were playing a little game. "What have I got here?" asked one with his hands cupped.

"Three Navy patrol bombers."

The first one looked carefully into his hands. "Nope."

"The Empire State Building?"

"Nope."

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra?"

The first looked into his hands again and said slyly, "Who's conducting?"—Telephone Topics.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 8 1957

Gino Cioffi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday and Saturday, Feb. 15 and 16. He will also play at the open rehearsal Thursday night, Feb. 14.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
FEB 10 1957

Gino Cioffi Symphony Soloist In Mozart Clarinet Concerto

At the 15th pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Charles Munch will present performances of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto. Gino Cioffi, first clarinet of the orchestra since 1950, will be the soloist and will play his own cadenza for the work.

Mr. Cioffi was born in Naples, Italy, graduated from the Naples Conservatory and arrived in the United States in 1937. Prior to joining the Boston Symphony, he was a principal in the Orchestras of Pittsburgh, Cleveland, New York Radio City, the Metropolitan Opera and the N.B.C. Symphony under the late Arturo Toscanini. In addition to his duties with the orchestra, Mr. Cioffi is an instructor in clarinet at the New England Conservatory of Music and the Boston University College of Music.

Dr. Munch will open the programs of next Friday and Saturday with Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and close with the Tone Poem of Richard Strauss, "Ein Heldenleben," in which the violin solo will be played by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

Dr. Munch will also conduct the orchestra's fifth concert of the Tuesday evening series in Symphony Hall on Feb. 12. The program will consist of Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme of Frank Bridge; a suite from Prokofieff's ballet "Romeo and Juliet"; Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

The movements of the Prokofieff suite, which are drawn from his two published suites, are different from those performed by Dr. Munch at the concerts of Feb. 1 and 2, and are as follows; Romeo and Juliet's Parting; Romeo at the Fountain; Morning Dance; Aubade; Romeo at Juliet's Tomb, and Juliet's Death.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the season will take place on Thursday, Feb. 14 at 7:30, when Charles Munch will conduct and Gino Cioffi will be the soloist.

Friends Meeting

A special meeting open to Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held on Thursday afternoon in Symphony Hall at 4 o'clock. Colored slides of the orchestra's recent European trip, including the visit to the Soviet Union, will be shown by Edward Fitzgerald, Boston chief of United Press News Pictures, who accompanied the orchestra as official photographer.

GINO CIOFFI, principal clarinet of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at the concerts of next Friday and Saturday.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
FEB 10 1957

MUNCH CONDUCTS PROKOFIEFF WORK

Boston Orchestra, With Nicole Henriot as Soloist, Repeats Piano Concerto No. 2

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, with the pianist Nicole Henriot again appearing as soloist in the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2. The work had been heard on Boston Symphony programs earlier in the week.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra also played Britten's "Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge" and the Brahms First Symphony, two works that could well have been written expressly to display the brilliant, elastic string tone of the Boston players.

In the "Aria Italiana" section of the Britten work the Boston violins managed a feat achieved by few orchestras—that of performing with the precision and unanimity of a single immensely magnified violin. "String tone" as a rule is just sufficiently out of unison to make hearers conscious of the instrumental mass, but on this occasion it was no exaggeration to say that the violins played as one. Even the sustained harmonic at the close of the section was not marred by a single unsteady bow.

Mr. Munch, most urbane of conductors, as usual gave the impression of guiding the orchestra rather than propelling it forcibly through the music. The Brahms First was done with real splendor of sound. J. B.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Dienstag, 12. Februar 1957

Munch dirigiert neue Symphonie

Ein neuer Symphoniker ist geboren: das war das Hauptergebnis des siebenten diesjährigen Konzerts der Boston Symphony, dieses Mal wieder unter ihrem ständigen Dirigenten Charles Munch. Das neue Werk, das bei dieser Gelegenheit aus der Taufe gehoben wurde, war die 1. Symphonie (in Es-Dur) des 35jährigen Pianisten Leo Smit, dessen sauber gearbeitete Klavierstücke schon bei früheren Gelegenheiten auffielen, der sich jetzt aber, gewissermaßen über Nacht, als beachtlicher Symphoniker auswies.

Noch ist es kein Meisterwerk und die Anlehnung an Stravinsky wird dem Hörer mitunter peinlich bewußt: doch dessen ungeachtet hat diese Symphonie Format; sie ist treffsicher gebaut, hat reiches Melodiengut und nimmt das Ohr des Hörers gefangen. Gelegentlich weist sie kammermusikalische Feinheit auf: man merkt dann, daß Leo Smit von der kleinen Form her kommt und sich im makroskopischen Bereich der Symphonie noch nicht voll auskennt, weshalb er es auch zuläßt — und Munch tat nichts, um dies zu ändern — daß die Instrumentengruppen einander gelegentlich zu stark überschatten. Die Hauptsache: Smit denkt symphonisch, er hat musikalisch frische Ideen, den Rest wird er sich, dessen sind wir gewiß noch erarbeiten.

Die französische Pianistin Nicole Henriot war dann die sehr männlich wirkende Solistin in Prokofieffs 2. Klavierkonzert. Sie gab diesem virtuosen Werk, was ihm gebührt: Virtuosität, von Anfang bis Ende. Man bewunderte sie und empfand es gleichzeitig dankbar, daß sie sich durch die gewaltigen technischen Schwierigkeiten nicht verleiten ließ, die Seele des Werks außer Acht zu lassen (wie es so oft das Schicksal Prokofieffs ist). Hier spielte eine Künstlerin, die machtvoll in die Tasten griff und dennoch Wesen und Wert dieses Werks empfindsam darstellte. Starken Beifall lohnte sie.

Charles Munch und das Orchester beendeten den Abend mit einer gut gelungenen Wiedergabe der 4. Symphonie Beethovens.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Post & Times Herald
Circ. D. 380,624 - S. 410,185
FEB 24 1957

Symphony Music Has Been Greatly Diminished

(This is the second in a series of articles on the future of the National Symphony.)

By Paul Hume

LAST WEEK we raised the question of how many concerts the National Symphony Orchestra might provide its subscribers for next season.

This present year it offered a series of fifteen concerts, in pairs, to Tuesday and Wednesday night subscribers. Of these, the National Symphony played eleven, the Philadelphia two, and the Boston one, with one ballet program by the Royal Danish Ballet.

Hume

In the season 1955-56, the National Symphony sold 3888 season tickets for its own concerts. This season it sold around 4800 season tickets for its National-Philadelphia-Boston series. But these concerts are played in pairs, meaning that the audience is divided each time into two audiences.

Thus there have been some fairly lean houses a number of nights this winter, though the two Boston Symphony concerts sold out, and the Philadelphia concerts on the series were very well filled also. But on the night of the first two concerts the Philadelphia Orchestra is playing here this year NOT on the series, there were only 1800 paid admissions. So 1300 free tickets were given out because the National Symphony did not want Constitution Hall to be less than half full for the Philadelphia Orchestra.

AS WE HAVE already pointed out, the second Boston Symphony concert was sold out and people turned away for a program of two very modern works, plus the 4th symphony of Beethoven. Taking these various facts together, we come to some definite conclusions, and to some that are opinions we hold strongly.

We think that the people of Washington want to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra whatever it plays, and would welcome it, ON the series, for several more than two concerts. We think the people of Washington want to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra, almost without regard for what it plays, ON the series, but will not buy tickets in large quantity for its single, non-series concerts.

We think the people of Washington would buy a longer series with more programs by the National Symphony if there were not pairs of concerts, and would give a fuller house each concert than is produced for most of the paired concerts.

We continue to think what we said last year: that the National Symphony management is way off the beam if they don't think this city can support an orchestral concert every week during the regular winter season.

THE NATIONAL Symphony is second to none in the country in the number of concerts it plays for younger audiences. Its children's concerts and the unique series so generously provided by Mrs. Merriweather Post for high school students give the orchestra a distinctive position of leadership in the entire field of concerts for the coming generation.

We feel, on the other hand, that it is the adults in the area that the National Symphony is neglecting. For one thing, the orchestra simply cannot play enough pieces of music in a season of eleven major subscription concerts to give the city an adequate sampling of the vast literature available.

We do hope, in view of the fact that concerts in pairs are a decided economic success for the National Symphony, that if it is determined on a policy of retaining the dual programs each week, it will substantially increase the number of weeks it plays, starting next fall. The central core of our concert life should be the symphonic music we hear in live performances at regular intervals. As serious a diminishing of this core as we have suffered during the present season is not to be tolerated another year.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
FEB 12 1957

Humor

Munch

Two slightly daft people were playing a little game. "What have I got here?" asked one with his hands cupped.

"Three Navy patrol bombers."

The first one looked carefully into his hands. "Nope."

"The Empire State Building?"

"Nope."

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra?"

The first looked into his hands again and said slyly, "Who's conducting?"—Telephone Topics.

204

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 16 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 15th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Gino Cioffi, clarinet. The program:

Overture to "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" ..... Mozart
Concerto for Clarinet in A (K. 622) ..... Mozart
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

By RUDOLPH ELIE

After seven years as first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gino Cioffi stepped forth yesterday afternoon to give us a memorial performance of Mozart's A major Clarinet Concerto. He had an enormous success, and no one ever deserved it more.

The concerto is a jewel of the most limpid beauty; Mozart at the very summit of his genius. Yet it is curious that he should have been so enamored of this instrument for which he also composed a Quintet of equal beauty, while at the same time he so thoroughly disliked the flute. At that time the clarinet was in a rudimentary state of development. It had but few keys, and owing to the narrower reed, it sounded considerably more like a trumpet in the distance than the present-day clarinet.

Amazing Sound

Some years ago a clarinetist demonstrated for me one corresponding roughly to those in use in Mozart's time, and a more piteous array of gasps and wheezes emitted by the instrument could hardly be imagined; we were both astonished that an instrumentalist could have negotiated the concerto at all. Significantly enough, however, Mozart did not include a cadenza in this work; the one in the slow movement yesterday was supplied—and very effectively—by Mr. Cioffi himself.

Be that as it may, the instrument today fulfills every promise Mozart may have had for it and, indeed, makes what must have been formidable problems for the instrumentalist of Mozart's time seem breathlessly easy. In any case, they certainly were in Mr. Cioffi's performance of the work. He commands a wide variety of tonal coloration, of subtle changes in vibrato and fingers of astonishing fleetness. His approach is exceedingly musical as well, and he phrased the succession of melodies with a deep sense of the lyrical. Mr. Munch, virtually without rival as an accompanying conductor, attained a marvelous balance throughout, giving the work a transparency and yet a warm, almost romantic glow to the textures of this superb work. Mr. Cioffi a man of the most modest bearing was called back to the stage four times.

The Last Word

It would seem to me that a case could be made out that Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" is the funniest work, both in conception and execution, in all music. From the moment the hero strides pompously onto the scene like some monumental blend of Napoleon and Hitler, this autobiographical piece springs one joke after another. The hero, of course, is Strauss himself, his eye dropped in a sly wink, his tongue in his cheek, but nonetheless deadly serious in his intent to slay the boobery all around him in the safe, unlibelous fabric of music.

He shows us his "helpmate" in action, as she chatters now sensibly, now incomprehensibly, but always shrilly in the solo violin while the poor hero gruffly responds in monosyllabic periods—and the "helpmate" always has the last word. Then he tears into his enemies and critics in a battle of titanic ferocity, in which he employs every devilish weapon to annihilate his adversaries, who end up in a shambles known nowhere save on the deck of a pirate ship.

There ensues a proud catalogue of the hero's achievements, among them "Don Quixote," "Also Sprach Zarathustra," "Death and Transfiguration" and a host of other of the hero's accomplishments. And finally, after a strangely sad and noble meditation on the loss to the world the death of the hero will be, he passes on to glory, 104 musicians providing an accompaniment that would seem to be capable of re-awakening the limp hero.

It is wonderful stuff, at once brash and sly, vindictive and cruel, but endlessly funny and endlessly musical, as well. This was the first time Mr. Munch has conducted the work here and he hurled himself into it with all the tempestuous vigor of the hero himself, providing, as a consequence, a striking musical experience . . . perhaps a little too striking at times for the benefit of an utterly clean performance.

Igor Markevitch returns next Friday to do a program offering Bach's "Ricercar," Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Moussorgsky's "Picture at an Exhibition."

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 16 1957

Mozart and Strauss at Symphony

Gino Cioffi Heard as Clarinet Soloist

By Harold Rogers

There are times when programs that look indifferent on paper turn out to be stimulating in the concert hall, and then again, there are times when quite the opposite is the case. Unfortunately the latter of these two situations occurred yesterday in Symphony Hall.

Charles Munch's program—the Overture to "Die Entfürung aus dem Serail" and the Clarinet Concerto of Mozart, plus Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben"—looked promising, though familiar, but in performance it was touch and go.

In the Mozart overture, for instance, it was disturbing to hear a few notes badly intoned (and is there any excuse for the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing out of tune?). Then, too, it was a casual and careless performance in matters of ensemble, and the triangle, which is supposed to supply a soupçon of Turkish delight, turned into a jangling nightmare.

Even so, there were some compensations — Gino Cioffi's solo work, for instance, in the Clarinet Concerto. He and Dr. Munch were not always together in the opening Allegro. There was nothing especially distinguished in this movement, but Mr. Cioffi and Dr. Munch reached a less earthbound level in the Adagio.

Here the orchestra achieved its usual buoyancy, its ability to sing with tenderness, while Mr. Cioffi spun out the phrases with technical security and an amiable tone. His cadenza in this movement was easily and flawlessly managed, and the final Rondo won him several rounds of excited applause. He is, as nearly everyone knows, the orchestra's principal clarinetist.

The last half of the concert was devoted to Strauss's masterful depiction of a hero's life (the composer's own)—a vast mural of tonal painting in which we are given scenes from his early struggles with his adversaries (the music critics), his love and marriage, his "works of peace" (in which Strauss quotes from many of his earlier tone poems), and the final fulfillment of his life's work.

But though Strauss himself has long triumphed over his critics, there are still portions of "Ein Heldenleben" that are not above criticism. The critics of 1899 may have thought him immodest in his admission that he was the hero, and his listeners may have thought him outrageously discordant. Today, however, we can easily forgive his desire to write a musical autobiography, and the critic who is upset by dissonance had better change his profession.

Yet the long violin solo—which represents a woman's voice at first willful, later tractable—is a vulnerable spot, quite dull in comparison with the rest of the work. At first the violin is intentionally out of key; later it becomes melodiously in consonance with the orchestra, and here Richard Burgin played superbly. Toward the very end, however—when the violin reappears for a brief solo—it was Mr. Burgin who was off key.

Otherwise the orchestra surged in magnificent post-Wagnerian splendor as the hero rode on from glory to glory, slaying his adversaries until there are, in his estimation, none left.

For this concert, however, there remains at least one.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

FEB 19 1957

Guest Conductor

IGOR MARKEVITCH will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Friday and Saturday concerts this week.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB 16 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Cioffi Soloist in Mozart

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA gave at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 15th program in the Friday–Saturday series. The program: Mozart: Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio"; Mozart: Clarinet Concerto in A major (K. 622), Gino Cioffi, soloist; Richard Strauss: Tone Poem, "A Hero's Life."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The clarinet is one of the most beautiful younger instruments of the orchestra, but apart from an occasional incidental solo, it is not often heard out of context with its woodwind associates. But when we do have opportunity to hear it in one of the pieces from the smallish solo-symphonic literature which does exist, the occasion is special. When the soloist is of the calibre of the Boston Symphony's admirable first clarinet, Gino Cioffi, the occasion is certain to be memorable.

I have never experienced a more enjoyable performance of the Mozart Clarinet Concerto than the one Mr. Cioffi achieved yesterday. He looked a trifle nervous when the piece began, but once he was into it, all was poised and all was beauty. First of all, Mr. Cioffi has a gentle, unforced tone, sweet but not flat, from the loveliness of the chalumeau register right on upward. This is not the big and somewhat hard resonance we have heard from certain other virtuosi of the instrument; it is the clarinet, in the hands of a master, singing naturally.

Mr. Cioffi's command of legato is prodigious. The word legato means, literally, "bound together," and in music indicates that the notes played thus should emerge in a measured, steady, even flow. With Mozart, legato is all-important, indeed it accounts for much of the songful grace of his melody. With Mr. Cioffi, every phrase was curved, and there were no angles; the style was impeccable and every phrase was a sensitive expression of the feeling in the melody.

The Mozart Concerto is more music than technical display, but when the rapid passages, the big leaps from low to high, and comparatively involved figurations came to the fore, Mr. Cioffi dealt with them gloriously. It was significant of his musicianship, too, that his own cadenza, interpolated in the slow movement, was musical and Mozartean, not fireworks. At the end, Mr. Cioffi received, most deservedly, a warm-hearted ovation, not alone from the audience, but from his colleagues of the orchestra, as well.

Mr. Munch had not conducted Strauss' "A Hero's Life" ("Ein Heldenleben") here before. He has never seemed greatly partial to the symphonic polyphony, tone-painting, storm, stress and amorous lingerings of Richard II, so his reading of this tone poem had aroused much anticipation. Would it be a Gallic reading, or, like the Munch performance of Bach, something between France and Germany?

As I heard it, the performance was closer to German, with the proper weight of both tone and style, and in all respects it was forceful and euphonious. It was not the finest imaginable account of "Ein Heldenleben," for some of those fiendishly difficult pages of orchestral polyphony were not clear. They require a good bit of doing, which in turn requires more conducting of Strauss than Munch has essayed during his Boston years. I did not hear by any means all the tuns of "The Hero's Works of Peace," and accordingly felt somewhat short-changed, for this section is one of Strauss' great miracles.

Nonetheless, there was great splendor of sound through the whole course of "Ein Heldenleben," barring a few things that went awry. The principal virtue of the performance was its drive and brilliance. Perhaps the clarity and refinement which this music also needs will be more in evidence next time Munch plays the score—and I much hope he will.

Mozart's "Seraglio" Overture went well, and it was not too loud or too purely theatrical.

Next week Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor, presenting his own arrangement of a Ricercar from Bach's "A Musical Offering"; Schubert's Symphony No. 3, in D Major (new to these concerts); Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 16 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 15th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Gino Cioffi, clarinet. The program:

Overture to "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" ..... Mozart
Concerto for Clarinet in A (K. 622) ..... Mozart
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

By RUDOLPH ELIE

After seven years as first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gino Cioffi stepped forth yesterday afternoon to give us a memorial performance of Mozart's A major Clarinet Concerto. He had an enormous success, and no one ever deserved it more.

The concerto is a jewel of the most limpid beauty; Mozart at the very summit of his genius. Yet it is curious that he should have been so enamored of this instrument for which he also composed a Quintet of equal beauty, while at the same time he so thoroughly disliked the flute. At that time the clarinet was in a rudimentary state of development. It had but few keys, and owing to the narrower reed, it sounded considerably more like a trumpet in the distance than the present-day clarinet.

Amazing Sound

Some years ago a clarinetist demonstrated for me one corresponding roughly to those in use in Mozart's time, and a more piteous array of gasps and wheezes emitted by the instrument could hardly be imagined; we were both astonished that an instrumentalist could have negotiated the concerto at all. Significantly enough, however, Mozart did not include a cadenza in this work; the one in the slow movement yesterday was supplied—and very effectively—by Mr. Cioffi himself.

Be that as it may, the instrument today fulfills every promise Mozart may have had for it and, indeed, makes what must have been formidable problems for the instrumentalist of Mozart's time seem breathlessly easy. In any case, they certainly were in Mr. Cioffi's performance of the work. He commands a wide variety of tonal coloration, of subtle changes in vibrato and fingers of astonishing fleetness. His approach is exceedingly musical as well, and he phrased the succession of melodies with a deep sense of the lyrical. Mr. Munch, virtually without rival as an accompanying conductor, attained a marvelous balance throughout, giving the work a transparency and yet a warm, almost romantic glow to the textures of this superb work. Mr. Cioffi a man of the most modest bearing was called back to the stage four times.

The Last Word

It would seem to me that a case could be made out that Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" is the funniest work, both in conception and execution, in all music. From the moment the hero strides pompously onto the scene like some monumental blend of Napoleon and Hitler, this autobiographical piece springs one joke after another. The hero, of course, is Strauss himself, his eye dropped in a sly wink, his tongue in his check, but nonetheless deadly serious in his intent to slay the boobery all around him in the safe, unlibelous fabric of music.

He shows us his "helpmate" in action, as she chatters now sensibly, now incomprehensibly, but always shrilly in the solo violin while the poor hero gruffly responds in monosyllabic periods—and the "helpmate" always has the last word. Then he tears into his enemies and critics in a battle of titantic ferocity, in which he employs every devilish weapon to annihilate his adversaries, who end up in a shambles known nowhere save on the deck of a pirate ship.

There ensues a proud catalogue of the hero's achievements, among them "Don Quixote," "Also Sprach Zarathustra," "Death and Transfiguration" and a host of other of the hero's accomplishments. And finally, after a suitably sad and noble meditation on the loss to the world the death of the hero will be, he passes on to glory, 104 musicians providing an accompaniment that would seem to be capable of re-awakening the limp hero.

It is wonderful stuff, at once brash and sly, vindictive and cruel, but endlessly funny and endlessly musical, as well. This was the first time Mr. Munch has conducted the work here and he hurled himself into it with all the tempestuous vigor of the hero himself, providing, as a consequence, a striking musical experience . . . perhaps a little too striking at times for the benefit of an utterly clean performance.

Igor Markevitch returns next Friday to do a program offering Bach's "Ricercar," Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Moussorgsky's "Picture at an Exhibition."

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 16 1957

Mozart and Strauss at Symphony

Gino Cioffi Heard as Clarinet Soloist

By Harold Rogers

There are times when programs that look indifferent on paper turn out to be stimulating in the concert hall, and then again, there are times when quite the opposite is the case. Unfortunately the latter of these two situations occurred yesterday in Symphony Hall.

Charles Munch's program—the Overture to "Die Entfürung aus dem Serail" and the Clarinet Concerto of Mozart, plus Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" — looked promising, though familiar, but in performance it was touch and go.

In the Mozart overture, for instance, it was disturbing to hear a few notes badly intoned (and is there any excuse for the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing out of tune?). Then, too, it was a casual and careless performance in matters of ensemble, and the triangle, which is supposed to supply a soupçon of Turkish delight, turned into a jangling nightmare.

Even so, there were some compensations — Gino Cioffi's solo work, for instance, in the Clarinet Concerto. He and Dr. Munch were not always together in the opening Allegro. There was nothing especially distinguished in this movement, but Mr. Cioffi and Dr. Munch reached a less earthbound level in the Adagio.

Here the orchestra achieved its usual buoyancy, its ability to sing with tenderness, while Mr. Cioffi spun out the phrases with technical security and an amiable tone. His cadenza in this movement was easily and flawlessly managed, and the final Rondo won him several rounds of excited applause. He is, as nearly everyone knows, the orchestra's principal clarinetist.

The last half of the concert was devoted to Strauss's masterful depiction of a hero's life (the composer's own)—a vast mural of tonal painting in which we are given scenes from his early struggles with his adversaries (the music critics), his love and marriage, his "works of peace" (in which Strauss quotes from many of his earlier tone poems), and the final fulfillment of his life's work.

But though Strauss himself has long triumphed over his critics, there are still portions of "Ein Heldenleben" that are not above criticism. The critics of 1899 may have thought him immodest in his admission that he was the hero, and his listeners may have thought him outrageously discordant. Today, however, we can easily forgive his desire to write a musical autobiography, and the critic who is upset by dissonance had better change his profession.

Yet the long violin solo—which represents a woman's voice at first willful, later tractable — is a vulnerable spot, quite dull in comparison with the rest of the work. At first the violin is intentionally out of key; later it becomes melodiously in consonance with the orchestra, and here Richard Burgin played superbly. Toward the very end, however—when the violin reappears for a brief solo—it was Mr. Burgin who was off key.

Otherwise the orchestra surged in magnificent post-Wagnerian splendor as the hero rode on from glory to glory, slaying his adversaries until there are, in his estimation, none left.

For this concert, however, there remains at least one.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

FEB 19 1957

Guest Conductor

IGOR MARKEVITCH will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Friday and Saturday concerts this week.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB 16 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Cioffi Soloist in Mozart

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conducting, gave at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 15th program in the Friday–Saturday series. The program: Mozart: Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio"; Mozart: Clarinet Concerto in A major (K. 622), Gino Cioffi, soloist; Richard Strauss: Tone Poem, "A Hero's Life."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The clarinet is one of the most beautiful younger instruments of the orchestra, but apart from an occasional incidental solo, it is not often heard out of context with its woodwind associates. But when we do have opportunity to hear it in one of the pieces from the smallish solo-symphonic literature which does exist, the occasion is special. When the soloist is of the calibre of the Boston Symphony's admirable first clarinet, Gino Cioffi, the occasion is certain to be memorable.

I have never experienced a more enjoyable performance of the Mozart Clarinet Concerto than the one Mr. Cioffi achieved yesterday. He looked a trifle nervous when the piece began, but once he was into it, all was poised and all was beauty. First of all, Mr. Cioffi has a gentle, unforced tone, sweet but not flat, from the loveliness of the chalumeau register right on upward. This is not the big and somewhat hard resonance we have heard from certain other virtuosi of the instrument; it is the clarinet, in the hands of a master, singing naturally.

Mr. Cioffi's command of legato is prodigious. The word legato means, literally, "bound together," and in music, indicates that the notes played thus should emerge in a measured, steady, even flow. With Mozart, legato is all-important, for it accounts for much of the songful grace of his melody. With Mr. Cioffi, every phrase was curved, and there were no angles; the style was impeccable and every phrase was a sensitive expression of the feeling in the melody.

The Mozart Concerto is more music than technical display, but when the rapid passages, the big leaps from low to high, and comparatively involved figurations came to the fore, Mr. Cioffi dealt with them gloriously. It was significant of his musicianship, too, that his own cadenza, interpolated in the slow movement, was musical and Mozartean, not fireworks. At the end, Mr. Cioffi received, most deservedly, a warm-hearted ovation, not alone from the audience, but from his colleagues of the orchestra, as well.

Mr. Munch had not conducted Strauss' "A Hero's Life" ("Ein Heldenleben") here before. He has never seemed greatly partial to the symphonic polyphony, tone-painting, storm, stress and amorous lingerings of Richard II, so his reading of this tone poem had aroused much anticipation. Would it be a Gallic reading, or, like the Munch performance of Bach, something between France and Germany?

As I heard it, the performance was closer to Germany, with the proper weight of both tone and style, and in all respects it was forceful and euphonious. It was not the finest imaginable account of "Ein Heldenleben," for some of those fiendishly difficult passages of orchestral polyphony were not clear. They require a good bit of doing, which in turn requires more conducting of Strauss than Munch has essayed during his Boston years. I did not hear, by any means all the tuns of "The Hero's Works of Peace," and accordingly felt somewhat short-changed. But this section is one of Strauss' great miracles.

Nonetheless, there was much splendor of sound throughout the whole course of "Ein Heldenleben," barring a few things that went awry. The principal failure of the performance was its delicacy and brilliance. Perhaps the clarity and refinement which this music also needs will be more in evidence next time Munch plays the score—and I much hope he will.

Mozart's "Seraglio" Overture went well, and it was not too loud or too purely theatrical.

Next week Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor, presenting his own arrangement of a Ricercar from Bach's "A Musical Offering," Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D Major (new to these concerts), Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 19 1957

Jae Guy

Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Igor Markevitch Probes Musical Problems

By Harold Rogers

Igor Markevitch is a man with a legato mind. That is to say, his manner of thought, speech, and action runs counter to the staccato tempo of our times.

Through his questing intellect, probing logically for the basic cause of many musical problems, he has found some arresting answers. In recent years, for example, he noticed that few of the orchestras he has conducted have been able to play a true legato—a smooth and sustained musical phrase. His reasons for this deficiency make sense.

"One cannot play legato without thinking legato," he explained yesterday afternoon. (He flew into Boston from San Francisco yesterday morning in time to conduct the Boston Symphony in rehearsal.) "Unless a musician can think consecutively, without permitting his mind to wander, he will not be able to play a true legato. But few musicians nowadays can do this, because they are distracted by the confusion of our times."

He was especially happy, he said, with the string section of the Boston Symphony, which he considers one of the finest. He places the Boston Symphony strings on a par with those of the Berlin Philharmonic, and he derives deep satisfaction from the legato these orchestras achieve.

These two ensembles, he explained, have a 75-year history, a long-standing tradition that enables them to remain aloof from many of the disturbances most other orchestras face. The musicians of the Boston and the Berlin groups have a sense of security and of continuity that permits them to play without undue preoccupation. And this is why they can still play legato.

Another example of Mr. Markevitch's legato thinking is to be found in some of the events leading up to his arrangement of Bach's Musical Offering, the six-part fugue of which he will introduce at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

During the war while he was conductor of the orchestra in Florence, he began to wonder why 16 violins playing together did not make 16 times as much sound as one violin. Then he reasoned that one pebble, if dropped in a pond, would produce an unbroken set of concentric rings, but that if two pebbles were dropped side by side, the two sets of rings would interfere with each other, or even cancel each other.

One day at a rehearsal he decided to experiment by scattering his violins throughout the hall—some widely spaced on stage, the others in the auditorium. The effect, he said, was surprising. There was a great gain in volume.

A few years ago, then, when he began work on his orchestration of the Musical Offering, he decided to make use of these findings. He wanted to keep the number of musicians small, somewhat in the manner of the Brandenburg Concertos, because he wanted his arrangement to be in the true spirit of Bach. Yet, he also wanted the rich sonorities of a modern orchestra.

He decided to make his arrangement for three small orchestras, the total number of players not exceeding 42. These three orchestras are spread out over the stage so that each instrument will be able to function at its maximum of efficiency. He feels that the listeners this weekend will be surprised to find so much sound coming from only 42 players.

Last summer Mr. Markevitch conducted at Hollywood Bowl, at Ravinia in Chicago, and at Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia. He is impressed by the American summer music festivals — by their availability to thousands on a low-cost basis. He hopes that someday the same opportunities will be made to the public in Europe. At the present time, however, European music festivals function for the privileged few who can afford to pay high prices.

Mr. Markevitch feels that today no conductor can be fully prepared for his profession without having conducted in the United States. Much can be learned from American orchestras, he said. He has been impressed by the ability of Americans to prepare concerts with fewer rehearsals, often with but one.

Although as yet he has not accepted a permanent post, he said he would consider any opening that offered an opportunity to build something worthwhile. One has the feeling that with Mr. Markevitch's legato thinking, whatever he builds will be firmly grounded and architecturally sound.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 21 1957

Zimbler Sinfonietta Opens 8th Season

Two American Premières on Program

By Harold Rogers

The Zimbler Sinfonietta opened its eighth season last night with a program divided evenly between the baroque and modern periods. Among the items selected by Josef Zimbler, the ensemble's artistic director, were two American premières. Jordan Hall was comfortably filled with the usual distinguished audience that lends its support and enthusiasm to these concerts.

The first of these premières was, surprisingly enough, the Overture in D major by Johann Bernhard Bach, a cousin of Johann Sebastian. It is to be found among the many excellent works brought to light by Karl Geiringer in his book, "The Bach Family," and Dr. Geiringer was to be found among the listeners last night.

The designation "overture," in this case, is something of a misnomer, for the work is actually a suite of pieces called Ouverture, Marche, Passepieds (1 and 2), Air, La Joye, and Caprice. But, as Leonard Burkat pointed out in his succinct program notes, the present title is apparently the result of the careless custom of referring to a set of pieces by the title of its first.

The musicians gave it a vigorous performance. We need hardly wonder why Johann Sebastian's monumentality was not fully recognized by the public of his day, especially when he had such excellent competition from family members like Johann Bernhard. The latter's structural dexterity and style are eminently admirable.

The second première was the Concertante for English Horn and Strings, Op. 13, by a young British composer, Peter Racine Fricker. This man, to judge by this one work, is something of a Bartókian atonalist—that is, there are passages that suggest the 12-tone writing of Alban Berg, and others that are more tonal in their reflection of the Bartók of the final years.

This one-movement work displays some elegant writing for the English horn; and Louis Speyer—long noted as the principal English horn soloist of the Boston Symphony — covered himself with glory last night as he spun out the eloquent phrases. His solos were articulated against a fabric of strings that oscillated with complexities of shimmering dissonance.

After the intermission the concert continued with a Suite for String Orchestra, arranged by Ettore Bonelli from pieces by the Italian baroque composer, Francesco Maria Veracini. Here again one could not help being struck by the originality expressed by the Italians of this period. Bonelli, whose latter-day arrangement was made from parts of Veracini's violin sonatas, deserves much credit for maintaining authenticity of style.

The performance, however, lacked something of the polish and finesse of the Italian string ensembles we have heard in Boston, but it was nevertheless enjoyable for its freshness and for the spirit of discovery it manifested. Perhaps the Zimbler players (who are all members of the Boston Symphony) find it difficult, if not impossible, to scale their playing down to the dimensions of a chamber orchestra, at least when not accompanying soloists.

With a soloist, however, the group is properly subdued, as they were in the Fricker and again in Honegger's Concerto da Camera for Flute, English horn, and Strings. Commissioned in 1948 by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge expressly for Mr. Speyer, it was written in Honegger's final period of profound introspection. Yet there is still the light touch, as we heard in the Vivace, especially in the filigree of the flute that James Pappoutsakis deftly inscribed.

Both soloists were so roundly applauded that they repeated the Vivace as an extra.

HANOVER, PA. EVENING SUN
Feb 23 '57

MUSIC

Mrs. Lillian Powell Bonney has announced a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric Theater, Baltimore, on March 21. It will be directed by Charles Munch, its eminent French Music Director. Tickets available at the Bonney Concert Bureau, 327 N. Charles Street.

When Charles Munch, a native of Strasbourg, came to this Orchestra in the autumn of 1949, he was known as one of the foremost musicians of France, and had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris. Through his years here his American public have come to know and admire him as completely dedicated to his art, a musician oblivious to outward show, who is not only absorbed by the music he is conducting but possessed by it, who can penetrate and communicate it as perhaps no other conductor living.

Not a symphony orchestra in the world is quite so busy as this one. The winter season of thirty weeks in Symphony Hall, the Orchestra's Boston home, end with April, and then begins, under Arthur Fielder, the Pops season of sixty concerts. There follow two weeks of free open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, and the six weeks (in July and early August) of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts. In 1952 the Orchestra toured Europe, in 1953, went westward as far as San Francisco, in 1956, eastward as far as Moscow, the first American Orchestra ever to play in the U. S. S. R.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's appearance here is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will find Eugene Ormandy traveling to New England to direct the Boston Orchestra on the same days.

For his debut with the Philadelphians, the Alsatian-born conductor is presenting a concert of French music. The program will offer Berlioz' Love Scene from the Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite for Orchestra, "Le Tombeau de Couperin" and the Orchestra's premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra will be heard Monday evening in a repeat performance of the "All-Viennese" program given earlier this month. The concert includes Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, in E flat major — "Romantic," Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and the "Wine, Women, and Song" Waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka and the "Voices of Spring" Waltz, all by Johann Strauss, Jr.

The same program will be presented at the Lyric Theater, Baltimore, next Wednesday evening.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
FEB 21 1957

Music in Review

BSO'S Cioffi Plays Mozart Work

By GERALD A. BERLIN

This corner has often lamented a certain practice of symphony managements that by now has become much too deeply entrenched. And that is the notion of using almost exclusively as instrumental soloists with the orchestra one or other of the familiar virtuosi of the violin or piano, who in turn usually perform yet once more one of the standard concertos for those instruments. Meanwhile, great solo works for less heralded instruments, and the fine artists in the orchestra's own ranks who could play them, remain unsung.

No more apt and sad example of this phenomenon can be found than the history of the performances over the years of Mozart's great Clarinet Concerto at the Boston Symphony concerts. This last concerto by Mozart is among his greater works in the form. Its size and proportion, its eloquence of phrasing, its tender admixture of eagerness, charm and poignancy, and its incredible exploitation of the possibilities of the solo instrument all militate to place it in a select group of Mozart concertos that include perhaps a relatively few of the ones for piano and the Symphonia concertante for violin and viola, but no more. Yet last week-end's performance was only the third in the BSO's entire existence and the first since the late Victor Polatschek played it in 1930.

The soloist was Gino Cioffi, whose golden tone, refinement of style and faultless technique have lent grace to the orchestra's proceedings ever since he first arrived to take over the first clarinet chair in 1950. Mr. Cioffin made it sound easy. This, however, is an illusion, for like nearly all great Mozart, the clarinet concerto is phrased so clearly and straightforwardly that the slightest imperfection in its rendition is magnified in the listener's consciousness many times over. Mr. Cioffi's playing itself was in unimpeachable good taste, without any of that intruding "interpretation" that vulgarizes performances like Reginald Kell's.

I, for one would have been more pleased if his over-all approach had been less modest and retiring, if he had eschewed the anachronistic and senselessly ornate cadenza he wrote for the lovely Adagio, and if Mr. Munch had not cut the tuttis, thereby giving the effect of an inadequate frame for a beautiful picture. But these are minor matters. The management cannot but be pleased with the outcome of this venture and no doubt has advised Mr. Voisin to get the Haydn Trumpet Concerto ready.

Just before the turn of the century, when many of those formidable virtuosi aforementioned were playing those same concerti in knee-pants, Richard Strauss' conversion to the new German school of "Musik als Ausdruck" — musical expressionism—had culminated in his celebrated series of tone poems. Controversy over the audacious pieces raged fiercely in all European musical centers, and "Ein Heldenleben" ("A Hero's Life"—i.e., the symphonic evocation of the life, loves and triumphs of R. Strauss) was the subject of some particularly extravagant commentary. Thus, so redoubtable an observer as the young Roger Sessions, writing in the Harvard Musical Review in 1915, could place Strauss' idea of the hero on a plane comparable with Beethoven's in the "Eroica" and found in the battle scene "a frenetic climax . . . (that) almost hurts us from our seats and sends cold chills down our backs." Others conversely found its self-glorification and exuberantly undiscriminating sensuality unbearable. As Mr. Burk's program notes sensibly put it: "Shocking audacities have a way of losing their edge and interest as the next generation, and the next, come along. All that is finally asked is the worth of the music—as music."

Applying that test again last week end to this huge and ornate old musical tapestry, I found that its splendors by now have largely faded, though the melodic power, the variety of description, the inventiveness and the serenity of the conclusion continue to invest it with a considerable amount of vitality.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra negotiated the stupendous convolutions of the monstrously intricate score with all the aplomb of a Strauss hero.

Juillard Quartet

The Juillard Quartet's preeminence in the playing of contemporary string quartets is common knowledge. From as far back as a decade or more I can recall this group, seemingly composed of mere boys, tossing off with infinite polish, verve and brilliance the fiendish difficulties of a Bartok or a Schoenberg score. Their place in the chamber music scheme of things, it rather seemed, was restricted to the role of specialists in the modern idiom, of apostles of the future; and any truck with the older literature was chiefly to provide cushions of acceptance for their specialties.

Yet here is the Juillard Quartet returned, looking as we all do somewhat middle-aged and doing a program that is Old Guard rather than avant-garde and displaying a mellowness, sensitivity, balance, secureness, refinement and depth of musicianship that place it without peer among our native American quartets and would seem to put it among the handful of quartets to be found anywhere. This much was plain whether as shown in the unquestionable refinement, charm and purity of their reading of Mozart's G-major Quartet, K. 387; the extent to which they managed to plumb the profound peace and resignation of Beethoven's F-major Quartet, Opus 135, or the joyously lyrical ease and naturalness of their collaboration with the distinguished local pianist, Gregory Tucker, in a stunning traversal of Dvorak's ingenious A-major Quintet.

Approximately 1100 persons heard this concert at M.I.T.'s Kresge Auditorium last Sunday afternoon. That so large an audience withstood the competing blandishments on the same day of Myra Hess, Gyorgy Sandor, and Luise Vosgerchian must stand as a tribute to the artists and their program, the concert setting and the breadth of the public acceptance of the M.I.T. Humanities Series of which the concert was a part.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
FEB 24 1957

MUSICAL TURNABOUT

Munch to Philadelphia; Ormandy Is Guest Here

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Mr. Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for a very large orchestra, and is in three parts: Declaration, chorale and finale. Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November, 1955, and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956.

The second work on the program will be the symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th century German painter, Matthias Gruenewald, who is the opera's central figure. "Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December, 1934, and most recently in November, 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

EUGENE ORMANDY is the week's guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
FEB 25 1957

Munch, Ormandy Swap Podiums

Eugene Ormandy will conduct the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2.

While Ormandy is in Boston Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The second work will be the Symphony "Mathis der Maler," by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
FEB 24 1957

EUGENE ORMANDY, who will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this week.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
FEB 24 1957

Symphony Programs For the Coming Week

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2, the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a government department has commissioned a symphonic work. The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 52,155
FEB 24 1957

Ormandy Will Conduct

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Feb. 23 — At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday night the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Mr. Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the U. S. Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in U. S. history that a Government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for a very large orchestra, and is in three parts: "Declaration," "Chorale" and "Finale." Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November 1955 and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March 1956.

The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith.

This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th Century German painter, Matthias Gruenewald, who is the opera's central figure.

"Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December 1934, and most recently in November 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

FEB 21 1957

Music in Review

BSO'S Cioffi Plays Mozart Work

By GERALD A. BERLIN

This corner has often lamented a certain practice of symphony managements that by now has become much too deeply entrenched. And that is the notion of using almost exclusively as instrumental soloists with the orchestra one or other of the familiar virtuosi of the violin or piano, who in turn usually perform yet once more one of the standard concertos for those instruments. Meanwhile, great solo works for less heralded instruments, and the fine artists in the orchestra's own ranks who could play them, remain unsung.

No more apt and sad example of this phenomenon can be found than the history of the performances over the years of Mozart's great Clarinet Concerto at the Boston Symphony concerts. This last concerto by Mozart is among his greater works in the form. Its size and proportion, its eloquence of phrasing, its tender admixture of eagerness, charm and poignancy, and its incredible exploitation of the possibilities of the solo instrument all militate to place it in a select group of Mozart concertos that include perhaps a relatively few of the ones for piano and the Symphonia concertante for violin and viola, but no more. Yet last week-end's performance was only the third in the BSO's entire existence and the first since the late Victor Polatschek played it in 1930.

The soloist was Gino Cioffi, whose golden tone, refinement of style and faultless technique have lent grace to the orchestra's proceedings ever since he first arrived to take over the first clarinet chair in 1950. Mr. Cioffin made it sound easy. This, however, is an illusion, for like nearly all great Mozart, the clarinet concerto is phrased so clearly and straightforwardly that the slightest imperfection in its rendition is magnified in the listener's consciousness many times over. Mr. Cioffi's playing itself was in unimpeachable good taste, without any of that intruding "interpretation" that vulgarizes performances like Reginald Kell's.

I, for one would have been more pleased if his over-all approach had been less modest and retiring, if he had eschewed the anachronistic and senselessly ornate cadenza he wrote for the lovely Adagio, and if Mr. Munch had not cut the tuttis, thereby giving the effect of an inadequate frame for a beautiful picture. But these are minor matters. The management cannot but be pleased with the outcome of this venture and no doubt has advised Mr. Voisin to get the Haydn Trumpet Concerto ready.

Just before the turn of the century, when many of those formidable virtuosi aforementioned were playing those same concerti in knee-pants, Richard Strauss' conversion to the new German school of "Musik als Ausdruck" — musical expressionism—had culminated in his celebrated series of tone poems. Controversy over the audacious pieces raged fiercely in all European musical centers, and "Ein Heldenleben" ("A Hero's Life"—i.e., the symphonic evocation of the life, loves and triumphs of R. Strauss) was the subject of some particularly extravagant commentary. Thus, so redoubtable an observer as the young Roger Sessions, writing in the Harvard Musical Review in 1915, could place Strauss' idea of the hero on a plane comparable with Beethoven's in the "Eroica" and found in the battle scene "a frenetic climax . . . (that) almost hurts us from our seats and sends cold chills down our backs." Others conversely found its self-glorification and exuberantly undiscriminating sensuality unbearable. As Mr. Burk's program notes sensibly put it: "Shocking audacities have a way of losing their edge and interest as the next generation, and the next, come along. All that is finally asked is the worth of the music—as music."

Applying that test again last week end to this huge and ornate old musical tapestry, I found that its splendors by now have largely faded, though the melodic power, the variety of description, the inventiveness and the serenity of the conclusion continue to invest it with a considerable amount of vitality.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra negotiated the stupendous convolutions of the monstrously intricate score with all the aplomb of a Strauss hero.

Juillard Quartet

The Juillard Quartet's preeminence in the playing of contemporary string quartets is common knowledge. From as far back as a decade or more I can recall this group, seemingly composed of mere boys, tossing off with infinite polish, verve and brilliance the fiendish difficulties of a Bartok or a Schoenberg score. Their place in the chamber music scheme of things, it rather seemed, was restricted to the role of specialists in the modern idiom, of apostles of the future; and any truck with the older literature was chiefly to provide cushions of acceptance for their specialties.

Yet here is the Juillard Quartet returned, looking as we all do somewhat middle-aged and doing a program that is Old Guard rather than avant-garde and displaying a mellowness, sensitivity, balance, secureness, refinement and depth of musicianship that place it without peer among our native American quartets and would seem to put it among the handful of quartets to be found anywhere. This much was plain whether as shown in the unquestionable refinement, charm and purity of their reading of Mozart's G-major Quartet, K. 387; the extent to which they managed to plumb the profound peace and resignation of Beethoven's F-major Quartet, Opus 135, or the joyously lyrical ease and naturalness of their collaboration with the distinguished local pianist, Gregory Tucker, in a stunning traversal of Dvorak's ingenious A-major Quintet.

Approximately 1100 persons heard this concert at M.I.T.'s Kresge Auditorium last Sunday afternoon. That so large an audience withstood the competing blandishments on the same day of Myra Hess, Gyorgy Sandor, and Luise Vosgerchian must stand as a tribute to the artists and their program, the concert setting and the breadth of the public acceptance of the M.I.T. Humanities Series of which the concert was a [illegible]

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

FEB 24 1957

MUSICAL TURNABOUT

Munch to Philadelphia; Ormandy Is Guest Here

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Mr. Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for a very large orchestra, and is in three parts: Declaration, chorale and finale. Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November, 1955, and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956.

The second work on the program will be the symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th century German painter, Matthias Gruenewald, who is the opera's central figure. "Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December, 1934, and most recently in November, 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

EUGENE ORMANDY is the week's guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

FEB 24 1957

Symphony Programs For the Coming Week

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2, the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a government department has commissioned a symphonic work. The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 52,155

FEB 24 1957

Ormandy Will Conduct

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Feb. 23 — At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday night the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Mr. Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the U. S. Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in U. S. history that a Government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for a very large orchestra, and is in three parts, "Declaration," "Chorale" and "Finale." Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November 1955 and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March 1956.

The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith.

This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th Century German painter, Matthias Gruenewald, who is the opera's central figure.

"Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December 1934, and most recently in November 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony."

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

FEB 25 1957

Munch, Ormandy Swap Podiums

Eugene Ormandy will conduct the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2.

While Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The second work will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

FEB 24 1957

EUGENE ORMANDY, who will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this week.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 23 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, gave the 16th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, peforming the following program:

Ricercar, from "Musical Offering" ..... Bach-Markevitch
Symphony No 3 in D ..... Schubert
Till Eulenspiegel ..... Strauss
Pictures at an Exhibition ..... Moussorgsky

By RUDOLPH ELIE

If it may be said that Igor Markevitch made a stunning success conducting this orchestra two seasons ago, his return yesterday was the occasion of a triumph few guest conductors have ever attained in this city. He was truly marvelous.

A tall, very slim man in his middle forties, Mr. Markevitch conducts with a sensitivity extraordinary in its capacity to touch every technical and musical detail. With his right hand he marks the tempo with a fluency and an airy, graceful pattern that somehow choreographs the music he plays, yet he is capable of enormous vigor in the marking of an entrance or a release. Meanwhile, with his left, in gestures of the most expressive character, he signals the nuance and the phrasing, cueing, all the while, the musician's entrances with astonishing exactitude, and astonishing ensemble as well.

Great Precision

He thus mingles great precision with delicacy, great expressivity with exactitude and great emotional power with the utmost musicality of utterance. And to add to his gifts, he has a personality radiating the most charming modesty. Indeed, I am almost tempted to use the word "sweet" in connection with him for his bearing on the stage as he accepted the applause was winning beyond description.

And how he made this orchestra play! This is by no means to suggest it leans on its oars for Mr. Munch: on the contrary. Yet there is no denying that there is something electric about the presence of a new personality, especially one with such incredible orchestral technique and such a re-creative force and the orchestra rose to the occasion to give a truly memorable performance from beginning to end.

The beginning, incidentally, was of special interest, since it offered the great Ricercar of Bach's Musical Offering in Mr. Markevitch's own transcription for strings and woodwinds. He deployed the musicians in groups of six, the high strings in each case being reinforced by the low. The result, as this magnificent work disclosed itself, was one of utter unanimity, tonal balance and contrapuntal clarity. For the ensuing Schubert, receiving, like the Bach, its first performance at these concerts, the orchestra resumed its normal seating.

The symphony, as it turned out, is of little consequence but it is charming and grateful, especially so in its two delicious inner movements. Mr. Markevitch did it with the most becoming simplicity, giving it a happy radiance of character that was beautiful to hear.

He followed this with two of the finest and most exciting performances of the standard repertoire pieces "Til Eulenspiegel" and "Pictures at an Exhibition" I have ever heard. As indicated above, the orchestra played magnificently throughout, but in these two I could not but wonder at the extraordinary attainment of the percussion section. One would be hard put, I think, to match anywhere in the world the talents of the five young men making up the percussion, or match its truly formidable effectiveness as a section.

All in all, then, this was another high water mark in the season, and it was more than evident the audience was fully aware of it. It will be interesting indeed to have Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor next week in a program of Schuman, Hindemith and Brahms. Meanwhile, Mr. Munch goes to Philadelphia to lead that orchestra in as happy an exchange as could be imagined.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 23 1957

—Markevitch at Symphony

Program Ranges From Bach to Moussorgsky

Bob Barrett

Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2.

By Harold Rogers

Igor Markevitch has now scored his second great triumph in Boston. Two years ago he made his American debut in Symphony Hall, leaving his listeners in a state of heady exhilaration after a stunning reading of Stravinsky's "Le sacre du printemps." Yesterday afternoon he gained the same effect with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Bostonians know how to give a special ovation to a special artist, and Mr. Markevitch has won this ovation twice in a row.

The remarkable feature of his conducting is his ability to appeal as much to the intelligence as to the emotions. This is because he himself maintains a sensitive balance between his head and his heart.

Some conductors, of course, are purely cerebral, and they have no difficulty in putting their listeners to sleep. Others, on the contrary, infuse the music with a kind of animal electricity that leaves listeners excited but unenlightened.

Mr Markevitch is one of those rare individuals who subjects the emotional message of the music to control of an ordered intellect, thus gaining an even greater impact. Thus his listeners are both exhilarated and elevated.

He opened with his own arrangement of the six-part fugue from Bach's "Musical Offering," a superb piece of music in which Bach's logic is enhanced by Markevitch's logic for a convincing statement of majesty. It had that transcendent quality that leaves the listener less earthbound, even offering an occasional glimpse into the infinite. Mr. Markevitch has arranged the entire work, and Angel Records will release his recording next month.

* * *

Although the Boston Symphony has played the complete "Musical Offering" at Tanglewood in an arrangement by Oubradous, this was the first time any portion of it was heard at the Symphony Hall concerts. The surprising thing about Mr. Markevitch's reading of "Till Eulenspiegel" was the best that I have ever heard—and these ears have come across some splendid performances of the rondo. It was amazingly clear and faultlessly proportioned—if you discount a momentary covering by the snare drum, an imbalance which the conductor also called for in "Pictures at an Exhibition." Markevitch brought out more detail in "Till" than I ever noticed before, and all with telling effect. There was more variation of tempo, too, but all fitted into the long pattern of "Till." Some pages he took rather slower than usual, others a trifle faster, something also observable in Moussorgsky-Ravel, but quite justifiable, since two conductors almost never feel alike about a tempo.

The Boston Symphony responded magnificently to the wishes of its guest leader, and all through the concert the playing was of great brilliance and virtuosity. At the end, Markevitch was cheered and applauded for minutes on end. He merited every last decibel.

Next week Eugene Ormandy of Philadelphia will be guest conductor, while Charles Munch goes to Philadelphia to be guest there. Mr. Ormandy will play William Schuman's "Credendum" (first performance at these concerts); Hindemith's Symphony, "Matthias the Painter," and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Great G major Symphony as does Mozart's No. 40 to the final great trilogy. An apt nickname for the Schubert Third would be "Sunshine," for it is summery from first to last with cloudless skies. Mr. Markevitch almost appeared to stand aside and let the radiant Schubertian melodies sing themselves. He used a reduced orchestra and achieved a delicate lightness.

* * *

In Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" Mr. Markevitch showed us that phase of his talent where he seems to conduct with every fiber of his being. The orchestra somehow appears to be an extension of himself. Again and again one had the illusion that the music emanates from him. This would not be possible if he weren't able to concentrate his mental and physical forces to the desired effect. His mental focus becomes our mental focus, and in this phenomenon we find the secret of great music-making.

His achievements in the Strauss were underlined and amplified in the Moussorgsky "Pictures," so brilliantly orchestrated by Ravel. It is a virgement for a virtu-a, and only a con-ersatility can man-noramic sweep of . When we reached ate at Kiev, did ever ng open with such pomp and victory?

alendar on Page 11

PEMBROKE
ROKE RECORD, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1957

Symphony Plays 'Till Eulenspiegel'

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, brings the orchestra to the fourth in its series of Providence visits on Tuesday evening, February 26, at 8:15 p. m. in the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. Leading the Orchestra will be the celebrated guest conductor Igor Markovitch.

Renowned as a composer as well as a conductor, Markovitch will open the program with one of his own orchestral arrangements, a "Ricar", or six part fugue, from Bach's Musical Offering. It contains three separate instrumental groupings, one of solo instruments, and two of string choirs.

The second number on the program will be Shubert's Symphony No. 5 in D Major, a work which the orchestra has never before performed in Providence. Subsequent numbers are Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegal's Merry Pranks" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition".

Tickets for the concert may be purchased at Avery's Piano Store, Providence or, on the day of the concert, at the Auditorium. Prices for the seats will be $2, $3, $4, and $5.

Markevitch Guest Conductor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 16th program in the Friday—Saturday series. Igor Markevitch, as guest, conducted the following program: Bach: Ricercar (Fugue in Six Voices) from the "Musical Offering" (arranged for orchestra by Igor Markevitch; first performance at these concerts); Schubert: Symphony No. 3, in D major (first performance at these concerts); Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel"; Moussorgsky: "Pictures at an Exhibition" (arranged for orchestra by Ravel).

By CYRUS DURGIN

Igor Markevitch has returned as guest conducfor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week. Yesterday he deepened and intensified the impression he had made upon this city at his first visit in 1955. Indeed let us say in so many words: Markevitch is among the greatest conductors of the world today. That was what some of us felt two years ago, but one program and an urge to conservatism made the statement seem hasty at that time. Meanwhile Markevitch has shown his prowess in a wide variety of recordings.

As I remember it was Richard Strauss who said that the man who composed "Tristan and Isolde" may have had a heart on fire, but his brain was cold as ice. Markevitch must have an icy brain, for while the intensity of his conducting is very high, the loudest, the fastest and the most emotional pages of any work are as firmly under technical control as all the rest. Just as there can be no great conducting without high imagination and emotional ardor, so there can be none without that complete technical and intellectual grasp. With Markevitch every aspect of conducting is possessed completely.

His sense of taste and his recognition of style are exceptional. They were delightfully perceptible in every measure during yesterday afternoon, and the not least manifestation of them came in the mighty "Great Gate of Kiev" of the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition." The episode must be loud, clangorous, imposing—and it was, but never was there a trace of excess; the last, tremendous chord was not a straining for every ounce of volume obtainable, it was simply a satisfying fortissimo.

A Proper 'Bach Sound'

Markevitch's taste resulted in a marvelous orchestral arrangement of the fugue from Bach's "Musical Offering." There were just four woodwinds to reinforce the three different-sized groups of strings. This made for a proper "Bach sound," as the conductor said he wanted; there was just the right weight to make the voices sound in proportion, all was perfectly clear, but never, never dry or dull. This sample makes me want to hear the Markevitch arrangement of the entire "Musical Offering," which he has recorded.

Thanks to our guest, we at last have heard Schubert's Third Symphony at these concerts. (That leaves but one more to introduce to the repertory, the First, if you reckon that Schubert wrote eight symphonies and not nine!). The Third is a small work, but no miniature, and while it is not in a class with the "Unfinished" and "Great" C major—or even the "Tragic" and the Fifth, for that matter, it is individual. Indeed, it is melodically very Schubertian, unmistakably from that composer and none other. Why it has not been played before by the Boston Symphony we can only guess. The work deserves its place in the active repertory.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

FEB 23 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, gave the 16th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, peforming the following program:

Ricercar, from "Musical Offering" ..... Bach-Markevitch
Symphony No 3 in D..... Schubert
Till Eulenspiegel ..... Strauss
Pictures at an Exhibition. .Moussorgsky

By RUDOLPH ELIE

If it may be said that Igor Markevitch made a stunning success conducting this orchestra two seasons ago, his return yesterday was the occasion of a triumph few guest conductors have ever attained in this city. He was truly marvelous.

A tall, very slim man in his middle forties, Mr. Markevitch conducts with a sensitivity extraordinary in its capacity to touch every technical and musical detail. With his right hand he marks the tempo with a fluency and an airy, graceful pattern that somehow choreographs the music he plays, yet he is capable of enormous vigor in the marking of an entrance or a release. Meanwhile, with his left, in gestures of the most expressive character, he signals the nuance and the phrasing, cueing, all the while, the musician's entrances with astonishing exactitude, and astonishing ensemble as well.

Great Precision

He thus mingles great precision with delicacy, great expressivity with exactitude and great emotional power with the utmost musicality of utterance. And to add to his gifts, he has a personality radiating the most charming modesty. Indeed, I am almost tempted to use the word "sweet" in connection with him for his bearing on the stage as he accepted the applause was winning beyond description.

And how he made this orchestra play! This is by no means to suggest it leans on its oars for Mr. Munch: on the contrary. Yet there is no denying that there is something electric about the presence of a new personality, especially one with such incredible orchestral technique and such a re-creative force and the orchestra rose to the occasion to give a truly memorable performance from beginning to end.

The beginning, incidentally, was of special interest, since it offered the great Ricercar of Bach's Musical Offering in Mr. Markevitch's own transcription for strings and woodwinds. He deployed the musicians in groups of six, the high strings in each case being reinforced by the low. The result, as this magnificent work disclosed itself, was one of utter unanimity, tonal balance and contrapuntal clarity. For the ensuing Schubert, receiving, like the Bach, its first performance at these concerts, the orchestra resumed its normal seating.

The symphony, as it turned out, is of little consequence but it is charming and grateful, especially so in its two delicious inner movements. Mr. Markevitch did it with the most becoming simplicity, giving it a happy radiance of character that was beautiful to hear.

He followed this with two of the finest and most exciting performances of the standard repertoire pieces "Til Eulenspiegel" and "Pictures at an Exhibition" I have ever heard. As indicated above, the orchestra played magnificently throughout, but in these two I could not but wonder at the extraordinary attainment of the percussion section. One would be hard put, I think, to match anywhere in the world the talents of the five young men making up the percussion, or match its truly formidable effectiveness as a section.

All in all, then, this was another high water mark in the season, and it was more than evident the audience was fully aware of it. It will be interesting indeed to have Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor next week in a program of Schuman, Hindemith and Brahms. Meanwhile, Mr. Munch goes to Philadelphia to lead that orchestra in as happy an exchange as could be imagined.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

FEB 23 1957

—Markevitch at Symphony

Program Ranges From Bach to Moussorgsky

By Harold Rogers

Igor Markevitch has now scored his second great triumph in Boston. Two years ago he made his American debut in Symphony Hall, leaving his listeners in a state of heady exhilaration after a stunning reading of Stravinsky's "Le sacre du printemps." Yesterday afternoon he gained the same effect with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Bostonians know how to give a special ovation to a special artist, and Mr. Markevitch has won this ovation twice in a row.

The remarkable feature of his conducting is his ability to appeal as much to the intelligence as to the emotions. This is because he himself maintains a sensitive balance between his head and his heart.

Some conductors, of course, are purely cerebral, and they have no difficulty in putting their listeners to sleep. Others, on the contrary, infuse the music with a kind of animal electricity that leaves listeners excited but unenlightened.

Mr Markevitch is one of those rare individuals who subjects the emotional message of the music to control of an ordered intellect, thus gaining an even greater impact. Thus his listeners are both exhilarated and elevated.

He opened with his own arrangement of the six-part fugue from Bach's "Musical Offering," a superb piece of music in which Bach's logic is enhanced by Markevitch's logic for a convincing statement of majesty. It had that transcendent quality that leaves the listener less earthbound, even offering an occasional glimpse into the infinite. Mr. Markevitch has arranged the entire work, and Angel Records will release his recording next month.

* * *

Although the Boston Symphony has played the complete "Musical Offering" at Tanglewood in an arrangement by Oubradous, this was the first time any portion of it was heard at the Symphony Hall concerts. The surprising thing about Mr. Markevitch's program is that Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D major, which came after the Bach, had its first performance at these concerts yesterday. It hardly seems possible that a symphony by Schubert could have been overlooked all these years.

The Schubert Third bears about the same relation to his Great G major Symphony as does Mozart's No. 40 to the final great trilogy. An apt nickname for the Schubert Third would be "Sunshine," for it is summery from first to last with cloudless skies. Mr. Markevitch almost appeared to stand aside and let the radiant Schubertian melodies sing themselves. He used a reduced orchestra and achieved a delicate lightness.

* * *

In Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" Mr. Markevitch showed us that phase of his talent where he seems to conduct with every fiber of his being. The orchestra somehow appears to be an extension of himself. Again and again one had the illusion that the music emanates from him. This would not be possible if he weren't able to concentrate his mental and physical forces to the desired effect. His mental focus becomes our mental focus, and in this phenomenon we find the secret of great music-making.

His achievements in the Strauss were underlined and amplified in the Moussorgsky "Pictures," so brilliantly orchestrated by Ravel. It is a virtuoso arrangement for a virtuoso orchestra, and only a conductor of versatility can manage the panoramic sweep of these moods. When we reached the Great Gate at Kiev, did ever a gate swing open with such thunderous pomp and victory?

Concert Calendar on Page 11

Bob Barrett

Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

FEB 23 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Markevitch Guest Conductor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 16th program in the Friday—Saturday series. Igor Markevitch, as guest, conducted the following program: Bach: Ricercar (Fugue in Six Voices) from the "Musical Offering" (arranged for orchestra by Igor Markevitch; first performance at these concerts); Schubert: Symphony No. 3, in D major (first performance at these concerts); Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel"; Moussorgsky: "Pictures at an Exhibition" (arranged for orchestra by Ravel).

By CYRUS DURGIN

Igor Markevitch has returned as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week. Yesterday he deepened and intensified the impression he had made upon this city at his first visit in 1955. Indeed let us say in so many words: Markevitch is among the greatest conductors of the world today. That was what some of us felt two years ago, but one program and an urge to conservatism made the statement seem hasty at that time. Meanwhile Markevitch has shown his prowess in a wide variety of recordings.

As I remember it was Richard Strauss who said that the man who composed "Tristan and Isolde" may have had a heart on fire, but his brain was cold as ice. Markevitch must have an icy brain, for while the intensity of his conducting is very high, the loudest, the fastest and the most emotional pages of any work are as firmly under technical control as all the rest. Just as there can be no great conducting without high imagination and emotional ardor, so there can be none without that complete technical and intellectual grasp. With Markevitch every aspect of conducting is possessed completely.

His sense of taste and his recognition of style are exceptional. They were delightfully perceptible in every measure during yesterday afternoon, and the not least manifestation of them came in the mighty "Great Gate of Kiev" of the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition." The episode must be loud, clangorous, imposing—and it was, but never was there a trace of excess; the last, tremendous chord was not a straining for every ounce of volume obtainable, it was simply a satisfying fortissimo.

A Proper 'Bach Sound'

Markevitch's taste resulted in a marvelous orchestral arrangement of the fugue from Bach's "Musical Offering." There were just four woodwinds to reinforce the three different-sized groups of strings. This made for a proper "Bach sound," as the conductor said he wanted; there was just the right weight to make the voices sound in proportion, all was perfectly clear, but never, never dry or dull. This sample makes me want to hear the Markevitch arrangement of the entire "Musical Offering," which he has recorded.

Thanks to our guest, we at last have heard Schubert's Third Symphony at these concerts. (That leaves but one more to introduce to the repertory, the First, if you reckon that Schubert wrote eight symphonies and not nine!). The Third is a small work, but no miniature, and while it is not in a class with the "Unfinished" and "Great" C major—or even the "Tragic" and the Fifth, for that matter, it is individual. Indeed, it is melodically very Schubertian, unmistakably from that composer and none other. Why it has not been played before by the Boston Symphony we can only guess. The work deserves its place in the active repertory.

Markevitch's reading of "Till Eulenspiegel" was the best that I ever have heard—and these ears have come across some splendid performances of the rondo. It was amazingly clear and faultlessly proportioned—if you discount a momentary covering by the snare drum, an imbalance which the conductor also called for in "Pictures at an Exhibition." Markevitch brought out more detail in "Till" than I ever noticed before, and all with telling effect. There was more variation of tempo, too, but all fitted into the long pattern of "Till." Some pages he took rather slower than usual, others a trifle faster, something also observable in Moussorgsky-Ravel, but quite justifiable, since two conductors almost never feel alike about a tempo.

The Boston Symphony responded magnificently to the wishes of its guest leader, and all through the concert the playing was of great brilliance and virtuosity. At the end, Markevitch was cheered and applauded for minutes on end. He merited every last decibel.

Next week Eugene Ormandy of Philadelphia will be guest conductor, while Charles Munch goes to Philadelphia to be guest there. Mr. Ormandy will play William Schuman's "Credendum" (first performance at these concerts); Hindemith's Symphony, "Matthias the Painter," and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Mankind's worst enemies do not always fight openly, stating: "I hate this . . . or that. Take it leave it." Such are easier to meet in combat. No, the worst are those who operate as underground mutinous: the stabbing world so casual: the institutes toward one another. In recent years the people who have most helped me, outside of my immediate family, are Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants.

308

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
FEB 27 1957

Young Chileen visitors get autograph
Boston Symphony Orchestra and cond
vitch (right) at Veterans Auditorium.

...ut the best CH 1, 1957

R. I. Applauds Markevitch And Inspired Symphony

by Martha Lundin

Rhode Islanders were given a rare musical privilege last Tuesday evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its fourth concert of the current Providence season at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, with Igor Markevitch as guest conductor.

Markevitch was the reason for the privilege, and a cause for excitement. He fully deserved the tremendous ovation which he received from the usually self-contained Providence audience, both at the intermission and at the end of the program. Even the members of the orchestra enthusiastically joined in.

Markevitch is a quiet, unassuming looking man, obviously dedicated to his art, who wastes no motions when conducting. Yet, though economical of gesture, his every move is a definitive one, the orchestra, sensitive to his actions, responded with rare perception. All of this resulted in a concert that sounded inspired, as indeed the musicians must have been.

He is able to produce almost an entirely new concept in sound, both in depth and in color. This was evident in the Ricerar (Six Part Fugue) from the Musical Offering by Bach, arranged for orchestra by the conductor. His sympathetic understanding of Bach led to his orchestration, in which the orchestra is rearranged as to seating, and divided into three choirs, carefully calculated for blend and balance. This work was played with precision and retained all of the grandeur of the original Bach.

Schubert's Symphony No. 3, in D major was one of the best examples of the early, lighthearted Schubert that has been heard in this area. It is evident that Markevitch has a good command of the Romantic idiom.

It was in the last half of the program, however,

an exchange pro-
boston concert, so
t as its guests.
—Staff Photo

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, presented the fourth concert of its current Providence season last evening at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. This was a perfect example of a classic symphony program and Igor Markevitch received ovation applause at the conclusion of both halves of the concert. The program:

Bach ..... Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch)
Schubert .. Symphony No. 3, in D Major
I. Adagio maestoso; Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto; Vivace
Strauss ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo form, Op. 28
Moussorsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" Pianoforte Pieces
(Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev.

This was an outstanding evening for many reasons, but the first was Igor Markevitch as conductor. This is a belated report because Mr. Markevitch has conducted the Boston Orchestra before (in 1955) but we watched him for the first time last night. A tall, spare, apparantely dedicated musician, his conducting made great sense to us and he brought forth sounds from a great orchestra which were often unusual but which seemed so inevitable that one could wonder why other performances have not been similar. Mr. Markevitch fully deserved his ovations, in which, incidentaldience.

It was apparent from the opening number that Mr. Markevitch is interested in sound projection. His theories about the spacing of strings set forth at length in last Sunday's Journal, were brilliantly proved and everybody had a great time locating old friends among the performers as they appeared in new places. The sonorities which emerged were both opulent and exciting in challenging the imagination and the ear.

It was also apparent from the Symphony, being given erformance by this orchestra, that Mr. Markevitch has the romantic idiom well in hand and gives promise of increasing the standard repertoire. His handling of the two familiar items on the program was superbly controlled and earned excellent response from the orchestra.

Mr. Markevitch is notably outstanding among the so-called "younger" group of conductors. It is safe to note that his next appearance here will be greeted with wide-spread and sincere enthusiasm.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
FEB 26 1957

Chileans to Travel With Symphony

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 26 (UP) —Fourteen visitors from south of the border will accompany the Boston Symphony orchestra to Providence tonight.

The fourteen—11 women and three men between 18 and 22—are from Santiago, Chile. They are accompanying the orchestra to Providence because they are unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston.

They will attend tonight's Veteran's Memorial Auditorium performance, then return to Boston with the orchestra in its bus.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under an exchange program.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
FEB 26 1957

Symphony Guests

14 Young Chileans to Make Trip Here with Players

An "experiment in international living" will be made at Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight when 14 young Chileans will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert.

Not only will they be in the audience, but they will make the trip from Boston and back again with the players.

Unable to attend the Friday night concert in Boston, they received special consideration by the players in bringing them here. Boston University is their host while they are in the Bay State.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
FEB 27 1957

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Is Compared To 'Jam Session'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of a guest conductor, was given wave after wave of applause at the conclusion of a program last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Igor Markevitch, who is more of a cheer leader than an orchestra leader, was called back again and again by unrestrained cheers of excitable members of the audience after he finished the final segment of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" that sounded like a jam session.

The hysteria of a few boisterous listeners swept through the crowded auditorium and became almost mass emotionalism. Maestro Markevitch was called back nine times and the members of the orchestra seemed amazed at the demonstration.

From the beginning, Markevitch showed by his gestures that he was not there to beat the time but to show he was different than other conductors. He made motions with both arms, especially his left, that made the watchers think of a man swimming, rowing a boat, directing traffic, catching flies on the wall, painting a house and patting his Ol' Dog Tray.

Nagged First Violins

He had the irritating habit of frequently nagging the first violins to play more delicately, or pleading with clutching fingers for more verve, or commanding them to hush even when the brasses were overpowering everything. He did this repeatedly until the first violinists ignored him and played it their way. This happened in the Schubert "Symphony No. 3 in D-Major," the second work on the program.

The opening number, "Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the 'Musical Offering'" by Bach was arranged for orchestra by the maestro himself. He not only arranged the original Bach but he rearranged and regrouped the orchestra with cellos behind the violas and violins, and the basses behind the cellos almost in the wings on both sides, down stage. This had the effect of sending the bass rhythms en masse down both side aisles of the auditorium, creating an imbalance of tone in the side seats like a photo out of focus.

After the Beethoven, which was rescued from distortion by the sterling musicianship of the orchestra, which played with great beauty in spite of Markevitch's mixed windmill and swooping-swallow style of direction, a Strauss descriptive work, "Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" was played. Here the orchestra sensed that they were being given liberties, if not a free rein, and the sounds increased in force in the fortissimo passages until the din was deafening at times. At the conclusion of the work the audience acted more like football fans than concert goers. Insistent applause recalled Markevich several times and several of the musicians grinned at one another as though the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Stage Crowded

After intermission, the entire orchestra with augmented groups crowded the stage,—two harps, tuba, chimes, contra-bassoon, saxophone, xylophone, glockenspiel, rattle, triangle, whip and tom-tom. All these instruments, plus an orchestration by Maurice Ravel, the abstract interpretations of Markevitch, and the increasing excitement of the musicians and the audience, produced a climax to the concert that resembled as I said in the beginning, a jam session.

Moussorgsky's tonal portraits were presented with an ever-increasing loudness that set the heart to throbbing and the head to pounding. The affects were great, as sound affects, and hinted at Ravel's ultimate insanity. The closing segment of the portraits was "The Great Gate of Kiev," which is Markevich's birthplace. Whether this had anything to do with the orchestra's unrestraint, I can only guess.

The percussion crept up to a rumble, the brasses blasted and screamed, the chimes cut through the massive volume of noise and the string men played like mad without being heard.

The audience caught the hysteria, and the applause that burst out at the closing chord was greater than the Boston Symphony Orchestra had ever received in Providence. Never in Providence has such a concert been played nor such salvos of applause been heard. It was a concert that was more disturbing than pleasing.

C. H. L.

Ormandy Munch In Podium Swap

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's Orchestra debut is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will send Eugene Ormandy to New England to direct the Bostonians this week end.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Alsatian-born conductor will present a program of French music here, including Berlioz' Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and the Philadelphians' premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

PARIS ASSIGNMENTS

In 1929, Munch settled in Paris, where three years later he was named conductor of the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Subsequent assignments included his directorship of the Lamoureux Concerts and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Invited to the United States in 1939 to guest conduct the St. Louis Orchestra, Munch was forced to decline because of the war.

The French maestro first visited here in 1946 and returned two years later as head of the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. He was named music director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1949-50 season, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

VIENNA ENCORE

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the Bostonians and Koussevitzky, commissioned Roussel to write his Third Symphony. The composer was 61 years old at the time and he came to this country for the work's world premiere in Boston, Oct 23, 1930.

Tomorrow evening at the Academy, Ormandy and the Philadelphians will repeat the all-Viennese program heard earlier this month. The concert features Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, the "Romantic"; Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and three works by Johann Strauss, Jr.—"Wine, Women and Song" waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka, and the "Voices of Spring" waltz.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
FEB 27 1957

Young Chilean visitors get autograph Boston Symphony Orchestra and conc vitch (right) at Veterans Auditorium.

...ut the best CH 1, 1957

R. I. Applauds Markevitch And Inspired Symphony

by Martha Lundin

Rhode Islanders were given a rare musical privilege last Tuesday evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its fourth concert of the current Providence season at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, with Igor Markevitch as guest conductor.

Markevitch was the reason for the privilege, and a cause for excitement. He fully deserved the tremendous ovation which he received from the usually self-contained Providence audience, both at the intermission and at the end of the program. Even the members of the orchestra enthusiastically joined in.

Markevitch is a quiet, unassuming looking man, obviously dedicated to his art, who wastes no motions when conducting. Yet, though economical of gesture, his every move is a definitive one, the orchestra, sensitive to his actions, responded with rare perception. All of this resulted in a concert that sounded inspired, as indeed the musicians must have been.

He is able to produce almost an entirely new concept in sound, both in depth and in color. This was evident in the Ricerar (Six Part Fugue) from the Musical Offering by Bach, arranged for orchestra by the conductor. His sympathetic understanding of Bach led to his orchestration, in which the orchestra is rearranged as to seating, and divided into three choirs, carefully calculated for blend and balance. This work was played with precision and retained all of the grandeur of the original Bach.

Schubert's Symphony No. 3, in D major was one of the best examples of the early, lighthearted Schubert that has been heard in this area. It is evident that Markevitch has a good command of the Romantic idiom.

It was in the last half of the program, however, an exchange pro- Boston concert, so t as its guests.

—Staff Photo

Symphony, being given erformance by this orchestra, that Mr. Markevitch has the romantic idiom well in hand and gives promise of increasing the standard repertoire. His handling of the two familiar items on the program was superbly controlled and earned excellent response from the orchestra.

Mr. Markevitch is notably outstanding among the so-called "younger" group of conductors. It is safe to note that his next appearance here will be greeted with wide-spread and sincere enthusiasm.

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, presented the fourth concert of its current Providence season last evening at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. This was a perfect example of a classic symphony program and Igor Markevitch received ovation applause at the conclusion of both halves of the concert. The program:

Bach .... Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch)
Schubert... Symphony No. 3, in D Major
I. Adagio maestoso: Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto: Vivace
Strauss ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo form, Op. 28
Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" Pianoforte Pieces
(Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev.

This was an outstanding evening for many reasons, but the first was Igor Markevitch as conductor. This is a belated report because Mr. Markevitch has conducted the Boston Orchestra before (in 1955) but we watched him for the first time last night. A tall, spare, apparentely dedicated musician, his conducting made great sense to us and he brought forth sounds from a great orchestra which were often unusual but which seemed so inevitable that one could wonder why other performances have not been similar. Mr. Markevitch fully deserved his ovations, in which, incidentaldience.

It was apparent from the opening number that Mr. Markevitch is interested in sound projection. His theories about the spacing of strings set forth at length in last Sunday's Journal, were brilliantly proved and everybody had a great time locating old friends among the performers as they appeared in new places. The sonorities which emerged were both opulent and exciting in challenging the imagination and the ear.

It was also apparent from the

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
FEB 27 1957

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Is Compared To 'Jam Session'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of a guest conductor, was given wave after wave of applause at the conclusion of a program last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Igor Markevitch, who is more of a cheer leader than an orchestra leader, was called back again and again by unrestrained cheers of excitable members of the audience after he finished the final segment of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" that sounded like a jam session.

The hysteria of a few boisterous listeners swept through the crowded auditorium and became almost mass emotionalism. Maestro Markevitch was called back nine times and the members of the orchestra seemed amazed at the demonstration.

From the beginning, Markevitch showed by his gestures that he was not there to beat the time but to show he was different than other conductors. He made motions with both arms, especially his left, that made the watchers think of a man swimming, rowing a boat, directing traffic, catching flies on the wall, painting a house and patting his Ol' Dog Tray.

Nagged First Violins

He had the irritating habit of frequently nagging the first violins to play more delicately, or pleading with clutching fingers for more verve, or commanding them to hush even when the brasses were overpowering everything. He did this repeatedly until the first violinists ignored him and played it their way. This happened in the Schubert "Symphony No. 3 in D-Major," the second work on the program.

The opening number, "Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the 'Musical Offering'" by Bach was arranged for orchestra by the maestro himself. He not only arranged the original Bach but he rearranged and regrouped the orchestra with cellos behind the violas and violins, and the basses behind the cellos almost in the wings on both sides, down stage. This had the effect of sending the bass rhythms en masse down both side aisles of the auditorium, creating an imbalance of tone in the side seats like a photo out of focus.

After the Beethoven, which was rescued from distortion by the sterling musicianship of the orchestra which played with great beauty in spite of Markevitch's mixed windmill and swooping-swallow style of direction, a Strauss descriptive work, "Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" was played. Here the orchestra sensed that they were being given liberties, if not a free rein, and the sounds increased in force in the fortissimo passages until the din was deafening at times. At the conclusion of the work the audience acted more like football fans than concert goers. Insistent applause recalled Markevich several times and several of the musicians grinned at one another as though the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Stage Crowded

After intermission, the entire orchestra with augmented groups crowded the stage,—two harps, tuba, chimes, contra-bassoon, saxophone, xylophone, glockenspiel, rattle, triangle, whip and tom-tom. All these instruments, plus an orchestration by Maurice Ravel, the abstract interpretations of Markevitch, and the increasing excitement of the musicians and the audience, produced a climax to the concert that resembled as I said in the beginning, a jam session.

Moussorgsky's tonal portraits were presented with an ever increasing loudness that set the heart to throbbing and the head to pounding. The affects were great, as sound affects, and hinted at Ravel's ultimate insanity. The closing segment of the portraits was "The Great Gate of Kiev," which is Markevitch's birthplace. Whether this had anything to do with the orchestra's unrestraint, I can only guess.

The percussion crept up to a rumble, the brasses blasted and screamed, the chimes cut through the massive volume of noise and the string men played like mad without being heard.

The audience caught the hysteria, and the applause that burst out at the closing chord was greater than the Boston Symphony Orchestra had ever received in Providence. Never in Providence has such a concert been played nor such salvos of applause been heard. It was a concert that was more disturbing than pleasing.

C. H. L.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
FEB 26 1957

Chileans to Travel With Symphony

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 26 (UP) —Fourteen visitors from south of the border will accompany the Boston Symphony orchestra to Providence tonight.

The fourteen—11 women and three men between 18 and 22—are from Santiago, Chile. They are accompanying the orchestra to Providence because they are unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston.

They will attend tonight's Veteran's Memorial Auditorium performance, then return to Boston with the orchestra in its bus.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under an exchange program.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
FEB 26 1957

Symphony Guests

14 Young Chileans to Make Trip Here with Players

An "experiment in international living" will be made at Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight when 14 young Chileans will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert.

Not only will they be in the audience, but they will make the trip from Boston and back again with the players.

Unable to attend the Friday night concert in Boston, they received special consideration by the players in bringing them here. Boston University is their host while they are in the Bay State.

Ormandy Munch In Podium Swap

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's Orchestra debut is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will send Eugene Ormandy to New England to direct the Bostonians this week end.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Alsatian-born conductor will present a program of French music here, including Berlioz' Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and the Philadelphians' premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

PARIS ASSIGNMENTS

In 1929, Munch settled in Paris, where three years later he was named conductor of the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Subsequent assignments included his directorship of the Lamoureux Concerts and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Invited to the United States in 1939 to guest conduct the St. Louis Orchestra, Munch was forced to decline because of the war.

The French maestro first visited here in 1946 and returned two years later as head of the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. He was named music director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1949-50 season, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

VIENNA ENCORE

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the Bostonians and Koussevitzky, commissioned Roussel to write his Third Symphony. The composer was 61 years old at the time and he came to this country for the work's world premiere in Boston, Oct 23, 1930.

Tomorrow evening at the Academy, Ormandy and the Philadelphians will repeat the all-Viennese program heard earlier this month. The concert features Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, the "Romantic"; Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and three works by Johann Strauss, Jr.—"Wine, Women and Song" waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka, and the "Voices of Spring" waltz.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
FEB 27 1957

Young Chilean visitors get autograph
Boston Symphony Orchestra and conc vitch (right) at Veterans Auditorium.

THE PEMBROKE RECORD, FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1957

R. I. Applauds Markevitch And Inspired Symphony

by Martha Lundin

Rhode Islanders were given a rare musical privilege last Tuesday evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its fourth concert of the current Providence season at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, with Igor Markevitch as guest conductor.

Markevitch was the reason for the privilege, and a cause for excitement. He fully deserved the tremendous ovation which he received from the usually self-contained Providence audience, both at the intermission and at the end of the program. Even the members of the orchestra enthusiastically joined in.

Markevitch is a quiet, unassuming looking man, obviously dedicated to his art, who wastes no motions when conducting. Yet, though economical of gesture, his every move is a definitive one, the orchestra, sensitive to his actions, responded with rare perception. All of this resulted in a concert that sounded inspired, as indeed the musicians must have been.

He is able to produce almost an entirely new concept in sound, both in depth and in color. This was evident in the Ricerar (Six Part Fugue) from the Musical Offering by Bach, arranged for orchestra by the conductor. His sympathetic understanding of Bach led to his orchestration, in which the orchestra is rearranged as to seating, and divided into three choirs, carefully calculated for blend and balance. This work was played with precision and retained all of the grandeur of the original Bach.

Schubert's Symphony No. 3, in D major was one of the best examples of the early, lighthearted Schubert that has been heard in this area. It is evident that Markevitch has a good command of the Romantic idiom.

It was in the last half of the program, however, that Mr. Markevitch has the romantic idiom well in hand and gives promise of increasing the standard repertoire. His handling of the two familiar items on the program was superbly controlled and earned excellent response from the orchestra.

Mr. Markevitch is notably outstanding among the so-called "younger" group of conductors. It is safe to note that his next appearance here will be greeted with wide-spread and sincere enthusiasm.

an exchange pro-
Boston concert, so
t as its guests.
—Staff Photo

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, presented the fourth concert of its current Providence season last evening at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. This was a perfect example of a classic symphony program and Igor Markevitch received ovation applause at the conclusion of both halves of the concert. The program:

Bach .... Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch)
Schubert .. Symphony No. 3, in D Major
I. Adagio maestoso: Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto: Vivace
Strauss ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo form, Op. 28
Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" Pianoforte Pieces
(Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev.

This was an outstanding evening for many reasons, but the first was Igor Markevitch as conductor. This is a belated report because Mr. Markevitch has conducted the Boston Orchestra before (in 1955) but we watched him for the first time last night. A tall, spare, apparantely dedicated musician, his conducting made great sense to us and he brought forth sounds from a great orchestra which were often unusual but which seemed so inevitable that one could wonder why other performances have not been similar. Mr. Markevitch fully deserved his ovations, in which, incidentally, the audience.

It was apparent from the opening number that Mr. Markevitch is interested in sound projection. His theories about the spacing of strings set forth at length in last Sunday's Journal, were brilliantly proved and everybody had a great time locating old friends among the performers as they appeared in new places. The sonorities which emerged were both opulent and exciting in challenging the imagination and the ear.

It was also apparent from the Symphony, being given erformance by this orchestra,

Ormandy Munch In Podium Swap

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's Orchestra debut is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will send Eugene Ormandy to New England to direct the Bostonians this week end.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Alsatian-born conductor will present a program of French music here, including Berlioz' Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and the Philadelphians' premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

PARIS ASSIGNMENTS

In 1929, Munch settled in Paris, where three years later he was named conductor of the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Subsequent assignments included his directorship of the Lamoureux Concerts and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Invited to the United States in 1939 to guest conduct the St. Louis Orchestra, Munch was forced to decline because of the war.

The French maestro first visited here in 1946 and returned two years later as head of the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. He was named music director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1949-50 season, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

VIENNA ENCORE

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the Bostonians and Koussevitzky, commissioned Roussel to write his Third Symphony. The composer was 61 years old at the time and he came to this country for the work's world premiere in Boston, Oct 23, 1930.

Tomorrow evening at the Academy, Ormandy and the Philadelphians will repeat the all-Viennese program heard earlier this month. The concert features Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, the "Romantic"; Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and three works by Johann Strauss, Jr.—"Wine, Women and Song" waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka, and the "Voices of Spring" waltz.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
FEB 26 1957

Chileans to Travel With Symphony

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 26 (UP) —Fourteen visitors from south of the border will accompany the Boston Symphony orchestra to Providence tonight.

The fourteen—11 women and three men between 18 and 22—are from Santiago, Chile. They are accompanying the orchestra to Providence because they are unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston.

They will attend tonight's Veteran's Memorial Auditorium performance, then return to Boston with the orchestra in its bus.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under an exchange program.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
FEB 26 1957

Symphony Guests

14 Young Chileans to Make Trip Here with Players

An "experiment in international living" will be made at Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight when 14 young Chileans will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert.

Not only will they be in the audience, but they will make the trip from Boston and back again with the players.

Unable to attend the Friday night concert in Boston, they received special consideration by the players in bringing them here. Boston University is their host while they are in the Bay State.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
FEB 27 1957

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Is Compared To 'Jam Session'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of a guest conductor, was given wave after wave of applause at the conclusion of a program last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Igor Markevitch, who is more of a cheer leader than an orchestra leader, was called back again and again by unrestrained cheers of excitable members of the audience after he finished the final segment of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" that sounded like a jam session.

The hysteria of a few boisterous listeners swept through the crowded auditorium and became almost mass emotionalism. Maestro Markevitch was called back nine times and the members of the orchestra seemed amazed at the demonstration.

From the beginning, Markevitch showed by his gestures that he was not there to beat the time but to show he was different than other conductors. He made motions with both arms, especially his left, that made the watchers think of a man swimming, rowing a boat, directing traffic, catching flies on the wall, painting a house and patting his Ol' Dog Tray.

Nagged First Violins

He had the irritating habit of frequently nagging the first violins to play more delicately, or pleading with clutching fingers for more verve, or commanding them to hush even when the brasses were overpowering everything. He did this repeatedly until the first violinists ignored him and played it their way. This happened in the Schubert "Symphony No. 3 in D-Major," the second work on the program.

The opening number, "Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the 'Musical Offering'" by Bach was arranged for orchestra by the maestro himself. He not only arranged the original Bach but he rearranged and regrouped the orchestra with cellos behind the violas and violins, and the basses behind the cellos almost in the wings on both sides, down stage. This had the effect of sending the bass rhythms en masse down both side aisles of the auditorium, creating an imbalance of tone in the side seats like a photo out of focus.

After the Beethoven, which was rescued from distortion by the sterling musicianship of the orchestra which played with great beauty in spite of Markevitch's mixed windmill and swooping-swallow style of direction, a Strauss descriptive work, "Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" was played. Here the orchestra sensed that they were being given liberties, if not a free rein, and the sounds increased in force in the fortissimo passages until the din was deafening at times. At the conclusion of the work the audience acted more like football fans than concert goers. Insistent applause recalled Markevich several times and several of the musicians grinned at one another as though the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Stage Crowded

After intermission, the entire orchestra with augmented groups crowded the stage,—two harps, tuba, chimes, contra-bassoon, saxophone, xylophone, glockenspiel, rattle, triangle, whip and tom-tom. All these instruments, plus an orchestration by Maurice Ravel, the abstract interpretations of Markevitch, and the increasing excitement of the musicians and the audience, produced a climax to the concert that resembled as I said in the beginning, a jam session.

Moussorgsky's tonal portraits were presented with an ever-increasing loudness that set the heart to throbbing and the head to pounding. The affects were great, as sound affects, and hinted at Ravel's ultimate insanity. The closing segment of the portraits was "The Great Gate of Kiev," which is Markevich's birthplace. Whether this had anything to do with the orchestra's unrestraint, I can only guess.

The percussion crept up to a rumble, the brasses blasted and screamed, the chimes cut through the massive volume of noise and the string men played like mad without being heard.

The audience caught the hysteria, and the applause that burst out at the closing chord was greater than the Boston Symphony Orchestra had ever received in Providence. Never in Providence has such a concert been played nor such salvos of applause been heard. It was a concert that was more disturbing than pleasing.

C. H. L.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
FEB 27 1957

Young Chilean visitors get autographs from member of Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Igor Markevitch (right) at Veterans Auditorium. The young people are guests of Boston University under an exchange program. Their schedule permitted no Boston concert, so orchestra brought them here last night as its guests.

—Staff Photo

Merle Taylor

Merle Taylor is the new President of the West House Association. The West House is the next dormitory on the right of the quadrangle.

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, presented the fourth concert of its current Providence season last evening at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. This was a perfect example of a classic symphony program and Igor Markevitch received ovation applause at the conclusion of both halves of the concert. The program:

Bach .... Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering" (Arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch)
Schubert .. Symphony No. 3, in D Major
I. Adagio maestoso; Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto; Vivace
Strauss ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo form, Op. 28
Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" Pianoforte Pieces (Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev.

This was an outstanding evening for many reasons, but the first was Igor Markevitch as conductor. This is a belated report because Mr. Markevitch has conducted the Boston Orchestra before (in 1955) but we watched him for the first time last night. A tall, spare, apparantely dedicated musician, his conducting made great sense to us and he brought forth sounds from a great orchestra which were often unusual but which seemed so inevitable that one could wonder why other performances have not been similar. Mr. Markevitch fully deserved his ovations, in which, incidentally, the orchestra members added their applause to that of the audience.

It was apparent from the opening number that Mr. Markevitch is interested in sound projection. His theories about the spacing of strings set forth at length in last Sunday's Journal, were brilliantly proved and everybody had a great time locating old friends among the performers as they appeared in new places. The sonorities which emerged were both opulent and exciting in challenging the imagination and the ear.

It was also apparent from the that Markevitch excelled. He brought out the best every single musician, combined in an orchestral f... the whole of which semd to be more than "the sum of its parts". His interpretation of Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner was brilliantly presented, with incredible nuances of color and dynamic range. The audience was completely in sympathy with the mischievous Till, chuckling appreciatively when his theme was heard above the somber tones of the full orchestra.

The concert closed with Pictures at an Exhibition, by Moussorgsky, arranged for orchestra by Ravel. This composition contains brilliant color, and demonstrates a very sensitive knowledge of orchestration. Loud, brassy trumpet solos, warm, singing strings, brass and wind solos, made this rather unusual treatment of Moussorgsky's work a thrilling experience for the listener.

Markevitch doubtlessly designed the program to show himself to best advantage. He made it clear that he is a young man of unusual ability. A relative new-comer to this country (1955), he should—and will—be heard again.

Schubert Symphony, being given its first performance by this orchestra, that Mr. Markevitch has the romantic idiom well in hand and gives promise of increasing the standard repertoire. His handling of the two familiar items on the program was superbly controlled and earned excellent response from the orchestra.

Mr. Markevitch is notably outstanding among the so-called "younger" group of conductors. It is safe to note that his next appearance here will be greeted with wide-spread and sincere enthusiasm.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
FEB 26 1957

Chileans to Travel With Symphony

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 26 (UP) —Fourteen visitors from south of the border will accompany the Boston Symphony orchestra to Providence tonight.

The fourteen—11 women and three men between 18 and 22—are from Santiago, Chile. They are accompanying the orchestra to Providence because they are unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston.

They will attend tonight's Veteran's Memorial Auditorium performance, then return to Boston with the orchestra in its bus.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under an exchange program.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
FEB 26 1957

Symphony Guests

14 Young Chileans to Make Trip Here with Players

An "experiment in international living" will be made at Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight when 14 young Chileans will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert.

Not only will they be in the audience, but they will make the trip from Boston and back again with the players.

Unable to attend the Friday night concert in Boston, they received special consideration by the players in bringing them here. Boston University is their host while they are in the Bay State.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
FEB 27 1957

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Is Compared To 'Jam Session'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of a guest conductor, was given wave after wave of applause at the conclusion of a program last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Igor Markevitch, who is more of a cheer leader than an orchestra leader, was called back again and again by unrestrained cheers of excitable members of the audience after he finished the final segment of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" that sounded like a jam session.

The hysteria of a few boisterous listeners swept through the crowded auditorium and became almost mass emotionalism. Maestro Markevitch was called back nine times and the members of the orchestra seemed amazed at the demonstration.

From the beginning, Markevitch showed by his gestures that he was not there to beat the time but to show he was different than other conductors. He made motions with both arms, especially his left, that made the watchers think of a man swimming, rowing a boat, directing traffic, catching flies on the wall, painting a house and patting his Ol' Dog Tray.

Nagged First Violins

He had the irritating habit of frequently nagging the first violins to play more delicately, or pleading with clutching fingers for more verve, or commanding them to hush even when the brasses were overpowering everything. He did this repeatedly until the first violinists ignored him and played it their way. This happened in the Schubert "Symphony No. 3 in D-Major," the second work on the program.

The opening number, "Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the 'Musical Offering'" by Bach was arranged for orchestra by the maestro himself. He not only arranged the original Bach but he rearranged and regrouped the orchestra with cellos behind the violas and violins, and the basses behind the cellos almost in the wings on both sides, down stage. This had the effect of sending the bass rhythms en masse down both side aisles of the auditorium, creating an imbalance of tone in the side seats like a photo out of focus.

After the Beethoven, which was rescued from distortion by the sterling musicianship of the orchestra which played with great beauty in spite of Markevitch's mixed windmill and swooping-swallow style of direction, a Strauss descriptive work, "Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" was played. Here the orchestra sensed that they were being given liberties, if not a free rein, and the sounds increased in force in the fortissimo passages until the din was deafening at times. At the conclusion of the work the audience acted more like football fans than concert goers. Insistent applause recalled Markevich several times and several of the musicians grinned at one another as though the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Stage Crowded

After intermission, the entire orchestra with augmented groups crowded the stage,—two harps, tuba, chimes, contra-bassoon, saxophone, xylophone, glockenspiel, rattle, triangle, whip and tom-tom. All these instruments, plus an orchestration by Maurice Ravel, the abstract interpretations of Markevitch, and the increasing excitement of the musicians and the audience, produced a climax to the concert that resembled as I said in the beginning, a jam session.

Moussorgsky's tonal portraits were presented with an ever-increasing loudness that set the heart to throbbing and the head to pounding. The affects were great, as sound affects, and hinted at Ravel's ultimate insanity. The closing segment of the portraits was "The Great Gate of Kiev," which is Markevich's birthplace. Whether this had anything to do with the orchestra's unrestraint, I can only guess.

The percussion crept up to a rumble, the brasses blasted and screamed, the chimes cut through the massive volume of noise and the string men played like mad without being heard.

The audience caught the hysteria, and the applause that burst out at the closing chord was greater than the Boston Symphony Orchestra had ever received in Providence. Never in Providence has such a concert been played nor such salvos of applause been heard. It was a concert that was more disturbing than pleasing.

C. H. L.

Ormandy Munch In Podium Swap

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's Orchestra debut is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will send Eugene Ormandy to New England to direct the Bostonians this week end.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Alsatian-born conductor will present a program of French music here, including Berlioz' Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and the Philadelphians' premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

PARIS ASSIGNMENTS

In 1929, Munch settled in Paris, where three years later he was named conductor of the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Subsequent assignments included his directorship of the Lamoureux Concerts and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Invited to the United States in 1939 to guest conduct the St. Louis Orchestra, Munch was forced to decline because of the war.

The French maestro first visited here in 1946 and returned two years later as head of the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. He was named music director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1949-50 season, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

VIENNA ENCORE

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the Bostonians and Koussevitzky, commissioned Roussel to write his Third Symphony. The composer was 61 years old at the time and he came to this country for the work's world premiere in Boston, Oct 23, 1930.

Tomorrow evening at the Academy, Ormandy and the Philadelphians will repeat the all-Viennese program heard earlier this month. The concert features Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, the "Romantic"; Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and three works by Johann Strauss, Jr.—"Wine, Women and Song" waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka, and the "Voices of Spring" waltz.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
FEB 27 1957

Young Chilean visitors get autographs from member of Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Igor Markevitch (right) at Veterans Auditorium. The young people are guests of Boston University under an exchange program. Their schedule permitted no Boston concert, so orchestra brought them here last night as its guests.

—Staff Photo

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Markevitch conducting, presented the fourth concert of its current Providence season last evening at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. This was a perfect example of a classic symphony program and Igor Markevitch received ovation applause at the conclusion of both halves of the concert. The program:

Bach .... Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch)
Schubert .. Symphony No. 3, in D Major
I. Adagio maestoso; Allegro con brio
II. Allegretto
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto; Vivace
Strauss ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks. After the Old-fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo form. Op. 28
Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" Pianoforte Pieces
(Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev.

This was an outstanding evening for many reasons, but the first was Igor Markevitch as conductor. This is a belated report because Mr. Markevitch has conducted the Boston Orchestra before (in 1955) but we watched him for the first time last night. A tall, spare, apparently dedicated musician, his conducting made great sense to us and he brought forth sounds from a great orchestra which were often unusual but which seemed so inevitable that one could wonder why other performances have not been similar. Mr. Markevitch fully deserved his ovations, in which, incidentally, the orchestra members added their applause to that of the audience.

It was apparent from the opening number that Mr. Markevitch is interested in sound projection. His theories about the spacing of strings set forth at length in last Sunday's Journal, were brilliantly proved and everybody had a great time locating old friends among the performers as they appeared in new places. The sonorities which emerged were both opulent and exciting in challenging the imagination and the ear.

It was also apparent from the Schubert Symphony, being given its first performance by this orchestra, that Mr. Markevitch has the romantic idiom well in hand and gives promise of increasing the standard repertoire. His handling of the two familiar items on the program was superbly controlled and earned excellent response from the orchestra.

Mr. Markevitch is notably outstanding among the so-called "younger" group of conductors. It is safe to note that his next appearance here will be greeted with wide-spread and sincere enthusiasm.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
FEB 27 1957

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Is Compared To 'Jam Session'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of a guest conductor, was given wave after wave of applause at the conclusion of a program last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

Igor Markevitch, who is more of a cheer leader than an orchestra leader, was called back again and again by unrestrained cheers of excitable members of the audience after he finished the final segment of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" that sounded like a jam session.

The hysteria of a few boisterous listeners swept through the crowded auditorium and became almost mass emotionalism. Maestro Markevitch was called back nine times and the members of the orchestra seemed amazed at the demonstration.

From the beginning, Markevitch showed by his gestures that he was not there to beat the time but to show he was different than other conductors. He made motions with both arms, especially his left, that made the watchers think of a man swimming, rowing a boat, directing traffic, catching flies on the wall, painting a house and patting his Ol' Dog Tray.

Nagged First Violins

He had the irritating habit of frequently nagging the first violins to play more delicately, or pleading with clutching fingers for more verve, or commanding them to hush even when the brasses were overpowering everything. He did this repeatedly until the first violinists ignored him and played it their way. This happened in the Schubert "Symphony No. 3 in D-Major," the second work on the program.

The opening number, "Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the 'Musical Offering'" by Bach was arranged for orchestra by the maestro himself. He not only arranged the original Bach but he rearranged and regrouped the orchestra with cellos behind the violas and violins, and the basses behind the cellos almost in the wings on both sides, down stage. This had the effect of sending the bass rhythms en masse down both side aisles of the auditorium, creating an imbalance of tone in the side seats like a photo out of focus.

After the Beethoven, which was rescued from distortion by the sterling musicianship of the orchestra which played with great beauty in spite of Markevitch's mixed windmill and swooping-swallow style of direction, a Strauss descriptive work, "Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" was played. Here the orchestra sensed that they were being given liberties, if not a free rein, and the sounds increased in force in the fortissimo passages until the din was deafening at times. At the conclusion of the work the audience acted more like football fans than concert goers. Insistent applause recalled Markevich several times and several of the musicians grinned at one another as though the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Stage Crowded

After intermission, the entire orchestra with augmented groups crowded the stage,—two harps, tuba, chimes, contra-bassoon, saxophone, xylophone, glockenspiel, rattle, triangle, whip and tom-tom. All these instruments, plus an orchestration by Maurice Ravel, the abstract interpretations of Markevitch, and the increasing excitement of the musicians and the audience, produced a climax to the concert that resembled as I said in the beginning, a jam session.

Moussorgsky's tonal portraits were presented with an ever-increasing loudness that set the heart to throbbing and the head to pounding. The affects were great, as sound affects, and hinted at Ravel's ultimate insanity. The closing segment of the portraits was "The Great Gate of Kiev," which is Markevich's birthplace. Whether this had anything to do with the orchestra's unrestraint, I can only guess.

The percussion crept up to a rumble, the brasses blasted and screamed, the chimes cut through the massive volume of noise and the string men played like mad without being heard.

The audience caught the hysteria, and the applause that burst out at the closing chord was greater than the Boston Symphony Orchestra had ever received in Providence. Never in Providence has such a concert been played nor such salvos of applause been heard. It was a concert that was more disturbing than pleasing.

C. H. L.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
FEB 26 1957

Chileans to Travel With Symphony

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 26 (UP) —Fourteen visitors from south of the border will accompany the Boston Symphony orchestra to Providence tonight.

The fourteen—11 women and three men between 18 and 22—are from Santiago, Chile. They are accompanying the orchestra to Providence because they are unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston.

They will attend tonight's Veteran's Memorial Auditorium performance, then return to Boston with the orchestra in its bus.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under an exchange program.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
FEB 26 1957

Symphony Guests

14 Young Chileans to Make Trip Here with Players

An "experiment in international living" will be made at Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight when 14 young Chileans will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert.

Not only will they be in the audience, but they will make the trip from Boston and back again with the players.

Unable to attend the Friday night concert in Boston, they received special consideration by the players in bringing them here. Boston University is their host while they are in the Bay State.

Ormandy Munch In Podium Swap

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Munch's Orchestra debut is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will send Eugene Ormandy to New England to direct the Bostonians this week end.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Alsatian-born conductor will present a program of French music here, including Berlioz' Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet," Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and the Philadelphians' premiere performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, in G minor.

PARIS ASSIGNMENTS

In 1929, Munch settled in Paris, where three years later he was named conductor of the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris. Subsequent assignments included his directorship of the Lamoureux Concerts and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Invited to the United States in 1939 to guest conduct the St. Louis Orchestra, Munch was forced to decline because of the war.

The French maestro first visited here in 1946 and returned two years later as head of the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. He was named music director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1949-50 season, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

VIENNA ENCORE

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, the Bostonians and Koussevitzky, commissioned Roussel to write his Third Symphony. The composer was 61 years old at the time and he came to this country for the work's world premiere in Boston, Oct 23, 1930.

Tomorrow evening at the Academy, Ormandy and the Philadelphians will repeat the all-Viennese program heard earlier this month. The concert features Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, the "Romantic"; Hellmesberger's "Ball Scene," and three works by Johann Strauss, Jr.—"Wine, Women and Song" waltz, the New Pizzicato Polka, and the "Voices of Spring" waltz.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

FEB 26 1957

Boston Symphony to Be Host To Visiting Young Chileans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight will give a demonstration of the good neighbor policy to 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile.

When the symphony orchestra journeys to Providence tonight for a performance the 14 visitors will ride along with it from Boston, listen to the performance and then return with the orchestra.

The 11 women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22 will be unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston, so symphony officials made the arrangements that will bring them to the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium for the performance tonight.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under the provisions of an exchange program known as "Experiment in International Living."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

FEB 28 1957

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts BSO

By GERALD A. BERLIN

There was a phenomenon not often witnessed at Symphony Hall on Washington's Birthday. The traditional glacial reserve of the Friday afternon Symphony audience spontaneously gave way to that kind of warm enthusiasm identified with the customary volatility of the Saturday night listeners. The author of all this excitement, of course, was Igor Markevitch, who was guest conductor with the orchestra last weekend in a program that included the Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering" of Johann Sebastian Bach, Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D major, Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Few will deny that in this concert the Russian-born Swiss conductor managed to bring the orchestra up to a standard of excellence that it has approached here in the past dozen years, if at all, only with the late Guido Cantelli. Its responsiveness, clarity, precision, tonal balance—its elan vital, if you will—were such that it is hard to imagine an orchestra's sounding better.

Before hastily consigning Mr. Munch and the overwhelming moity of his contemporary conducting colleagues to oblivion or worse, however, we would do well to re-examine the circumstances under which nearly any foreign conductor on tour like Mr. Markevitch, or as Mr. Cantelli before him, operates. He brings over only a few compositions; this is always evident from the program listings and reviews of his other concerts in different cities. Not only in all probability are these compositions that he performs the best (under the premises why should he put other than his best foot forward?), but he has come to know them as intimately as his own soul. This automatically means that he has the players in his pocket within 15 minutes after the start of the first rehearsal, when, conducting the most complicated score from memory, he stops the orchestra in full tilt to point out to the third trombone that the note he played forte in that D-minor chord is actually marked mezzo-forte. His program will undoubtedly be well-balanced, in order to show his wide-ranging familiarity with styles and periods and the breadth of his scholarship. Thoroughly secure with his material, then, he can address himself at leisure to perfecting his podium image—a certain entre to the hearts of any audience.

Pit all this against the background of boredom with, and accumulated resentment against, most long-established regular conductors and how can the touring guest fail? He is not faced with the day-to-day problems of rehearsal time for half-learned scores. Nor with hostile subscribers who view with alarm anything outside of the standard repertory. Temperamental first-desk men, intermeddling trustees and fuzzy-memoried soloists are not his concern, and he need not be depressed and exhausted by a tight travel schedule or repetitious one-night stands. No, a touring guest may display his wares under the most halcyon conducting conditions.

Now all of this is meant only to place Mr. Markevitch's formidable success of last weekend in some sort of perspective, for his appearance here fitted well within the foregoing considerations. But it in no way is meant to denigrate the prodigious talent he displayed and the results he produced. Folly wide the mark. From the opening statement of the haunting "Musical Offering" fugue to the final towering chord in the "Great Gate of Kiev" his tremendous musical conviction, his mastery of his material, rapport with the players and superb stick technique were unmistakable. Oddly enough, the least imposing of his endeavors turned out to be his own excellent transcription of the Bach. The section played was the last one, the Fifth, and when taken out of context much of its impact, which is cumulative, is dissipated. Nor could it be determined if his scheme of dividing up the small orchestra into three smaller orchestras consisting respectively of two string choirs and the solo instruments produced the claimed added clarity and proper balance without hearing the work played in the more traditional manner. Still, it was clear that we were listening to a fine Bach rendition.

The full realization of Mr. Markevitch's talents occured in the Schubert. This thin, ingenuous little denizen of the Haydn-Mozart classical tradition with its rigid, square themes and Rossinian tarantella is more apt than not to come off as 23 minutes of "Ach du lieber Augustine," a circumstance which may help to explain why it had never been played before at Boston Symphony concerts. But in this performance, done with a small orchestra, there was a rare delicacy and bloom, a nuance of phrasing that was reminiscent of the finer moments of the Vienna Philharmonic. Then Mr. Markevitch unleashed the full orchestral forces on two of the very great masterpieces of descriptive music, "Til Eulenspiegel" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition." Suffice it that conductor and orchestra managed to distil the most dazzling results out of scores so very often paled by repetition.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Markevitch Regroups Strings

By LANING HUMPHREY

ONE of the world's most striking musical personalities comes to Providence as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday evening. He is Igor Markevitch of Switzerland.

As a composer he has created a considerable amount of music and much animated discussion. As a pianist he has reached a high rank. As a conductor he has achieved worldwide acclaim. Perhaps he should also be known as a psychologist and physicist.

An interview with him is a rare adventure. In fluent English—with little accent—he disposes of questions and introduces subjects of his own, with a rapidity and mental concentration that are breathtaking.

Short and of slight build, he paradoxically gives the distinct impression—both on stage and off—of a dynamo of giant energy. His eyes haunt the observer like those of a hypnotist, but he makes one feel that his gaze is probing deep into his subject rather than his questioner.

After flying to Boston from San Francisco, he was soon unleashing boundless energies in rehearsing the orchestra in a program loaded with hard work. At the end, this reporter asked:

"The Moussorgsky-Ravel 'Pictures' and the 'Till Eulenspiegel' must be very taxing?"

"Not so much so as the Schubert Third Symphony, actually."

"Is it a case of the orchestra not knowing its own strength in doing such unpretentious music?"

"No. Your Boston orchestra has delicacy as well as power. What needs work is infusing the music with the right spirit. It is a psychological thing. Performed without that consideration, we have the answer for the neglect of this extremely lovely work. It was a surprise when I was informed that my performance will be the first ever done with this orchestra.

"There is another thing on the program which has a special interest for me. At the beginning, there will be only 42 string players. But I believe that their volume of tone will equal that of a much larger group. That will not be from stronger playing. It will be the result of an experience I made in Italy."

(Mr. Markevitch had used the French word experience, which means experiment in English.)

"When I was conductor of the Florence Orchestra during the occupation by the Allies, something during a rehearsal set me to thinking. Why was it that an increase in the number of strings did not increase the volume of tone?

"It came to my mind that if one stone is thrown into a pond, it can make a very big ripple. But if a second stone is soon thrown in, it makes ripples which interfere with those of the first stone. So with this thought I made an experience.

"I divided the string players into groups which I separated in different parts of the hall, then had them play. For the first time, they made a sound that really equalled their numbers.

"Now, when I came to the problem of arranging Bach's 'Musical Offering' for strings, I profited by this experience. It will be performed by 42 strings—instead of more than 70—seated in widely-spaced groups. I believe the audience will be astonished at the fullness of their tone."

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Music Events This Week

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will return for its fourth Providence concert of the season Tuesday night at 8:15 in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

On the following night at 8:15 Artur Rubinstein, pianist, will be the soloist for the second recital of the Temple Beth El Artists Series, in the Temple auditorium.

Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The program:

I.

Ricercar (Six-Part Fugue), from the "Musical Offering," arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch..Bach

Symphony No. 3 in D Major.....Schubert

"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," After the Old-Fashioned Roguish Manner in Rondo form, Op. 28.....Strauss

II.

"Pictures at an Exhibition," Pianoforte Pieces arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel.....Moussorgsky

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

FEB 26 1957

Young Visitors From Chile To Hear Boston Symphony

Miss Hub Concert So Will See the Orchestra at Providence.

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence, R.I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony Hall here.

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

FEB 26 1957

Visitors To Hear Hub Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors, are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial auditorium, Providence, R. I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony hall here.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

FEB 26 1957

Boston Symphony to Be Host To Visiting Young Chileans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight will give a demonstration of the good neighbor policy to 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile.

When the symphony orchestra journeys to Providence tonight for a performance the 14 visitors will ride along with it from Boston, listen to the performance and then return with the orchestra.

The 11 women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22 will be unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston, so symphony officials made the arrangements that will bring them to the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium for the performance tonight.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under the provisions of an exchange program known as "Experiment in International Living."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

FEB 28 1957

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts BSO

By GERALD A. BERLIN

There was a phenomenon not often witnessed at Symphony Hall on Washington's Birthday. The traditional glacial reserve of the Friday afternon Symphony audience spontaneously gave way to that kind of warm enthusiasm identified with the customary volatility of the Saturday night listeners. The author of all this excitement, of course, was Igor Markevitch, who was guest conductor with the orchestra last weekend in a program that included the Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering" of Johann Sebastian Bach, Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D major, Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Few will deny that in this concert the Russian-born Swiss conductor managed to bring the orchestra up to a standard of excellence that it has approached here in the past dozen years, if at all, only with the late Guido Cantelli. Its responsiveness, clarity, precision, tonal balance—its elan vital, if you will—were such that it is hard to imagine an orchestra's sounding better.

Before hastily consigning Mr. Munch and the overwhelming moity of his contemporary conducting colleagues to oblivion or worse, however, we would do well to re-examine the circumstances under which nearly any foreign conductor on tour like Mr. Markevitch, or as Mr. Cantelli before him, operates. He brings over only a few compositions; this is always evident from the program listings and reviews of his other concerts in different cities. Not only in all probability are these compositions that he performs the best (under the premises why should he put other than his best foot forward?), but he has come to know them as intimately as his own soul. This automatically means that he has the players in his pocket within 15 minutes after the start of the first rehearsal, when, conducting the most complicated score from memory, he stops the orchestra in full tilt to point out to the third trombone that the note he played forte in that D-minor chord is actually marked mezzo-forte. His program will undoubtedly be well-balanced, in order to show his wide-ranging familiarity with styles and periods, and the breadth of his scholarship. Thoroughly secure with his material, then, he can address himself at leisure to perfecting his podium image—a certain entre to the hearts of any audience.

Pit all this against the background of boredom with, and accumulated resentment against, most long-established regular conductors and how can the touring guest fail? He is not faced with the day-to-day problems of rehearsal time for half-learned scores. Nor with hostile subscribers who view with alarm anything outside of the standard repertory. Temperamental first-desk men, intermeddling trustees and fuzzy-memoried soloists are not his concern, and he need not be depressed and exhausted by a tight travel schedule or repetitious one-night stands. No, a touring guest may display his wares under the most halcyon conducting conditions.

Now all of this is meant only to place Mr. Markevitch's formidable success of last weekend in some sort of perspective, for his appearance here fitted well within the foregoing considerations. But it in no way is meant to denigrate the prodigious talent he displayed and the results he produced. Folly wide the mark. From the opening statement of the haunting "Musical Offering" fugue to the final towering chord in the "Great Gate of Kiev" his tremendous musical conviction, his mastery of his material, rapport with the players and superb stick technique were unmistakable. Oddly enough, the least imposing of his endeavors turned out to be his own excellent transcription of the Bach. The section played was the last one, the Fifth, and when taken out of context much of its impact, which is cumulative, is dissipated. Nor could it be determined if his scheme of dividing up the small orchestra into three smaller orchestras consisting respectively of two string choirs and the solo instruments produced the claimed added clarity and proper balance without hearing the work played in the more traditional manner. Still, it was clear that we were listening to a fine Bach rendition.

The full realization of Mr. Markevitch's talents occured in the Schubert. This thin, ingenuous little denizen of the Haydn-Mozart classical tradition with its rigid, square themes and Rossinian tarantella is more apt than not to come off as 23 minutes of "Ach du lieber Augustine," a circumstance which may help to explain why it had never been played before at Boston Symphony concerts. But in this performance, done with a small orchestra, there was a rare delicacy and bloom, a nuance of phrasing that was reminiscent of the finer moments of the Vienna Philharmonic. Then Mr. Markevitch unleashed the full orchestral forces on two of the very great masterpieces of descriptive music, "Til Eulenspeigel" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition." Suffice it that conductor and orchestra managed to distil the most dazzling results out of scores so very often paled by repetition.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Markevitch Regroups Strings

By LANING HUMPHREY

ONE of the world's most striking musical personalities comes to Providence as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday evening. He is Igor Markevitch of Switzerland.

As a composer he has created a considerable amount of music and much animated discussion. As a pianist he has reached a high rank. As a conductor he has achieved worldwide acclaim. Perhaps he should also be known as a psychologist and physicist.

An interview with him is a rare adventure. In fluent English—with little accent—he disposes of questions and introduces subjects of his own, with a rapidity and mental concentration that are breathtaking.

Short and of slight build, he paradoxically gives the distinct impression—both on stage and off—of a dynamo of giant energy. His eyes haunt the observer like those of a hypnotist, but he makes one feel that his gaze is probing deep into his subject rather than his questioner.

After flying to Boston from San Francisco, he was soon unleashing boundless energies in rehearsing the orchestra in a program loaded with hard work. At the end, this reporter asked:

"The Moussorgsky-Ravel 'Pictures' and the 'Till Eulenspiegel' must be very taxing?"

"Not so much so as the Schubert Third Symphony, actually."

"Is it a case of the orchestra not knowing its own strength in doing such unpretentious music?"

"No. Your Boston orchestra has delicacy as well as power. What needs work is infusing the music with the right spirit. It is a psychological thing. Performed without that consideration, we have the answer for the neglect of this extremely lovely work. It was a surprise when I was informed that my performance will be the first ever done with this orchestra.

"There is another thing on the program which has a special interest for me. At the beginning, there will be only 42 string players. But I believe that their volume of tone will equal that of a much larger group. That will not be from stronger playing. It will be the result of an experience I made in Italy."

(Mr. Markevitch had used the French word experience, which means experiment in English.)

"When I was conductor of the Florence Orchestra during the occupation by the Allies, something during a rehearsal set me to thinking. Why was it that an increase in the number of strings did not increase the volume of tone?

"It came to my mind that if one stone is thrown into a pond, it can make a very big ripple. But if a second stone is soon thrown in, it makes ripples which interfere with those of the first stone. So with this thought I made an experience.

"I divided the string players into groups which I separated in different parts of the hall, then had them play. For the first time, they made a sound that really equalled their numbers.

"Now, when I came to the problem of arranging Bach's 'Musical Offering' for strings, I profited by this experience. It will be performed by 42 strings—instead of more than 70—seated in widely-spaced groups. I believe the audience will be astonished at the fullness of their tone."

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Music Events This Week

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will return for its fourth Providence concert of the season Tuesday night at 8:15 in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

On the following night at 8:15 Artur Rubinstein, pianist, will be the soloist for the second recital of the Temple Beth El Artists Series, in the Temple auditorium.

Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The program:

Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering" arranged for Orchestra by Igor Markevitch, Bach
Symphony No. 3 in D Major, Schubert
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks After the Old-Fashioned Rogue, Harper in Rondo form, Op. 28 Strauss
II
Pictures at an Exhibition, Piano-Suite, Pictures arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel, Moussorgsky

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

FEB 26 1957

Young Visitors From Chile To Hear Boston Symphony

Miss Hub Concert So Will See the Orchestra at Providence.

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Provdence, R.I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony Hall here.

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

FEB 26 1957

Visitors To Hear Hub Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors, are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial auditorium, Provdence, R. I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony hall here.

TIGHT BINDING

210

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 27 1957

Ormandy Discusses Orchestras

Visiting Conductor Praises Leading American Ensembles

By Harold Rogers

Eugene Ormandy feels keenly about the "inferiority complex of the American public." It is a complex stemming from two main sources, he said—an inability on behalf of the public to judge the superlative quality of its leading orchestras, plus the inability of some music critics to assess the true merits of American orchestras as compared to European orchestras.

"The American public has been spoiled by the great variety of music it hears in a single season," he explained. "Americans are given a wider selection of music than is heard in Europe. Many of them also do not realize that the leading American orchestras are second to none!"

Mr. Ormandy had just completed a rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he will conduct for the first time this weekend. For the past 21 years—ever since the Stokowski era—he has headed the Philadelphia Orchestra. He and Charles Munch are trading places for this pair of concerts.

* * *

He complimented Bostonians on having an orchestra unequaled by any ensemble abroad. He said that the United States now has five great orchestras. To the "big three"—Boston, New York, and Philadelphia—he feels that Chicago and Cleveland should be added.

"Some of us do not realize," he went on, "that when European orchestras visit us, they play only the works with which they are most familiar. Naturally they play them well. But this is no reason for assuming that these orchestras are better than ours. American orchestras are far more versatile in what they can play. They have greater technical proficiency."

There is only one way in which Europeans exceed Americans, he said, and that is in the warmth of their reception of music. They are much more appreciative and much more demonstrative in showing this appreciation.

This weekend Mr. Ormandy will conduct the Boston première of a new work by William Schuman, whom he considers "one of our great American composers." It is called "Credendum" and subtitled "Article of Faith."

Its history is unique in that it is the first symphonic work to be commissioned by an agency of the United States Government. It was ordered for UNESCO through the State Department, and was given its first performance by the Cincinnati Symphony, Thor Johnson conducting, in November, 1955. Mr. Ormandy first conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956. He has since recorded it for Columbia, though it is still to be released.

* * *

"I believe in William Schuman," Mr. Ormandy declared. "He has something to say, and he has an individual language in which to say it. These things are important to a composer. Schuman has his own original ideas, and he will not budge in his manner of expressing them. It's not necessary for everyone to love what he says."

Mr. Ormandy said that soon after Mr. Schuman completed his "Credendum," there were 12 announced performances, all of which were canceled for one reason or another after the conductors had seen the score. Most of them considered it unplayable. Mr. Schuman told Mr. Ormandy that he was glad to have Mr. Ormandy's recording of it, for it was undisputable proof that his piece was playable.

In one movement of 18 to 20 minutes, the work is cast in an A-B-C form and is scored for a large orchestra.

Boston Traveler, Wednesday, Feb. 27, 1957 C 5

Look Over Plans

DUBLIN'S LORD MAYOR Robert Briscoe (right) and Ireland's President Sean T. O'Kelly (center) study the program prepared for the Lord Mayor's visit to Boston March 18 and 19. With them is Michael T. Kelleher of Boston who will serve as chairman of the welcoming committee. He served in the same capacity 18 years ago when O'Kelly visited Boston.

Sidney R. Rabb, president of Stop & Shop, Atty. Daniel J. Lyne and Eugene Sheehan.

Leaders Plan Dinner

Boston To Fete Dublin Mayor

Boston business and civic leaders are helping Mayor Hynes plan a reception and dinner March 18 at the Sheraton Plaza for Robert Briscoe, Lord Mayor of Dublin.

The dinner will highlight a two-day celebration honoring the first Hebrew mayor of the Irish city.

ENTERTAINMENT BY GAELIC CLUBS

Investment broker Joseph Gannon, dinner chairman, announced today that plans have been completed. He described the proposed dinner as one of the most unusual tributes in the history of Boston.

Entertainment under the direction of co-chairman Michael T. Kelleher will feature presentation by Greater Boston Gaelic club groups.

This will be climaxed with a musical salute to the Dublin mayor under the direction of William E. Boyle. It will feature units from the Clover Glee Club and orchestra.

Alfred Krips of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render a violin solo.

Irish societies and clubs represented will include the Charitable Irish Society, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Central Council of Irish Clubs, Eire Club of Boston and the Clover Club.

TICKET DEMAND VERY HEAVY

Because of the unusual demand for tickets to the dinner, Mayor Hynes has ordered that acceptance of reservations end at midnight March 10. Committee Committee Treasurer Clement W. Deasy of Second Bank-State Street Trust Company is in charge of reservations.

Police Comm. Thomas F. Sullivan will be chairman of the reception committee.

Assisting Kelleher will be George Alpert, president of the New Haven Railroad; Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne; Superior Court Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., and Atty. Henry L. Shattuck.

Also, Adrian F. O'Keeffe, president of First National Stores,

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 28 1957

Symphony to Go on Air Under Ormandy Baton

Friday Programs

Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend. He will conduct the orchestra in the first Boston performance of Schuman's "Credendum." The program will include Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 73.

As usual WGBH-FM will broadcast both the Friday afternoon concert, at 2:10, and the Saturday evening concert, at 8:25, directly from Symphony Hall.

* * *

"The Elizabethans," edited by Allardyce Nicoll, will be the subject of Channel 2's "I've Been Reading" series, Friday at 6:45 p.m. P. Albert Duhamel, professor of English, Boston College, Bryant Haliday, producer of the Cambridge Drama Festival, and owner of the Brattle Theater in Cambridge, Mass., and Madeleine Doran, Mary Whiton Calkins visiting professor of English, Wellesley College, will participate in an informal half-hour discussion of the book.

* * *

Dr. Harold C. Case, president of Boston University, will be the principal speaker on WBUR-FM's weekly panel discussion program, called "Inquiry," beginning this Friday at 7:30 p.m.

The object of this series has been to present the university as a community of scholars and students. This week Dr. Case has chosen for discussion the subject, "Role of Boston University in the Urban Community." Included on the panel will be Dr. J. Wendell Yeo, vice-president for academic affairs and Dr. Robert Oxnam, vice-president for administrative affairs.

* * *

Edward R. Murrow will take his "Person to Person" cameras to the homes of Tennessee Ernie and Xavier Cugat, Friday at 10:30 p.m. on Channels 9 and 12. Originally Glenn Ford and his wife Eleanor Powell were to be hosts to "Person to Person," but movie commitments necessitated a postponement of the visit. Tennessee Ernie was scheduled for a springtime visit, but Friday night his home in North Hollywood, where he lives with his wife and two sons, will be the scene of the telecast.

Xavier Cugat, and his wife, Abbe Lane, will be visited in New York City.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
FEB 28 1957

Eugene Ormandy Guest Conductor At Symphony Hall

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2, the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a Government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for very large orchestra, and is in three parts: Declaration, Chorale and Finale. Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November, 1955 and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956. The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th century German painter, Matthias Gruenewald, who is the opera's central figure. "Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December 1934, and most recently in November, 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' Second Symphony.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

FEB 26 1957

Boston Symphony to Be Host To Visiting Young Chileans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight will give a demonstration of the good neighbor policy to 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile.

When the symphony orchestra journeys to Providence tonight for a performance the 14 visitors will ride along with it from Boston, listen to the performance and then return with the orchestra.

The 11 women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22 will be unable to attend Friday's performance of the orchestra in Boston, so symphony officials made the arrangements that will bring them to the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium for the performance tonight.

The visitors are guests of Boston University under the provisions of an exchange program known as "Experiment in International Living."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

FEB 28 1957

Music in Review

Igor Markevitch Conducts BSO

By GERALD A. BERLIN

There was a phenomenon not often witnessed at Symphony Hall on Washington's Birthday. The traditional glacial reserve of the Friday afternon Symphony audience spontaneously gave way to that kind of warm enthusiasm identified with the customary volatility of the Saturday night listeners. The author of all this excitement, of course, was Igor Markevitch, who was guest conductor with the orchestra last weekend in a program that included the Ricercar (Six Part Fugue) from the "Musical Offering" of Johann Sebastian Bach, Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D major, Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Few will deny that in this concert the Russian-born Swiss conductor managed to bring the orchestra up to a standard of excellence that it has approached here in the past dozen years, if at all, only with the late Guido Cantelli. Its responsiveness, clarity, precision, tonal balance—its elan vital, if you will—were such that it is hard to imagine an orchestra's sounding better.

Before hastily consigning Mr. Munch and the overwhelming moity of his contemporary conducting colleagues to oblivion or worse, however, we would do well to re-examine the circumstances under which nearly any foreign conductor on tour like Mr. Markevitch, or as Mr. Cantelli before him, operates. He brings over only a few compositions; this is always evident from the program listings and reviews of his other concerts in different cities. Not only in all probability are these compositions that he performs the best (under the premises why should he put other than his best foot forward?), but he has come to know them as intimately as his own soul. This automatically means that he has the players in his pocket within 15 minutes after the start of the first rehearsal, when, conducting the most complicated score from memory, he stops the orchestra in full tilt to point out to the third trombone that the note he played forte in that D-minor chord is actually marked mezzo-forte. His program will undoubtedly be well-balanced, in order to show his wide-ranging familiarity with styles and periods, and the breadth of his scholarship. Thoroughly secure with his material, then, he can address himself at leisure to perfecting his podium image—a certain entre to the hearts of any audience.

Pit all this against the background of boredom with, and accumulated resentment against, most long-established regular conductors and how can the touring guest fail? He is not faced with the day-to-day problems of rehearsal time for half-learned scores. Nor with hostile subscribers who view with alarm anything outside of the standard repertory. Temperamental first-desk men, intermeddling trustees and fuzzy-memoried soloists are not his concern, and he need not be depressed and exhausted by a tight travel schedule or repetitious one-night stands. No, a touring guest may display his wares under the most halcyon conducting conditions.

Now all of this is meant only to place Mr. Markevitch's formidable success of last weekend in some sort of perspective, for his appearance here fitted well within the foregoing considerations. But it in no way is meant to denigrate the prodigious talent he displayed and the results he produced. Folly wide the mark. From the opening statement of the haunting "Musical Offering" fugue to the final towering chord in the "Great Gate of Kiev" his tremendous musical conviction, his mastery of his material, rapport with the players and superb stick technique were unmistakable. Oddly enough, the least imposing of his endeavors turned out to be his own excellent transcription of the Bach. The section played was the last one, the Fifth, and when taken out of context much of its impact, which is cumulative, is dissipated. Nor could it be determined if his scheme of dividing up the small orchestra into three smaller orchestras consisting respectively of two string choirs and the solo instruments produced the claimed added clarity and proper balance without hearing the work played in the more traditional manner. Still, it was clear that we were listening to a fine Bach rendition.

The full realization of Mr. Markevitch's talents occured in the Schubert. This thin, ingenuous little denizen of the Haydn-Mozart classical tradition with its rigid, square themes and Rossinian tarantella is more apt than not to come off as 23 minutes of "Ach du lieber Augustine," a circumstance which may help to explain why it had never been played before at Boston Symphony concerts. But in this performance, done with a small orchestra, there was a rare delicacy and bloom, a nuance of phrasing that was reminiscent of the finer moments of the Vienna Philharmonic. Then Mr. Markevitch unleashed the full orchestral forces on two of the very great masterpieces of descriptive music, "Til Eulenspeigel" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition." Suffice it that conductor and orchestra managed to distil the most dazzling results out of scores so very often paled by repetition.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Markevitch Regroups Strings

By LANING HUMPHREY

ONE of the world's most striking musical personalities comes to Providence as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday evening. He is Igor Markevitch of Switzerland.

As a composer he has created a considerable amount of music and much animated discussion. As a pianist he has reached a high rank. As a conductor he has achieved worldwide acclaim. Perhaps he should also be known as a psychologist and physicist.

An interview with him is a rare adventure. In fluent English—with little accent—he disposes of questions and introduces subjects of his own, with a rapidity and mental concentration that are breathtaking.

Short and of slight build, he paradoxically gives the distinct impression—both on stage and off—of a dynamo of giant energy. His eyes haunt the observer like those of a hypnotist, but he makes one feel that his gaze is probing deep into his subject rather than his questioner.

After flying to Boston from San Francisco, he was soon unleashing boundless energies in rehearsing the orchestra in a program loaded with hard work. At the end, this reporter asked:

"The Moussorgsky-Ravel 'Pictures' and the 'Till Eulenspiegel' must be very taxing?"

"Not so much so as the Schubert Third Symphony, actually."

"Is it a case of the orchestra not knowing its own strength in doing such unpretentious music?"

"No. Your Boston orchestra has delicacy as well as power. What needs work is infusing the music with the right spirit. It is a psychological thing. Performed without that consideration, we have the answer for the neglect of this extremely lovely work. It was a surprise when I was informed that my performance will be the first ever done with this orchestra.

"There is another thing on the program which has a special interest for me. At the beginning, there will be only 42 string players. But I believe that their volume of tone will equal that of a much larger group. That will not be from stronger playing. It will be the result of an experience I made in Italy."

(Mr. Markevitch had used the French word experience, which means experiment in English.)

"When I was conductor of the Florence Orchestra during the occupation by the Allies, something during a rehearsal set me to thinking. Why was it that an increase in the number of strings did not increase the volume of tone?

"It came to my mind that if one stone is thrown into a pond, it can make a very big ripple. But if a second stone is soon thrown in, it makes ripples which interfere with those of the first stone. So with this thought I made an experience.

"I divided the string players into groups which I separated in different parts of the hall, then had them play. For the first time, they made a sound that really equalled their numbers.

"Now, when I came to the problem of arranging Bach's 'Musical Offering' for strings, I profited by this experience. It will be performed by 42 strings—instead of more than 70—seated in widely-spaced groups. I believe the audience will be astonished at the fullness of their tone."

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704

FEB 24 1957

Music Events This Week

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will return for its fourth Providence concert of the season Tuesday night at 8:15 in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

On the following night at 8:15 Artur Rubinstein, pianist, will be the soloist for the second recital of the Temple Beth El Artists Series, in the Temple auditorium.

Igor Markevitch will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The program:

I.

Ricercar (Six-Part Fugue), from the "Musical Offering," arranged for orchestra by Igor Markevitch..Bach
Symphony No. 3 in D Major.....
..... Schubert
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-Fashioned Roguish Manner in Rondo form, Op. 28.....
..... Strauss

II.

"Pictures at an Exhibition," Pianoforte Pieces arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel.....Moussorgsky

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

FEB 26 1957

Young Visitors From Chile To Hear Boston Symphony

Miss Hub Concert So Will See the Orchestra at Providence.

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence, R.I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony Hall here.

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

FEB 26 1957

Visitors To Hear Hub Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Some quick thinking today made it possible for 14 young visitors from Santiago, Chile, to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Eleven women and three men between the ages of 18 and 22, the visitors, are guests of Boston University in the operation of an exchange project known as Experiment in International Living.

It would not be possible for them to attend Friday afternoon's concert so symphony officials arranged for them to attend a performance tomorrow night in Veterans Memorial auditorium, Providence, R. I.

The visitors will ride to Providence in the same buses that carry the orchestra there, and will come back the same way. Before departure, they'll be taken on a quick tour of Symphony hall here.

210

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 27 1957

Ormandy Discusses Orchestras

Boston Traveler, Wednesday, Feb. 27, 1957 C 5

Look Over Plans

DUBLIN'S LORD MAYOR Robert Briscoe (right) and Ireland's President Sean T. O'Kelly (center) study the program prepared for the Lord Mayor's visit to Boston March 18 and 19. With them is Michael T. Kelleher of Boston who will serve as chairman of the welcoming committee. He served in the same capacity 18 years ago when O'Kelly visited Boston.

Leaders Plan Dinner

Boston To Fete Dublin Mayor

Boston business and civic leaders are helping Mayor Hynes plan a reception and dinner March 18 at the Sheraton Plaza for Robert Briscoe, Lord Mayor of Dublin.

The dinner will highlight a two-day celebration honoring the first Hebrew mayor of the Irish city.

ENTERTAINMENT BY GAELIC CLUBS

Investment broker Joseph Gannon, dinner chairman, announced today that plans have been completed. He described the proposed dinner as one of the most unusual tributes in the history of Boston.

Entertainment under the direction of co-chairman Michael T. Kelleher will feature presentation by Greater Boston Gaelic club groups.

This will be climaxed with a musical salute to the Dublin mayor under the direction of William E. Boyle. It will feature units from the Clover Glee Club and orchestra.

Alfred Krins of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render a violin solo.

Irish societies and clubs represented will include the Charitable Irish Society, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Central Council of Irish Clubs, Eire Club of Boston and the Clover Club.

TICKET DEMAND VERY HEAVY

Because of the unusual demand for tickets to the dinner, Mayor Hynes has ordered that acceptance of reservations end at midnight March 10. Committee

Committee Treasurer Clement W. Deasy of Second Bank-State Street Trust Company is in charge of reservations.

Police Comm. Thomas F. Sullivan will be chairman of the reception committee.

Assisting Kelleher will be George Alpert, president of the New Haven Railroad; Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne; Superior Court Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., and Atty. Henry L. Shattuck.

Also, Adrian F. O'Keeffe, president of First National Stores, Sidney R. Rabb, president of Stop & Shop, Atty. Daniel J. Lyne and Eugene Sheehan.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
FEB 28 1957

Symphony to Go on Air Under Ormandy Baton

Friday Programs

Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend. He will conduct the orchestra in the first Boston performance of Schuman's "Credendum." The program will include Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 73.

As usual WGBH-FM will broadcast both the Friday afternoon concert, at 2:10, and the Saturday evening concert, at 8:25, directly from Symphony Hall.

"The Elizabethans," edited by Allardyce Nicoll, will be the subject of Channel 2's "I've Been Reading" series, Friday at 6:45 p.m. P. Albert Duhamel, professor of English, Boston College, Bryant Haliday, producer of the Cambridge Drama Festival, and owner of the Brattle Theater in Cambridge, Mass., and Madeleine Doran, Mary Whiton Calkins visiting professor of English, Wellesley College, will participate in an informal half-hour discussion of the book.

Dr. Harold C. Case, president of Boston University, will be the principal speaker on WBUR-FM's weekly panel discussion program, called "Inquiry," beginning this Friday at 7:30 p.m.

The object of this series has been to present the university as a community of scholars and students. This week Dr. Case has chosen for discussion the subject, "Role of Boston University in the Urban Community." Included on the panel will be Dr. J. Wendell Yeo, vice-president for academic affairs and Dr. Robert Oxnam, vice-president for administrative affairs.

Edward R. Murrow will take his "Person to Person" cameras to the homes of Tennessee Ernie and Xavier Cugat, Friday at 10:30 p.m. on Channels 9 and 12. Originally Glenn Ford and his wife Eleanor Powell were to be hosts to "Person to Person," but movie commitments necessitated a postponement of the visit. Tennessee Ernie was scheduled for a springtime visit, but Friday night his home in North Hollywood, where he lives with his wife and two sons, will be the scene of the telecast.

Xavier Cugat, and his wife, Abbe Lane, will be visited in New York City.

Visiting Conductor Praises Leading American Ensembles

By Harold Rogers

Eugene Ormandy feels keenly about the "inferiority complex of the American public." It is a complex stemming from two main sources, he said—an inability on behalf of the public to judge the superlative quality of its leading orchestras, plus the inability of some music critics to assess the true merits of American orchestras as compared to European orchestras.

"The American public has been spoiled by the great variety of music it hears in a single season," he explained. "Americans are given a wider selection of music than is heard in Europe. Many of them also do not realize that the leading American orchestras are second to none!"

Mr. Ormandy had just completed a rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he will conduct for the first time this weekend. For the past 21 years—ever since the Stokowski era—he has headed the Philadelphia Orchestra. He and Charles Munch are trading places for this pair of concerts.

He complimented Bostonians on having an orchestra unequaled by any ensemble abroad. He said that the United States now has five great orchestras. To the "big three"—Boston, New York, and Philadelphia—he feels that Chicago and Cleveland should be added.

"Some of us do not realize," he went on, "that when European orchestras visit us, they play only the works with which they are most familiar. Naturally they play them well. But this is no reason for assuming that these orchestras are better than ours. American orchestras are far more versatile in what they can play. They have greater technical proficiency."

There is only one way in which Europeans exceed Americans, he said, and that is in the warmth of their reception of music. They are much more appreciative and much more demonstrative in showing this appreciation.

This weekend Mr. Ormandy will conduct the Boston première of a new work by William Schuman, whom he considers "one of our great American composers." It is called "Credendum" and subtitled "Article of Faith."

Its history is unique in that it is the first symphonic work to be commissioned by an agency of the United States Government. It was ordered for UNESCO through the State Department, and was given its first performance by the Cincinnati Symphony, Thor Johnson conducting, in November, 1955. Mr. Ormandy first conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956. He has since recorded it for Columbia, though it is still to be released.

"I believe in William Schuman," Mr. Ormandy declared. "He has something to say, and he has an individual language in which to say it. These things are important to a composer. Schuman has his own original ideas, and he will not budge in his manner of expressing them. It's not necessary for everyone to love what he says."

Mr. Ormandy said that soon after Mr. Schuman completed his "Credendum," there were 12 announced performances, all of which were canceled for one reason or another after the conductors had seen the score. Most of them considered it unplayable. Mr. Schuman told Mr. Ormandy that he was glad to have Mr. Ormandy's recording of it, for it was undisputable proof that his piece was playable.

In one movement of 18 to 20 minutes, the work is cast in an A-B-C form and is scored for a large orchestra.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
FEB 28 1957

Eugene Ormandy Guest Conductor At Symphony Hall

At the 17th pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, March 1 and 2, the guest conductor will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra. While Mr. Ormandy is in Boston, Charles Munch will be conducting concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra on the same dates. Mr. Ormandy, who has been conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 20 years, was born in Budapest and started his career as a violin virtuoso. He was conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1931 until he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as music director in 1936.

Eugene Ormandy will open his program with the first performance in Boston of William Schuman's "Credendum," subtitled "Article of Faith." The "Credendum" was commissioned by the United States Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and is unique in that this is the first time in United States history that a Government department has commissioned a symphonic work. It is scored for a very large orchestra, and is in three parts: Declaration, Chorale and Finale. Its first performance was given by Thor Johnson with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in November, 1955, and Mr. Ormandy conducted it in Philadelphia in March, 1956. The second work on the program will be the Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," ("Matthias the Painter"), by Paul Hindemith. This composition is a series of orchestral excerpts made by the composer from his opera of the same name. Its three movements are based on paintings by the 16th century man painter, Matthias Grünewald, who is the opera's central figure. "Mathis der Maler" was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin in December 1934 and most recently in November 1951, with Pierre Monteux conducting. Mr. Ormandy will close his program with Brahms' second Symphony.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 1957

211

Boston

By Cyrus Durgin

Boston Symphony, 251 Huntington Ave. Music director: Charles Munch. Associate conductor: Richard Burgin. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2631. Twenty-four pairs of subscription concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings; six subscription concerts on Sunday afternoons; nine subscription concerts on Tuesday evenings; six subscription concerts at Sanders Theater (Harvard University), Cambridge, on Tuesday evenings; one concert at Kresge Auditorium, 1,238, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Dec. 5; one week tour of cities in midwest; five tours of one week each to New York and other cities.

Boston Pops Orchestra, 251 Huntington Ave. Conductor: Arthur Fiedler. Assistant conductor: Harry Ellis Dickson. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Concerts on weekday (and some Sunday) evenings in May and June. Another orchestra, called the Boston Pops Touring Orchestra, gives concerts in the winter in various cities under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Esplanade Concerts. Auspices: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Conductors: Arthur Fiedler and guests. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade. Orchestra includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Evening concert (and three on Wednesday morning, for children) for three weeks in July and August.

Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Conductor: Charles Munch. Six weekend series of concerts by chamber orchestra and the full numbers of the Boston Symphony, in July and August. The Festival also includes student events, for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Boston University Celebrity Series. Managing director: Aaron Richmond 143 Newbury St. Boston Opera House, 3,000; Symphony Hall, 2,631; Jordan Hall, 1,019. Royal Danish Ballet, Oct. 3; Berlin Philharmonic, Herbert von Karajan, conductor, Oct. 14; Adele Addison, Oct. 21; Michael Rabin, Nov. 11; Richard Dyer-Bennet, Nov. 16; Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Nov. 18; Leon Fleisher, Nov. 25; Budapest String Quartet, Nov. 28; Golden Age Singers of London, Dec. 9; Solomon, Jan. 13; Destine and Haitian Dance Company, Jan. 25 and 26; Renata Tebaldi, Feb. 3; Quartetto Italiano, Feb. 13; Artur Rubenstein, Feb. 24; Gerald Moore, March 3; Bach Aria Group, March 17; Rudolf Firkusny, March 24.

Aaron Richmond, 143 Newbury St. Mr. Richmond's other activities include: Temple Beth El, Providence, R. I.; Hilde Gueden, Jan. 23; Artur

School, Wellesley, Mass.: Irmgard Seefried, Dec. 4; Nathan Milstein, Feb. 5; Eugene Istomin, April 11. Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.: Ruth and Paul Draper, Oct. 20; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Dec. 7; Don Cossacks, April 26. Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.: Jan Peerce, Nov. 15; Lubeshutz and Nemenoff, Jan. 15; Andres Segovia, March 21. University of Connecticut, Storrs, Conn.: Artur Rubinstein, Feb. 28. Harvard Musical Association, Boston, Mass.: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Nov. 2; David Bar-Illan, Nov. 30; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Dec. 14; Griller Quartet, Jan. 11; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Feb. 14 and 15; Tom Lehrer, March 1; Curtis Quartet, April 12; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 26; James Gregory, March 29; Phyllis

Symphony Hall in Boston

Curtin, Feb. 1. Gardner Museum, Boston, Mass.: Julian Olevsky, Oct. 7; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Dec. 23; Griller Quartet, Jan. 13; Ajemian Sisters, Feb. 3; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Feb. 17; Rabinofs, March 3; Almo Trio, March 10; Bel Arte Trio, April 7; Curtis Quartet, April 14; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 28.

In Boston, also Mr. Richmond presents the following: Mantovani and His New Music, Oct. 2; Dame Ninette de Valois, Nov. 9; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Nov. 14; Yugoslav National Ballet, Dec. 14; Little Singers of Paris, Jan. 27; Old Vic Theater Company, week of Jan. 14; Walter Gieseking, March 10; Vienna Choir Boys, March 31; Don Cossacks, April 28; Andres Segovia, April 7.

New England Opera Theater. Artistic director: Boris Goldovsky. Executive director: Ralph G. Tedford. Tour of seven weeks in Cimarosa's "The Secret Marriage", beginning Oct. 22. John Hancock Hall, 1,132. "The Secret Marriage", Dec. 11 and 13.

Mason Music Foundation. President: Paul Doguereau, 59 Fayerweather St., Cambridge. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Societa Corelli, Oct. 4 and 5; Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

Handel and Haydn Society, 687 Boylston St. Conductor: Dr. Thompson Stone. Manager: Elizabeth I. Burt. President: F. Otis Drayton.

Harriet E. O'Brien. Boston Opera House, 3,000. Spring season, beginning April 8, by Metropolitan Opera Association.

Boston Morning Musicales. Chairman, executive committee, Mrs. John W. Myers. Hotel Statler Ballroom, 1,000. Eileen Farrell, Nov. 7; Leopold Simonbau, Dec. 5; Cesare Siepi, Dec. 19; Erica Morini, Jan. 23; Hilde Gueden, Feb. 13; Claudio Arrau, March 13.

Zimbler String Sinfonietta. Auspices: Friends of Chamber Music, Inc. Founder: Josef Zimbler. Manager: Aaron Richmond. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts, Feb. 20, March 6 and March 27. Other concerts out of town.

Cambridge Society for Early Music. President: Rosario Mazzeo, Symphony Hall. Music director: Erwin Bodky. Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Three concerts, Oct. 29, Nov. 26, Dec. 3.

Cecilia Society. Conductor: Hugh Ross. President: Laura Hill, 65 Park Drive. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Various concerts.

Wellesley Concert Series. Manager: David Barnett. Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass. Alumnae Hall, 1,500. Martial Singher, Nov. 12; Erica Morini, March 7; Robert Goldsand, April 24.

The Brass Ensemble. Director: Roger Voisin, Symphony Hall. Brass players from Boston Symphony, Concerts to be announced.

New England Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave. President: Harrison Keller; Dean: Chester W. Williams; Conductor, student orchestra: Richard Burgin; director, department of opera: Boris Goldovsky; head of the piano department: Howard Goding; head of vocal department: Frederick Jagel; director of student chorus: Lorna Cooke de Varon; conductor of student band: Georges Moleux.

Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Huntington Ave. Educational director: William Germain Dooley. Concert director: Narcissa Williamson.

Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 84 Exeter St. Dean: Robert A. Choate. Assistant to the Dean: Jules Wolffers. Conductor of student orchestra: Russell Stanger; head of opera department: Sarah Caldwell. Concerts by student groups, radio activities and plays, in Boston University Theater, Recital Hall and Hayden Auditorium.

Boston University Violin Artist Ensemble, Emanuel Ondricek, director and conductor.

Boston Conservatory of Music, 26 The Fenway. Director: Albert Alphin. Dean: Aurelio Greslin.

Boston Public Library, Copley

Massachusetts

Square. Director: Milton E. Lord. Lecture Hall. Free concerts and lectures.

Harvard University Department of Music, Cambridge. Chairman: Randall Thompson. Sanders Theater, 1,200; Paine Hall, 500. Miscellaneous concerts under auspices of the department.

Brookline Academy of Music and Art, 1685 Beacon St. Director: M. Martin Kostick.

Lordly and Dame, 80 Boylston St. Managers: Dana Lordly, Samuel Dame, Martin Forrest. Sergio Perticaroli, November. Lecture attractions.

Chorus Pro Musica. (Mixed chorus). Director: Alfred Nash Patterson. Concerts in various auditoriums.

Apollo Club. Director: William Achilles.

Hargoode Concerts and Attractions, 400 Boylston St. Manager: Harry Goodman. Supplies musical artists and lecturers to schools and Colleges.

Boston Civic Symphony, 244 Chestnut Ave., Jamaica Plain. Conductor: Paul Cherkassky. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts.

Longy School of Music, 1 Follen St., Cambridge. Director: Melville Smith. Affiliated with Harvard University and Radcliffe College.

Demeter Zachareff, 25 Huntington Ave. Miscellaneous musical and lecture events; supplies bookings to schools and colleges. Jordan Hall, 1,019. John Moriarty, Oct. 28; Uni and Maeda Sprengling, Nov. 15.

Country Evening Concert Series, Weston, Mass., Country School Auditorium. Booking agents: Aaron Richmond. Cesare Valletti, Jan. 11; Jean Casadesus, Feb. 8; Paganini Quartet, March 15.

Baltic Concert Series, Management: Baltic American Society of New England. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Carmen Prii, Sept. 28; Vaclovas Verikaitis, Feb. 8; Ingus Naruns, April 5.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
Circ. D. 705,054 - S. 709,787
FEB 24 1957

MUSIC

Met Offers 'Carmen'; Munch to Exchange Roles With Ormandy

THE WEEKEND concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra will have a change of pace as Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, takes charge on the podium. This is a reciprocity affair, for the week sees Eugene Ormandy traveling to Boston to take the reins in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Munch has been heard here with the French National Orchestra and the Boston Symphony, but this will be his debut as conductor of the Philadelphians.

As was to be expected, the French-Boston leader will offer a program that consists of French music. The program lists Berlioz's love-scene from the Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo et Juliette," Honneger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite for Orchestra, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and Albert Roussel's Symphony No. 3.

The latter piece, which is enjoying its first Philadelphia performance, was commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the late Serge Koussevitzky for the 50th anniversary of that organization. It is a piece of unusual interest, scored in the fastidious manner characteristic of this composer.

Continued on Page 8, Col. 1

Continued From Page 6

Before going to Boston to take up his duties in the New England capital, Eugene Ormandy pauses here, tomorrow night, to direct the Philadelphia Orchestra's eighth Monday evening concert at the Academy of Music. Benno Moiseiwitsch will again be heard as soloist.

RICHARD TUCKER, recently heard here in the Verdi "Requiem," and scheduled for Tuesday's Metropolitan "Carmen" here, need not pack his bags, for Thursday night he is singing his first full-length Philadelphia recital at the Academy of Music, sponsored by the All Star Concert Series.

Mr. Tucker offers a program that will play to the full every facet of his art. Arias form Mehul's "Joseph," Verdi's "La Forza del Destino," and Bizet's "Carmen" will highlight a program that contains numbers by Mozart, Torelli, Foudrain, Durante, Niles, Falvo, Lippe, Nutile, Rabey, and Coleridge-Taylor. Alexander Alexany will accompany the celebrated tenor.

rmandy
diums

MUSIC NOTES

Today

Virginia MacWatters, soprano, in recital, Pennsylvania Room, Sheraton Hotel, 8 P. M., for the Women's Board of the Lankenau Hospital.

Philadelphia Coffee Concerts present Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet. Garden Terrace, Benjamin Franklin Hotel. 8.15.

Musical service, First Methodist Church, 480 Green lane, Roxborough, honoring Dr. Carl F. Mueller, at 7. Albert G. Kay, directs.

Concert of vocal music, direction Carolyn Diller-Dengler, Philadelphia Musical Academy, 1617 Spruce. 3 P. M.

Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," First Baptist Church, 17th and Sansom sts., 8 P. M.

Organ recital, St. Mark's Church, 1625 Locust, by John Henzel, 5 P. M.

Tomorrow

Blind Artists Concert Pennsylvania room, New Sheraton Hotel, 8.30. Wilbur Evans, baritone, is guest-artist, directed by Luigi Boccelli.

Tuesday

Concert by Musical Act Society of Camden, Carl Schurz Memorial, 420 Chestnut, 8.30.

Organ recital by Edgar Hillier, St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, 8.30.

Wednesday

Organ recital by Bruce Eicher, organist, First Baptist Church, 12.20 P. M.

Violin recital by Magda Haios, Mitten Hall, Temple University, 1 P. M.

Concert by German-American Youth Chorus, Academy of Music, 8.15. Theodor Koerner, Otto Genhart, conductors.

Friday

Audrey Hodge, soprano, Rennah Penn House, 1 P. M.

Concert by West Oak Lane Symphony, William Rowen School Auditorium, Ogontz and Haines sts., 8.30. Julia Heida, soprano, soloist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 1957

211

Boston

By Cyrus Durgin

Boston Symphony, 251 Huntington Ave. Music director: Charles Munch. Associate conductor: Richard Burgin. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2631. Twenty-four pairs of subscription concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings; six subscription concerts on Sunday afternoons; nine subscription concerts on Tuesday evenings; six subscription concerts at Sanders Theater (Harvard University), Cambridge, on Tuesday evenings; one concert at Kresge Auditorium, 1,238, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Dec. 5; one week tour of cities in midwest; five tours of one week each to New York and other cities.

Boston Pops Orchestra, 251 Huntington Ave. Conductor: Arthur Fiedler. Assistant conductor: Harry Ellis Dickson. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Concerts on weekday (and some Sunday) evenings in May and June. Another orchestra, called the Boston Pops Touring Orchestra, gives concerts in the winter in various cities under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Esplanade Concerts. Auspices: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Conductors: Arthur Fiedler and guests. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade. Orchestra includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Evening concert (and three on Wednesday morning, for children) for three weeks in July and August.

Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Conductor: Charles Munch. Six weekend series of concerts by chamber orchestra and the full numbers of the Boston Symphony, in July and August. The Festival also includes student events, for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Boston University Celebrity Series. Managing director: Aaron Richmond 143 Newbury St. Boston Opera House, 3,000; Symphony Hall, 2,631; Jordan Hall, 1,019. Royal Danish Ballet, Oct. 3; Berlin Philharmonic, Herbert von Karajan, conductor, Oct. 14; Adele Addison, Oct. 21; Michael Rabin, Nov. 11; Richard Dyer-Bennet, Nov. 16; Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Nov. 18; Leon Fleisher, Nov. 25; Budapest String Quartet, Nov. 28; Golden Age Singers of London, Dec. 9; Solomon, Jan. 13; Destine and Haitian Dance Company, Jan. 25 and 26; Renata Tebaldi, Feb. 3; Quartetto Italiano, Feb. 13; Artur Rubenstein, Feb. 24; Gerald Moore, March 3; Bach Aria Group, March 17; Rudolf Firkusny, March 24.

Aaron Richmond, 143 Newbury St. Mr. Richmond's other activities include: Temple Beth El, Providence, R. I.; Hilde Gueden, Jan. 23; Artur

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
Circ. D. 705,054 - S. 709,787
FEB 24 1957

School, Wellesley, Mass.: Irmgard Seefried, Dec. 4; Nathan Milstein, Feb. 4; Eugene Istomin, April 11. Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.: Ruth and Paul Draper, Oct. 20; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Dec. 7; Don Cossacks, April 26. Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.: Jan Peerce, Nov. 15; Lubeshutz and Nemenoff, Jan. 15; Andres Segovia, March 21. University of Connecticut, Storrs, Conn.: Artur Rubinstein, Feb. 28. Harvard Musical Association, Boston, Mass.: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Nov. 2; David Bar-Illan, Nov. 30; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Dec. 14; Griller Quartet, Jan. 11; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Feb. 14 and 15; Tom Lehrer, March 1; Curtis Quartet, April 12; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 26; James Gregory, March 29; Phyllis

Symphony Hall in Boston

Curtin, Feb. 1. Gardner Museum, Boston, Mass.: Julian Olevsky, Oct. 7; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Dec. 23; Griller Quartet, Jan. 13; Ajemian Sisters, Feb. 3; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Feb. 17; Rabinofs, March 3; Almo Trio, March 10; Bel Arte Trio, April 7; Curtis Quartet, April 14; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 28.

In Boston, also Mr. Richmond presents the following: Mantovani and His New Music, Oct. 2; Dame Ninette de Valois, Nov. 9; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Nov. 14; Yugoslav National Ballet, Dec. 14; Little Singers of Paris, Jan. 27; Old Vic Theater Company, week of Jan. 14; Walter Gieseking, March 10; Vienna Choir Boys, March 31; Don Cossacks, April 28; Andres Segovia, April 7.

New England Opera Theater. Artistic director: Boris Goldovsky. Executive director: Ralph G. Tedford. Tour of seven weeks in Cimarosa's "The Secret Marriage", beginning Oct. 22. John Hancock Hall, 1,132. "The Secret Marriage", Dec. 11 and 13.

Mason Music Foundation. President: Paul Doguereau, 59 Fayerweather St., Cambridge. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Sonatelli, Oct. 4 and 5; Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

[illegible] Society, 687 [illegible]: Dr. Thomp- [illegible] Elizabeth I. [illegible] Drayton. [illegible] Messiah", [illegible]ti, Elsa [illegible] Donald [illegible]'s "The [illegible]e, John [illegible], April [illegible]

[illegible]n, 420 [illegible]anager: Harriet E. O'Brien. Boston Opera House, 3,000. Spring season, beginning April 8, by Metropolitan Opera Association.

Boston Morning Musicales. Chairman, executive committee, Mrs. John W. Myers. Hotel Statler Ballroom, 1,000. Eileen Farrell, Nov. 7; Leopold Simoneau, Dec. 5; Cesare Siepi, Dec. 19; Erica Morini, Jan. 23; Hilde Gueden, Feb. 13; Claudio Arrau, March 13.

Zimbler String Sinfonietta. Auspices: Friends of Chamber Music, Inc. Founder: Josef Zimbler. Manager: Aaron Richmond. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts, Feb. 20, March 6 and March 27. Other concerts out of town.

Cambridge Society for Early Music. President: Rosario Mazzeo, Symphony Hall. Music director: Erwin Bodky. Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Three concerts, Oct. 29, Nov. 26, Dec. 3.

Cecilia Society. Conductor: Hugh Ross. President: Laura Hill, 65 Park Drive. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Various concerts.

Wellesley Concert Series. Manager: David Barnett. Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass. Alumnae Hall, 1,500. Martial Singher, Nov. 12; Erica Morini, March 7; Robert Goldsand, April 24.

The Brass Ensemble. Director: Roger Voisin, Symphony Hall. Brass players from Boston Symphony, Concerts to be announced.

New England Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave. President: Harrison Keller; Dean: Chester W. Williams; Conductor, student orchestra: Richard Burgin; director, department of opera: Boris Goldovsky; head of the piano department: Howard Goding; head of vocal department: Frederick Jagel; director of student chorus: Lorna Cooke de Varon; conductor of student band: Georges Moleux.

Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Huntington Ave. Educational director: William Germain Dooley. Concert director: Narcissa Williamson.

Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 84 Exeter St. Dean: Robert A. Choate. Assistant to the Dean: Jules Wolffers. Conductor of student orchestra: Russell Stanger; head of opera department: Sarah Caldwell. Concerts by student groups, radio activities and plays, in Boston University Theater, Recital Hall and Hayden Auditorium.

Boston University Violin Artist Ensemble, Emanuel Ondricek, director and conductor.

Boston Conservatory of Music, 26 The Fenway. Director: Albert Alphin. Dean: Aurelio Greslin.

Boston Public Library, Copley Square. Director: Milton E. Lord. Lecture Hall. Free concerts and lectures.

Harvard University Department of Music, Cambridge. Chairman: Randall Thompson. Sanders Theater, 1,200; Paine Hall, 500. Miscellaneous concerts under auspices of the department.

Brookline Academy of Music and Art, 1685 Beacon St. Director: M. Martin Kostick.

Lordly and Dame, 80 Boylston St. Managers: Dana Lordly, Samuel Dame, Martin Forrest. Sergio Perticaroli, November. Lecture attractions.

Chorus Pro Musica. (Mixed chorus). Director: Alfred Nash Patterson. Concerts in various auditoriums.

Apollo Club. Director: William Achilles.

Hargoode Concerts and Attractions, 400 Boylston St. Manager: Harry Goodman. Supplies musical artists and lecturers to schools and Colleges.

Boston Civic Symphony, 244 Chestnut Ave., Jamaica Plain. Conductor: Paul Cherkassky. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts.

Longy School of Music, 1 Follen St., Cambridge. Director: Melville Smith. Affiliated with Harvard University and Radcliffe College.

Demeter Zachareff, 25 Huntington Ave. Miscellaneous musical and lecture events; supplies bookings to schools and colleges. Jordan Hall, 1,019. John Moriarty, Oct. 28; Uni and Maeda Sprengling, Nov. 15.

Country Evening Concert Series, Weston, Mass., Country School Auditorium. Booking agents: Aaron Richmond. Cesare Valletti, Jan. 11; Jean Casadesus, Feb. 8; Paganini Quartet, March 15.

Baltic Concert Series, Management: Baltic American Society of New England. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Carmen Prii, Sept. 28; Vaclovas Verikaitis, Feb. 8; Ingus Naruns, April 5.

Massachusetts

Munch, Ormandy Switch Podiums

Continued From Page 6

THE WEEKEND concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra will have a change of pace as Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, takes charge on the podium. This is a reciprocity affair, for the week sees Eugene Ormandy traveling to Boston to take the reins in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Munch has been heard here with the French National Orchestra and the Boston Symphony, but this will be his debut as conductor of the Philadelphians.

As was to be expected, the French-Boston leader will offer a program that consists of French music. The program lists Berlioz's love-scene from the Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo et Juliette," Honneger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, Ravel's Suite for Orchestra, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and Albert Roussel's Symphony No. 3.

The latter piece, which is enjoying its first Philadelphia performance, was commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the late Serge Koussevitzky for the 50th anniversary of that organization. It is a piece of unusual interest, scored in the fastidious manner characteristic of this composer.

Continued on Page 8, Col. 1

Before going to Boston to take up his duties in the New England capital, Eugene Ormandy pauses here, tomorrow night, to direct the Philadelphia Orchestra's eighth Monday evening concert at the Academy of Music. Benno Moiseiwitsch will again be heard as soloist.

RICHARD TUCKER, recently heard here in the Verdi "Requiem," and scheduled for Tuesday's Metropolitan "Carmen" here, need not pack his bags, for Thursday night he is singing his first full-length Philadelphia recital at the Academy of Music, sponsored by the All Star Concert Series.

Mr. Tucker offers a program that will play to the full every facet of his art. Arias form Mehul's "Joseph," Verdi's "La Forza del Destino," and Bizet's "Carmen" will highlight a program that contains numbers by Mozart, Torelli, Foudrain, Durante, Niles, Falvo, Lippe, Nutile, Rabey, and Coleridge-Taylor. Alexander Alexany will accompany the celebrated tenor.

MUSIC NOTES

Today

Virginia MacWatters, soprano, in recital, Pennsylvania Room, Sheraton Hotel, 8 P. M., for the Women's Board of the Lankenau Hospital.

Philadelphia Coffee Concerts present Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet. Garden Terrace, Benjamin Franklin Hotel, 8.15.

Musical service, First Methodist Church, 480 Green lane, Roxborough, honoring Dr. Carl F. Mueller, at 7. Albert G. Kay, directs.

Concert of vocal music, direction Carolyn Diller-Dengler, Philadelphia Musical Academy, 1617 Spruce, 3 P. M.

Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," First Baptist Church, 17th and Sansom sts., 8 P. M.

Organ recital, St. Mark's Church, 1625 Locust, by John Henzel, 5 P. M.

Tomorrow

Blind Artists Concert Pennsylvania room, New Sheraton Hotel, 8.30. Wilbur Evans, baritone, is guest-artist, directed by Luigi Boccelli.

Tuesday

Concert by Musical Art Society of Camden, Carl Schurz Memorial, 420 Chestnut, 8.30.

Organ recital by Edgar Hillier, St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, 8.30.

Wednesday

Organ recital by Bruce Eicher, organist, First Baptist Church, 12.20 P. M.

Violin recital by Magda Hajos, Mitten Hall, Temple University, 1 P. M.

Concert by German-American Youth Chorus, Academy of Music, 8.15. Theodor Koerner, Otto Ganhert, conductors.

Friday

Audrey Hodge, soprano, Rittenhouse Penn House, 1 P. M.

Concert by West Oak Lane Symphony, William Rowen School Auditorium, Ogontz and Haines sts., 8.30. Julia Heide, soprano, soloist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 1957

Boston

By Cyrus Durgin

Boston Symphony, 251 Huntington Ave. Music director: Charles Munch. Associate conductor: Richard Burgin. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2631. Twenty-four pairs of subscription concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings; six subscription concerts on Sunday afternoons; nine subscription concerts on Tuesday evenings; six subscription concerts at Sanders Theater (Harvard University), Cambridge, on Tuesday evenings; one concert at Kresge Auditorium, 1,238, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Dec. 5; one week tour of cities in midwest; five tours of one week each to New York and other cities.

Boston Pops Orchestra, 251 Huntington Ave. Conductor: Arthur Fiedler. Assistant conductor: Harry Ellis Dickson. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Concerts on weekday (and some Sunday) evenings in May and June. Another orchestra, called the Boston Pops Touring Orchestra, gives concerts in the winter in various cities under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Esplanade Concerts. Auspices: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Conductors: Arthur Fiedler and guests. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade. Orchestra includes approximately 85 Boston Symphony players. Evening concert (and three on Wednesday morning, for children) for three weeks in July and August.

Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Conductor: Charles Munch. Six weekend series of concerts by chamber orchestra and the full numbers of the Boston Symphony, in July and August. The Festival also includes student events, for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Boston University Celebrity Series. Managing director: Aaron Richmond 143 Newbury St. Boston. Opera House, 3,000; Symphony Hall, 2,631; Jordan Hall, 1,019. Royal Danish Ballet, Oct. 5; Berlin Philharmonic, Herbert von Karajan conductor, Oct. 14; Adele Addison, Oct. 21; Michael Rabin, Nov. 1; Richard Dyer-Bennet, Nov. 16; Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Nov. 18; Leon Fleisher, Nov. 25; Budapest String Quartet, Nov. 28; Golden Age Singers of London, Dec. 9; Solomon, Jan. 13; Destine and Haitian Dance Company, Jan. 25 and 26; Renata Tebaldi, Feb. 3; Quartetto Italiano, Feb. 13; Artur Rubenstein, Feb. 24; Gerald Moore, March 3; Bach Aria Group, March 17; Rudolf Firkusny, March 24.

Aaron Richmond, 143 Newbury St. Mr. Richmond's other activities include: Temple Beth El, Providence, R. I.: Hilde Gueden, Jan. 25; Artur Rubinstein, Feb. 27; Andres Segovia, April 24; Ivry Gitlis, March 20. Quincy, Mass., Concert Series: Adele Addison, Oct. 17; Zimbler Sinfonietta, Nov. 18; Artur Rubinstein, Feb. 26; Vienna Choir Boys, April 4. Bushnell Memorial Auditorium, Hartford, Conn.: Budapest Quartet, Dec. 6; Griller Quartet, Jan. 10; Paganini Quartet, March 14. Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Feb. 17; Andres Segovia, April 28. Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.: Jerome Hines, Oct. 15; Adele Addison, Nov. 13; Grant Johannesen, March 5; Budapest Quartet, Dec. 4. Dana Hall School, Wellesley, Mass.: Irmgard Seefried, Oct. 4; Nathan Milstein, Feb. 7; Isaac Stern, April 11. Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.: Paul Draper, Oct. 20; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Dec. 7; Don Cossacks, April 26. Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.: Jan Peerce, Nov. 15; Alexander Schneider and Nemenoff, Jan. 15; Andres Segovia, March 21. University of Connecticut, Storrs, Conn.: Artur Rubinstein, Feb. 28. Harvard Musical Association, Boston, Mass.: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Nov. 2; David Bar-Illan, Nov. 30; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Dec. 14; Griller Quartet, Jan. 11; Jesus Maria Sanroma, Feb. 14 and 15; Tom Lehrer, March 1; Curtis Quartet, April 12; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 26; James Gregory, March 29; Phyllis Curtin, Feb. 1. Gardner Museum, Boston, Mass.: Julian Olevsky, Oct. 7; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Samuel Mayes and Joseph De Pasquale, Dec. 23; Griller Quartet, Jan. 13; Ajemian Sisters, Feb. 3; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Feb. 17; Rabinofs, March 3; Almo Trio, March 10; Bel Arte Trio, April 7; Curtis Quartet, April 14; Joseph De Pasquale and Paul Ulanowsky, April 28.

In Boston, also Mr. Richmond presents the following: Mantovani and His New Music, Oct. 2; Dame Ninette de Valois, Nov. 9; Ruth Posselt and Luise Vosgerchian, Nov. 14; Yugoslav National Ballet, Dec. 14; Little Singers of Paris, Jan. 27; Old Vic Theater Company, week of Jan. 14; Walter Gieseking, March 10; Vienna Choir Boys, March 31; Don Cossacks, April 28; Andres Segovia, April 7.

New England Opera Theater. Artistic director: Boris Goldovsky. Executive director: Ralph G. Tedford. Tour of seven weeks in Cimarosa's "The Secret Marriage", beginning Oct. 22. John Hancock Hall, 1,132. "The Secret Marriage", Dec. 11 and 13.

Mason Music Foundation. President: Paul Doguereau, 59 Fayerweather St., Cambridge. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Societa Corelli, Oct. 4 and 5; Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

Handel and Haydn Society, 687 Boylston St. Conductor: Dr. Thompson Stone. Manager: Elizabeth I. Burt. President: F. Otis Drayton. Symphony Hall, 2,631. "Messiah", with Alice Farnsworth Boffetti, Elsa Gerling, Harold Haugh, and Donald Gramm, Dec. 9 and 10; Haydn's "The Seasons", with Barbara Wallace, John McCollum and Kenneth Smith, April 7.

Boston Opera Association, 420 Boylston St. Promotion manager: Hartiet E. O'Brien. Boston Opera House, 3,000. Spring season, beginning April 8, by Metropolitan Opera Association.

Boston Morning Musicales. Chairman, executive committee, Mrs. John W. Myers. Hotel Statler Ballroom, 1,000. Eileen Farrell, Nov. 7; Leopold Simoneau, Dec. 5; Cesare Siepi, Dec. 19; Erica Morini, Jan. 23; Hilde Gueden, Feb. 13; Claudio Arrau, March 13.

Boston String Sinfonietta. Auspices: Friends of Chamber Music, Inc. Founder: Josef Zimbler. Manager: Aaron Richmond. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts, Feb. 20, March 6 and March 27. Other concerts out of town.

Cambridge Society for Early Music. President: Rosario Mazzeo, Symphony Hall. Music director: Erwin Bodky. Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Three concerts, Oct. 29, Nov. 26, Dec. 3.

Symphony Hall in Boston

Cecilia Society. Conductor: Hugh Ross. President: Laura Hill, 65 Park Drive. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Symphony Hall, 2,631. Various concerts.

Wellesley Concert Series. Manager: David Barnett. Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass. Alumnae Hall, 1,500. Martial Singher, Nov. 12; Erica Morini, March 7; Robert Goldsand, April 24.

The Brass Ensemble, Director: Roger Voisin, Symphony Hall. Brass players from Boston Symphony. Concerts to be announced.

New England Conservatory of Music, 290 Huntington Ave. President: Harrison Keller; Dean: Chester W. Williams; Conductor, student orchestra: Richard Burgin; director, department of opera: Boris Goldovsky; head of the piano department: Howard Goding; head of vocal department: Frederick Jagel; director of student chorus: Lorna Cooke de Varon; conductor of student band: Georges Moleux.

Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Huntington Ave. Educational director: William Germain Dooley. Concert director: Narcissa Williamson.

Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, 84 Exeter St. Dean: Robert A. Choate. Assistant to the Dean: Jules Wolffers. Conductor of student orchestra: Russell Stanger; head of opera department: Sarah Caldwell. Concerts by student groups, radio activities and plays, in Boston University Theater, Recital Hall and Hayden Auditorium.

Boston University Violin Artist Ensemble, Emanuel Ondricek, director and conductor.

Boston Conservatory of Music, 26 The Fenway. Director: Albert Alphin. Dean: Aurelio Greslin.

Boston Public Library, Copley Square. Director: Milton E. Lord. Lecture Hall. Free concerts and lectures.

Harvard University Department of Music, Cambridge. Chairman: Randall Thompson. Sanders Theater, Paine Hall, 500. Miscellaneous concerts under auspices of the department.

Brookline Academy of Music and Art, 1685 Beacon St. Director: M. Martin Kostick.

Lordly and Dame, 80 Boylston St. Managers: Dana Lordly, Samuel Dame, Martin Forrest. Sergio Perticaroli, November. Lecture attractions.

Chorus Pro Musica. (Mixed chorus). Director: Alfred Nash Patterson. Concerts in various auditoriums.

Apollo Club. Director: William Achilles.

Hargoode Concerts and Attractions, 400 Boylston St. Manager: Harry Goodman. Supplies musical artists and lecturers to schools and Colleges.

Boston Civic Symphony, 244 Chestnut Ave., Jamaica Plain. Conductor: Paul Cherkassky. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Three concerts.

Longy School of Music, 1 Follen St., Cambridge. Director: Melville Smith. Affiliated with Harvard University and Radcliffe College.

Deborah Zachareff, 25 Huntington Ave. Miscellaneous musical and lecture events; supplies bookings to schools and colleges. Jordan Hall, 1,019. John Moriarty, Oct. 28; Uni and Maeda Sprengling, Nov. 15.

Country Evening Concert Series, Weston, Mass., Country School Auditorium. Booking agents: Aaron Richmond. Cesare Valletti, Jan. 11; Jean Casadesus, Feb. 8; Paganini Quartet, March 15.

Baltic Concert Series, Management: Baltic American Society of New England. Jordan Hall, 1,019. Carmen Prii, Sept. 28; Vaclovas Verikaitis, Feb. 8; Ingus Naruns, April 5.

here, need not pack his for Thursday night he is ng his first full-length delphia recital at the emy of Music, sponsored
e All Star Concert Series.
Tucker offers a program hat will play to the full every ceet of his art. Arias form Menul's "Joseph," Verdi's "La orza del Destino," and Bizet's Carmen" will highlight a pro-

Tomorrow

Tuesday

Concert by Musical Art Society of Camden, Carl Schurz Memorial, 420 Chestnut, 8.30. Organ recital by Edgar Hilliar, St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, 8.30.

Wednesday

Organ recital by Bruce Eicher, organist, First Baptist Church, 12.20 P. M. Violin recital by Nadia Heico, Mitten Hall, Temple University, 1 P. M. Concert by German-American Youth Chorus, Academy of Music, 8.15. Theodor Koerner, Otto Ganhert, conductors.

Friday

Audrey Hodges, soprano, Hannah Penn House, 1 P. M.

BLANK PAGE

212

BLANK PAGE

214

MUSICAL COURIER
(NEW YORK CITY)
MAR 1 1957

BOSTON

■ The latest tempest in the Hub's musical bean-pot concerns Charles Munch as a program-maker. This is only the latest of a series of minor controversies which have ruffled, if not agitated, the normally calm waters of the Back Bay. For two or three years the critic of the recently suspended Boston Post sniped quite persistently at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor. Supported silently, if not openly, by a clique of younger Boston composers and musicians, this critic made it obvious that he liked very little, if anything, that Mr. Munch did. Although some irritation was expressed from time to time by persons close to the chief target, on the whole the critic might well have been shooting into a vacuum, for all the notice that his attacks evoked.

A running battle which broke into the "Letters to the Editor" department of several newspapers dealt with contemoprary music on symphony programs. Led by a person who apparently hates any music composed in the last fifty years, the conservative faction agitated for a strict "Three B" diet, claiming that all modern music was nothing but ugly cacophony and that if it had to be played at all it should be placed at the end of programs so that those who didn't want to hear it could leave without missing something really good. This attitude was not treated with silence, and the exchanges waxed fast and sometimes furious between those who wanted to hear music of our time and those who didn't. As for Munch and the orchestra they went their way unconcerned. Mr. Munch kept right on programming new works just as did his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This season's controversy is perhaps the most serious, since it involves one of the most respected critics in this area. To put the matter in a nutshell, profound dissatisfaction has been expressed with the content of Mr. Munch's programs. According to this point of view, the conductor has left undone the things he ought to have done and has not done the things he ought to have done.

We suppose that no one is perfect and that everyone has his peculiar likes and dislikes. Just for the record, this correspondent believes that Munch is an inspired and inspiring conductor. He undoubtedly has his limitations, as did Toscanini, and he has his prejudices, as do most of us. The fact that he does not program works which he feels are incompatible to him is, if anything, to his credit. He himself must identify himself with a work before he can project it convincingly. He leaves to guest conductors and to his associate conductor, Richard Burgin, the output of Sibelius and those other composers he does not regularly perform.

Granting certain omissions and noting that guest conductors do fill the gaps, this correspondent finds little about which to complain. Taking some of the last programs, Munch listed the premiere of an interesting and invigorating Symphony No. 1 in E-flat by the young American composer Leo Smit for the 14th pair of concerts, Feb. 1, 2. The same program contained a stunning performance of the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2, with Nicole Henriot as soloist. This early Prokofieff had not been done here since its Boston premiere in 1930, although it was played once, in 1951, at Tanglewood. The Prokofieff Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" closed a program which pleased the public and this reviewer very much indeed.

The previous week Munch listed a world premiere, that of the Walton Violoncello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist. The Concerto is a worthy addition to the cello's repertoire and certainly it was worth the attention of public and players alike. This program opened with the pleasant if not overly significant Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," by Randall Thompson (Nahant being a resort town on Boston's North Shore). In any event this was an interesting piece of music to hear for the first time in Boston. We suppose no person would quarrel with the Beethoven Fourth which closed this concert.

And to mention a few other programs: Pierre Monteux conducted the Stravinsky "Pulcinella" Suite, the first BSO performance of the instrumental excerpts from Debussy's Pelleas and Melisande, and the Elgar "Enigma" Variations (Jan. 18-19). One week before, Burgin conducted short works by Bach, Honegger, Debussy, and Ravel, and, as pièce de résistance, a fine performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4, with Nancy Carr singing the soprano solos in excellent voice and fine style. And what's wrong with the 10th pair list of Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis, Beethoven's Fifth, and the Shostakovitch Fifth?

Taking it all in all, this correspondent is well satisfied with the mingling of old and new, with the premières and with the general balance. There are just so many works that can be played in any one season.

We wonder what some of our critics would have done with Toscanini's far more limited range of programming. In any event you can't please everybody, particularly in Boston.

JULES WOLFFERS

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
MAR 2 1957

Boston Pops' Trip Labor Row May Halt To Argentina

BUENOS AIRES (UP) — The Boston Pops Orchestra may cancel a scheduled trip to Argentina because of a labor dispute at Buenos Aires' Colon Theater, the president of the Argentine Musicians' Union said today.

Angel de la Rosa, the union president, said he received the information in a letter from James I. Petrillo, president of the Federation of American Musicians.

Petrillo advised him no American musicians will act as "strikebreakers" in the Colon Theater dispute, de la Rosa said.

The theater cancelled its 1957 opera season as a result of the controversy over whether the management has the right to submit members of the orchestra to competence tests. The union holds it hasn't.

De la Rosa said the theater management had threatened to import foreign musicians to replace the orchestra.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
MAR 1 - 1957

Society:

Lenscraft

FLUTIST DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER shows Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser the difference between an ancient and modern flute at a Friday subscribers' and Boston Symphony Orchestra players' luncheon, a popular innovation this year. Another in the series of invitation luncheons at Symphony Hall comes today.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

SYMPHONY HOSTESSES at today's luncheon [illegible] Ancient Instrument [illegible] phony Hall are Mrs. [illegible] Wilkins and Mrs. [illegible] Among [illegible] day [illegible] subscr[illegible] invitation [illegible] players, and administr[illegible] sonnel of the orchestra today are Mrs. [illegible] Miss Sylvia Ben[illegible] Mrs. Daniel Bloom[illegible] rancis Bowditch, [illegible] ryant, Miss Ellen T. [illegible] Mrs. Harvey H. Bundy [illegible] F. Wadsworth Busk, M[illegible] olas W. Danforth, Mrs. [illegible] G. Dignan, Mrs. Byron [illegible] diott, Mrs. Henry E. Foley, Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Mrs. Morris Gray, Miss Priscilla Hunnewell, Mrs. Clement Kennedy, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Thomas H. Mahony, Mrs. Walter Powers, Mrs. James Charles Roy, Mrs. Samuel H. Seegal, Mrs. Alan A. Smith, Mrs. Arthur C. Sullivan.

Boston Traveler, Friday, March 1, 1957 B 23

Luncheon Today

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

You've heard of the taming of shrews. But have you ever heard of taming a serpent?

The latter, in this case, is not the kind you find weaving sleepily to and fro in front of a snake-charmer. It's an old musical instrument — named for its resemblance to a coiled snake.

TROMBONIST TAMED ONE

Joseph Orosz, trombonist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is describing how he "tamed" a serpent today. He's one of the speakers at the 4th Dutch treat "Know-Your-Orchestra luncheons" there.

Like the other three, it's being held in the room that houses the Casadesus Collection of ancient instruments. And several serpents are included in the collection.

Second speaker at the affair is Richard Kapuscinski, a cellist with the orchestra. A native of Wisconsin, he is giving a mid-westerner's impressions of eastern musical circles.

Socialites at the luncheon include Mmes. William H. Ames, E. Francis Bowditch and John W. Bryant. Also, Ellen T. Bullard, Sylvia Benson, Mrs. Harvey H. Bundy Jr. and Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk.

TO HEAR OF HATS

Hats—an ever-popular topic of conversation and thought for the ladies—will be the subject af a talk by Helene M. Dardis Tuesday. She'll be guest speaker at a Coffee Morning being given by the Cecilian Guild at the League House, 1 Arlington St.

Mmes. John P. Flavin and George A. Daley Jr. are hostesses for the meeting. And Mmes George A. Sullivan Jr. and George O'Brien will serve as pourers.

STORK CLUB NOTES

Their first child, a son, James Louis, was born to Mr. and Mrs. David L. Wells, (Rebekah Smith Porter) of Wellesley, Feb. 27 at Beth Israel Hospital.

Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph O. Porter of Chestnut Hill and Mr. and Mrs. William Wells of Newton Centre. Mrs. Gertrude Levine of Newton Centre is the great-grandmother.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Leon Gray Tuck (Ruth Hanson) of Needham, a second daughter, Sally Hanson, Feb. 19 at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

Proud grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hanson of Waban.

ELECTED TO BOARD

Two new trustees have been added to a well-known Board of Trustees—that of The Children's Museum. They are Mrs. William A. Lincoln and Mrs. Ben Ames William Jr. — and they'll serve three-year terms of office.

214

BOSTON

■ The latest tempest in the Hub's musical bean-pot concerns Charles Munch as a program-maker. This is only the latest of a series of minor controversies which have ruffled, if not agitated, the normally calm waters of the Back Bay. For two or three years the critic of the recently suspended Boston Post sniped quite persistently at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor. Supported silently, if not openly, by a clique of younger Boston composers and musicians, this critic made it obvious that he liked very little, if anything, that Mr. Munch did. Although some irritation was expressed from time to time by persons close to the chief target, on the whole the critic might well have been shooting into a vacuum, for all the notice that his attacks evoked.

A running battle which broke into the "Letters to the Editor" department of several newspapers dealt with contemporary music on symphony programs. Led by a person who apparently hates any music composed in the last fifty years, the conservative faction agitated for a strict "Three B" diet, claiming that all modern music was nothing but ugly cacophony and that if it had to be played at all it should be placed at the end of programs so that those who didn't want to hear it could leave without missing something really good. This attitude was not treated with silence, and the exchanges waxed fast and sometimes furious between those who wanted to hear music of our time and those who didn't. As for Munch and the orchestra, they went their way unconcerned; Mr. Munch kept right on programming new works just as did his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This season's controversy is perhaps the most serious, since it involves one of the most respected critics in this area. To put the matter in a nutshell, profound dissatisfaction has been expressed with the content of Mr. Munch's programs. According to this point of view, the conductor has left undone the things he ought to have done and has not done the things he ought to have done.

We suppose that no one is perfect and that everyone has his peculiar likes and dislikes. Just for the record, this correspondent believes that Munch is an inspired and inspiring conductor. He undoubtedly has his limitations, as did Toscanini, and he has his prejudices, as do most of us. The fact that he does not program works which he feels are incompatible to him is, if anything, to his credit. He himself must identify himself with a work before he can project it convincingly. He leaves to guest conductors and to his associate conductor, Richard Burgin, the output of Sibelius and those other composers he does not regularly perform.

Granting certain omissions and noting that guest conductors do fill the gaps, this correspondent finds little about which to complain. Taking some of the last programs, Munch listed the premiere of an interesting and invigorating Symphony No. 1 in E-flat by the young American composer Leo Smit for the 14th pair of concerts, Feb. 1, 2. The same program contained a stunning performance of the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2, with Nicole Henriot as soloist. This early Prokofieff had not been done here since its Boston premiere in 1930, although it was played once, in 1951, at Tanglewood. The Prokofieff Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" closed a program which pleased the public and this reviewer very much indeed.

The previous week Munch listed a world premiere, that of the Walton Violoncello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist. The Concerto is a worthy addition to the cello's repertoire and certainly it was worth the attention of public and players alike. This program opened with the pleasant if not overly significant Fantasy for Orchestra, "A Trip to Nahant," by Randall Thompson (Nahant being a resort town on Boston's North Shore). In any event this was an interesting piece of music to hear for the first time in Boston. We suppose no person would quarrel with the Beethoven Fourth which closed this concert.

And to mention a few other programs: Pierre Monteux conducted the Stravinsky "Pulcinella" Suite, the first BSO performance of the instrumental excerpts from Debussy's Pelleas and Melisande, and the Elgar "Enigma" Variations (Jan. 18-19). One week before, Burgin conducted short works by Bach, Honegger, Debussy, and Ravel, and, as pièce de résistance, a fine performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4, with Nancy Carr singing the soprano solos in excellent voice and fine style. And what's wrong with the 10th pair list of Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis, Beethoven's Fifth, and the Shostakovitch Fifth?

Taking it all in all, this correspondent is well satisfied with the mingling of old and new, with the premières and with the general balance. There are just so many works that can be played in any one season.

We wonder what some of our critics would have done with Toscanini's far more limited range of programming. In any event you can't please everybody, particularly in Boston.

JULES WOLFFERS

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
MAR 1 - 1957

Society:

Lenscraft

FLUTIST DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER shows Mrs. Henry Wheeler and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser the difference between an ancient and modern flute at a Friday subscribers' and Boston Symphony Orchestra players' luncheon, a popular innovation this year. Another in the series of invitation luncheons at Symphony Hall comes today.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

SYMPHONY HOSTESSES at today's luncheon [illegible] ancient Instruments [illegible] Symphony Hall are [illegible] Wilkins and [illegible] Among [illegible] subscr[illegible] invitat[illegible] players [illegible] sonnel [illegible] are Mes[illegible] Sylvia [illegible] Daniel Bl[illegible] cis Bowdi[illegible] ant. Miss [illegible] Harvey H. Bundy [illegible] F. Wadsworth Busk. [illegible] W. Danforth, Mrs. [illegible] G. Dignan, Mrs. Byron [illegible] Mrs. Henry E. Foley, Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Mrs. Morris Gray, Miss Priscilla Hunnewell, Mrs. Clement Kennedy, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Thomas H. Mahony, Mrs. Walter Power, Mrs. James Charles Roy, Mrs. Bernard M. Seegal, Mrs. Alan A. Smith, Mrs. Arthur C. Sullivan.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
MAR 2 1957

Boston Pops' Trip Labor Row May Halt To Argentina

BUENOS AIRES (UP) — The Boston Pops Orchestra may cancel a scheduled trip to Argentina because of a labor dispute at Buenos Aires' Colon Theater, the president of the Argentine Musicians' Union said today.

Angel de la Rosa, the union president, said he received the information in a letter from James C. Petrillo, president of the Federation of American Musicians.

Petrillo added that no American musicians will act as "strikebreakers" in the Colon Theater dispute, de la Rosa said.

The theater cancelled its 1957 opera season as a result of the controversy over whether the management has the right to submit members of the orchestra to competitive tests. The union holds it doesn't.

De la Rosa said the theater management had threatened to import foreign musicians to replace the orchestra.

Boston Traveler, Friday, March 1, 1957 B 2

Luncheon Today

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

You've heard of the taming of shrews. But have you ever heard of taming a serpent?

The latter, in this case, is not the kind you find weaving sleepily to and fro in front of a snake-charmer. It's an old musical instrument — named for its resemblance to a coiled snake.

TROMBONIST TAMED ONE

Joseph Orosz, trombonist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is describing how he "tamed" a serpent today. He's one of the speakers at the 4th Dutch treat "Know-Your-Orchestra luncheons" there.

Like the other three, it's being held in the room that houses the Casadesus Collection of ancient instruments. And several serpents are included in the collection.

Second speaker at the affair is Richard Kapuscinski, a cellist with the orchestra. A native of Wisconsin, he is giving a mid-westerner's impressions of eastern musical circles.

Socialites at the luncheon include Mmes. William H. Ames, E. Francis Bowditch and John W. Bryant. Also, Ellen T. Bullard, Sylvia Benson, Mrs. Harvey H. Bundy Jr. and Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk.

TO HEAR OF HATS

Hats—an ever-popular topic of conversation and thought for the ladies—will be the subject of a talk by Helene M. Dardis Tuesday. She'll be guest speaker at a Coffee Morning being given by the Cecilian Guild at the League House, 1 Arlington St.

Mmes. John P. Flavin and George A. Daley Jr. are hostesses for the meeting. And Mmes George A. Sullivan Jr. and George O'Brien will serve as pourers.

STORK CLUB NOTES

Their first child, a son, James Louis, was born to Mr. and Mrs. David L. Wells, (Rebekah Smith Porter) of Wellesley, Feb. 27 at Beth Israel Hospital.

Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph O. Porter of Chestnut Hill and Mr. and Mrs. William Wells of Newton Centre. Mrs. Gertrude Levine of Newton Centre is the great-grandmother.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Leon Gray Tuck (Ruth Hanson) of Needham, a second daughter, Sally Hanson, Feb. 19 at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

Proud grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hanson of Waban.

ELECTED TO BOARD

Two new trustees have been added to a well-known Board of Trustees—that of The Children's Museum. They are Mrs. William A. Lincoln and Mrs. Ben Ames William Jr. — and they'll serve three-year terms of office.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 1 - 1957

Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch "Swap Pulpits" as Guest Conductors

By CYRUS DURGIN

Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch have "swapped pulpits" for a week. This afternoon and tomorrow night Mr. Ormandy will be guest conductor at Symphony Hall while Mr. Munch will be conducting at Philadelphia's Academy of Music.

It has been quite a week for the short, amiable Hungarian-born Ormandy, whose reddish-blonde hair is thinner than it used to be. Monday he worked all day recording with his Philadelphia Orchestra. Tuesday he began rehearsals with the Boston Symphony. Wednesday he rehearsed an upcoming concert in Baltimore. Yesterday he was back in Symphony Hall, where he obligingly used part of a brief lunch hour between two rehearsal periods, to talk to this chronicler.

"To be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony," he smiled, "is like a dream coming true. For a long while I have wanted to be guest conductor, because I have known the orchestra and greatly admired it. What a great, great orchestra!"

Mr. Ormandy modestly did not say so, but we all may assume that Charles Munch is getting a kick out of working with the Philadelphia Orchestra, which also is a "great, great" symphonic organization.

Ormandy does not use a baton when he conducts, although formerly he did so. I was curious why he gave it up.

EUGENE ORMANDY

"There was a non-musical reason for that," said Ormandy. Before the last war, I had an accident while I was conducting. I made a sudden energetic gesture, and tore a ligament in my shoulder. In a second I could not even raise my right arm. Eventually I had to undergo a serious operation, and for a time I did not know whether I could conduct again. But you can imagine my joy when finally the doctor said: 'O, yes, you may conduct, but you must be very careful not to raise your arm too high, and you must not use a stick'."

A Difficult Score

Mr. Ormandy has brought for this week's concerts what he describes as "an extremely difficult" modern score. It is the "Credendum," by William Schuman, an American composer, whom Ormandy much admires.

"It is so difficult that when I first conducted it not even the musicians—and they are real professionals—could make much of it in less than two rehearsals. At the third they began to question its value. At the fourth they became enthusiastic about it, and at the fifth they were wholeheartedly for the work. Now if professional musicians find a work that hard to absorb, it is evident that listeners must find it even more hard going, but I think you will like it.

"I do feel that American creative musicians are far ahead of their European colleagues," Ormandy stated with conviction. "When I was in Europe recently, I looked over a good number of new scores, about 30 of them. I accepted just three for performance. But just in a single day in New York I found three American works which interested me, and I took them immediately."

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

MAR 1 - 1957

Stop Looking Abroad, He Says

Ormandy Hails U. S. Musicians

It's about time American classical music lovers dropped their "grass-is-always-greener attitude" about American orchestras.

That's the opinion of Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

TRADES PLACES WITH HUB LEADER

He trades places with Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Charles Munch for guest appearances this afternoon and tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall.

"What orchestras we have in America!" he said after his first rehearsal with the Boston Symphony ensemble.

This is the group world-famed Ormandy described as "the last of the great orchestras I've had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

The Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Cleveland Symphony orchestras are the nation's top, he said.

"Few European orchestras can equal these five, and none can surpass them, in sheer ability," he said.

U. S. PUBLIC GETS VARIETY

"The American music public gets more variety in its listening than all of Europe put together, Ormandy said.

"Great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," he said. "Conductors and players take things easy."

This will not be found in American orchestras, he said. Some orchestras sidestep certain works as "unplayable," but these are pieces readily played in America, he said.

There are many other factors separating the European and American approach to music.

Few European orchestras work with the same conductor constantly. The temporary conductors lack the necessary rehearsal time, he said.

POPULAR IN ONE PLACE, TABOO ELSEWHERE

"Also, composers popular in one country are taboo in another," he said. "In America, we play everything."

Composers Franck, Debussy, Ravel and Roussel are more rarely played in German-speaking countries than in France or Switzerland, he said.

The European conductor also plays the music slower than American listeners are used to, he said.

Americans should not be so hard to convince the music they have is not only good, but about the best in the world, he said.

With the rehearsal over, he smiled at the prospects of the guest appearances.

"Now I can die happy," he said. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time."

EUGENE ORMANDY

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy and Munch Exchange Assignments

BOSTON (UP) — Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra made his debut as guest director of the Boston Symphony today in a weekend exchange of podiums.

Ormandy, who had appeared here previously only as conductor of his own group, led the Boston orchestra in music by Schumann, Hindemith and Brahms.

Charles Munch, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, led the Philadelphia orchestra in an all-French program in Philadelphia.

It was the first time in the history of either orchestra that their leaders exchanged regular concert assignments.

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048

MAR 1 1957

LAUDS MUSIC IN U. S.

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—A world famous conductor said today Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. "Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tomorrow and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time—the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy Happy At Chance to Lead Boston Symphony

Conductor Eugene Ormandy delighted at his first opportunity to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said last night, "Now I can die happy."

The Philadelphia maestro put the Boston musicians through a brisk rehearsal yesterday for his guest appearances at today's matinee and tomorrow evening performances.

Meanwhile, Boston's conductor Charles Munch will take over the baton duties before Ormandy's Philadelphia orchestra.

"The Boston Symphony is the last of the great orchestras I've had the honor of directing in America and Europe," Ormandy said.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005

MAR 1 - 1957

BOSTON. — (UP) — Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra made his debut as guest director of the Boston Symphony today in a weekend exchange of podium duties. Ormandy, who had appeared here previously only as conductor of his own group, led the Boston orchestra in music by Schuman, Hindemith and Brahms. Charles Munch, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, led the Philadelphia orchestra there in all-French music program.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy and Munch To Exchange Podiums

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—A world famous conductor said today Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. "Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tomorrow and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time—the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

MAR 1 1957

U.S. Audiences Are Not to Be Pitied

Boston — (AP) — A world famous conductor said yesterday Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

"Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tonight and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time — the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Charles Munch Eugene Ormandy

COURIER

Munch and Ormandy Exchange Podiums

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music on Mar. 1 and 2. Munch's appearance here is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will find Eugene Ormandy traveling to New England to direct the Boston Orchestra on the same days.

Warren Cox

Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 1 - 1957

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

MAR 1 - 1957

Stop Looking Abroad, He Says

Ormandy Hails U. S. Musicians

It's about time American classical music lovers dropped their "grass-is-always-greener attitude" about American orchestras.

That's the opinion of Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

TRADES PLACES WITH HUB LEADER

He trades places with Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Charles Munch for guest appearances this afternoon and tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall.

"What orchestras we have in America!" he said after his first rehearsal with the Boston Symphony ensemble.

This is the group world-famed Ormandy described as "the last of the great orchestras I've had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

The Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Cleveland Symphony orchestras are the nation's top, he said.

"Few European orchestras can equal these five, and none can surpass them, in sheer ability," he said.

U. S. PUBLIC GETS VARIETY

"The American music public gets more variety in its listening than all of Europe put together, Ormandy said.

"Great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," he said. "Conductors and players take things easy."

This will not be found in American orchestras, he said. Some orchestras sidestep certain works as "unplayable," but these are pieces readily played in America, he said.

There are many other factors separating the European and American approach to music.

Few European orchestras work with the same conductor constantly. The temporary conductors lack the necessary rehearsal time, he said.

POPULAR IN ONE PLACE, TABOO ELSEWHERE

"Also, composers popular in one country are taboo in another," he said. "In America, we play everything."

Composers Franck, Debussy, Ravel and Roussel are more rarely played in German-speaking countries than in France or Switzerland, he said.

The European conductor also plays the music slower than American listeners are used to, he said.

Americans should not be so hard to convince the music they have is not only good, but about the best in the world, he said.

With the rehearsal over, he smiled at the prospects of the guest appearances.

"Now I can die happy," he said. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time."

EUGENE ORMANDY

Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch "Swap Pulpits" as Guest Conductors

By CYRUS DURGIN

Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch have "swapped pulpits" for a week. This afternoon and tomorrow night Mr. Ormandy will be guest conductor at Symphony Hall while Mr. Munch will be conducting at Philadelphia's Academy of Music.

It has been quite a week for the short, amiable Hungarian-born Ormandy, whose reddish-blonde hair is thinner than it used to be. Monday he worked all day recording with his Philadelphia Orchestra. Tuesday he began rehearsals with the Boston Symphony. Wednesday he rehearsed an upcoming concert in Baltimore. Yesterday he was back in Symphony Hall, where he obligingly used part of a brief lunch hour between two rehearsal periods to talk to this chronicler.

"To be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony," he smiled, "is like a dream coming true. For a long while I have wanted to be guest conductor, because I have known the orchestra and greatly admired it. What a great, great orchestra!"

Mr. Ormandy modestly did not say so, but we all may assume that Charles Munch is getting a kick out of working with the Philadelphia Orchestra, which also is a "great, great" symphonic organization.

Ormandy does not use a baton when he conducts, although formerly he did so. I was curious why he gave it up.

"There was a non-musical reason for that," said Ormandy. Before the last war, I had an accident while I was conducting. I made a sudden energetic gesture, and tore a ligament in my shoulder. In a second I could not even raise my right arm. Eventually I had to undergo a serious operation, and for a time I did not know whether I could conduct again. But you can imagine my joy when finally the doctor said: 'O, yes, you may conduct, but you must be very careful not to raise your arm too high, and you must not use a stick'."

EUGENE ORMANDY

A Difficult Score

Mr. Ormandy has brought for this week's concerts what he describes as "an extremely difficult modern score." It is the "Credendum," by William Schuman, an American composer, whom Ormandy much admires.

"It is so difficult that when I first conducted it not even the musicians—and they are real professionals—could make much of it in less than two rehearsals. At the third they began to question its value. At the fourth they became enthusiastic about it, and at the fifth they were wholeheartedly for the work. Now if professional musicians find a work that hard to absorb, it is evident that listeners must find it even more hard going, but I think you will like it.

"I do feel that American creative musicians are far ahead of their European colleagues," Ormandy stated with conviction. "When I was in Europe recently, I looked over a good number of new scores, about 30 of them. I accepted just three for performance. But just in a single day in New York I found three American works which interested me, and I took them immediately."

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005

MAR 1 - 1957

BOSTON. — (UP). — Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra made his debut as guest director of the Boston Symphony today in a weekend exchange of podium duties. Ormandy, who had appeared here previously only as conductor of his own group, led the Boston orchestra in music by Schuman, Hindemith and Brahms. Charles Munch, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, led the Philadelphia orchestra there in all-French music program.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy and Munch Exchange Assignments

BOSTON (UP) — Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra made his debut as guest director of the Boston Symphony today in a weekend exchange of podiums.

Ormandy, who had appeared here previously only as conductor of his own group, led the Boston orchestra in music by Schumann, Hindemith and Brahms.

Charles Munch, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, led the Philadelphia orchestra in an all-French program in Philadelphia.

It was the first time in the history of either orchestra that their leaders exchanged regular concert assignments.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy Happy At Chance to Lead Boston Symphony

Conductor Eugene Ormandy, delighted at his first opportunity to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said last night, "Now I can die happy."

The Philadelphia maestro put the Boston musicians through a brisk rehearsal yesterday for his guest appearances at today's matinee and tomorrow evening performances.

Meanwhile, Boston's conductor Charles Munch will take over the baton duties before Ormandy's Philadelphia orchestra.

"The Boston Symphony is the last of the great orchestras I've had the honor of directing in America and Europe," Ormandy said.

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048

MAR 1 - 1957

LAUDS MUSIC IN U. S.

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—A world famous conductor said today Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. "Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tomorrow and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time—the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

MAR 1 - 1957

Ormandy and Munch To Exchange Podiums

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—A world famous conductor said today Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. "Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tomorrow and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time—the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 118,081

MAR 1 1957

U.S. Audiences Are Not to Be Pitied

Boston — (AP) — A world famous conductor said yesterday Americans "get more music, in point of variety, in one season than all of Europe put together."

"The great European orchestras are at their best in a restricted repertoire," said Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

"Conductors and players take things easy. Some works are avoided as unplayable, which are readily done in America where conductors and players are used to exerting themselves."

Ormandy made his remarks in an interview. He is in Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time tomorrow and Saturday while its regular conductor, Charles Munch, is directing the Philadelphia Symphony for the first time.

"Now I can die happy," Ormandy smiled. "That's what it means to me to conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time — the last of the great orchestras I have had the honor of conducting in America and Europe."

Charles Munch Eugene Ormandy

Munch and Ormandy Exchange Podiums

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his first appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concerts in the Academy of Music on Mar. 1 and 2. Munch's appearance here is part of a reciprocal arrangement which will find Eugene Ormandy traveling to New England to direct the Boston Orchestra on the same days. Warren Cox

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 637,561 - S. 1,124,395

MAR 2 1957

Munch Leads Orchestra in French Music

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The fourth and last guest conductor of the season took over the podium at the Philadelphia Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon in the Academy of Music—Charles Munch, regular maestro of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Though Munch is known to this city's concertgoers through numerous appearances here in recent seasons as a visitor with his own symphonic ensemble, the current week end concerts at

PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA
Charles Munch, Conducting
Love Scene from "Romeo and Juliet" —Berlioz
Symphony No. 2 for Strings—Honegger
Suite for Orchestra "Le Tombeau de Couperin" ———— Ravel
Symphonw No. 3 in G minor—Roussel

Broad and Locust sts. mark his debut here with the Philadelphians. He is here on a reciprocal interchange of courtesies which are taking Eugene Ormandy to Munch's podium in Boston's Symphony Hall for a like number of concerts.

SEATING CHANGED

Presumably at the guest's request, the orchestra was arranged yesterday in the "string quartet" plan of seating, namely, with violins and violas on either side of the stage and cellos in front.

Tall, silver-thatched, and looking youthful for his 65 years, the visitor from New England (French born) proceeded to offer a program of music by four French composers. With the exception of Hector Berlioz, an excerpt of whose "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony opened the bill, all stem from the earlier decades of the present century.

New to the audience was Albert Roussel's Third Symphony, heard for the first time at these concerts. This turned out to be a highly listenable score, infectuously rhythmic, richly orchestrated, well endowed with easily assimilated melodic material.

RELISHED BY AUDIENCE

It might, perhaps, be described as a product of French Romanticism rather delightfully inebriated by the Stravinskian influence that took Paris by storm circa 1930. Played with superb elan, it was greatly relished by the audience.

Yesterday's bill opened with a beautiful publication of the "Love Scene" from Berlioz's dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." A musical visualization of Shakespeare's famous "Balcony Scene," glamour steeped, it is among the loveliest works ever written by that arch Romantic who was its composer.

The Second Symphony of Arthur Honegger is a memento of the drama and travail of the French nation during the German occupation of Paris in the 1940s. Though Honegger was a Swiss citizen, he stayed in Paris during the Nazi eclipse and his score tells of that ordeal and the triumph of the liberation. This is music of fine dramatic force, but perhaps the more light-minded might find it a bit overly grim.

CONTRAST IN RAVEL

In charming contrast was Ravel's suite, "Le Tombeau de Couperin," in which the great French Impressionist salutes the music of the 17th and 18th centuries in a series of enchantingly dainty but high-spirited antique dances. Superbly played, with just the right touch of deftness and radiance, it ran the Roussel novelty a close race for the audience's favor.

The audience was most appreciative and the running series of ovations given Munch far exceeded in warmth merely the politeness due a guest. Munch, obviously delighted with our virtuoso orchestra, insisted on sharing the applause with Dr. Ormandy's players.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
Circ. D. 705,054 - S. 709,787

MAR 2 1957

MUSIC

Munch and Ormandy Switch Orchestras

A unique exchange of podium roles took place yesterday when Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, led the Philadelphia Orchestra for the first time in its concert at the Academy of Music and Eugene Ormandy made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony in that city. Reviews of both concerts follow:

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

An exchange that sent Eugene Ormandy to conduct the Boston Symphony in the New England capital brought Charles Munch here yesterday to lead the Philadelphia Orchestra for the first time.

The Friday afternoon audience, though depleted somewhat by the storm, nevertheless made it evident that Mr. Munch and his provocative all-French program were among the highlights of our local symphonic season.

Mr. Munch is obviously an artist of the highest integrity and sincerity and it was these qualities that had so direct an appeal for yesterday's listeners at the Academy of Music. The conductor was greeted with a great show of enthusiasm and was given a rousing ovation at the end of the program.

Great clarity of texture and a wonderfully well disciplined precision are two of the Boston's conductor's most striking qualities. Everything is sharply focused, cleanly etched with an amalgam that contains a hint of steel. You feel that nothing comes between Mr. Munch and the music; he is quite oblivious once started (and he is a quick beginner) of any surrounding influences that might be lurking in the circumambient air.

Yesterday, his program was an all-French one—music for which he is signally qualified and for which his great and easily explained sympathy is obvious.

Excepting the "Fantastic Symphony," the music of Berlioz is not so often programmed here as it should be. Thus it was a pleasure to hear Mr. Munch's imaginative and sensitive performance of the exquisite "Romeo and Juliet" love-scene that opened the program.

Honeger's Symphony No. 2 for Strings, followed — a sombre, serious piece, for the most part darkly colored with its ever-questioning first movement. This tragic mood is sustained until the final blending of two themes in a great crescendo leads into a triumphant chorale on the brass, which is very exciting.

Mr. Munch's "Tombeau de Couperin," where Ravel extolled the glory of 18th-century French music, was a string of clear-cut gems of the utmost transparency. The woodwinds surpassed themselves here, and John de Lancie, first oboe, was called upon for a solo bow.

The program ended with Philadelphia's first hearing of Albert Roussel's "Symphony No. 3 in G Minor." This proved an enormously vital and engaging work, striking for the meticulous finish, characteristic of one of the most fastidious masters of 20th century music.

There were several electrifying climaxes and the beautiful and remarkable Adagio with its serene violin solo cast its spell over the audience.

It was a privilege to welcome Mr. Munch and the music of France, played with such enthusiasm by our great orchestra, to the Academy of Music.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Boston, Mass., March 2—Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, achieved a great personal success as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon.

He was applauded cordially upon his first entrance, and periodically during the afternoon. But at concert's end, with the final chord of Brahms' D Major Symphony, Mr. Ormandy reaped a full-scale ovation of hand-clapping, shouts and cheers. Everybody was happy, and, especially, not least of all, the distinguished guest.

While Mr. Ormandy worked upon the stage of Symphony Hall, Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Orchestra, was guest with the Philadelphians in the Academy of Music.

Mr. Ormandy's visit provides us with an object lesson in the supreme importance of a conductor—when both he and the orchestra are of very high excellence. We have heard Mr. Ormandy here four times previously, with his own splendid organization. His own players know him, work hard for him, and have their own characteristic style and timbre. (The Philadelphia Orchestra is deeper-toned and has more of what I call "an emotional ground-swell" than ours).

But as guest conductor with our own orchestra, which we know so well, the personal quality of Ormandy's method, manner and taste was put into much sharper focus. What happens is that, because a great orchestra is extremely sensitive in its response, the authoritative conductor can in a short time alter its sound and its manner of playing.

In just four rehearsals, Mr. Ormandy made the Boston Symphony partly into his own image. The strings, by his insistent direction, gave out with much more vibrato than usual. He mellowed the brass, the woodwinds he changed least of all, and they were their usual bright, crystal-clear selves. The net result was a large and very rounded sonority, well-balanced but a little more dense than the resonance we know, and somewhat less bright. Yesterday the sound glowed; under Munch it sparkles.

If my memory is correct, Ormandy's performance of Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter" was the clearest, best-balanced I ever have heard. Not the most powerful or dramatic, but the finest in sound. The whole texture was extraordinarily clean. The rhythm was firm and even, the dynamics carefully calculated from the merest whisper of a pianissimo to an imposing strength at the final chord.

One heard a fresh and different conception of the Brahms D Major Symphony, one of prevailingly moderate tempo and dynamics, wherein every phase "sang" gloriously. Ormandy worked hard to bring out salient "inner voices," never to the point of distortion, but always so that they could be heard against each other.

There was some small trouble in the finale with those off-the-main-beat chord entrances, due no doubt to relative unfamilarity with each other's ways, between conductor and players. Ormandy's gestures came down a trifle early. Probably his own musicians wait just a split second before they come in; the Boston Symphony, giving him greatest attention, jumped in a hair too soon, and the metrical flow was momentarily upset. The finale went like a five-alarm fire, in tempo and emotional ardor.

Mr. Ormandy introduced to Boston William Schuman's "Credendum," substantial music and quite difficult, with a most of tricky cross-rhythms. Mr. Ormandy's first impression of the work was very pleasant, but this is not the sort of music about which you make decisive pronouncements upon first hearing. The work needs listening—or rather we do.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 2 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Ormandy Is Guest Conductor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, and will repeat tonight, the 17th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Eugene Ormandy, as guest conductor, presented the following program: William Schuman: "Credendum" (first performance at these concerts); Hindemith: Symphony, "Matthias the Painter"; Brahms: Symphony No. 2, in D major.

By CYRUS DURGIN

For the second week in a row, we have enjoyed at the Boston Symphony concerts a guest conductor of great skill and distinguished personal qualities. Our guest of yesterday afternoon and tonight is Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. He and Charles Munch in a sense have "exchanged" orchestras, for while Ormandy is in Boston, Munch is in Philadelphia. An account of his work there will be found in an adjacent column of this page.

Mr. Ormandy's visit provides us with an object lesson in the supreme importance of a conductor—when both he and the orchestra are of very high excellence. We have heard Mr. Ormandy here four times previously, with his own splendid organization. They know him, they work hard for him, and the Philadelphians have their own characteristic timbre and style of playing. (It is deeper-toned and has more of what I call "an emotional ground-swell" than ours.)

But as guest conductor with our own orchestra, which we know so well (the personal quality of Ormandy's method, manner and taste is put into much sharper focus. What happens is that, because a great orchestra is extremely sensitive in its response, the authoritative conductor can in a very short time alter its sound and its manner of playing.

In just four rehearsals, Mr. Ormandy made the Boston Symphony partly into his own image. The strings, by his insistent direction, gave out with much more vibrato than usual. He mellowed the brass to some extent. The woodwinds he changed least of all, and they sounded their usual bright, crystal-clear selves. He moved the tympani from stage corner to stage middle at the back, thereby automatically decreasing their power to the degree he prefers. He put the cellos at stage left front, and the violas just behind them.

The net result was a large and very rounded sonority, well-balanced but a little more dense than the resonance we know, and somewhat less bright. Yesterday the sound glowed, where under Munch it sparkles.

If my memory is as good as I hope it is, Ormandy's performance of "Matthias the Painter" was the clearest, best balanced I ever have heard. Not the most powerful or dramatic but the finest in sound. The whole texture was extraordinarily clean.

The rhythm was firm and even, the dynamics carefully calculated from the merest whisper of a pianissimo to an imposing strength at the final chord.

The Inner Voices

I had expected Brahms to be, after the umpteenth hearing, tolerably interesting. What one heard was a fresh and different conception of the D major Symphony, one of [illegible] moderate tempo and dynamics wherein every phase "sang" gloriously. Ormandy worked hard to bring out salient "inner voices" never to the point of distortion but consistently to the point where the voices all could be heard against the others. This [illegible] little like the Koussevitsky [illegible]

There was some little trouble in the finale, with most of the off-the-main-beat chord entrances. Obviously this [illegible] matter of relative unfamiliarity with each other's [illegible] conductor and players. [illegible] Ormandy's gestures came down a trifle early. Probably his own musicians wait just a split second before they come in; the Boston Symphony, giving him the greatest attention, jumped in a hair too soon, and the metrical flow was momentarily upset. As a matter of record, both conductor and players had got used to each other by the last of those entrances, which was on the dot.

The finale went like a five-alarm fire, in pace and emotional ardor, and aroused the audience to shouts and cheers. Ormandy was called back to the stage several times, and for his own part he singled out first oboe John de Lancie for a solo bow. This was a fitting gesture for [illegible] We were all happy.

Of the new music, William Schuman's "Credendum" I can say only that it is [illegible] and quite difficult with a host of tricky cross-rhythms. The first movement, involving much percussion, is very loud [illegible] since it is [illegible] "Declamation," and the dissonance is quite powerful. The chorale which forms the [illegible] is melodically beautiful and a most romantic [illegible] while the very fast finale is [illegible] and exciting. [illegible] impression was very [illegible] but this is not the [illegible] You make decisive [illegible] ments about upon first [illegible] let us listen to it [illegible]

Next week Mr. M[illegible] here. He will conduct [illegible] Day's Serenade for [illegible] Sixth Symphony by [illegible] D[illegible] [illegible] and the D [illegible] phony of [illegible]

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 2 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, gave the 17th concert of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Credendum.....William Schumann
"Matthis der Maler".....Hindermith
Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 73..Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Although I have always had a deep admiration for Eugene Ormandy, it was not until yesterday, when he exchanged pulpits with Charles Munch for two concerts, that I first began to sense the real measure of his attainment. It is almost transcendental, to say the least.

When he has appeared here with his own orchestra I have always withheld the final accolade, though why I don't know: he has just given me the impression of a man with great technical proficiency but wanting perhaps in forceful re-creative conviction. After his performance yesterday I have adjusted these impressions and, in fact, hurled them into the wastebasket for good.

First of All

There is, first of all, that supreme technical command of the orchestra. He does not use a stick, but he is the only stickless conductor I know who can make his intentions absolutely clear even in the most rapid passages. Yet he does not beat time with his right hand; on the contrary he will go on for bar after bar without indicating a down beat (though he certainly does when it is essential to an entrance).

What he seems to do instead, is beat the rhythm of a given phrase to the section or the instrumentalist involved and he does it in such a fashion as to release its melodic significance in an extraordinary way. He cues everything and everyone, and his manner of turning to face the different instrumental choirs draws particular attention to the moment, allowing the eye to help the ear in a singularly felicitous fashion.

Dark Nobility

With all this is a remarkable sense of nuance, of balance, of texture; he never covers an inner voice or conceals a significant passage in the general fabric. He is a master colorist in dynamics, too, controlling every level of dynamic expression with graceful and meaningful left hand. It is exceedingly interesting to watch him work although his gestures are seldom melodramatic. They can be when necessary, but there is an overall economy of means combined with a nearly hypnotic fluency of arms, hands and fingers that seem to be almost a part of the music itself.

As an interpretative artist, Mr. Ormandy yesterday cancelled out all previous impressions I may have had: he did the Hindemith with a dark nobility of spirit that was very impressive indeed, and his conception of the Brahms was perfectly beautiful from beginning to end. For its part, the Boston Symphony responded magnificently. Indeed, that conductor and orchestra, never having worked together before, could prepare this difficult program in but three rehearsals spells out the measure of both more strikingly than any words could.

To say the William Schuman's "Credendum" is difficult is toying with the truth. It must be one of the most technically complicated works the orchestra has tackled in some time, but it is well worth the effort. For Mr. Schuman has here come up with an important musical utterance. From its outburst of percussion and brass at the opening to its final peroration, it is a deeply felt work and one revealing, in its central section, a very effective melodic felicity. The work, only about 15 minutes long, is interesting and original. Its musical idiom is not aggressively dissonant (though there are many strange effects) nor is it design obscure. It appears, in short, to be written for a musical audience rather than a mutual admiration society of composers in the back room.

It may be added that Mr. Ormandy, who displayed a most grateful attitude on the stage (he was reluctant to take a bow without the orchestra sharing the applause), made a stunning personal success on this occasion, the Friday afternoon audience giving him an unusual ovation. Mr. Munch returns next week to give us Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings, David Diamond's Sixth Symphony and Franck's D minor Symphony.

PETER TRUMP, baritone with the Chorus Pro Musica in Bach's B Minor Mass tomorrow evening at 8 in Symphony Hall.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
Boston, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 2 1957

Ormandy and Munch Exchange Places

Boston Première of Schuman's 'Credendum'

By Harold Rogers

This is the weekend when Charles Munch and Eugene Ormandy have traded podiums, with Dr. Munch holding forth in the Academy of Music with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Mr. Ormandy conducting in Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony. As yet we know nothing of Dr. Munch's reception in Philadelphia, but we can report that Bostonians gave Mr. Ormandy an ovation yesterday afternoon punctuated with bravos.

Both men have weighted their programs in favor of contemporary music, and both have offered premières in the respective cities. Dr. Munch is conducting the first Philadelphia performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, together with the Love Scene from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet," Ravel's "Tombeau de Couperin," and Honegger's Second Symphony.

Mr. Ormandy is conducting the first Boston performance of William Schuman's "Credendum," together with Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and the Brahms' Symphony No. 2. It was quite daring for Mr. Ormandy to devote the first half of his program to the Schuman and Hindemith, two present-day composers who can blow up an orchestral storm with a practiced hand.

The Schuman "Credendum" is the first federal commission for an orchestral piece, having been ordered through the State Department for UNESCO. In one movement of three parts, it opens with a Declaration (Moderato con fuoco) that seems to epitomize Schuman's own uncompromising stand as a composer.

The opening is explosively affirmative; and with "Article of Faith" as a key (the work's subtitle) we can discern magnificent aspirations that transcend national borders and reach out to universal mankind. But this music also apparently represents the composer's belief in his right to say something and his right to say it as he feels it must be said—whether the sounds are pretty or not.

* * *

Thus in his Declaration we find great splashes of brass, supported with volleys of drums and bells. The wide-ranging melodies soar as if in a lofty vision. In the Chorale (Lento) of the second part the violins enter for the first time, and the mood changes to one of solemnity, like an aspiring prayer that waxes in fervor until it becomes impassioned. Here again the brass returns to lend its rockbound support.

The Finale (Presto) opens with a series of rapid figures that are tossed about from choir to choir, forming a background for an eloquent melody in the cellos. Toward the end the climax builds with a return to the granitic power of the opening Declaration. It may not be an endearing piece of music, but it commands respect. It is convincing. How can it be otherwise when Mr. Schuman is convinced of his own integrity, and when Mr. Ormandy is convinced of Mr. Schuman's greatness?

* * *

Mr. Ormandy is a conductor with an amazing fund of energy, and if his readings are not always of the most sensitive, there are compensations to be found in his vigor, his forthright way of getting his dramatic effects. One has the feeling that he is at his best when standing before his own orchestra, which is only natural, but his performance with the Boston Symphony yesterday was eminently appealing. If he has not yet adjusted to our brasses (they were a bit rowdy in the Hindemith and the Brahms), this is understandable. In the Academy of Music Mr. Ormandy's brasses cannot overreach themselves so easily as our brasses can in the live acoustics of Symphony Hall.

Mr. Ormandy's readings for both Hindemith's "Mathis" and the Brahms Second were a bit terre-à-terre, but, as stated above, with vitalizing compensations. And his listeners, as also stated above, were quick to show their appreciation.

[redacted]

BOSTON

■ Boston Symphony Orchestra patrons had the opportunity of comparing three markedly different styles of conducting in the 15th, 16th and 17th pairs of concerts on the Friday-Saturday subscription series.

Charles Munch's approach, based on deep and long study of the scores, but depending largely on fervency and enthusiasm brought to high point during the performance itself, led to thrilling results in the Strauss "Ein Heldenleben," which climaxed the concerts of Feb. 15-16. The conductor's deep understanding of the music was made evident by the way he brought out the inner voices and by the clarity of all the involved parts and subtle allusions, mostly lost in routine performances. But what made the reading altogether remarkable was the inspiration of the moment which swept the audience along together with conductor and players into a mutually shared experience which far transcended the sounds, magnificent as these were. For sheer spirit of performance this was the best "Heldenleben" within the memory of this reviewer.

Other items on the program included Mozart's Abduction from the Seraglio Overture and the same composer's Clarinet Concerto, with Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's principal clarinetist, playing with the beautiful tone for which he is famous.

Making guest appearances on Feb. 22-23, Igor Markevitch scored heavily with his audiences. Cool calculation resulting in a careful husbanding of resources achieved highly interesting interpretations marked by originality and logic. Yet this somewhat more cerebral approach also was exciting and moving throughout the varied, well-constructed program. The conductor's own arrangement for orchestra of Ricercar from the "Musical Offering" by Bach, a setting which does full justice to the original, was heard for the first time at these concerts. Another BSO "first," and long-delayed, was Schubert's youthful and charming Symphony No. 3, done with just the requisite lightness and deftness. The Strauss "Til Eulenspiegel" and Ravel's arrangement of the Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," gave the conductor every opportunity to lead the virtuoso orchestra through its most virtuosic paces.

Eugene Ormandy was the third conductor, making his appearances Mar. 1, 2, in an exchange that sent Mr. Munch to Philadelphia at the same time to conduct Mr. Ormandy's splendid orchestra. With Mr. Ormandy, sound is the all-important factor. As he has shown repeatedly in nearby Worcester and in Boston itself he is pre-eminent when it comes to beautiful tone, flexibility and balance. Such a conductor, however, is a little at a disadvantage in a guest appearance, and there were a few moments when the orchestra could not meet the conductor's directions. But as a whole this concert too was an enjoyable experience. William Schuman's "Credendum" received its first BSO hearing and impressed as a rugged, powerful and sincerely motivated work. The Brahms Second and the Symphonic Suite from Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" completed the list.

JULES WOLFFERS

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.

ORCHESTRA Podium

[illegible] SEE

[illegible] the "Fantastic Sym[illegible] the music of Berlioz is no[illegible] programed here as [illegible] be. Thus it was a pleasur[illegible] Munch's imaginative an[illegible]ve performance of the ex[illegible]quisite "Romeo and Juliet" love scene, that opened the program.

Honneger's Symphony No. 2, fo[illegible] strings, followed — a sombre serious piece for the most par[illegible] darkly colored with its ever[illegible] questioning first movement. Th[illegible] tragic mood is sustained until the final blending of two themes in a great crescendo leads into triumphant chorale on the bras[illegible] which is very exciting.

Munch's "Tombeau de Couperin" where Ravel extolled the glory [illegible] 18th century French music, was [illegible] string of clear-cut gems of th[illegible] utmost transparency. The woo[illegible] winds surpassed themselves her[illegible] and John de Lancie, first obo[illegible] was called upon for a solo bow.

The program ended with Phil[illegible]delphia's first hearing of Alb[illegible] Roussel's "Symphony No. 3 in [illegible] Min[illegible]. This proved an enor[illegible] mo[illegible] vital and engaging work [illegible] strikes for the meticulous finis[illegible] cha[illegible]ristic of one of the mos[illegible] fa[illegible]ous masters of French 20th century music.

There were several electrifying climaxes and the beautiful and re[illegible]markable adagio with its serene violin solo cast its spell over the audience.

It was a privilege to welcome Dr. Munch and the music o[illegible] France, played with such enthusi[illegible]asm by our great orchestra, to the Academy of Music.

Orchestra for the first time.

The Friday afternoon audience, though depleted somewhat by the storm, nevertheless made it evident that Dr. Munch and his provocative all-French program were among the highlights of our local symphonic season.

Munch is obviously an artist of the highest integrity and sincerity, and it was these qualities that had so direct an appeal to listeners at the Academy. The conductor was [illegible] great show of enthusiasm [illegible] was given a rousing ovation at the end of the program.

Great clarity of texture and a wonderfully well-disciplined precision are two [illegible] which conductor's mast[illegible] qualities. Everything is sharply focused, cleanly etched [illegible] an amalgam that contains a [illegible] of steel. You feel that nothing comes between Dr. Munch and the music; he is quite oblivious [illegible] started, (and he is a quick beginner) of any surrounding influences.

A Pleasure to Hear

Today his program was an all-French one—music for which he is signally qualified. We are prone to encourage all-German and all-Russian programs in this city, but the music of France is a less common experience.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 2 1957

Ormandy and Munch Exchange Places

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
MAR 2 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, gave the 6th concert of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Credendum.....William Schuman
"Mathis der Maler".....Hindemith
Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 73..Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Although I have always had a deep admiration for Eugene Ormandy, it was not until yesterday, when he exchanged pulpits with Charles Munch for two concerts, that I first began to sense the real measure of his attainment. It is almost transcendental, to say the least.

When he has appeared here with his own orchestra I have always withheld the final accolade, though why I don't know: he has just given me the impression of a man with great technical proficiency but wanting perhaps in forceful re-creative conviction. After his performance yesterday I have adjusted these impressions and, in fact, hurled them into the wastebasket for good.

First of All

There is, first of all, that supreme technical command of the orchestra. He does not use a stick, but he is the only stickless conductor I know who can make his intentions absolutely clear even in the most rapid passages. Yet he does not beat time with his right hand; on the contrary he will go on for bar after bar without indicating a down beat (though he certainly does when it is essential to an entrance).

What he seems to do instead, is beat the rhythm of a given phrase to the section or the instrumentalist involved and he does it in such a fashion as to release its melodic significance in an extraordinary way. He cues everything and everyone, and his manner of turning to face the different instrumental choirs draws particular attention to the moment, allowing the eye to help the ear in a singularly felicitous fashion.

Dark Nobility

With all this is a remarkable sense of nuance, of balance, of texture; he never covers an inner voice or conceals a significant passage in the general fabric. He is a master colorist in dynamics, too, controlling every level of dynamic expression with graceful and meaningful left hand. It is exceedingly interesting to watch him work although his gestures are seldom melodramatic. They can be when necessary, but there is an overall economy of means combined with a nearly hypnotic fluency of arms, hands and fingers that seem to be almost "part" of the music itself.

As an interpretative artist, Mr. Ormandy yesterday cancelled out all previous impressions I may have had: he did the Hindemith with a dark nobility of spirit that was very impressive indeed, and his conception of the Brahms was perfectly beautiful from beginning to end. For its part, the Boston Symphony responded magnificently. Indeed, that conductor and orchestra, never having worked together before, could prepare this difficult program in but three rehearsals spells out the measure of both more strikingly than any words could.

To say the William Schuman's "Credendum" is difficult is toying with the truth. It must be one of the most technically complicated works the orchestra has tackled in some time, but it is well worth the effort. For Mr. Schuman has here come up with an important musical utterance. From its outburst of percussion and brass at the opening to its final peroration, it is a deeply felt work and one revealing, in its central section, a very effective melodic felicity. The work, only about 15 minutes long, is interesting and original. Its musical idiom is not aggressively dissonant (though there are many strange effects) nor is it design obscure. It appears, in short, to be written for a musical audience rather than a mutual admiration society of composers in the back room.

It may be added that Mr. Ormandy, who displayed a most grateful attitude on the stage (he was reluctant to take a bow without the orchestra sharing the applause), made a stunning personal success on this occasion, the Friday afternoon audience giving him an unusual ovation. Mr. Munch returns next week to give us Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings, David Diamond's Sixth Symphony and Franck's D minor Symphony.

PETER TRUMP, baritone with the Chorus Pro Musica in Bach's B Minor Mass tomorrow evening at 8 in Symphony Hall.

Boston Première of Schuman's 'Credendum'

By Harold Rogers

This is the weekend when Charles Munch and Eugene Ormandy have traded podiums, with Dr. Munch holding forth in the Academy of Music with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Mr. Ormandy conducting in Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony. As yet we know nothing of Dr. Munch's reception in Philadelphia, but we can report that Bostonians gave Mr. Ormandy an ovation yesterday afternoon punctuated with bravos.

Both men have weighted their programs in favor of contemporary music, and both have offered premières in the respective cities. Dr. Munch is conducting the first Philadelphia performance of Roussel's Symphony No. 3, together with the Love Scene from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet," Ravel's "Tombeau de Couperin," and Honegger's Second Symphony.

Mr. Ormandy is conducting the first Boston performance of William Schuman's "Credendum," together with Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and the Brahms' Symphony No. 2. It was quite daring for Mr. Ormandy to devote the first half of his program to the Schuman and Hindemith, two present-day composers who can blow up an orchestral storm with a practiced hand.

The Schuman "Credendum" is the first federal commission for an orchestral piece, having been ordered through the State Department for UNESCO. In one movement of three parts, it opens with a Declaration (Moderato con fuoco) that seems to epitomize Schuman's own uncompromising stand as a composer.

The opening is explosively affirmative; and with "Article of Faith" as a key (the work's subtitle) we can discern magnificent aspirations that transcend national borders and reach out to universal mankind. But this music also apparently represents the composer's belief in his right to say something and his right to say it as he feels it must be said—whether the sounds are pretty or not.

Thus in his Declaration we find great splashes of brass, supported with volleys of drums and bells. The wide-ranging melodies soar as if in a lofty vision. In the Chorale (Lento) of the second part the violins enter for the first time, and the mood changes to one of solemnity, like an aspiring prayer that waxes in fervor until it becomes impassioned. Here again the brass returns to lend its rockbound support.

The Finale (Presto) opens with a series of rapid figures that are tossed about from choir to choir, forming a background for an eloquent melody in the cellos. Toward the end the climax builds with a return to the granitic power of the opening Declaration. It may not be an endearing piece of music, but it commands respect. It is convincing. How can it be otherwise when Mr. Schuman is convinced of his own integrity, and when Mr. Ormandy is convinced of Mr. Schuman's greatness?

Mr. Ormandy is a conductor with an amazing fund of energy, and if his readings are not always of the most sensitive, there are compensations to be found in his vigor, his forthright way of getting his dramatic effects. One has the feeling that he is at his best when standing before his own orchestra, which is only natural, but his performance with the Boston Symphony yesterday was eminently appealing. If he has not yet adjusted to our brasses (they were a bit rowdy in the Hindemith and the Brahms), this is understandable. In the Academy of Music Mr. Ormandy's brasses cannot overreach themselves so easily as our brasses can in the live acoustics of Symphony Hall.

Mr. Ormandy's readings for both Hindemith's "Mathis" and the Brahms Second were a bit terre-à-terre, but, as stated above, with vitalizing compensations. And his listeners, as also stated above, were quick to show their appreciation.

MUSICAL COURIER
(NEW YORK CITY)
MAR 15 1957

BOSTON

■ Boston Symphony Orchestra patrons had the opportunity of comparing three markedly different styles of conducting in the 15th, 16th and 17th pairs of concerts on the Friday-Saturday subscription series.

Charles Munch's approach, based on deep and long study of the scores, but depending largely on fervency and enthusiasm brought to high point during the performance itself, led to thrilling results in the Strauss "Ein Heldenleben," which climaxed the concerts of Feb. 15-16. The conductor's deep understanding of the music was ma ou of all for ing ins sw wi tu tra as for leb vie (ed lio

Schubert, and Massenet's "Pleure, mes yeux" from Le Cid, gave us un alloyed joy. The program also con tained a group of songs in Englis by Scott, Britten, Dvorak, and Quilte and Negro Spirituals.

■ Lyric Opera of Chicago has an nounced its 1957 season premiere pe formance of Verdi's Otello on Oct. 1 at Civic Opera House. The opera starring Renata Tebaldi, Mario de Monaco and Tito Gobbi, is schedule for several performances during th seven-week season (Oct. 10 to Nov. 30

■ Louis Sudler, who sang for Presi dent and Mrs. Eisenhower at the In augural Ball at the Mayflower Hot Clarinet Concerto, with Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's principal clarinetist, playing with the beautiful tone for which he is famous.

Making guest appearances on Feb. 22-23, Igor Markevitch scored heavily with his audiences. Cool calculation resulting in a careful husbanding of resources achieved highly interesting interpretations marked by originality and logic. Yet this somewhat more cerebral approach also was exciting and moving throughout the varied, well-constructed program. The conductor's own arrangement for orchestra of Ricercar from the "Musical Offering" by Bach, a setting which does full justice to the original, was heard for the first time at these concerts. Another BSO "first," and long-delayed, was Schubert's youthful and charming Symphony No. 3, done with just the requisite lightness and deftness. The Strauss "Til Eulenspiegel" and Ravel's arrangement of the Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," gave the conductor every opportunity to lead the virtuoso orchestra through its most virtuosic paces.

Eugene Ormandy was the third conductor, making his appearances Mar. 1, 2, in an exchange that sent Mr. Munch to Philadelphia at the same time to conduct Mr. Ormandy's splendid orchestra. With Mr. Ormandy, sound is the all-important fac-

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
MAR 2 1957

THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA

Dr. Munch on Podium

By MAX DE SCHAUENSEE

PHILADELPHIA, Mar. 1—An exchange that sent Eugene Ormandy to conduct the Boston Symphony in Massachusetts capital, brought Charles Munch here today to lead the Philadelphia Orchestra for the first time.

The Friday afternoon audience, though depleted somewhat by the storm, nevertheless made it evident that Dr. Munch and his provocative all-French program were among the highlights of our local symphonic season.

Munch is obviously an artist of the highest integrity and sincerity, and it was these qualities that had so direct an appeal for the listeners at the Academy of Music. The conductor was greeted with a great show of enthusiasm and was given a rousing ovation at the end of the program.

Great clarity of texture and a wonderfully well-disciplined precision are two of the Boston conductor's most striking qualities. Everything is sharply focused, cleanly etched with an amalgam that contains a mint of steel. You feel that nothing comes between Dr. Munch and the music; he is quite oblivious once started, (and he is a quick beginner) of any surrounding influences.

A Pleasure to Hear

Today his program was an all-French one—music for which he is signally qualified. We are prone to encourage all-German and all-Russian programs in this city, but the music of France is a less common experience.

Excepting the "Fantastic Symphony," the music of Berlioz is not so often programed here as it should be. Thus it was a pleasure to hear Munch's imaginative and sensitive performance of the exquisite "Romeo and Juliet" love-scene, that opened the program.

Honneger's Symphony No. 2, for strings, followed — a sombre, serious piece; for the most part darkly colored with its ever-questioning first movement. This tragic mood is sustained until the final blending of two themes in a great crescendo leads into a triumphant chorale on the brass which is very exciting.

Munch's "Tombeau de Couperin," where Ravel extolled the glory of 18th century French music, was a string of clear-cut gems of the utmost transparency. The woodwinds surpassed themselves here and John de Lancie, first oboe was called upon for a solo bow.

The program ended with Philadelphia's first hearing of Albert Roussel's "Symphony No. 3 in G Minor." This proved an enormously vital and engaging work, striking for the meticulous finish characteristic of one of the most fastidious masters of French 20th century music.

There were several electrifying climaxes and the beautiful and remarkable adagio with its serene violin solo cast its spell over the audience.

It was a privilege to welcome Dr. Munch and the music of France, played with such enthusiasm by our great orchestra, to the Academy of Music.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Post & Times Herald
Circ., D. 380,624 - S. 410,185
MAR 3 1957

Concert Plan Needs Revision

Whither Goest the National?

(This is the last in a series of three articles on the future of the National Symphony.)

By Paul Hume

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra sold out its two Washington concerts this year, and one of them had a highly unpromising program viewed from what is thought to be the public's point of view.

Hume

The Washington public obviously prefers the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to that of the National Symphony. That is no discredit to the National Symphony, but it cannot be overlooked. If the National Symphony Orchestra announced a program of the 1st Symphony of Leo Smit, the 2nd Piano Concerto of Prokofieff, with Nicole Henriot, and the 4th Symphony of Beethoven, how many people would go?

Well then, what should the National Symphony do about its own concerts? Its repertoire? Its playing? Its sound?

To me the principal defect of the National Symphony Orchestra's tone this season is that it often lacks that glowing luster that marks the great orchestra. It plays with energy, it plays with excellent precision, it plays musically. But it often does not sound alluring and beautiful either in its separate choirs—except for its marvelous woodwind ensemble—or in total impact. It is a fact I notice at almost every one of its concerts.

It seems to me, the National Symphony does not have, and never has had an adequate double bass section. There is a kind of sound that can be drawn from these large instruments that should provide a foundation under even the largest orchestra, and that never fails, even in the fullest climaxes, to undergird and color the entire structure resting upon it.

As one obituary of Toscanini said, "He never conducted an orchestra in which he did not see to it that the double basses gave a full, perfectly tuned, musical basis to the tone of the whole." The Philadelphia has one kind of double bass sound that qualifies for this description, the Boston another, the Chicago still another. The National Symphony does not.

THE NATIONAL Symphony Orchestra plays too many concerts in too many places which, though they may well be filled with people who love music, are not the National Symphony's primary concern. The National Symphony asks the people of the Washington area for support, and then takes off for concerts in parts of the country vastly removed from its center of operations.

These show up in the tired, unglamorous sound the orchestra has made this year in weeks in which it plays two-a-day, full length symphony programs, some programs of the cheapest kind of music, programs in football stadiums, programs inadequately rehearsed with glamour-named stars who disgrace themselves and the orchestra in the process.

It is time the National Symphony stopped playing baby-sitter to every cause that comes along including presidential inaugurals, over which it has no control. It should turn its attention to the sole function of a great orchestra which is to make music exciting and beautiful to every audience for which it plays.

Music has lacked even a fair amount of excitement and splendor this year at too many of our concerts. It is time, and the National Symphony is the agency, to restore its art to the highest possible level. It should rehearse more and play more in its home city for its regular subscribers and supporters. And it should recognize in its actions what it insists rightly in its publicity: that Washington is a musically mature center. Such a city is worthy of at least one concert a week.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
MAR 3 1957

Symphony Programs For the Coming Week

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returns to Boston after a two week's absence during which he made an appearance as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Dr. Munch will conduct four concerts at Symphony Hall in the coming week—the seventh in the Tuesday evening series on March 5, the eighteenth pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series on March 5, the eighteenth pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on March 8 and 9, and the fourth Sunday afternoon concert on March 10.

Dr. Munch will present at the concerts of Friday, Saturday and Sunday the first performance of the Symphony No. 6 by David Diamond, a work composed in Italy while Mr. Diamond was there on a Fulbright Scholarship, completed in Florence in 1954, and dedicated to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will open with Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings" and will close with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Gino Cioffi, principal clarinet of the Orchestra, will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at the Tuesday evening concert, and the program will open with Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and close with Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben".

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
MAR 3 1957

Fiedler Planning 9 Appearances At Buenos Aires

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, may go to Buenos Aires as guest conductor for nine appearances with the Buenos Aires Municipal Orchestra, it was learned last night.

A report that the Boston Pops Orchestra was going was denied. No such trip was ever considered, officials of the orchestra said.

Fiedler, at present on a 10-week tour of the United States and Canada, with the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra, said in Detroit last night that he has not yet signed the contract for his Argentinian appearances.

If he signs, he will go alone to Argentina. No members of either the Boston Pops Orchestra or the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra will go with him, he said.

A report that the Boston Pops Orchestra (composed of many members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) was considering an appearance at the Colon Theater came out of Argentina yesterday. A union official there had protested that American musicians were being brought to the Colon Theater as "strike-breakers."

Officials here said that any "guest" appearance by Conductor Fiedler would have nothing to do with the union-management dispute.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
MAR 3 1957

CONFUSION OVER BOSTON POPS ARGENTINE TRIP IS CLEARED UP

Confusion over a report the Boston Pops Orchestra might cancel an Argentine trip because of a labor dispute in Buenos Aires was cleared up last night when it was disclosed that only Conductor Arthur Fiedler had expressed any intentions of making the South American trip.

Earlier Thomas D. Perry, manager of both the Boston Symphony and the Pops Orchestras, had expressed surprise when told that reports from Buenos Aires indicated the orchestra would give up its trip.

"We have no trip to Argentina scheduled," he said.

Later it was learned Fiedler, who is now in Detroit with the Pops Touring Orchestra, had expressed intentions of accepting an invitation to act as a guest conductor in the Argentine capital in April.

The reference to the Pops Orchestra was made by a Buenos Aires musicians' union leader who said he had received a report that American musicians would not be allowed to play in Argentine while a strike was on.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
MAR 5 1957

Symphony Support

BOSTON has no better or more effective representative than its symphony orchestra.

In its travels, it has won top praise in distant nations. At home, it is looked upon by residents and visitors alike as one of the special reasons for enjoying Boston hospitality. It has brought great honor to the city's name.

But now the Boston Symphony needs help.

It has been caught in an economic squeeze. Its income has climbed during the past 10 years, but so has its cost of operation. Its earnings are not keeping pace with its expenses, and the gap between the two is widening steadily.

The trustees say they need $250,000 this year, to keep that gap under control.

That's not much to ask of the public, considering what the symphony gives in return. Certainly no other medium could be financed for so little and yet produce so much.

The public should be quick to respond.

BOSTON, SUNDAY HERALD MARCH 3, 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY NEARLY BROKE, APPEAL FOR $250,000 LAUNCHED

There would be a dread silence in this city if the sound of her symphony orchestra should die.

Yet that's not just an alarmist thought. Right now the famed orchestra is so low in the pocket that it needs cash at once — $250,000 this year.

INCREASED COSTS

Increased costs over the years have buried the orchestra so badly that now it's nearly broke. So the trustees have opened the books for the people of Boston and announce quite frankly that the reserves have been wiped out and that the money problem "has become a peril."

And this has happened at a time when the orchestra, as the trustees explain, "is in every way vigorous and at the crest of its ability and activity; in every way with one exception—money."

So let's look at the books.

The Boston Symphony actually is a big earner and makes 86 per cent of expenses, a truly remarkable proportion in a field where such earnings rarely top 40 to 50 per cent.

But in the past 10 years it has been plagued by rising costs—up 39 percent from $1.2 million to $1.7 million. Naturally income has climbed, too, but the total in those same years has risen only 27 per cent, from $1,247,00 in 1946 to $1,584,000 in 1956.

And every year has seen a widening of the gap between income and outgo.

NEARLY TWICE

So the trustees are putting out a straightforward plea to you as a Bostonian and to the business leaders of the community and they estimate their need at $250,000.

At the same time they note that that amount "is nearly twice what the Friends and our corporate sponsors have given in recent years."

The trustees say: "The problem must be squarely faced: new sources of revenue must be found to support the service the orchestra provides."

The trustees permit themselves one small comment on their feeling about the orchestra when they say:

"It is a fundamental part of the whole Boston milieu that is distinctive and praiseworthy; it makes Boston an attractive place to live, to work and to visit; and it is a representative, carrying with honor the name of Boston, to the world."

Honor it has. Now it needs cash.

And when you think of it, a quarter of a million isn't much to keep the magic of their music.

219

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 6 1957

Boston Symphony Musician Made a Friend in Russia

Officials in Washington and Moscow may frown at one another, but the men and women of the United States and the Soviet Union seem to be getting along fine on what few occasions they meet outside of politics.

The following is a letter received here recently by a Boston musician who took part in last Summer's Russian tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He obviously made quite a hit with his Russian acquaintance.

But in order to prevent the Soviet police from keeping an eye on their enthusiastic fellow countryman all names have been eliminated.

The dictionary referred to is in the language of one of Russia's neighbors. But like many other things it is unavailable in the Soviet Union.

Here is the letter:

Dear Mister . . .

I wonder if you remember me yet.

Once during your visit in Russia in Leningrad you with your friend . . . came to my mother.

I can't forget the impression you've made upon me.

I could never imagine that the Americans can be so genial and good humored. In any case I'm mighty glad of this acquaintance.

Now I wish you all best and I hope to see you again some time.

If you please answer me and relate in your letter about yourself, your family, your daughters.

By the way you should excuse me, my grammar errors. I haven't yet advanced very much in my English studies.

As for me, I'm getting along very well. I intend to become an interpreter and in connection with this circumstance I have a little request to you. There are unfortunately no dictionaries here in Russia.

It is quite impossible to obtain a . . . dictionary. If it won't make you too great trouble I beg you humbly to be good and to send me a dictionary. On that condition of course that dictionaries of such a kind are for sale in general.

Also I come to the end. Let me once more wish you good luck in this New Year!

P.S.—Best greetings from my mother who's taken a fancy to you.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 7 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

Boston Symphony Orchestra Entertained

Members of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce and their wives today paid tribute to the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a luncheon at Symphony Hall. Among the head-table guests were, left to right, Thomas G. Dignan, president of Boston Edison Company; Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Ernest Henderson, president of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 6,842

MAR 8 1957

O. Bergstrom At Dinner for Hub Symphony

Oliver T. Bergstrom of Winchester, president of the Middlesex County National Bank with branches in Medford, was a head table guest Thursday at the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce luncheon in the Hub given to interest business leaders in helping support the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The affair was held in Symphony Hall. Principal speaker was C. D. Jackson, a trustee of the orchestra and vice-president of Time, Inc.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1957

Symphony Orchestra Saluted At Lunch by Business Chiefs

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce saluted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday, with a luncheon given by chamber members and their wives to the orchestra, in Symphony Hall.

Ernest Henderson, president of the chamber, introduced the speakers, C. D. Jackson, a trustee of the orchestra, and Thomas G. Dignan, president of Boston Edison Co. The salute was also an effort to interest business interests in helping to support the Boston Symphony as a prime cultural institution of this region.

Said Dignan, in part: "Boston business has a special interest in the Symphony . . . which has contributed immeasurably to the cultural and economic life of this city.

"In this day and age, the cultural and economic development of a community go hand in hand. It is not my purpose to tell you why Boston business should support the Symphony. We know what needs to be done and we shall do our share, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a community asset. It belongs to all of us, and it must be preserved for the present and for future generations."

Greatest Symphony

C. D. Jackson, vice president of Time, Inc., stated flatly: "With some association over the years with music . . . I can look you all in the eye and say without bias or fear: 'You have the greatest symphony orchestra in the world today.'"

Jackson gave as an illustration of the increasing support of cultural institutions by business, the $75,000,000 Lincoln Center project in New York, which will house the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, the Metropolitan Opera Association, the New York City Ballet, the Juilliard School of Music and "doubtless certain library and museum facilities. Out of the $75,000,000, we are expecting that $5,000,000-plus will be put up by business.

"The reason for this business participation is not soft-headedness on the part of business, but appreciation of the value of this kind of thing to the climate of the community and of the nation.

"A very interesting thing has happened in America—culture is no longer a sissy word. Nations like ours can be virile and successful, but the glue that holds things together is the national coefficient of idealism, and in today's titanic contest for the allegiance of half the world's peoples, the indispensable ally of guns and dollars is this coefficient of idealism.

Audible Expression

"The tangible, visible and audible expression of national idealism is culture. Of all the expressions of culture, music is the most universal. Of all the expressions of present-day musical culture, the Boston Symphony is the best. You have the best, and you've got to keep it that way."

Guests at the head table included Edward A. Taft, Harold D. Hodgkinson, Henry B. Cabot, president, Boston Symphony board of trustees; Jackson, Talcott M. Banks, Michael T. Kelleher, Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice Mass. Supreme Court; Francis W. Hatch, Lewis Perry, Charles Munch, Symphony conductor; Thomas D. Perry, manager of the orchestra; William J. Bird, Oliver T. Bergstrom, Earl P. Stevenson, Donald J. Hurley, Gerald W. Blakeley Jr., Joseph Kaplan, Forester A. Clark, Page Browne, Byron K. Elliott, William J. Foley Jr., Henderson, Albert E. Hunter and Dignan.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

MAR 7 1957

Music in Review . . . By GERALD BERLIN

BSO: Ormandy Guest

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra inaugurated their own private cultural exchange program last weekend. Mr. Ormandy took over Mr. Munch's podium, Mr. Munch took over Mr. Ormandy's and from what we observed here and was reported from there, a conductor is not without honor outside his own bailiwick. Mr. Munch's menu of some of his best French delicacies fared passing well in the land of scrapple, while Mr. Ormandy, for his part, succeeded in keeping the local band geared to the intense peak of perfection it had achieved the previous week under Igor Markevitch's baton.

The Ormandy program included the first performance at these concerts of William Schuman's "Credendum," "Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms' "Second Symphony." The Schuman piece represents what may well turn out to be a momentous turning point in American musical life. It was written by invitation of the United States National Commission for UNESCO through the State Department and as such is the first Federal commission for an orchestral piece. Hence its title, which means "Article of Faith," for the composer has indicated his deep convictions "concerning the work of UNESCO and the role of government in the arts." It is a spare and long-lined work in three movements, whose austerity is unrelieved save for some of the string figurations in the middle lento portion. On a single hearing I could gather very little notion of its musical impact. However, it is evidently uncompromising in its demands upon the orchestra, for Mr. Ormandy indicated in a recent Christian Science Monitor interview that all twelve of as many performances announced soon after the work was completed in 1955 were cancelled because the conductors on seeing the score considered it unplayable. The score, nevertheless, did not appear to impose any undue hardship in the instant case and one could not have asked for a more secure, brilliantly articulated traversal.

Hindemith's "Symphony," which actually constitutes three orchestral excerpts taken almost bodily out of his opera "Mathis der Maler," has now become an established modern classic. It, too, is spare, long-lined and austere, but there is no longer any question of its musical impact. Its every note fits into a meticulously worked out structure; where in lesser hands there may emerge a rather dry mass of Hindemithian polytonality, in a master's custody one may perceive the astonishing depths of lyricism and pathos that lies beneath its neo-classical restraint. And it is this lyricism and pathos that Mr. Ormandy extracted in a reading that was notable for its controlled intensity.

The Brahms Symphony made up the concluding half of the concert. Whether it was the dark and sombre nature of all the music that preceded it, or the inherent gentleness, fluency and spaciousness of this "most genial of the four symphonies," as Philip Hale once called it, or the special refinement and eloquence brought forth on this particular occasion, I cannot say. But here was certainly one of the finest performances of this symphony that I can recall.

The concert, then, went a long way to explain to Bostonians why Mr. Ormandy's orchestra enjoys the preeminence that it does today. They undoubtedly said the same thing in Philadelphia after Mr. Munch's stint there. The latter returns to Boston this week to conduct a program consisting of Tchaikowsky's Serenade for Strings, the first performance of David Diamond's Symphony No. 6 and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Business Chiefs Rally at Luncheon to Aid Symphony

SPECIAL CONCERT FOLLOWS SPEAKERS

By FRED BRADY

Boston business leaders yesterday rallied to get into the black the Boston Symphony Orchestra—"this incomparable instrument of art"—not simply for its great music but because it is a cultural attraction for new business in Boston.

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce sponsored a noontime luncheon in Symphony Hall—it looked a little like opening night of Pops—and their chief men agreed with Ernest Henderson, Chamber president, when he said the famed orchestra is "an asset to the economy of this mature and historic city."

NEW YORK TRUSTEE

And a semi-outsider, C. D. Jackson, editorial vice-president of Time, Inc., who is a New Yorker, but also the only New York trustee of the orchestra, called it "this incomparable instrument" and said:

"I can look you in the eye and say without bias or fear—you have the greatest symphony orchestra in the world today. We're here today to keep it that way."

The orchestra's value as a draw for new business was strongly underlined by Thomas G. Dignan, president of the Boston Edison Company, who admitted he was delighted to be standing among the players, when he said:

"Only last week the owner of a mid-western plant, seeking an eastern location, was in touch with our Chamber of Commerce.

CULTURAL ADVANTAGES

"Among his reasons for considering Boston for his new location were the cultural advantages available here for his personnel.

"How confidently we were able to reassure this prospect in the fields of art, science, literature, education.

"How pridefully we were able to mention our Symphony without a peer in the nation and, for that matter, in the world."

The Chamber of Commerce called the meeting after a recent report from the trustees of the orchestra, headed by Henry B. Cabot, which showed that financial reserves had been wiped out and that the money problem had become "a peril."

The men who gathered to consider that problem yesterday were not merely concert-goers but substantial men of business who applauded when Dignan said:

"It is a Boston institution founded by a Boston businessman and nourished by succeeding generations of Bostonians.

ONE LIABILITY

"It has a wealth of assets, economic and otherwise. It has only one liability—the present inflation and concurrent budgetary problems.

"It is not my purpose to tell you why Boston business should support the Symphony. We know what needs to be done and we shall do our share, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a community asset.

"It belongs to all of us and it must be preserved for the present and for future generations."

Dignan noted that the present orchestra is "composed of musicians of great talent, led by a director of consummate skill."

Henderson also stressed the value of the orchestra to "the industrial resurgence of Boston now underway" and added the grim note that symphonies in 15 cities in the nation "may go on the rocks thin year."

NEW YORK EXAMPLE

Jackson told the Boston leaders of New York's current support from business for culture and estimated that it would contribute $5 million for the new Lincoln Center which, among other things, will give the Metropolitan Opera a new home.

"This, "Jackson said, "is not soft-headedness by business, but an appreciation of the value of culture to the climate of the community and the nation.

"In America today culture is no longer a sissy word."

"Of all the expressions of culture," Jackson added, "music is the most universal. Of all the present day expressions of musical culture, the Boston Symphony is the best."

Then the Boston Symphony proceeded to prove it. Dr. Charles Munch ducked away from the head table, changed into his rehearsal jacket, and conducted the second and third movements of the Caesar Frank D. Minor. It was a showpiece reading and the applause brought Dr. Munch back to signal the players to stand.

HALL REARRANGED

After the music the housemen at Symphony Hall worked fast to return the sloping floor sections and the chairs for an open rehearsal last night.

The 500 guests at the luncheon packed the MTA cars on the way back and one MTA driver asked what all that crowd was. One man told him it had been a Chamber of Commerce meeting to defray the deficit of the orchestra.

The MTA driver thought that over for a minute and then grinned: "Maybe they should bring Elvis Presley here to help them out."

INTERMISSION FOR SYMPHONY APPEAL—Members of the Boston Symphony rest while fund appeal is discussed by Thomas G. Dignan, president, Boston Edison Company. Dr. Charles Munch conducted a special luncheon concert of two movements of the Franck D Minor symphony.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 8 1957

Now It Can Be Aired
Why Symphony Musicians Toured In Red Planes

C. D. Jackson, vice president of Time, Inc., and a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday "broke" a well-kept story about the Boston Symphony's tour in Europe last Summer. Those in the orchestra party knew it, but the story could not be told then for obvious reasons.

In arranging concerts in Leningrad and Moscow, the Soviet government at nearly the last moment notified the orchestra that it could not provide airplanes for travel to and from the U.S.E.R., and that the orchestra would have to go by train. That would have meant disruption of the subsequent schedule.

So Jackson arranged with the U.S. Department of State and the U.S. Air Force for a U.S.A.F. airlift into and out of Soviet Russia. When apprised that the United States government was willing to do so, the Russians faced about and provided air transportation!—

CYRUS DURGIN.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

MAR 9 1957

Pops and Whipped Cream

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

IF YOU EVER want to have yourself photographed at your most flattering moment, let someone do a candid snap of you listening to the Boston Pops tour orchestra. The faces of the audience that jammed the Pittsfield High School auditorium to the last inch last night revealed an inner sense of completely blissful euphoria as Arthur Fiedler led the stage-filling orchestra in a program designed solely to please.

This was the third time a Fiedler had led a symphony orchestra in Pittsfield. The first time it was Max Fiedler (no relation), at the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Colonial Theater in 1911. The second was Arthur leading the National Youth Orchestra at the High School in 1939.

Last night it was Arthur again, the same King Arthur who always raises the roof at Tanglewood-on-Parade each summer at the head of the Boston Symphony Pops Orchestra.

* * *

LAST NIGHT was a night in which to throw away all inhibitions and just sit back and absorb the luscious and lively sounds and rhythms that came from the excellently drilled band. Each winter recently Mr. Fiedler has recruited an ensemble for a concentrated tour; this season 72 concerts were booked, and the performance here was the 66th of a trip covering 67 cities in 71 days.

The concert was the third of four in this season's local Community Concert Series.

We are not at all sure that medical men ever permit a person under their care to go overboard occasionally and forget about counting calories. This was such an evening, however, for any self-styled long-hair. The fare was all wonderful whipped cream and rich fluff, which we'll wager did no one, even the most conscientious and scholary, any harm.

* * *

TOMMY SAFFORD, onetime director of music at Williams College, claimed that anyone could pass for a music-lover who, at an orchestral concert, rested his chin on his hand and looked pained. No one appeared to suffer last night. Quite the contrary. We do not want to run afoul of our erudite and religious mentors but it was no time to become introspective either, and to ask whether our petitions would be granted or denied.

There was Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne," the Ravel "Bolera," a transporting potpourri from "My Fair Lady," a few shorter familiar pieces and the inevitable encores, ending with "The Stars and Stripes Forever" with the piccolo quartet standing first to a refrain and then the brass for the finale.

* * *

FIEDLER MAKES no fuss. He merely guides and his extremely competent players deliver to everyone's entire gratification.

Ruth Slenczynska, now established as a mature young [illegible] after an extremely [illegible] flash as a child prod[illegible] Saint-Saens second pia[illegible] to, in G minor, Opus 22 with zest and elan. It is a showy piece with little other appeal and was probably the most dated choice on the program but it served the radiant young soloist well.

The four encores were announced in the traditional manner, by holding aloft, instead of carrying cross-stage, the huge placards with the titles printed in large letters.

Record this evening as one of pure relaxation and genuine enjoyment.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 9 1957

Walter in Philharmonic Farewell

Give to mary-

Long Association Concluded With New York Orchestra

By Miles Kastendieck
New York

Making his farewell appearances as a regular guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Bruno Walter conducted a memorable fortnight of concerts, then summed up his association with the orchestra officially by donating his services for the first Pension Fund concert.

As expected, the programs included those symphonic masters he interprets so inimitably, Bruckner and Mahler. Choosing to play the Bruckner Ninth Symphony, he left an imprint on the performance that his audiences will always cherish. Never has the Ninth held more meaning or sounded more significant.

Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony received similar attention. Imparting to the participants the same warmth and understanding emanating from himself, he revealed a work much more meaningiul because of his insight. The big orchestra, the Westminster Choir, Maria Stader, and Maureen Forrester responded impressively. Miss Stader sang three Mahler songs earlier in the program, revealing a beautiful voice, much charm, and impressive artistry.

Beethoven Program

Since the Pension Fund Concert marked his retirement from the orchestra officially, David M. Keiser, president of the board, spoke of the gift of the first edition of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony (1826) as a token of the conductor's long association with the Philharmonic. Dame Myra Hess, soloist for the concert, made the actual presentation, noting that Mr. Walter was "perhaps the most dearly beloved of the musicians in the world today."

The program was all-Beethoven—"Coriolanus" Overture, the Fourth Piano Concerto, and the "Pastoral" Symphony. Dame Myra and Mr. Walter appeared especially attuned to the Concerto. With the Philharmonic playing beautifully, all the maturity and mellowness of these two great artists crystallized in an unforgettably poetic interpretation.

When Dimitri Mitropoulos returned to the Philharmonic, he brought with him several first performances of new works. Among them were Gail Kubik's Third Symphony, a work of distinctive craftsmanship and preoccupation with orchestration; and Robert Man's "Fantasy for Orchestra," keyed to orchestral sonorities in a kind of experimentalism common some 20 years ago. Both his piano soloists chose Beethoven for their concertos—Rudolf Serkin, the Fourth; Jean Casadesus, the Third. In fascinating contrast to the performance of the Fourth by Myra Hess and Bruno Walter some 48 hours earlier, Mr. Serkin and Mr. Mitropoulos, finding perfect rapport in a different concept of the music, gave a totally engrossing account of it.

Visiting Orchestras

Two visiting orchestras placed their mark on the music season—the Cleveland Orchestra, conducted by George Szell; and the Minneapolis Symphony, conducted by Antal Dorati. The Cleveland group has never played better. Through its superb performance, it qualified as the equal of any other orchestra in the country. The years of training under Mr. Szell have molded it into a wonderfully responsive organization for a musician like Mr. Szell. The Minneapolis group revealed excellent discipline and thorough musicianship.

Mr. Szell introduced Martinů's "The Frescoes of Piero Della Francesca," and the Polish violinist Henryk Szeryng to the New York audience. The Martinů is one of his most sensitive works. In his attempt to translate artistic inspiration into musical thought, he has been inspired. With his skilled craftmanship he has achieved a synthesis of beauty quite compelling. Mr. Szeryng gave an expressive, resilient performance of the Brahms' Violin Concerto. The high point of the concert, however, was Mr. Szell's exhilarating interpretation of Schumann's Second Symphony.

Menuhin Soloist

As a benefit for the American Hungarian Studies Foundation, the Minneapolis Symphony concert was devoted to Bartók. The program consisted of the Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin," the Violin Concerto, with Yehudi Menuhin as soloist; and the Concerto for Orchestra. Mr. Menuhin played with his customary skill and affinity for this work. Mr. Dorati and the orchestra excelled in the Concerto for Orchestra.

On their most recent visit to New York, Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra performed the Verdi Requiem. The impact of the performance was tremendous, thanks to the well-disciplined Rutgers University Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus, the orchestra itself, and the individual contributions of Leontyne Price, in particular, Nan Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi.

When Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony last visited Carnegie Hall, they gave the first New York performance of Leo Smit's First Symphony. It left an impression of freshness and of promise that spoke well for his melodic instinct and structural sense. The audience showed definite approval. Nicole Henriot played Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto with a style all her own, which had rhythmic excitement mixed with a bit too much brilliance.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (Morning)
Circ. D. 186,719
MAR 9 1957

Brilliant 18-year-old pianist Ann Schein, will be soloist at the Peabody Conservatory Concert at 4 P.M. Tuesday, March 19. The concert will be open to the public.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first local appearance in 24 years on March 21 at the Lyric, at 8.30 P.M.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
MAR 11 1957

Extra Dividend

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I am indebted to Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops Orchestra for an evening of delightful music and to the Community Concert Assn for making it possible.

Also I would be something less than grateful if I did not thank certain unknown ladies of the audience for entertainment not listed on the program.

There was the attractive lady sitting next to me who graciously accompanied most of the numbers in a mezzo-soprano which our friend Jay Rosenfeld might describe thus: "The texture and timbre of the voice left something to be desired, but the volume was full and resonant and well sustained throughout the evening."

Then there were the ladies sitting in the row back of me who gave forth with a full course in music appreciation during the concert. Until Friday night my technical knowledge of music was sketchy but after hearing their commentary (above the music) I feel competent to pass on the merits of anything from andante to allegro or from Saint-Saens to Sousa.

Of course, there is no guarantee that you will get these extras at all of the concerts. But even without them the series is always worthwhile, so I advise getting your ticket for 1957-1958 just as soon as you can.

DAVID N. KEENEY.

Pittsfield.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
MAR 10 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS FUND DRIVE

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 9—A drive for $250,000 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra began this week. Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said that the orchestra must rely on added gifts by subscribers who have not already contributed, from other interested individuals and from the local business community.

E. Morton Jennings, vice president of the First National Bank and a trustee of the orchestra, is in charge of business donations. Heading the committees for individual solicitation is Francis W. Hatch Jr. of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Cabot said he was convinced there was not yet a full realization in the community of the needs of the orchestra and the importance to the community of filling such needs.

Mr. Cabot said also there was still a tendency to believe that the orchestra was supported by a few private donations. This, however, is no longer the case, he said. He added that the orchestra's expenses were increasing.

The orchestra has started new activities as a means of acquainting prospective donors with its problem and aims. Included are a series of luncheons in Symphony Hall prior to Friday afternoon concerts for subscribers to that series and a round of coffee parties there after the Saturday night concerts.

202

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 9 1957

World Première of Diamond Symphony

Herald Tribune (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Republican
Circ. 340,462

MAR 10 1957

Diamond Symphony Debut

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will introduce two new works to us in its last New York visit of the season next week. David Diamond's Sixth Symphony is Charles Munch's novelty for Wednesday night, March 20, and Sir William Walton's "Johannesburg Festival" Overture will open the program for Friday night, March 22, in Brooklyn and the following afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The Wednesday program also includes Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major with the Bostonians' first clarinetist, Gino Cioffi, as soloist, and Cesar Franck's Symphony. On Friday and Saturday Walton's overture will be followed by his Viola Concerto, with Joseph De Pasquale as the soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

Mr. Diamond's symphony, completed in Florence three years ago, is dedicated to this orchestra and conductor, and was first played in Boston last Friday. The composer writes that it is perhaps the most dramatic of the symphonies he ha[illegible]

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 9 1957

Composer's Sixth Presented by Munch

By Harold Rogers

David Diamond's new Symphony No. 6 is disturbing, to say the least, but the truly disturbing factor lies not in what he has said, but in the tormented reasons (whatever they may be) that made him say it.

Judging solely by what was heard yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, one might justifiably say that Mr. Diamond is an angry man. This symphony is filled with railing bitterness. He compels his listeners to join him in a tortured search that leads only to despair.

We do not object to a composer who searches his soul and who gives humanity the toils and the triumphs of his journey. The great composers have all done this, and we are richer for the gift. But yesterday Mr. Diamond cried havoc—screaming it to the skies—and then ran from some seen or unseen terror with no place to hide.

A composer cannot expect his listeners to participate in an unsolved dilemma and to relish it. This work may be one of the most dissonant symphonies on record, but dissonance in itself is no longer a reason for rejecting a new work. Today the test is not how much or how little dissonance a man employs but what he uses dissonance to say. Honegger, for instance, has used dissonance while sounding the gamut of human woe or singing chorales of eternal truths. Mr. Diamond's use of dissonance seems to indicate a nightmare from which he has found no waking.

* * *

Perhaps one of the most disheartening things a composer can face is sporadic and cool applause after the world première of one of his efforts. This is what happened yesterday after Charles Munch guided the Boston Symphony through the three movements of Mr. Diamond's Sixth. But it is even more disheartening for the listener who has made a sincere effort to walk the second mile with the composer, and who, when the piece is over, is left still holding the load.

Dedicated to Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony, the Diamond work opens with something of a somnolent restlessness that is interrupted by explosions of brass and percussion. We soon find his orchestration "busy" and unrestrained, going at full tilt with all stops pulled. The style is basically expressionist; the mood is one of nervous harassment, tensing and relaxing in turns, but mostly holding to a fevered pitch.

* * *

The second movement opens with a quiet kind of inquietude that quickly turns into writhing introspection. Again the agitation builds until the movement ends on a weird and unresolved chord.

In the final section we are again plunged into rebellious fury. One may find Mr. Diamond's form abstruse on first hearing, but an intellectual comprehension of the form would do little to mitigate the message. The symphony broadens into a march-like rhythm that slows to a finale of mountainous hunks of sound.

Dr. Munch opened the concert with a vibrant reading of Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings, and the Boston strings sang a glowing song. He closed with César Franck's Symphony in D minor, whipping his players to a shining enthusiasm. These pieces served as cushions of compensation.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 19th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing the following program:
Serenade for Strings ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6 ..... David Diamond
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

By RUDOLPH ELIE

David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, in its first performance yesterday, brings up a problem, not in musical evaluation but in the deepest well of musical esthetics.

The evaluation of the symphony is relatively simple as it is easily one of the most disagreeable symphonies ever presented to the public. I find it difficult to say anything good about it at all, for there is not, in its entirety (and it is mercifully short as symphonies go), a single note to relieve the distressing sonud of the work. Its harmonic textures are aggressive to the point of inflicting pain, its melodic materials in the 12-tone style gone berserk are contrived and unpleasant, its forward motion erratic and clumsy.

As if this were not enough, it calls upon the percussion for effects that, combined with the shrill dissonances and instrumental registers pushed to their limit, leaves the listener numb at this personal revelation of torment within the artistic processes of the composer. Musically it is, in short, a cipher, but a cipher ringed with spikes.

Composer Unique

This, however, is neither here nor there. The essential question is this: to what extent may a composer enforce his will on 2500 captive auditors? The composer is unique in his possession of a captive audience. To be sure, there is nothing to prevent people from getting up and marching out, save embarrassment and propriety. The same auditor, however, confronting a painting that displeases him, can walk out. He is not forced to stand and gaze upon anything he doesn't like.

He can also hurl a book that annoys him into the fireplace, snap off television and radio and turn the page of a magazine displeying an offensive picture. The composer, however, has his victims in the palm of his hand. Does he, or does he not, have the responsibility of any civilized host? I think he does.

And I further think that the rejection of the audience by contemporary composers, who write for recognition among the other members of their union, is one of the fundamental reasons why audiences have so stubbornly rejected them. The collective sensitivity of an audience, fostered by the close physical proximity of one to another—and crowd emotions are notoriously infectious—is a remarkable phenomenon: you can bend and guide an audience perhaps, but you can't fool it.

It may be argued that a good many other works have been rejected on first hearing, later to be accepted. Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," to name but one. However, that work descended out of the blue, so to speak; there had been virtually no preparation for it whatever, and its shock is quite understandable today.

Happy to Eat

But 44 years have passed since then, and we have been 'prepared' for this sort of thing for decades. Indeed, the Boston Symphony has been bringing out difficult new works for years, some good, some bad, some that have emerged to take their place in the standard repertoire, some that had their little hour and then submerged among the countless thousands of contemporary scores, never to come up for air again. Such a work, I am fully confident, is David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. If I am wrong I shall be happy to eat crow while making a prominent place in a new edition of Slonimsky's "Thesaurus of Invective." Crow isn't so bad anyway, and Mr. Slonimsky's Dictionary is very entertaining.

It may be said the orchestra played the piece, which is something of a marvel (but no one in the world could have known whether it was playing right or not), and that Mr. Munch conducted it, which is indeed a marvel. Something told me he didn't have his heart in it, though, for it is the first time in years he's had his nose buried in the score from beginning to end. It may also be said the composer was in the audience, a fact the audience acknowledged without singular enthusiasm.

The concert began with a lovely performance of Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings' and ended with Franck's D minor Symphony, played just a year ago by Mr. Ansermet. Joseph De Pasquale is the viola soloist in the first Boston performance of Walton's Viola Concerto next week. Other works on the program are Walton's Johannesburg Festival Overture, and three Wagnerian excerpts.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAR 9 1957

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 9 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Diamond Sixth Has Premiere

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, music director, played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 18th program of the Friday-Saturday series. The program: Tchaikovsky, Serenade for Strings in C major, Op. 48; David Diamond, Symphony No. 6 (first performance); Franck, Symphony in D minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch has returned to the Boston Symphony after his pleasant conquest of Philadelphia as guest conductor of that city's fine orchestra week ago. The program which he brings this week offers beauty and comfort in the first and last of its three numbers, and a difficult new score in David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, which receives first performances anywhere.

The Diamond work is indeed difficult—both to play and to listen to. It is a big piece with a hard, rocky texture, full of counterpoint which results in fierce dissonance. It cannot be properly assayed upon short acquaintance, but there are two important aspects, not to its credit, which are quickly perceptible; while the Symphony has power, it does not get anywhere, and the orchestration is so heavy and thick that for pages on end it is virtually impossible to figure out what is going on.

I was reminded of that story about the late Henry F. B. Gilbert who told a friend one day that he had been revising one of his compositions, and that he had taken out "about a barrel of notes." Mr. Diamond, I think, could remove a good bushel from his Sixth Symphony in the interests of clarity. Moving contrapuntal voices lose all value when the scoring is so thick that their motion cannot be perceived.

Indeed, the Symphony as a whole suffers from lack of motion: there is turbulence, but not progress. This especially affects the fugue of the finale, which does not sound like a fugue. If a fugue is to sound like one, it must move, and [illegible] one does not. There is, for all the fury and harshness, something very sluggish about this score.

More than this I cannot venture to say until I have had another go at Mr. Diamond's music. Perhaps beneath the dissonance (which is by no means murderous though it is intense!) there is melodic invention. There may be, too, ingenious rhythmic detail. But as the score now stands the heavy scoring keeps out air and light. Mr. Diamond was present in the audience yesterday, and acknowledged the reception, which was courteous if not enthusiastic.

Wrapped in Glory

The Boston Symphony strings again wrapped themselves in glory with their performance of Tchaikovsky's ardent and still fresh Serenade. They produced a big, luscious resonance, rather more warm and juicy than Mr. Munch customarily asks them to muster.

But it was the Cesar Franck Symphony that got the full treat-

ONY ORCHESTR
th Has Premie
ment of a passionate, romanti
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Diamond Sixth Has Premiere
THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, music director, played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 18th program of the Friday-Saturday series. The program: Tchaikovsky, Serenade for Strings in C major, Op. 48; David Diamond, Symphony No. 6 (first performance); Franck, Symphony in D minor.
By CYRUS DURGIN
Charles Munch has returned to the Boston Symphony after his pleasant conquest of Philadelphia as guest conductor of that city's fine orchestra week ago. The program which he brings this week offers beauty and comfort in the first and last of its three numbers, and a difficult new score in David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, which receives first performances anywhere.
The Diamond work is indeed difficult—both to play and to listen to. It is a big piece with a hard, rocky texture, full of counterpoint which results in fierce dissonance. It cannot be properly assayed upon short acquaintance, but there are two important aspects, not to its credit, which are quickly perceptible; while the Symphony has power, it does not get anywhere, and the orchestration is so heavy and thick that for pages on end it is virtually impossible to figure out what is going on.
I was reminded of that story about the late Henry F. B. Gilbert who told a friend one day that he had been revising one of his compositions, and that he had taken out "about a barrel of notes." Mr. Diamond, I think, could remove a good bushel from his Sixth Symphony in the interests of clarity. Moving contrapuntal voices lose all value when the scoring is so thick that their motion cannot be perceived.
Indeed, the Symphony as a whole suffers from lack of motion: there is turbulence, but not progress. This especially affects the fugue of the finale, which does not sound like a fugue. If a fugue is to sound like one, it must move, and [illegible] one does not. There is, for all the fury and harshness, something very sluggish about this score.
More than this I cannot venture to say until I have had another go at Mr. Diamond's music. Perhaps beneath the dissonance (which is by no means murderous though it is intense!) there is melodic invention. There may be, too, ingenious rhythmic detail. But as the score now stands the heavy scoring keeps out air and light. Mr. Diamond was present in the audience yesterday, and acknowledged the reception, which was courteous if not enthusiastic.
Wrapped in Glory
The Boston Symphony strings again wrapped themselves in glory with their performance of Tchaikovsky's ardent and still fresh Serenade. They produced a big, luscious resonance, rather more warm and juicy than Mr. Munch customarily asks them to muster.
But it was the Cesar Franck Symphony that got the full treat-

202

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 9 1957

World Première of Diamon

Herald Tribune (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Republican
Circ. 340,462
MAR 10 1957

Diamond Symphony Debut

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will introduce two new works to us in its last New York visit of the season next week. David Diamond's Sixth Symphony is Charles Munch's novelty for Wednesday night, March 20, and Sir William Walton's "Johannesburg Festival" Overture will open the program for Friday night, March 22, in Brooklyn and the following afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The Wednesday program also includes Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major with the Bostonians' first clarinetist, Gino Cioffi, as soloist, and Cesar Franck's Symphony. On Friday and Saturday Walton's overture will be followed by his Viola Concerto, with Joseph De Pasquale as the soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

Mr. Diamond's symphony, completed in Florence three years ago, is dedicated to this orchestra and conductor, and was first played in Boston last Friday. The composer writes that it is perhaps the most di[illegible] of the symphonies he h[illegible]

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
MAR 9 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 18th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing the following program:
Serenade for Strings ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6..... David Diamond
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

By RUDOLPH ELIE

David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, in its first performance yesterday, brings up a problem, not in musical evaluation but in the deepest well of musical esthetics.

The evaluation of the symphony is relatively simple as it is easily one of the most disagreeable symphonies ever presented to the public. I find it difficult to say anything good about it at all, for there is not, in its entirety (and it is mercifully short as symphonies go), a single note to relieve the distressing sonud of the work. Its harmonic textures are aggressive to the point of inflicting pain, its melodic materials in the 12-tone style gone berserk are contrived and unpleasant, its forward motion erratic and clumsy.

As if this were not enough, it calls upon the percussion for effects that, combined with the shrill dissonances and instrumental registers pushed to their limit, leaves the listener numb at this personal revelation of torment within the artistic processes of the composer. Musically it is, in short, a cipher, but a cipher ringed with spikes.

Composer Unique

This, however, is neither here nor there. The essential question is this: to what extent may a composer enforce his will on 2500 captive auditors? The composer is unique in his possession of a captive audience. To be sure, there is nothing to prevent people from getting up and marching out, save embarrassment and propriety. The same auditor, however, confronting a painting that displeases him, can walk out; he is not forced to stand and gaze upon anything he doesn't like.

He can also hurl a book that annoys him into the fireplace, snap off television and radio and turn the page of a magazine displaying an offensive picture. The composer, however, has his victims in the palm of his hand. Does he, or does he not, have the responsibility of any civilized host? I think he does.

And I further think that the rejection of the audience by contemporary composers, who write for recognition among the other members of their union, is one of the fundamental reasons why audiences have so stubbornly rejected them. The collective sensitivity of an audience, fostered by the close physical proximity of one to another—and crowd emotions are notoriously infectious—is a remarkable phenomenon: you can bend and guide an audience perhaps, but you can't fool it.

It may be argued that a good many other works have been rejected on first hearing, later to be accepted. Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," to name but one. However, that work descended out of the blue, so to speak; there had been virtually no preparation for it whatever, and its shock is quite understandable today.

Happy to Eat

But 44 years have passed since then, and we have been 'prepared' for this sort of thing for decades. Indeed, the Boston Symphony has been bringing out difficult new works for years, some good, some bad, some that have emerged to take their place in the standard repertoire, some that had their little hour and then submerged among the countless thousands of contemporary scores, never to come up for air again. Such a work, I am fully confident, is David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. If I am wrong I shall be happy to eat crow while making a prominent place in a new edition of Slonimsky's "Thesaurus of Invective." Crow isn't so bad anyway, and Mr. Slonimsky's Dictionary is very entertaining.

It may be said the orchestra played the piece, which is something of a marvel (but no one in the world could have known whether it was playing right or not), and that Mr. Munch conducted it, which is indeed a marvel. Something told me he didn't have his heart in it, though, for it is the first time in years he's had his nose buried in the score from beginning to end. It may also be said the composer was in the audience, a fact the audience acknowledged without singular enthusiasm.

The concert began with a lovely performance of Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings' and ended with Franck's D minor Symphony, played just a year ago by Mr. Ar[illegible]net. Joseph De Pasquale is the viola soloist in the first Boston performance of Walton's Viola Concerto next week. Other works on the program are Walton's Johannesburg Festival Overture and three Wagnerian excerpts.

Composer's Sixth P

By Harold Rogers

David Diamond's new Symphony No. 6 is disturbing, to say the least, but the truly disturbing factor lies not in what he has said, but in the tormented reasons (whatever they may be) that made him say it.

Judging solely by what was heard yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, one might justifiably say that Mr. Diamond is an angry man. This symphony is filled with railing bitterness. He compels his listeners to join him in a tortured search that leads only to despair.

We do not object to a composer who searches his soul and who gives humanity the toils and the triumphs of his journey. The great composers have all done this, and we are richer for the gift. But yesterday Mr. Diamond cried havoc—screaming it to the skies—and then ran from some seen or unseen terror with no place to hide.

A composer cannot expect his listeners to participate in an unsolved dilemma and to relish it. This work may be one of the most dissonant symphonies on record, but dissonance in itself is no longer a reason for rejecting a new work. Today the test is not how much or how little dissonance a man employs but what he uses dissonance to say. Honegger, for instance, has used dissonance while sounding the gamut of human woe or singing chorales of eternal truths. Mr. Diamond's use of dissonance seems to indicate a nightmare from which he has found no waking.

* * *

Perhaps one of the most disheartening things a composer can face is sporadic and cool applause after the world première of one of his efforts. This is what happened yesterday after Charles Munch guided the Boston Symphony through the three movements of Mr. Diamond's Sixth. But it is even more disheartening for the listener who has made a sincere effort to walk the second mile with the composer, and who, when the piece [illegible] still holding the [illegible]

Dedicated to [illegible] the Boston Symp[illegible] mond work oper[illegible] thing of a somr[illegible] ness that is inte[illegible] plosions of brass [illegible] We soon find hi[illegible] "busy" and unre[illegible] at full tilt with a[illegible] The style is ba[illegible] sionist; the mood [illegible] vous harassmen[illegible] relaxing in turi[illegible] holding to a few [illegible]

The second m[illegible] with a quiet kin[illegible] that quickly turi[illegible] introspection. A[illegible] tion builds until [illegible] ends on a weird [illegible] chord.

In the final [illegible] again plunged [illegible] fury. One may [illegible] mond's form a[illegible] hearing, but [illegible] comprehension [illegible] would do little [illegible] message. The s[illegible] ens into a ma[illegible] that slows to a [illegible] tainous hunks o[illegible]

Dr. Munch o[illegible] cert with a vi[illegible] Tchaikovsky's [illegible]

Herald Tribune (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Republican
Circ. 340,462
MAR 10 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Diamond Sixth Has Premiere

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, music director, played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 18th program of the Friday-Saturday series. The program: Tchaikovsky, Serenade for Strings in C major, Op. 48; David Diamond, Symphony No. 6 (first performance); Franck, Symphony in D minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch has returned to the Boston Symphony after his pleasant conquest of Philadelphia as guest conductor of that city's fine orchestra week ago. The program which he brings this week offers beauty and comfort in the first and last of its three numbers, and a difficult new score in David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, which receives first performances anywhere.

The Diamond work is indeed difficult—both to play and to listen to. It is a big piece with a hard, rocky texture, full of counterpoint which results in fierce dissonance. It cannot be properly assayed upon short acquaintance, but there are two important aspects, not to its credit, which are quickly perceptible: while the Symphony has power, it does not get anywhere, and the orchestration is so heavy and thick that for pages on end it is virtually impossible to figure out what is going on.

I was reminded of that story about the late Henry F. B. Gilbert who told a friend one day that he had been revising one of his compositions, and that he had taken out "about a barrel of notes." Mr. Diamond, I think, could remove a good bushel from his Sixth Symphony in the interests of clarity. Moving contrapuntal voices lose all value when the scoring is so thick that their motion cannot be perceived. Indeed, the Symphony as a whole suffers from lack of motion: there is turbulence, but not progress. This especially affects the fugue of the finale, which does not sound like a fugue. If a fugue is to sound like one, it must move, and this one does not. There is, for all the fury and harshness, something very sluggish about this score.

More than this I cannot venture to say until I have had another go at Mr. Diamond's music. Perhaps beneath the dissonance (which is by no means murderous though it is intense!) there is melodic invention. There may be, too, ingenious rhythmic detail. But as the score now stands the heavy scoring keeps out air and light. Mr. Diamond was present in the audience yesterday, and acknowledged the reception, which was courteous if not enthusiastic.

Wrapped in Glory

The Boston Symphony strings again wrapped themselves in glory with their performance of Tchaikovsky's ardent and still fresh Serenade. They produced a big, luscious resonance, rather more warm and juicy than Mr. Munch customarily asks them to muster.

But it was the Cesar Franck Symphony that got the full treatment of a passionate, romantic interpretation. It seemed as if the conductor had restudied the score with the desire to make this decorous, chromatic Old Party a Young Thing, ardent and lovely. The somewhat faded colors were restored, the music took on a startling emotional voltage, and every sensuous element was emphasized. Mr. Munch brought up certain voices to contrast ravishingly with the leading melodies. The total result of all his efforts was practically a reincarnation. Surely Papa Franck's whiskers would have quivered with daring, uneasy delight could he have heard the performance!

Next week Joseph de Pasquale, first violist of the Orchestra, will be soloist in the first Boston symphony performance of the Viola Concerto by Sir William Walton. The program will include Walton's "Johannesburg Festival Overture" (new to the United States) and three Wagner excerpts, the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," the "Magic Fire Music" from "Die Walkuere" and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Gotterdaemmerung."

ere's No Sub for a Good
CADILLAC-OLDS
DLLAR WISE—PERFORMANCE WISE
CADILLAC-OLDS
IT were necessary to designate the two motor cars that stand supreme among all others, Cadillac and Olds would be the almost unanimous choice of motorists everywhere. Here is an unusual opportunity to own one at a substantial saving.
STRIVE NOT TO BE IDERSOLD OR OVER-ALLOWED
Stevens of Fullerton
54 OLDSMOBILE "88" 4-Dr. Sed. $1495
55 OLDSMOBILE 88 4-Dr. Sed. $1895
56 OLDSMOBILE Super 88 Holiday Sed. $2895
56 OLDSMOBILE "98" Holiday Cpe. $2995
53 CADILLAC "62" 4-Dr. Sed. $1795
52 CADILLAC 62 4-Dr. Sed. $1395
ETTER THAN BANK TERMS
Olds. "98" 4-Dr. Sed. $1195
Olds. "98" Holiday Cpe. 1395
Olds. "98" Hol. Coupe 2298
Olds. "98" Hol. Sedan 3295
Olds. Starfire Conv. Cpe. 3295
Buick Rd. 4-D., Air Con. 1395
Buick Spec. 2-Dr. Sed. 1795
Buick Sup. Riviera Cpe. 1895
'55 DES
'52 BUIC
'53 BUIC
'54 BUIC
'55 BUIC
'52 CADI
'54 CADI
'55 CADI
'56 CADI
'56 Cad. "62" 4-Dr. Sed. $4295
'56 Cad. Coupe DeVille 4895
'48 Chrysl
'53 Chrysl
'54 Chrys.
'55 Hudson
'55 Chevro

MARCH 30, 1957

MUSICAL EVENTS

Verdict on Tradition

By DAVID DIAMOND's Symphony No. 6, which had its New York première in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening of last week by the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, is, I think, the worst composition of its type and composer of any pretensions to have been heard here since the Philharmonic performed Carlos Chávez' Third, a year ago, and I can only attribute the flutter of polite and tepid clapping that greeted it to the part of an audience that has ceased to make the effort required to distinguish good music from bad. My understanding of the work is not that of any jolting departures from conventionality on Mr. Diamond's part, but that the symphony contains no trace whatever of technical originality. On the contrary, it is an academic composition in the truest sense of the word. Such technical formulas as it exhibits were invented and exhausted by the late Arnold Schoenberg nearly fifty years ago, and, as far as I am aware, have never contributed much to the progress of musical composition. My objection is simply that the musical language, if it can be called a language, employed by Mr. Diamond in this symphony, as in others, is even weaker than that of most of his formalist contemporaries in those elements of suspense and catharsis that are necessary to the expression of musical meaning—that, in fact, the only skill the work exhibits is a consistent ability to prevent a hundred orchestra players from saying anything musically intelligible.

If I seem a bit intemperate in these remarks, it is not because I consider the perpetration of some twenty minutes of vapid and boring sounds to be, in itself, a crime. The issue, I feel, is larger than that. Mr. Diamond's style of composition has been a more or less fashionable one for a generation. It is a style that is apparently looked on with favor by the small but powerful group of composer-politicians who nowadays are apt to control the awarding of fellowships, prizes, and publishing contracts. It is also, I am afraid, a style that is rapidly reducing the art of symphonic composition to the status of an unimportant and irresponsible little private hobby, about as significant to the music-loving public as knitting or playing marbles. The sinister trouble with the style is not that it wastes the time of composers, performers and audiences but that the weight of current prestige and the mass of artistic deadwood it gives rise to are likely to stifle such shoots of living music by younger and better composers as are at present struggling for survival.

The composing of symphonic music is, to my mind, a very serious business, related to a glorious tradition to which many great masters of the past have contributed. Some of the greatest of these have changed and extended the tradition, but such alterations have invariably been made with reference to the established norms of musical communication that it embodies, and have been significant and interesting precisely because they were departures from the expected and universally understood path. It is notable, but scarcely surprising, that virtually all the symphonies by recent composers that have gained any permanent hold on musical audiences—works by such figures as Shostakovich, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams, and Paul Creston, and that single outstanding composition by Roy Harris, the Third Symphony—have been firmly rooted in this tradition, and have conveyed some degree of meaning for the sole reason that they were related to it. I can only conclude that Mr. Diamond either is ignorant of the tradition or is perversely and fashionably bent on writing as if it didn't exist. In any case, his Sixth Symphony is, in my opinion, not only not a symphony; it is not, even by the most generous definition, music.

A COUPLE of other performances I listened to last week were, I fear, only a little less dreary. Mr. Munch followed the Diamond symphony with Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A Major (K. 622), in which the Boston Symphony's first clarinettist, Gino Cioffi, undertook the solo part. Mr. Cioffi, who is doubtless a first-class craftsman at his desk in the orchestra, did not show himself to be any great shaker and virtuoso. His performance was fluent enough but rather wooden where subtleties of phrasing were concerned, and the playing of the orchestra seemed to lack its customary elegance and sheen. . . . And on Monday evening, at Town Hall,

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
MAR 14 1957

Munch Conducts Diamond Symphony

By ALLAN SLY

The 18th BSO program was noteworthy for the return of Mr. Munch and for the new David Diamond symphony (his 6th). Since the critical fraternity got first whack at this Friday, this listener was prepared for the worst on Saturday. To be sure it has its harmonic asperities and its explosive dynamics, but some of us are not easily scared by the former and frankly I found the latter intriguing. Rarely are percussive sounds so thoroughly integrated in the tonal texture. The disjointed phraseology was certainly a bit bewildering, but one soon abandoned hope of strait-laced or predictable music and settled down with one's personal equation to see where it led. Either I lack the emotional clue to Mr. Diamond's present form of musical speech or else it is not the violently expressionistic outburst we have been told. I rather think his act of composing is one of cool detachment and that the peculiarities of his musical style grow naturally from his long-sustained and ingenious, craftsmanlike approach. If this is so, he must not be surprised if his auditors are not quite carried away. We are not accustomed to fifteen minutes of jerks, blitzes and razzle-dazzles and when finally the fugue arrives, we lack customary contemplative calm in which to trace its course. Besides, such angular writing hardly suggests the achievement of take-off, let alone flight (which some of us still expect from a work called fugue).

With these reservations, which the audience, to judge by its limited response, may have shared, I found the work well worth listening to even on a first hearing. The BSO has launched four of Mr. Diamond's six symphonies and so, in a sense, has committed us to the furtherance of his output and its promulgation. The BSO seemed to be giving us a crystal-clear account of what he had to say and perhaps next time we can trace it more confidently.

I still marvel at Mr. Munch's mastery of these new scores, some of which must be far removed from what he himself would have chosen to write, to put it mildly.

In the Tchaikovsky Serenade for Strings (which opened the program) we had an utterly delicious reminder of former times (the BSO had not played it at a Saturday night concert since 1918). It might have suggested the Pops, had it not been so elegant, so subtle, so discreet. And finally, after the Diamond and "time-out," the Franck Symphony. Here Mr. Munch characteristically improvised some elated perorations, held the subdued portions in tight rein, closed up the disjunct "stop-changing" hiatuses and generally upgraded the work stylistically. Organist Franck would have been interested by the four-foot trumpet detail (Mr. Voisin figuratively went upstairs). Since many of today's concertgoers cut their wisdom teeth on this work back in the '30's, one hates to be disloyal to it but many of us would willingly let it rest a while.

Next week's program brings us for the first time Walton's magnificent viola concerto with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist, the same composer's new Johannesburg Festival Overture and some Wagner excerpts.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
MAR 14 1957

Bushnell Music Lovers Will Hear Diamond

To the Editor of The Courant:

Five times in recent years the music lovers of Boston have had the opportunity to hear the work of one of the most stimulating and interesting of our contemporary American composers, David Diamond.

So far as I know, Hartford has never heard any work by this gifted man. (Mr. Mortensen, correct me if I am wrong in this.) Now at last I see that the Bushnell is giving us a chance to hear a Diamond score. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Diamond's Sixth Symphony, along with classical Mozart and Cesar Franck works in its annual concert here on March 19.

This is welcome news indeed. The Sixth is a new work, and I have not heard it, but if it is as challenging as some of his earlier symphonies, and his "Timon of Athens," the Hartford audience is in for a memorable experience. I particularly commend Diamond's work to the open-minded music-lover who is willing to give sound new music a chance to assert its influence.

It is not generally known, by the way, that it was Diamond who composed the incidental music to the Tennessee Williams play, "The Rose Tattoo."

Murray H. Cohen

Hartford

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
MAR 12 1957

De Pasquale Symphony Soloist

Joseph de Pasquale, first violist, will solo at the nineteenth pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Charles Munch will present de Pasquale in the viola concerto of Sir William Walton. Although it is to be performed for the first time at these concerts, the work was composed in the years 1928 and 1929. Joseph de Pasquale was born in Philadelphia and graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute. During the war he played in the Orchestra of the Marine Corps. He will perform the concerto on a rare Gasparo da Salo viola which is 400 years old.

The second half of the program will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhäuser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Die Gotterdammerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 13 1957

Pasquale at Symphony

Joseph de Pasquale, first violinist of the Boston Symphony, will be the soloist in Sir William Walton's Viola Concerto at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Although this concerto will be performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony, it was composed in 1928-29 and received its première at the Promenade Concerts in London in October, 1929, with Paul Hindemith as soloist and Sir Henry Wood as conductor.

Charles Munch will open with the American première of Walton's "Johannesburg Festival" Overture. The second half of the program will be devoted to Wagner—the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaüser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Götterdämmerung," and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walküre."

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 6 1957

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Rough Diamond, Solti,

DAVID DIAMOND has written enough worthwhile music to make the first performance of his Sixth Symphony by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch in Carnegie Hall a matter for anticipation. It was also an occasion for rumination, if not the kind the composer might have intended. The subject was: Which Diamond are we to believe—the insistent, overbearing composer of the two fast movements, or the appealing, even reflective one of the adagio?

There is no need to say that the two attitudes cannot co-exist, assuming that the creator has conveyed, at some point, an emotional synthesis. That, to me, was the absent element. It would be too much, perhaps, to characterize the slow movement as soft-hearted but hard-headed, the fast ones vice versa. But there is little doubt that Diamond is more choosy of material when introspective than agitated, that the reflection accumulates in interest whereas the animation wears itself (and the audience-attention) out with needless resort to such noisemakers as percussion, slapstick, the piano-as-xylophone, etc.

MARCH 30, 1957

MUSICAL EVENTS

[illegible] New York première in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening of last week by the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, is, I think, the worst composition of its type [illegible] composer of any pretensions to have [illegible]ard here since the Philharmonic performed Carlos Chávez' Third, [illegible] a year ago. [illegible] the flutter of polite and tepid hand-clapping that greeted it to the apathy of an audience that has ceased to make the effort required to distinguish good music from bad. My unfavorable impression of the work is not the result of any jolting departures from conventionality on Mr. Diamond's part, for the symphony contains no trace whatever of technical originality. On the contrary, it is [illegible]ademic composition in the truest sense of the word. Such technical formulas as it exhibits were invented and exhausted by the late Arnold Schoenberg nearly fifty years ago, and, as far as I am aware, have never contributed much to the progress of musical composition. My objection is simply that the musical language, if it can be called a language, employed by Mr. Diamond in this symphony, as in others, is even weaker than that of most of his formalist contemporaries in those elements of suspense and catharsis that are necessary to the expression of musical meaning—that, in fact, the only skill the work exhibits is a consistent ability to prevent a hundred orchestra players from saying anything musically intelligible.

If I seem a bit intemperate in these remarks, it is not because I consider the perpetration of some twenty minutes of vapid and boring sounds to be, in itself, a crime. The issue, I feel, is larger than that. Mr. Diamond's style of composition has been a more or less fashionable one for a generation. It is a style that is apparently looked on [illegible] favor by the small but powerful group of composer-politicians who n[illegible]ys are apt to control the awarding of fellowships, prizes and publishing contracts. It is also, I am afraid, a style that is rapidly reducing the art of symphonic composition to the status of an unimportant and irresponsible little private hobby, about as significant to the music-loving public as knitting or playing marbles. The trouble with the style is not that it wastes the time of composers, performers and audiences but that the [illegible] current prestige and the [illegible] deadwood it gives rise to are likely to stifle such shoots of living [illegible] by younger and better [illegible] at present struggling for survival.

The composing of symphonic music is, to my mind, a very serious business, related to a glorious [illegible]tion to which many great mas[illegible] the past have contributed. [illegible] the greatest of these h[illegible]d extended the tradition, but such [illegible]erations have invariably been made with reference to the established norms of musical communication that it embodies, and have been significant and interesting precisely because they were departures from the expected and universally understood path. It is notable, but scarcely surprising, that virtually all the symphonies by recent composers that have gained any permanent hold on musical audiences—works by such figures as Shostakovich, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams, and Paul Creston, and that single outstanding composition by Roy Harris, the Third Symphony—have been firmly rooted in this tradition, and have conveyed some degree of meaning for the sole reason that they were related to it. I can only conclude that Mr. Diamond either is ignorant of the tradition or is perversely and fashionably bent on writing as if it didn't exist. In any case, his Sixth Symphony is, in my opinion, not only not a symphony; it is not, even by the most generous definition, music.

A COUPLE of other performances I listened to last week were, I fear, only a little less dreary. Mr. Munch followed the Diamond symphony with Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A Major (K. 622) [illegible] which the Boston Symphony's [illegible] clarinettist, Gino Cioffi, undertook the solo part. Mr. [illegible], who is doubtless a first-class craftsman at his desk in the orchestra, did not show himself to be any great shaker [illegible] virtuoso. His performance [illegible]ent enough but rather wooden where subtleties of phrasing were concerned, and the playing of the orchestra seemed to lack its customary elegance and sheen. . . . And on Monday evening, at Town Hall, [illegible]

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

MAR 12 1957

De Pasquale Symphony Soloist

Joseph de Pasquale, first violist, will solo at the nineteenth pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Charles Munch will present de Pasquale in the viola concerto of Sir William Walton. Although it is to be performed for the first time at these concerts, the work was composed in the years 1928 and 1929. Joseph de Pasquale was born in Philadelphia and graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute. During the war he served in the Orchestra of the Marine Corps. He will perform the concerto on a rare Gasparo da Salo viola which is 400 years old.

The second half of the program will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhäuser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Die Gotterdammerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure."

Herald Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

MAR 14 1957

Munch Conducts Diamond Symphony

By ALLAN SLY

The 18th BSO program was noteworthy for the return of Mr. Munch and for the new David Diamond symphony (his 6th). Since the critical fraternity got first whack at this Friday, this listener was prepared for the worst on Saturday. To be sure it has its harmonic asperities and its explosive dynamics, but some of us are not easily scared by the former and frankly I found the latter intriguing.

Rarely are percussive sounds so thoroughly integrated in the tonal texture. The disjointed phraseology was certainly a bit bewildering, but one soon abandoned hope of strait-laced or predictable music and settled down with one's personal equation to see where it led. Either I lack the emotional clue to Mr. Diamond's present form of musical speech or else it is not the violently expressionistic outburst we have been told. I rather think his act of composing is one of cool detachment and that the peculiarities of his musical style grow naturally from his long-sustained and ingenious, craftsmanlike approach. If this is so, he must not be surprised if his auditors are not quite carried away. We are not accustomed to fifteen minutes of jerks, blitzes and razzle-dazzles and when finally the fugue arrives we lack customary contemplative calm in which to trace its course. Besides, such angular writing hardly suggests the achievement of take-off, let alone flight (which some of us still expect from a work called fugue).

With these reservations, which the audience, to judge by its limited response, may have shared, I found the work well worth listening to even on a first hearing. The BSO has launched four of Mr. Diamond's six symphonies and so, in a sense, has committed us to the furtherance of his output and its promulgation. The BSO seemed to be giving us a crystal-clear account of what he had to say and perhaps next time we can trace it more confidently.

I still marvel at Mr. Munch's mastery of these new scores, some of which must be far removed from what he himself would have chosen to write, to put it mildly.

In the Tchaikovsky Serenade for Strings (which opened the program) we had an utterly delicious reminder of former times (the BSO had not played it at a Saturday night concert since 1918). It might have suggested the Pops, had it not been so elegant, so subtle, so discreet. And finally, after the Diamond and "time out," the Franck Symphony. Here Mr. Munch characteristically improvised some elated peroration, held the subdued portions in tight rein, closed up the disjunct "stop-changing" hiatuses and generally upgraded the work stylistically. Organist Franck would have been interested by the four-foot trumpet detail (Mr. Voisin figuratively went upstairs). Since many of today's concertgoers cut their wisdom teeth on this work back in the '30's, one hates to be disloyal to it, but many of us would willingly let it rest a while.

Next week's program brings us for the first time Walton's magnificent viola concerto with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist, the same composer's new Johannesburg Festival Overture and some Wagner excerpts.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

MAR 14 1957

Bushnell Music Lovers Will Hear Diamond

To the Editor of The Courant:

Five times in recent years the music lovers of Boston have had the opportunity to hear the work of one of the most stimulating and interesting of our contemporary American composers, David Diamond.

So far as I know, Hartford has never heard any work by this gifted man. (Mr. Mortensen, correct me if I am wrong in this.) Now at last I see that the Bushnell is giving us a chance to hear a Diamond score. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Diamond's Sixth Symphony, along with classical Mozart and Cesar Franck works in its annual concert here on March 19.

This is welcome news indeed. The Sixth is a new work, and I have not heard it, but if it is as challenging as some of his earlier symphonies and his "Timon of Athens," the Hartford audience is in for a memorable experience. I particularly commend Diamond's music to the open-minded music-lover who is willing to give sound new music a chance to assert its influence.

It is not generally known, by the way, that it was Diamond who composed the incidental music to the Tennessee Williams play, "The Rose Tattoo."

Murray H. Cohen
Hartford

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 13 1957

Pasquale at Symphony

Joseph de Pasquale, first violinist of the Boston Symphony, will be the soloist in Sir William Walton's Viola Concerto at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Although this concerto will be performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony, it was composed in 1928-29 and received its premiere at the Promenade Concerts in London in October, 1929, with Paul Hindemith as soloist and Sir Henry Wood as conductor.

Charles Munch will open the Annual premiere of Walton's "Johannesburg Festival" overture. The second half of the program will be devoted to Wagner—the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhäuser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Gotterdämmerung," and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walküre."

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 6 1957

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Rough Diamond, Solti

DAVID DIAMOND has written enough worthwhile music to make the first performance of his Sixth Symphony by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch in Carnegie Hall a matter for anticipation. It was also an occasion for examination, if not the kind the composer might have intended. The subject was: Which Diamond are we to believe—the insistent, overbearing composer of the two fast movements, or the appealing, even reflective one of the adagio?

Perhaps it is too much to say that the two attitudes cannot coexist, assuming that the composer has conveyed, at some point, an emotional synthesis. That, to me, was the absent element. It would be too much, perhaps, to characterize the slow movement as soft-hearted but hard-headed, the fast ones vice versa. But there is little doubt that Diamond is more choosy of material when introspective than agitated, that the reflection accumulates in interest whereas the sensation wears itself (and the audience-attention) out with needless resort to such noisemakers as percussion, slapstick, the piano-as-xylophone, etc.

224

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAR 14 1957

Mr. Higginson And His Orchestra . . .

76 Years of Symphony Concerts

In this land where fine music comes to us from superb orchestras in our principal cities (not to speak of mechanical sources), the Boston Symphony Orchestra is happily companioned. It has not always been so. The time was when this Orchestra had the good fortune to be the first to make known in Boston and on tour the great symphonies in the superlative performances which their beauties exact.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came into existence through the enterprise of a young Bostonian, Henry L. Higginson, who was destined to be a banker, but whose first and last love was music. While he was studying music in Vienna in 1860 he realized what a symphony orchestra could be—and had never been in his own country. In 1881 he was able to fulfill his dream; to establish in Boston a permanent orchestra which would devote its sole energies towards eventual ideal performances of Mozart or Schubert or Beethoven.

The beginnings were necessarily modest. Mr. Higginson engaged the best musicians he could find in Europe and a young conductor of undoubted talent, Georg Henchel, to lead them. Boston, which had been more literary than musical, responded to this project for symphonic growth, and Wilhelm Gericke, whom he brought from Vienna in 1884, was well supported as he applied his skill to the painstaking task of perfecting the ensemble. Mr. Higginson was the kind of backer who imposed no restriction and asked only a zeal like his own. After a year Mr. Gericke was ready to submit his achievement in clarity and tonal balance to New York, which he did to the astonishment of that city.

The first conductor was a pioneer; the second, a polisher the third, in his way, a firebrand. Arthur Nikisch who came at the age of 34 was destined to raise the whole art of conducting to new heights. Emil Paur followed him, and in 1898 Gericke returned to continue his task of refinement. In 1900, the Orchestra moved into its own auditorium, the newly built Symphony Hall.

Now the moment had come to secure a conductor who could make his Orchestra as illustrious as the finest in the new or old world. Mr. Higginson found that conductor in Karl Muck — a thoroughly schooled and brilliantly accomplished musician's, a broadly cultured artist, quick and sensitive. Dr. Muck remained conductor until 1918 (with an interim in the seasons 1908 to 1912 when Max Fiedler took his place). When he was compelled to leave because of the war, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his elegant hand had become to stand for musical perfection the world over.

At this point Mr. Higginson retired and left the Orchestra as a public charge incorporated under a board of trustees. Henri Rabaud came from Paris to conduct for a season and was succeeded in 1919 by his confrere, Pierre Monteux. Mr. Monteux, a patient and tireless builder, gave the symphony concerts life in a new direction by greatly widening the range of the programs.

After five years Serge Koussevitzky, the Russian leader then cutting a brilliant figure in Western Europe, became conductor. His achievement through a quarter of a century in which his name and that of his orchestra became inseparably associated with the utmost expressive beauty in symphonic performance is a matter of history too recent and too vividly remembered to need retelling.

Charles Munch

It was in 1949 that Charles Munch became the Orchestra's conductor. He had come to this Orchestra in the prime of his life with an illustrious career in Europe behind him. Born in Strasbourgh in 1891 of a French mother and an Alsatian father, Mr. Munch grew up in a family of distinguished musicians and in an atmosphere of rich musical tradition. In Paris he conducted the Paris Symphony, the Lamoureux and Straram Orchestras, was the regular conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra and founded the Paris Philharmonic. He toured America in 1948 at the head of the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise.

Continued on Page Ten

Mr. Higginson

Continued from Page One

When he took his place at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was evident in the first week, and has been increasingly confirmed, that Mr. Munch, a man of unassuming aspect, is a leader of instant command. The complete response of the Orchestra was at once apparent. The audiences in the Orchestra's own city and in those in which it plays have risen with unmistakable enthusiasm to performances of engrossing beauty from a musician of deep penetration. In the words of a critic: "The famed Boston Symphony concerts are plainly entering upon a new golden age."

The triumphant European tour of the Boston Symphony during the summer of 1956 served as a brilliant beginning for this new golden age. The orchestra played concerts in 19 cities in 13 European countries, including Russia.

At the first concert in Leningrad, in a perfectly beautiful old Czarist concert hall seating about 1350 people, there was an audience of 2800 or 2900. The Symphony came in — everybody was there — Dr. Munch entered, signalled the orchestra, and the entire orchestra rose and played the Russian national anthem. The audience was greatly surprised, not being accustomed to such a thing, and didn't really know what was going on. When the orchestra was through, around the hall there was sporadic clapping here and there. Dr. Munch turned around to the audience, held up his baton and said: "Ssh." He pointed to the snare drummer who began a long slow roll, and YOUR Boston Symphony Orchestra crashed into "The Star Spangled Banner."

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

MAR 10 1957

Boston Symphony Orchestra Begins Drive for Needed Funds

Boston Symphony Launches Drive for Funds—$250,000

The Boston Symphony opened a drive for funds this week under the leadership of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees. To meet the goal—$250,000—the Orchestra must rely upon added gifts from subscribers to the concerts who have not already contributed, from other interested individuals, and from the business community of Boston.

To aid the Orchestra in raising the required amount, committees have been formed. In charge of business donations is E. Morton Jennings, Vice President of the First National Bank, and Trustee of the Orchestra. Heading the committees for individual solicitation is Francis W. Hatch Jr., of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company. Mr. Hatch has arranged a committee to cover each of the Orchestra's series of concerts—for Friday, Neil R. Ayer; for Saturday, Alan A. Smith and Daniel Weisberg, co-chairmen; for Tuesday, Herbert Pratt and John L. Thorndike, co-chairmen; and for Sunday, Peter D. Shultz.

In speaking of the Orchestra's need for added funds, Mr. Cabot stated that he is convinced that there is not yet a full realization in the community of the needs of the orchestra and the importance to the community of filling such needs. There is still a tendency to believe, says Mr. Cabot, that the orchestra is supported by a few private donations. This, however, is no longer the case, and indeed has not been so since the death of Col Higginson, who founded the orchestra and supported it almost single-handed, and of Ernest Dane who succeeded him in similar support.

The increase in income to the orchestra from ticket sales and recording royalties has been large since those early days, but the increase in expenses to the orchestra has been still larger. In order to meet these expenses and the necessary salaries to the players who make up one of the greatest orchestras in the world, more money is needed.

The orchestra is starting a number of new activities not previously tried as a means of acquainting prospective donors with the problems and aims of the orchestra.

At the luncheon given by the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce for its members last Thursday in salute to the Boston Symphony and officially opening its drive, Thomas G. Dignan, president of the Boston Edison Company, spoke on the orchestra as an asset to the business community of Boston, and C. D. Jackson, editorial vice president of Time, Inc., on the importance of a symphony orchestra to a metropolitan area. The orchestra, under its music director, Charles Munch, performed a portion of the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck for the luncheon guests.

A series of informal Dutch Treat luncheons, held in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall just prior to the Friday afternoon concerts, has already begun for subscribers to that series. Guests at the luncheons have been introduced to a number of orchestra members who have spoken on their special interests, as well as hearing talks by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, George E. Judd, the former manager, and Henry B. Cabot.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 12 1957

New England Comment

Reader Urges Uncut Mozart

To The Christian Science Monitor:

Everyone in Boston takes pride in the musical excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a mere 21-year resident, I share this feeling. Thus it was a considerable disappointment in a concert Feb. 16 to hear Mr. Munch make substantial cuts in the Mozart Clarinet Concerto.

During the 19th Century the idea flourished that a virtuoso conductor knew better than the composer which notes should be played. In 1957 we have better standards of fidelity: It is a little old-fashioned to make cuts in a concerto. Where there is some doubt as to the composer's intentions, editorial changes may be appropriate. In the case of the Mozart Clarinet Concerto, however, we know exactly what Mozart wrote. Do we want to hear all of Mozart, or only the parts Mr. Munch selects?

The main cuts were made in the orchestral sections at the beginning and end of the first movement. Two significant ideas were entirely lost, and a third theme, cut at the beginning, appeared suddenly as a brand-new idea in the middle of the movement, never to be heard again. The sabotage of Mozart's design was extensive.

The motivation for such cuts is obscure. The musical losses are evident. What were the gains? Certainly no one could wish our orchestra to lag behind in standards of accuracy. Let us hope that Mozart did not hear this performance and that such destructive expurgation will not be repeated.

Jan LaRue
Chairman, Music Department
Wellesley College

towns of the United States. They all had people living in them, people who no doubt read newspapers, eat candy bars, popcorn, and peanuts, drink water from paper cups, sip pop through straws, and occasionally chew gum—but not until I came back to Boston did I find spread over the city streets the evidence of all these activities.

This proud city of culture may fast be gaining a reputation as the "litter" rather than the literary center of the United States.

There are trash containers on frequent corners, inviting people to put their waste paper in them rather than on the sidewalk or in the gutter. But few Bostonians heed the invitation.

Some do, of course. Some like to live in clean and orderly homes and know that it takes a little cooperation to keep them so. These citizens likewise yearn for a clean, orderly city and give their share of cooperation to keep it so.

How about a campaign to awaken Bostonians to the fact that the city they live in is their city, one to be proud of, and to keep clean and decent and orderly—one to care about?

It is care-less-ness which makes litter that costs every taxpayer money because somebody, sometime has to sweep it up.

Maybe if Massachusetts had a levy against litter, a sales tax wouldn't be necessary.

Adding to the clean-up squad isn't the answer. It's the pick-up-after-yourself practice that needs cultivating to keep the city clean.

Just One Citizen

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAR 14 1957

Symphony Seeks Financial Aid

Symphony Hall, located on Huntington and Massachusetts Avenue, is the headquarters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, world famous for its music and for its organization. Here the Symphony as well as the Boston Pops orchestra and many other musical aggregations perform in a long and colorful season.

LAUNCHES DRIVE FOR $250,000 IN FUNDS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra — "the greatest symphony orchestra in the world today" — needs money. A drive for $250,000 in needed funds opened this week under the leadership of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees. This $250,000 is the amount of money needed for the symphony to continue the present quality and scope of its concert program.

At a luncheon given by the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce for its members last Thursday in salute to the Boston Symphony and officially opening its drive, Thomas G. Dignan, president of the Boston Edison Company, spoke on the orchestra as an asset to the business community of Boston.

In addressing the group, Mr. Dignan pointed out the assets of the orchestra to Boston and what it has contributed since its inception. He said, "It has given to Boston the best in symphonic music. It has become a world-renowned Boston asset. It has become Boston's ambassador of good will in foreign lands. It speaks a universal language to the rich, the poor, to business, to science, to the artist and the artisan. It is a Boston institution founded by a Boston businessman and nourished by succeeding generations of Bostonians."

He further noted that the Boston Symphony "has a wealth of assets, economic and otherwise. It has only one liability—the present inflation and concurrent budgetary problems." He added that Boston businessmen "know what needs to be done and we shall do our share, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a community asset. It belongs to all of us and it must be preserved for the present and for future generations."

In speaking of the orchestra's need for added funds, Mr. Cabot pointed out that he is convinced that there is not yet a full realization in the community of the needs of the orchestra and the importance to the community of filling such needs. There is still a tendency to believe, Mr. Cabot said, that the orchestra is supported by a few private donations. This is no longer the case, however, and has not been so since the death of Col. Henry L. Higginson, who in 1881 founded the orchestra and supported it almost single-handed, and of Ernest Dane who succeeded him in similar support. The increase in income to the orchestra from ticket sales and recording royalties has been large since those early days, but the increase in expenses to the orchestra has been still larger. In order to meet these expenses and the necessary salaries to the players who make up the orchestra, more money is needed.

Continued on Page Four

Symphony Seeks Funds

Continued from Page One

The earnings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are high, higher in fact, than any other, at 86 per cent of expenses, while earnings in this field are usually nearer to 40 or 50 per cent of expenses.

It is not likely that these earnings can be materially increased: the orchestra now gives as many concerts as its players and conductor can prepare and play at their present standard; its concerts are now sold out at prices that are higher than those of any other orchestra; and recording activity is intense.

There are hopes for some increases from Tanglewood concerts and from growing record royalties, but generally speaking, earned income has approached its maximum, especially in view of declining income from radio, which, under the impact of television, is dropping off rapidly as a source of revenue.

A number of committees have been formed to aid the orchestra in raising the required funds. In charge of business donations is E. Morton Jennings, vice president of the First National Bank and trustee of the orchestra. Heading the committees for individual solicitation is Francis W. Hatch, Jr., of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co. Mr. Hatch has arranged a committee to cover each of the orchestra's series of concerts: for Friday, Neil R. Ayer; for Saturday, Alan A. Smith and Daniel Weisberg, co-chairmen; for Tuesday, Herbert Pratt and John L. Thorndike, co-chairmen; and for Sunday, Peter D. Shultz.

The Boston Symphony is starting a number of new activities not previously tried as a means of acquainting prospective donors with the problems and aims of the orchestra.

A series of informal Dutch Treat luncheons, held in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall just prior to the Friday afternoon concerts, has already begun for subscribers to that series. Guests at the luncheons have been introduced to a number of orchestra members who have spoken on their special interests, as well as hearing talks by Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager; George E. Judd, the former manager; and Henry B. Cabot.

A similar plan for introducing players of the orchestra to the Saturday evening subscribers was initiated last weekend when a number of them were invited to attend the first of a series of coffee parties following the concert. Roger Voisin, first trumpet of the Boston Symphony, spoke briefly to the guests as did Mr. Cabot and Judge Jacob J. Kaplan, vice president of the Board of Trustees.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 16 1957

Walton Viola Concerto

First Boston Performance With de Pasquale as Soloist

By Harold Rogers

The concert by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon had its qualifications—and a few disqualifications—but there is no question that most of the listeners were ready to sing an anthem of praise for Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's first violist.

Charles Munch's program yesterday had two premières to enhance it—one for the United States and one for Boston. It was Mr. de Pasquale's playing, however, that lent enchantment. Again he compelled us to realize that we have a superlative violist in town, and that we never hear him half enough.

The United States première was of Sir William Walton's "Johannesburg Festival" Overture, composed last year for the 70th anniversary celebration of the South African city. It is filled with good spirits, like most of those frank, openhearted English overtures. An amiable violin melody chuckles merrily along while the brasses give an occasional slap on the back, and now and again Sir William rings in the maracas, the rumba sticks, and the castanets for a sly go at native fare.

* * *

Sir William is one of those intelligent fellows who knows how to be popular without stooping to banalities, and who knows how to be good without reaching to greatness, regardless of what period in his career we look in upon. Already this season we heard Gregor Piatigorsky in the world première of Sir William's Cello Concerto, and a superb piece of writing it is. Yesterday we heard the Boston première of his Viola Concerto, composed in 1928-29.

This, too, is extremely well written, though a more youthful work, and it is remarkable in that it remains quite undated by the 'twenties. True, there is a slight nod to a sentimental melody from time to time, or to a dance-like rhythm, but the 'twenties held no corner on these things.

It was in this work that Mr. de Pasquale gave us the warmth of his burnished string tone, a caressing sound that wins us with the power of gentleness. There were those songful melodies in the opening cantabile espressivo, for instance, that display the viola at its most ingratiating.

The second movement—Vivo, con molto preciso—departs from the usual pattern of a slow middle movement. While it is the least interesting of the three, it gives the soloist an opportunity for some fancy fiddling, and Mr. de Pasquale is the man who can do it. The final Allegro moderato again brings those tender melodies, plus a certain amount of technical display that is the stock in trade of all concertos, and the piece ends on an effectively quiet note. Mr. de Pasquale received a rapturous ovation.

* * *

In the last half of the program Dr. Munch turned from Walton to Wagner, from the wiles to the wild. Not that Wagner's music in itself is wild, but yesterday Dr. Munch succeeded in spurring it to a fine frenzy. He played the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhäuser," the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walküre," and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Götterdämmerung."

While Dr. Munch was in the midst of all this, one could not help remembering the Wagner performances by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in Symphony Hall last season under Herbert von Karajan. There was no question that we were then hearing Wagner as Germans prefer to hear him, and that we were hearing him as he sounds best. The Berlin performances were such a revelation that many of us felt as if we heard Wagner for the first time. And perhaps we did.

Dr. Munch, being an Alsatian, should move as easily in the Teutonic world as he does in the Gallic. But he doesn't—at least, not with Wagner.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
MAR 14 1957

Symphony Violinist To Use 400-Year-Old Viola At Concerts

At the nineteenth pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, Charles Munch will present his first violist, Joseph de Pasquale, as soloist in the viola concerto of Sir William Walton. Although it is to be performed for the first time at these concerts, the concerto was composed in the years 1928 and 1929 and received its first performance at the Promenade Concerts in London in October, 1929 with Paul Hindemith as the soloist, and Sir Henry Wood as the conductor. Joseph de Pasquale was born in Philadelphia and graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute. During the second World War he played in the orchestra of the Marine Corps, and was later a member of the American Broadcasting Company Orchestra in New York. Mr. de Pasquale has been principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947. He will perform the Concerto on a very rare and valuable Gasparo da Salo viola which is over 400 years old.

Dr. Munch will open the program with the United States premiere of Walton's Joannesburg Festival Overture. The Overture was commissioned for a Festival held to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the city of Johannesburg, South Africa, and was first performed at the Festival in September of 1956 by the Symphony Orchestra of the South Africa Broadcasting Corporation under the direction of Sir Malcolm Sargent.

The second half of the program will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner; and will include the Overture and Bacchanle from "Tannhauser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Die Getterdammerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure."

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
MAR 18 1957

Debut in Hub For Martinon

The first United States appearance of the young French conductor, Jean Martinon, will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on returning from its last tour of the season, which takes it out of town this week.

At the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 29 and 30, M. Martinon will conduct the first performance at the concerts of Handel's Concerto Gross for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 11, Schumann's First Symphony and the United States premier of his own composition, "Hymn a lae Vie."

The program will be closed with a performance of the suite from the ballet, "Firebird," by Igor Stravinsky.

Charles Munch will conduct the fifth concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Saunders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday night, March 26.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN MONDAY MARCH 4 3

GLOBE—MARCH 10, 1957

Another—Symphon

De Pasquale to Play Walton Concerto At Next Boston Symphony Concerts

At the 19th pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Charles Munch will present his first violist, Joseph de Pasquale, as soloist in the Viola Concerto of Sir William Walton. Although it is to be performed for the first time at these concerts, the concerto was composed in the years 1928 and 1929 and received its first performance at the Promenade Concerts in London in October, 1929, with Paul Hindemith as the soloist, and Sir Henry Wood as the conductor.

Joseph de Pasquale was born in Philadelphia and graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute. During the second World War he played in the Orchestra of the Marine Corps, and was later a member of the American Broadcasting Company Orchestra in New York. Mr. de Pasquale has been principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947. He will perform the concerto on a very rare and valuable Gasparo da Salo viola which is over 400 years old.

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, first violist of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in the Boston premiere of William Walton's Viola Concerto.

WAGNER

Dr. Munch will open the program with the United States premiere of Walton's Johannesburg Festival Overture. The overture was commissioned for a festival held to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the city of Johannesburg, South Africa, and was first performed at the festival in Sepember of 1956 by the Symphony Orchestra of the South Africa Broadcasting Corp. under the direction of Sir Malcolm Sargent.

The second half of the program will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner; and will include the overture and bacchanale from "Tannhauser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Die Gotterdammerung" and the Magic Music from "Die Walkure."

Charles Munch will conduct the fourth concert in the Sunday afternoon series today at 3 o'clock at Symphony Hall. Gino Cioffi, principal clarinet of the orchestra, will be soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, following a performance of the new Symphony No. 6 by David Diamond which received its first performance last Friday. The program will close with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

The fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theater will take place on Tuesday, at 8:30. The program, under the direction of Charles Munch, will include Franck's Symphony in D minor, Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe" and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven.

During the following week, the orchestra will be out of town on its fifth and final tour of the season to Hartford, Brooklyn and New York. The orchestra will also make its first visit to Baltimore for over 20 years on Thursday, March 21.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 14 1957

Joseph de Pasquale, first violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist in the Boston premiere of Walton's Viola Concerto, to be presented in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
MAR 18 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

—SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

De Pasquale Viola Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, music director, played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 19th program of the Friday-Saturday series. The program: Sir William Walton: Johannesburg Festival Overture (first performance in the United States), Concerto for Viola and Orchestra (first performance at these concerts, Joseph De Pasquale soloist); Wagner: Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," "Magic Fire Music" from "Die Walkuere," "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from "Goetterdaemmerung."

By CYRUS DURGIN

It has taken nearly 30 years for the Viola Concerto of Sir William Walton to enter the repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tht is much too long, because this is a beautiful and noble work. Yet we may rejoice that we are hearing the solo part, for the first time at these concerts, from the admirable first violinist of the Orchestra, Joseph De Pasquale, who plays it upon an exquisite Gasparo da Salo instrument.

It is not too much to say that Walton's Viola Concerto, composed in 1928-29, is father to the Cello Concerto whose world premiere we heard here last January. There are, of course, natural and essential differences, but the hand of Walton is plain in each. Like the Cello Concerto, this earlier one for viola is largely rhapsodic, the solo part always scrupulously emphasized and never covered by heavy orchestration; the viola deals in long-breathed, convoluted melody, which is ideally suited to the nature of the instrument and which really "sings."

Far from being a displayful Concerto, this does not even contain a cadenza. While a certain dramatic tension ebbs and flows in the orchestra, the solo viola is concerned only with lyrical song, and that much in what you might call an "Il Penseroso" mood. The middle movement is a vivacious scherzo, instead of an adagio or andante, but the finale ends soft and slow. The harmonic idiom might be described as "middle-of-the-road modern."

De Pasquale played his part gorgeously, with the utmost silkenness of tone from a viola which has a notably bright and vibrant resonance. There was absolute grace of phrase in every measure, the rhythm was steady but flexible, and over all was a sheen of exceedingly pleasurable refinement.

De Pasquale aroused his listeners to a most cordial ovation when the piece was finished. He was recalled to the stage several times, always to delighted applause.

The Johannesburg Festival Overture, which began the concert, is new Walton, completed last May and given first performance last September as part of a music festival in the South African city of Johannesburg, which then was 70 years old. With a frippery decoration of assorted percussion, the Overture is cute and deft, harmonically spicy, bright, ingratiating, hard to keep together because it is "very fast and capricious," as Walton marked the score. I daresay it won everybody's approval, and will be welcome in the future.

The part of the concert after intermission was a different story. Much as I admire Mr. Munch, I have never understood why he usually conducts Wagner with such neglect for detail and balance, with oftentimes runaway tempi, and with such a coarse and noisy texture of sound. Is it that this music does not interest him? Or do its excitements undo the control a conductor must have?

Perhaps you like Wagner, perhaps you do not, but the fact remains that in this tonal dream world there is an exaltation and a splendor and a jewelled richness of melody, harmony and instrumental color which can move you as deeply as any music ever created. Almost none of this was in evidence yesterday, though the "Tannhaeuser" Overture and Bacchanale had the best of it, with a fine erotic frenzy in the latter. Just to play the "Magic Fire Music" alone, starting with that fierce re-statement of the Treaty Motive, and to omit "Wotan's Farewell," is to my mind wholly indefensible excerpting. The Rhine Journey was noisy, too fast and altogether superficial.

Wagner needs a rounded and mellow ensemble, very fine adjustment between inner voices and principal melodies, and a loving care for all the nuances in every measure. Where the Orchestra had played superbly in Walton, it did not sound like the Boston Symphony in Wagner, and that was not the fault of the players. The blame rests squarely upon Mr. Munch.

Next week the Orchestra makes its last trip of the season to New York. At the concerts of Mar. 29 and 30, the French Jean Martinon will be guest conductor of Handel's Concerto Grosso in A major, Op. 6, No. 11; Schumann's "Spring" Symphony; Martinon's own "Hymne a la Vie" (first performances in the United States), and Stravinsky's "The Fire Bird" Suite.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
MAR 16 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 19th progam of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Joseph De Pasquale, viola. The program:

"Johannesburg Festival" Overture ..... Walton
Concerto for Viola ..... Walton
Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaueser"; Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkuere," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Goetterdemmerung" ..... Wagner

By RUDOLPH ELIE

William Walton's Viola Concerto is undoubtedly the finest work in this form in the literature.

It was given its first local hearing yesterday afternoon in an extraordinarily fine performance by Joseph De Pasquale, the orchestra's incomparable first violist, and it revealed a quality of noble beauty throughout.

It is not easy to describe the special stamp to be found on all Walton's music, yet it is individual, forceful and communicating. The idiom is personal yet its antecedents in the English musical tradition are clear; there is, indeed, a sort of Keatsian quality about it, marked by exhuberance, yet by a mature sensuouos appeal; by pictorial vividness, imagination and overall a sense of contemplative romance but of strength as well.

Lights, Shadows

Although he employs dissonance, it has meaning; it belongs, providing the lights and shadows in the textures. His rhythmic ingenuity is striking, and it is by means of altering the rhythmic structures of his themes he attains a unity of form within each movement that conveys a sense of continuous musical revelation. There are no joints; one moment flows into the next without sense of fabrication, and for this reason Walton's music communicates a good deal more than much of the contemporary music.

The Viola Concerto is especially remarkable for presenting the viola in its true essence. The instrument is much misunderstood by composers who have, indeed, neglected it as a solo instrument. To say, as I did at the beginning, that this is undoubtedly the finest, is in fact not to say very much at all, but Walton has gone right to the heart of the instrument. There is technical display to be sure, but of greater consequence is his exploitation of the singular beauties of the instrument's tonal characteristics, which though veiled are by no means as femine as they are generally assumed to be.

Nor could the composer have had a more inspired champion than Joseph De Pasquale. Using a Gasparo da Salo of the loveliest qualities, Mr. De Pasquale restored the vigor that lies dormant in the viola, playing with remarkable fleetness and exactitude on the fingerboard while, drawing a wide variety of colors with a fluent yet powerful bow. It was, in short, a most rewarding performance and proved, once again, the real capacities of our first desk men. It is not easy for an orchestral virtuoso to step forth and be a solo virtuoso for a day, but Mr. De Pasquale did so yesterday with ease, confidence and a towering instrumental flair.

Tone of Gayety

The same composer's "Johannesburg Festival" Overture opened the concert to set a tone of gayety from the outset. A lively, jolly, colorful piece, again displaying the composer's rhythmic vitality, its theme are almost Prokofieffian in their turns and modulations, while the calypso-like evocations of South African color lent additional interest to this short piece.

Three Wagnerian exceprts completed the program, and although it is always a pleasure to hear Wagner in a day when his star has set—at least for the time being—I found the music from "Tannhaueser" and "Die Walkuere" a little old-fashioned, even a little quaint. Siegfried's Rhine Journey has both more substance and more point, more lasting quality as it were. Mr. Munch took the Baccanale at an incredible tempo, giving it—and in fact two other excerpts, too—a sort of hysterical quality. It was exciting, but it didn't seem to have much meaning, nor, save for the Rhine Journey, did it seem to be in the tradition.

The orchestra is out of town on its last tour of the season next week. It returns on March 29 when he young French conductor Jean Martinon will make his debut as guest conductor. He will do works by Handel, Schumann, Stravinsky and his own "Hymne a la Vie."

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604
MAR 17 1957

Symphony Programs For Following Week

The first United States appearance of the young French conductor Jean Martinon, will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on returning from its last tour of the season, which will take it out of town this coming week.

At the concerts of Friday afternoon, March 29, Saturday evening, March 30, Sunday afternoon, March 31, and Tuesday evening, April 2, Mr. Martinon will conduct the first performance at these concerts of Handel's Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 11, Schumann's First Symphony, and the United States premiere of his own composition, "Hymne a la Vie." The program will be closed with a performance of the Suite from the Ballet "Firebird," by Igor Stravinsky.

Charles Munch will conduct the fifth concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, March 26. Dr. Munch will perform the new Johannesburg Festival Overture of Sir William Walton, and the same composer's Viola Concerto with the Orchestra's principal viola, Joseph de Pasquale, as soloist. The second half of the program will contain three works of Richard Wagner: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkuere."

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
MAR 17 1957

Jean Martinon In U.S. Debut

The first United States appearance of the young French conductor, Jean Martinon, will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on returning from its last tour of the season, which will take it out of town this coming week.

At the concerts of Friday afternoon, Mar. 29, Saturday evening, Mar. 30, Sunday afternoon, Mar. 31, and Tuesday evening, April 2, Mr. Martinon will conduct the first performance at these concerts of Handel's Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 11, Schumann's First Symphony and the U.S. premiere of his own composition, "Hymne a la Vie." The program will close with a performance of the Suite from the Ballet, "Firebird" by Igor Stravinsky.

Charles Munch will conduct the fifth concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, Mar. 26. Dr. Munch will perform the new Johannesburg Festival Overture of Sir William Walton, and the same composer's Viola Concerto with the orchestra's principal viola, Joseph de Pasquale, as soloist. The second half of the program will contain three works of Richard Wagner: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkuere."

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (Evening)
Circ. D. 200,797
MAR 18 1957

—The Week's Music—

By George Kent Bellows

The important musical event of the week will be the concert on Thursday night at the Lyric Theater by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of the distinguished French conductor, Charles Munch, the orchestra's first here since 1933.

When the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy gives its seventh concert of the season on Wednesday at the Lyric, Isaac Stern, American violinist, will be the featured soloist.

Their program:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Concerto No. 3, in G. Major (K.216) for Violin and Orchestra ... Mozart
Isaac Stern
Concerto No. 2, in D Minor, Op. 22 for Violin and Orchestra, ... Wieniawski
Isaac Stern
Symphony No. 5, in B flat Major, Op. 100 ..... Prokofieff

Two Events Conflict

Unfortunately two important musical events will fall on Thursday night. As the Boston Symphony holds forth at the Lyric, the third and last concert of the Theater Arts Series at the Museum of Art will present the Modern Jazz Quartet in the Auditorium at 8.40 P.M.

Mr. Munch's program will include:

Symphony No. 4, in B flat Major, Op. 60 ..... Beethoven
"Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet, Suite No. 2 ..... Ravel
Symphony No. 1, in C Minor, Op. 68 ..... Brahms

Mr. Munch replaced Serge Koussevitzky as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1948, and in 1952 took the group on its first European tour.

The Modern Jazz Quartet will offer a brilliant, adventuresome program of rhythmical jazz, using the piano, bass fiddle, vibraphone and drums.

Pop Concert Caturday

Saturday night's Pop Concert of the Baltimore Symphony under Massimo Freccia will have as its soloist Laszlo Steinhardt, violinist, and the orchestra's concertmaster.

Born in Budapest, Mr. Steinhardt came to this country in 1930. He was concertmaster for Erno Rapee at the Radio City Music Hall and then played in the NBC Orchestra under the late Arturo Toscanini for ten years. He joined the Baltimore Symphony at the beginning of this season.

The complete program for Saturday:

Overture to "Poet and Peasant," ..... Suppe
Symphonic Poem, "Finlandia," ..... Sibelius
Concerto in E Minor, for Violin and Orchestra ..... Mendelssohn
Laszlo Steinhardt
Polovetsian Dances from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
Trumpeter's Lullaby ..... Anderson
Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," ..... Strauss

Miss Stevens To Sing

On Sunday evening, at 8.30, Rise Stevens, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give a recital at the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, 7401 Park Heights avenue.

Although she is a frequent visitor to Baltimore in opera and as soloist with the Baltimore Symphony, the chances to hear Miss Stevens in recital are relatively rare. The recital is sponsored by the Sisterhood of the Congregation. Tickets may be obtained by calling Mrs. Samuel Robbins, Forest 7-6877.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (Morning)
Circ. D. 186,719
MAR 16 1957

This is the way the interior of the Lyric appeared to the audience on its opening night in October, 1894, when it was known as the "Music Hall." The Boston Symphony Orchestra played that first program with a roster of famous soloists. The Boston orchestra returns here, after an absence of more than 20 years, this Thursday evening for a single concert at the Lyric.

Boston Symphony Returns

By WELDON WALLACE

THE Boston Symphony, which will give its first Baltimore concert in 23 years on Thursday, had an important role in the history of this city's musical affairs.

The orchestra played at the Lyric Theater on the opening night of that world-famous concert center. The date was October 31, 1894.

Four opera singers, two of them among the most noted of the day, were guest artists. Mme. Nellie Melba, Australian soprano, made the first of many brilliant Baltimore appearances on that October night. Pol Plaçon, one of the greatest bassos ever to sing with the Metropolitan Opera Company, also made his Baltimore debut.

The other singers were Mme. Scalchi and M. Maugiere. (The program listed only the last names of each of the four artists.)

Emile Paur conducted the 87 musicians making up the Boston Symphony.

The Sun of November 1 reported that 2,800 Baltimoreans filled the theater, then known as the Music Hall, and that it was "one of the most brilliant musical events of many years." The enthusiasm of the audience was uncontained, despite the fact that at one point during the evening, "the lights began to misbehave, and glaring calciums had to be pressed into service for fear the hall would be plunged into darkness."

Melba delighted her listeners by her superb voice, an organ of exceptional purity, evenness and ease.

He Owned It

If Melba's charm resided mostly in sheer appeal of tone, Monsieur Plançon triumphed not only for vocal skill but also because of his personality.

"He walked in with an irresistible air of owning the earth," the critic of The Sun reported. Shortly, the critic went on, he did own the earth, or that portion of it within the Music Hall.

The critic found that Mme. Scalchi showed the signs of aging but that her voice, though uneven, still was a fine instrument.

As for Emil Paur, "there is something earnest, rugged and hearty about the thickset little Viennese that makes him wear well," the reviewer wrote.

After Mr. Paur had taken his place in front of the orchestra to begin the concert, he and the audience were startled to see the ushers staggering down the aisle bearing "a great floral music stand and baton" for the conductor to use.

The first music ever heard at the Lyric Theater in public performance was the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Other orchestral compositions of the evening included the prelude to Act II of a forgotten opera called "Gwendoline," by Chabrier; three selections from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," and the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture."

A Warm Performance

The Sun noted that Mr. Paur conducted these works with "vigorous warmth."

Melba's solos included a Handel aria, "Sweet Bird," and a waltz by Arditi, "Se Saran Rose." The great Plançon offered an aria from Verdi's "Don Carlos" and the Schumann song, "The Two Grenadiers." Maugiere presented the "Romance" from "Mignon," by Thomas, and Scalchi, "Che faro" from Gluck's "Orpheus."

The audience went fairly wild when these four experienced singers joined forces for the quartet from "Rigoletto."

Listeners applauded insistently for an encore.

The singers took their bows, "Melba each time making a little move as of a spoilt child that didn't want to speak its piece again, a coquettish touch of babyishness that was found charming in the great diva but would not have been tolerated in a smaller light."

The encore was not forthcoming, but nothing could dull the pleasure of the first nighters, who left the auditorium "delightedly comparing notes on the excellent features of the program."

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUNDAY SUN
MAR 17 1957

Music Notes

Boston Symphony, 2 Other Concerts

By WELDON WALLACE

THREE orchestras will give concerts at the Lyric Theater this week. All are scheduled to start at 8.30 o'clock.

The major news event on the calendar is the appearance of the Boston Symphony here on Thursday night after an absence of 23 years.

Charles Munch will conduct a program that we consider more artfully chosen than any concert we have heard so far at the Lyric this season.

It follows:

Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven
Daphnis et Chloe, Suite No. 2 ..... Ravel
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms

The Beethoven is a master work in restful mood—a serene symphonny written between two tempestuous ones.

Interesting Contrast

The Ravel will form an interesting contrast in style to the Beethoven—especially as presented under the direction of Munch, the definitive conductor of "Daphnis et Chloe."

We will remember his presentation of this selection on his previous visit to Baltimore. This occurred several years ago, when he led a performance here by the French National Orchestra. Only a scattering of concertgoers turned out for one of the finest orchestral programs given in Baltimore within memory.

The Brahms "Symphony No. 1" is an admirable finale for Thursday's concert. It should be rewarding to hear this piece in terms of the fine French musical tradition represented by the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Munch became head of that orchestra in 1948, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Founded Paris Ensemble

Munch began his career as a violinist, having been at one time concertmaster of the symphony orchestra in his native Strasbourg. In 1932 he founded the Orchestre Symphonique in Paris, and five years later he became director of the Paris Conservatorie Orchestre.

He made his American debut in 1937, when he filled a guest engagement with the St. Louis Symphony. Before assuming his post with the Boston, Munch conducted the French National Orchestra on the tour that brought that organization to Baltimore for the program cited above.

Now in its seventy-fifth year, the Boston Symphony is completing a season of 152 concerts, including 73 performances in its own city; 51 programs in other American cities, and 28 European appearances.

Ormandy To Conduct

The Philadelphia Orchestra is to visit the Lyric on Wednesday evening for the seventh concert in its current Baltimore series.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct, and Isaac Stern is to be the guest violinist.

Mr. Ormandy, after having shown singular lack of imagination in choosing his earlier programs this season, has come up with one that is well selected this time.

It includes two representative classic compositions; a piece in the rosy romantic style, and one of the most impressive symphonies written in recent years.

The selections are as follows:

Overture, "The Mariage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Concerto in G Major for violin and orchestra ..... Mozart Concerto No. 2 in D Minor, for violin and orchestra, Op. 22 ..... Wieniawski Symphony No. 5 ..... Prokofiev

Baltimore Program

The Baltimore Symphony will have its concertmaster, Laszlo Steinhardt, as soloist on Saturday night, when the orchestra presents a program titled, "Popular Concert Favorites, Album No. 2."

The violinist has chosen one of the most melodious of all concertos for his offering—Mendelssohn's, in E. Minor.

The complete program, to be given under the direction of Massimo Freccia, is as follows:

Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ..... Von Suppe
Finlandia ..... Sibelius
Concerto in E Minor, Op. 64 for violin and orchestra ..... Mendelssohn
Polovetsian Dances ..... Borodin
Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier" ..... Strauss

Laszlo Steinhardt joined the Baltimore Symphony at the beginning of this season.

The Budapest-born violinist came to the United States in 1930 at the age of 17.

Studied Under Hubay

He began his musical training at the age of 6. At 10 he entered the Royal Franz Liszt Academy, from which he received his diploma on completing his studies in the master class of Jeno Hubay.

Before coming to this country, Mr. Steinhardt toured Switzerland, Romania, Hungary and Germany.

CHARLES MUNCH

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
Circ. D. 227,679
MAR 1 1957

Boston Group Plans Concert

The long-heralded visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its famous French conductor, Charles Munch, will come about at the Lyric tomorrow evening at 8.30.

Mr. Munch has chosen a program consisting of but three items, being the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven preceding the "Dahpnis and Chloe Suite, No. 2," well-beloved Ravel composition.

The second half of the program will be given over to Brahms' First Symphony. We do urge prompt arrival, as there is no short opening piece to allow leeway for traffic complications.

MR. MUNCH, who was born in Strasburg, began his music studies as a violinist, which were interrupted by Army service in World War I. He resumed his postwar activities in music as concertmaster of the Strasburg Orchestra, leading to conducting the Straram Orchestra, and eventually to founding the Orchestre Symphonique of Paris.

He has quest-conducted with innumerable American orchestras, and took over the baton of the Boston, from Serge Koussegnitsky, in 1948.

H. A. F. P.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (Evening)
Circ. D. 200,797
MAR 20 1957

CHARLES MUNCH

Boston Symphony Due Tomorrow

Tomorrow evening Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in its first Baltimore performance since 1933. The concert at the Lyric will begin promptly at 8.30 P.M.

Mr. Munch replaced Serge Koussevitsky as the Boston Symphony's regular conductor in 1948, and in 1952 took the orchestra on its first European concert tour.

Born in Strasbourg, Germany, Mr. Munch began his musical career in 1912, when he studied violin under Lucien Capet. After taking part in World War I, he resumed his musical activities in 1920 as concertmaster of the Strasbourg Orchestra.

Later, he conducted concerts of the Straram Orchestra, and in 1932 founded the Orchestra Symphonique in Paris.

Made U.S Debut In 1939

Mr. Munch became director of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra in 1937, and made his American debut in 1939 with the St. Louis Orchestra. However, it was not until 1946 that he first raised his baton before the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its guest conductor.

The Boston Symphony was organized in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, and was the first permanent orchestra in the United States.

Tomorrow evening's program includes: Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4; "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2," by Ravel, and Brahm's "Symphony No. 1."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

MAR 21 1957

Music in Review

BSO Performs Walton Work

By ALLAN SLY

At the BSO's nineteenth program Walton's high-spirited Johannesburg Festival Overture received its first American performance. Written in Italy for an occasion in the Transvaal and using a large orchestral apparatus, it recalls the listener's attention from diversity by its concentrated manner and closely-knit structure. It also reveals an unexpected reserve of vitality and interest in the concert overture, a form much favored by the English (one recalls how Eugene Goossens originated a contest to encourage American composers to produce more of them).

Walton's fine lean music puts him securely among today's best composers. Whether Boston's concertgoers discover qualities of greatness in it is less clearly evidenced. A good measure of the thunderous applause that greeted the viola concerto (of 1929), which followed the overture and which had never been played here before, may have been intended for Joseph de Pasquale, whose delivery of the solo part was one of the highlights of the season. For me, the triumphant performance had its roots in the profound greatness of the composition itself. From first movement to last there is an inner thread of development of mood, of concentration, that culminates in the greater complexities of the final movement, reaching its height in an extraordinary orchestral passage near the end where crisis and fulfillment seem to blend, as Tovey says, on a note of high tragedy. The character of this passage was foreshadowed in the earlier Sinfonia Concertante (with piano) and the tragic note persists in the later cello concerto, given its world premiere here recently. That Walton could have fashioned this vocabulary for expressing the spirit of these times back in 1929 seems incredible, but the evidence was before us last Saturday.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra can hardly be blamed if the Wagner excerpts (Tannhauser Overture and Bacchanale, Magic Fire Music and Siegfried's Rhine Journey) sounded, to this listener at least, somewhat dated. There were some smudgy spots; but also some cheers from the gallery.

MUSIC AT MIT

Those who feel satiated with the packaged product of today's concert industry should keep an eye focussed on events at MIT.

Last Friday occurred a concert there (in Kresge) that deserves a place in the historic record. The generosity of certain prime movers and sponsors made possible the presentation of Hugo Kauder's "Chamber Music" and Ernest Levy's "Chamber Symphony" (his 12th!). It seems these two works were associated in performance at the University of Chicago a few years ago and that there is an even earlier connection between them, employing as they do similar forces (soprano, alto and tenor solo voices, with instruments) and materials (polydimensional poems, with instrumental commentary).

Singers Polyna Zagaretou, Margaret Danford and Richard Gilley, and eleven prominent members of the Boston Symphony were conducted by Ernst Levy (seated) in both works. The Kauder work, using the voices and string quartet, is a setting of James Joyce's early cycle of poems called "Chamber Music," which title is retained in this musical setting. The Levy symphony fills a larger canvas. Its seven movements undertake a considerable survey of existing forms, listed on the program so that the listener so minded can ascertain, for example, that the recapitulation of theme I is a new and different fugue (on a variant of the theme) from the fugue which earlier grew from the theme as first presented; and so on. He is also forewarned as to which instruments are to participate, movement by movement. On arriving at movement No. 7, the singers join in and in the course of six different expositions of "Harvesters' Song" by George Peele (16th century), the implications of the little poem are thoroughly explored, until one is gently persuaded that its underlying idea has informed the whole symphony; that this muse has pervaded the whole program in fact, even the Joyce-Kauder work heard earlier.

I confess to having been completely conquered, charmed, convinced. The lack of extraneous "information" about this enterprise left one to get what one could from direct exposure to the music itself; the printed program was a model of modest clarity, limited to essentials. The performance also was a model of clarity. Customary intrusions of platform histrionics were refreshingly lacking and the music itself seemed to eschew drama and maintain throughout the essence of the lyric muse. There were echoes of the classic and medieval worlds; yet the experience was of the immediate present. To say that some of us left Kresge wiser (not sadder) men, may sound preposterous, but it is strangely so.

Mr. Kauder was excavated from his fauteuil to receive applause and Mr. Levy at the close of the evening was given a round of sustained cheers from a sizable and distinguished assembly.

It is no secret hereabouts that Mr. Levy is a pianist of the first magnitude (his next Kresge recital being set for April 7) and his reputation as a conductor preceded him here; But that his 12th (!) symphony should be a pivot around which one's growing perceptions might turn a corner, that is news. One cannot have everything, but one can hope to hear more of his extraordinary music.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
Circ. D. 227,679
MAR 18 1957

CONCERTS AT LYRIC

Boston and Philadelphia Symphonies Due This Week

By HELEN A. F. PENNIMAN

Orchestrally speaking, this is a tremendous week.

Not only is the Boston Symphony honoring us with a visit on Thursday, for the first time in a quarter of a century, to put it in the most impressive fashion possible. But the Philadelphia Orchestra is to arrive at the Lyric on Wednesday, for the seventh in its current series in the city.

The famous Boston ensemble, founded in 1881, is one of the few orchestras in the world to reach its 76th season. And this in all the vigor of the prime of life, for they are now completing a year of 152 concerts, including the 28 given in last summer's European tour.

Sponsored activities include the Pop concerts, the Charles River Esplanade programs, and the notable annual Berkshire Music Festival, with its associated Music School Centre.

CHARLES Munch, the distinguished French musician, succeeded Serge Koussevitsky upon the latter's retirement, and stands high among conductors of international repute. He will lead the orchestra at the Lyric on Thursday, in a program including two symphonies.

Eugene Ormandy leading the Philadelphia on Wednesday, will have Isaac Stern as the violin soloist.

Likewise on Thursday, as one in the Theatre Arts Series at the Museum of Art, the Modern Jazz Quartet will present an "adventuresome program of rhythmical Jazz." This is the last of three programs arranged by the Women's Committee of the Museum.

RETURNING to our orchestra events, there is the "Popular Concert Favorite" program to be given on Saturday by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, under Massimo Freccia, with Laszlo Steinhardt as violin soloist, playing the Mendelssohn Concerto.

Then on Monday we return once more to the Museum, for the last in the Chamber Music Society's series, when Hugo Weisgall's opera, "The Stronger," will be given. This is a musical setting of Strindberg's play of the same name.

Rise Stevens, mezzo star of the Metropolitan, will appear in recital next Sunday evening, March 24, at the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation Temple, 7401 Park Heights. This event is sponsored by the Temple Sisterhood, for the benefit of the Temple Landscaping Fund.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

MAR 20 1957

Munch Conducts Boston Symphony

By DANIEL W. GOTTLIEB

Arriving at the Bushnell last night the symphony goer did not face quite the usual Boston Symphony Orchestra programming.

For though Charles Munch, conductor, had anchored the evening's fare with the surefire Franck "New World" Symphony, he had also arranged a first hearing in Hartford for David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. This was a work of a prolific young American composer who has been poorly represented, except for one or two show pieces, on symphonic programs.

* * *

THEN, in between, there was the Mozart Concerto for Clarinet, K622, a not unfamiliar work, but then not exactly the usual brilliant concerto fare orchestras today are inclined to perform. Furthermore the soloist was the orchestra's own deskman, Gino Cioffi.

When Mr. Munch and company concluded all this, there was nothing, in retrospect to stir the memory but the usual steady quality of the orchestra's tone and ensemble.

Despite its cohesiveness and form, Mr. Diamond's piece came out dull for this hearer with the exception of the Adagio, where the composer reveals some unusual scoring and real feeling. The slow movement did, in fact, impress one as truly original at moments, and it evoked a feeling of a city at slumber, with city sounds floating through smoke-laden air.

The chief detraction of the score is that of overworking too-short musical ideas by giving them, one at a time, to virtually every section of the orchestra, each section playing just behind the other.

This stretto-type writing is a wonderful device, in moderation. But, in Mr. Diamond's last movement it becomes particularly repetitive without achieving any grandiose effect.

Mr. Munch did not do much to brighten the first or last movements of the work, but read them with his accustomed relaxed manner.

* * *

MR. DIAMOND, who was in the audience, acknowledged the polite applause and congratulated the orchestra.

In the Mozart, Mr. Munch held everything to a gentle, almost pastoral tone. This suited this particular brand of Mozart admirably, and Mr. Cioffi played with a firm and flowing tone.

Perhaps conductor and soloist arranged too languid a pace for the Adagio and too subtle shadings. But, what was lost in drive or excitement was compensated for by the greater relevation of Mozart's gentle blending of the solo instrument with the orchestra.

With the Franck, one had the feeling that Mr. Munch was a long time in letting his players go. He would build a climax and then just allow them to float short of the peak. Not too exciting for such robust music, but then it was a relief from the other extreme of blaring out the themes until no one can hear anything else.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

MAR 19 1957

Boston To Play New Symphony Here Tonight

Under the baton of Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its only local concert of the present season at 8:15 p.m. today in the Bushnell Memorial. The event is the fourth concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, which next month will present the Philadelphia Orchestra.

For his Hartford concert Mr. Munch has selected the following program: David Diamond's Sixth Symphony, which had its world premiere in Boston earlier this month;; Mozart's Concerto for Clarinet in A Major, the final work for instrument and orchestra completed by Mozart before his death, a composition in which Gino Cioffi, first clarinetist of the orchestra will be soloist; and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Mr. Diamond, who now makes his home in Florence, Italy but has been visiting in this country, has indicated that he hopes to attend the concert tonight.

A limited number of tickets for the event are available at the Bushnell box office.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

MAR 19 1957

Munch, Boston Appear at Bushnell

Conductor Charles Munch will bring his 110-member Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Bushnell Memorial tonight at 8:15 for its annual Bushnell Symphony Series concert. He will conduct a program which includes Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor, Mozart's Concerto for Clarinet in A Major and a work which will be having its first Hartford performance, David Diamond's Sixth Symphony.

Gino Cioffi, first clarinetist of the orchestra and formerly in a similar position with the New York Philharmonic and Cleveland orchestras, will be soloist in the Mozart concerto.

Tickets are still available in limited number, according to Managing Director William H. Mortensen.

230

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
MAR 21 1957

Bostonians' Cioffi Plays Mozart

By HARRIETT JOHNSON

Gino Cioffi, principal clarinetist with the Boston Symphony since 1950, brought elegance, grace and a pearl-like clarity to Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, Charles Munch conducting, last night in Carnegie Hall. This was the season's final concert by the Bostonians in their regular Wednesday series.

Stockily built, the Neapolitan-born artist played the exquisite music with an agility worthy of an Olympic track star, even if he didn't look like one.

This was the last concerto Mozart wrote before his death in 1791, completing it only two months before the end. The middle "adagio" sings of sorrow, while the first and final movements are more joyous. All three, however, represent the composer at the height of his creative powers. Cioffi differentiated the varying moods and emotions with sensitivity, and his changes, from loud to soft, were definite and beautifully contrasted. Munch and the Bostonians provided perceptive collaboration.

Diamond's Sixth Symphony

Probably the serenity of the concerto seemed even more appealing because it followed the first N. Y. performance of David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. In three movements, the opening one is abrupt and violent, setting the prevailing tone for the rest. There is an attempt at reflection and an eery mystery during the second, the "Adagio," but this doesn't succeed in its purpose, while the final movement returns to the original mood of angular, explosive expression. The composer worked for three years, intermittently from 1951 to 1954 on this piece, and has put forth a serious, determined composition. As a work of art, it is defeated by its self-consciousness, its lack of spontaneous flow of ideas and basic invention.

An urgent performance of Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor closed the program. In typical Munch style, it was dynamic and electric in impact. There were many moments, however, when the conductor whipped up his ensemble to faster momentum than seemed desirable.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467
MAR 21 1957

Concert: Diamond's Sixth

Bostonians Introduce Symphony Here

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE Boston Symphony, which earlier this month gave the first performance of David Diamond's Symphony No. 6 in Boston, last night brought it to New York. It was the opening work of the orchestra's final Wednesday night program in this season's Carnegie Hall series. Charles Munch led it.

The work, which was written in Florence, Italy, between 1951 and 1954, is inscribed "For Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony." The composer has reasons for being grateful to the orchestra, for in 1944 it introduced his Second Symphony. Two years later it introduced his Fourth, and in 1950 it gave the first performance of his Third.

David Diamond

•

The new symphony is cyclic in form, with all of its thematic materials being related to the two themes stated in the first movement. It is a taut, very earnest, expertly written work. And it is relatively short, for its three movements are respectively eight, nine and six minutes long.

It began gravely and atmosperically with the statement of the first theme by the oboe and English horn. A thudding drum was heard softly but ominously. Suddenly and briefly it grew violently agitated, with most of the percussion instruments sounding at once. There was a brief return to the gravity, followed by another almost frantic percussion outbreak. Thereafter the work alternated between the two chief moods.

In the Adagio the slow theme had a little more time to develop, but it was interrupted here, too. For this listener, the total impression was one of both too much and too little contrast. Too much in that the moods were too abruptly and quickly shifted; too little in that the deliberately limited thematic material allowed for relatively little variety. The themes themselves were not particularly inventive.

The Rochester, N. Y., born composer was in the audience. At the end of the symphony he came forward to the edge of the stage and shook Mr. Munch's hand. After he returned to his place the applause continued until he had risen twice from his seat to acknowledge it.

•

Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's principal clarinetist, was the soloist of the evening. He was heard in Mozart's A major Clarinet Concerto. Perhaps the two allegros might have had a little more devil-may-care insouciance, but it was always a musicianly performance. The playing was expert and the tone beautiful, and the mournful slow movement, with Mr. Cioffi's own tasteful cadenza, was especially good. His colleagues in the orchestra joined in the plaudits.

The César Franck Symphony closed the program. Mr. Munch gave it a reading that was both spacious and vigorous. Others have led it with a more floating, etherial quality of tone, but this performance had its own virtues and it sounded more ruggedly masculine than it often does.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,991 - S. 855,847
MAR 21 1957

IN CARNEGIE HALL:

Diamond Symphony

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony gave the first New York performance of David Diamond's Sixth Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night. It left Diamond about where he stood some years ago, still an individual but looking more backward than forward.

This is a symphony of contrasts, of new material in old forms, of rhythmic angularity and brilliant busyness. It leaves an impression of over-stimulation, of being written "in stretto," of placing brashness first. It makes the listener think of Walt Whitman's "Barbaric Yawp" brought up to date.

The three movements evolve out of material exposed at the start and treated in cyclic fashion. The treatment is expert in almost every sense except persausiveness. If the symphony delineates conflict, it states rather than communicates that idea. Munch and his musicians did their virtuoso best to present it as vividly as possible.

Drives Hard

The program worked from the new to the thrice-familiar. After the Diamond Mozart's concerto for Clarinet K. 622 sounded like an old friend even though not too frequently heard in the concert hall. The concert ended with the Franck symphony.

As soloist in the Mozart Gino Cioffi, first clarinetist of the orchestra, drew a beautiful tone from his instrument and played skilfully. How much the beauty of this particular work moved him was difficult to determine, for he appeared more outside than inside the music.

His performance became more a matter of thoroughly professional execution than of elegant interpretation. The style of the orchestral playing also fell short of the elegance so necessary in this work.

Munch's capacity to make a performance stir the listener made listening to the Franck enjoyable. This was a somewhat personalized version, characterized by certain mannerisms chiefly in choice of tempo. While the lento of the first movement vibrated with feeling, the allegro surged almost with violence.

Munch tended to drive hard. He did succeed in conveying the stunning quality of the work both in sound and in structure. The musicians cooperated almost too eagerly to create a performance of the symphony rather than to recreate the symphony itself.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
MAR 21 1957

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, was presented at the Bushnell Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. The program:

Sixth Symphony — Diamond
Clarinet Concerto (K622) — Mozart
Gino Cioffi, Soloist
D Minor Symphony — Franck

Today's conversation-piece in local musical circles is, of course, the Sixth Symphony of David Diamond, performed here last evening by Charles Munch and the Boston orchestra.

The Bushnell management committed a tactical error by serting in the programs, a "supplemental note" on Mr. Diamond's new work that began: "It is a real compliment to the mature musical taste of the Hartford community, etc." To members of the audience fearful of modern music, that was the tip-off. Far from allaying worries, it made people leery and created an air of pending controversy even before the first measure of music sounded.

Nothing To Scare You

This is too bad because this Sixth Symphony actually turned out to be rather tame as modern composition goes. Oh, there was some surface clatter, and dissonances which will keep orthodontists busy soothing the teeth of the third and fourth generation, but what went on under this front was not very disturbing, or stimulating, for that matter. Mr. Diamond's composition is something mainly for composers. He has raised and solved some intricate problems in orchestral writing, and in many places he has woven bits of interesting sound fabric, as in the metallic shimmer that closes the adagio.

But except as an ornate and elaborate scholarly etude, Mr. Diamond's Sixth Symphony is no great shakes. For me it had no larger musical or emotional implications. I liked some of its devices but the satisfaction was that of hearing a good craftsman at work. I found no eloquence that stirred me particularly or saw no special spiritual vistas.

Mr. Munch and the Boston players certainly gave the symphony their very best efforts, and Mr. Diamond, who was in the audience, seemed pleased with their performance when he came forward for a bow. I also thought it warming that many persons around me who did not care for the work itself, were very cordial to Mr. Diamond nonetheless and gave him a personal welcome.

Mozart and Franck

I hope those who looked forward to the Mozart Clarinet Concerto as a reward for hospitable behavior toward the roughening Diamond, were not disappointed all over again. It was a tediously sweet little number. Gino Cioffi, the Boston's first vlarinet, played it neatly and without gaudiness, and drew a big hand which sent him offstage beaming.

There was a handsome and showy performance of the Franck Symphony to close out the evening. Mr. Munch liked a Trojan to make every note sound, every emotion throb, and the rchestra piled it on excellently as they had all night. There was quite as much din in it as there was in the Diamond, as far as decibels went, and I marveled that those who grimaced at the trumpets at the outse of he evening, now sat wreathed in beatitude to hear them in the Franck.

T. H. P.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
MAR 20 1957

New Work By Diamond Given Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, was presented at the Bushnell Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. The program:

Sixth Symphony — Diamond
Clarinet Concerto (K622) — Mozart
Gino Cioffi, Soloist
D Minor Symphony — Franck

Today's conversation-piece in local musical circles is, of course, the Sixth Symphony of David Diamond, performed here last evening by Charles Munch and the Boston orchestra.

The Bushnell management committed a tactical error by serting in the programs, a "supplemental note" on Mr. Diamond's new work that began: "It is a real compliment to the mature musical taste of the Hartford community, etc." To members of the audience fearful of modern music, that was the tip-off. Far from allaying worries, it made people leery and created an air of pending controversy even before the first measure of music sounded.

Nothing To Scare You

This is too bad because this Sixth Symphony actually turned out to be rather tame as modern composition goes. Oh, there was some surface clatter, and dissonances which will keep orthodontists busy soothing the teeth of the third and fourth generation, but what went on under this front was not very disturbing, or stimulating, for that matter. Mr. Diamond's composition is something mainly for composers. He has raised and solved some intricate problems in orchestral writing, and in many places he has woven bits of interesting sound fabric, as in the metallic shimmer that closes the adagio.

But except as an ornate and elaborate scholarly etude, Mr. Diamond's Sixth Symphony is no great shakes. For me it had no larger musical or emotional implications. I liked some of its devices but the satisfaction was that of hearing a good craftsman at work. I found no eloquence that stirred me particularly or saw no special spiritual vistas.

Mr. Munch and the Boston players certainly gave the symphony their very best efforts, and Mr. Diamond, who was in the audience, seemed pleased with their performance when he came forward for a bow. I also thought it warming that many persons around me who did not care for the work itself, were very cordial to Mr. Diamond nonetheless and gave him a personal welcome.

Mozart and Franck

I hope those who looked forward to the Mozart Clarinet Concerto as a reward for hospitable behavior toward the roughening Diamond, were not disappointed all over again. It was a tediously sweet little number. Gino Cioffi, the Boston's first vlarinet, played it neatly and without gaudiness, and drew a big hand which sent him offstage beaming.

There was a handsome and showy performance of the Franck Symphony to close out the evening. Mr. Munch liked a Trojan to make every note sound, every emotion throb, and the rchestra piled it on excellently as they had all night. There was quite as much din in it as there was in the Diamond, as far as decibels went, and I marveled that those who grimaced at the trumpets at the outse of he evening, now sat wreathed in beatitude to hear them in the Franck.

T. H. P.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
MAR 21 1957

Music: Diamond's 6th Symphony

Boston Symphony Back at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Equipped with superlative sound and technique, the symphonic pride of Boston was back in Carnegie Hall last night for the first of its monthly quota of local concerts.

Led by Charles Munch, the orchestra once more demonstrated the rich tone and compact strength that have given it worldwide prestige. This orchestra can make anything sound like a million dollars.

Even if David Diamond's latest sympohny wasn't quite in those upper-brackets, it was given every attribute of tone and technique to make it appear so. The composer had every reason to bless the man and orchestra he wrote it for.

Local Premiere.

This was Mr. Diamond's Sixth Symphony—a New York premiere and the product of an intensely agitated mood. It is music of a gnarled and tortured strength, fitful and jagged in rhythm, often clamorous in effect.

There is little room in this music for rest and relaxation. The cycle of themes zigzags back and forth in nervous, abrupt lunges, and the whole orchestra is kept on its toes by a ceaseless tension.

Though by no means Mr. Diamond's most attractive score, the symphony shows him at his boldest in bending old forms to suit tough new material. It certainly gave the Bostonians a chance to show off their volume.

Noble Legacy.

The rest and relaxation came with the next number, Mozart's Clarinet Concerto—the last concerto for any instrument written by the Salzburg genius and one of his noblest legacies in the whole domain of beauty.

The orchestra gave it crisp attention, while its first clarinetist, Gino Cioffi, unreeled the solo line as if born to its sweet and timeless elegance. The very breath of Mozart seemed on the playing.

Franck's D Minor Symphony further attested the power of this orchestra and the man who conducts it.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 22 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By PAUL HENRY LANG

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Gino Cioffi, clarinetist.
The program:
Symphony No. 6.....David Diamond (first N. Y. performance)
Concerto for Clarinet in A major, K. 622 Mozart
Symphony in D minor.....Franck

The Boston Symphony, by tradition a friend of the American composer, opened its concert Wednesday night at Carnegie Hall with the first New York performance of David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. To the critic a new work is a very serious affair and I dread to listen to a major novelty without adequate preparation and study—it is easy to ignore secrets and pass over subtleties without noticing them. I regret to say the new symphony held no secrets and concealed no subtleties.

Wednesday night, with Margarita Zambrana as the vocal soloist.

After a rhapsodic start, the first movement embarked upon what seemed a logical development of a none too engaging idea. Everything went well, but the piece is coarse-grained and garish because of the lavish use of the heavy percussion and deliberately shrill writing for the brasses. In particular, Mr. Diamond uses a very annoying percussion instrument that sounds like a cap pistol which, one of my learned colleagues tells me, goes by the name of "slapstick." Why all this noise?

The slow movement moves by fits and starts. For isolated moments one is comforted by a mood of lyricism, but the mood is constantly threatened by shrill interlopers.

Noise, noise, and more noise. This is 1957, why must so many of our composers still use every pot, kettle, tub, pipe, and anvil that can be whacked with a stick? I could not concentrate on the music because of this constant racket. Even so, it seemed to me that the third movement was the weakest of this rather insignificant symphony.

Mr. Diamond is a good composer who has given us some very fine works, but the prevailing impression this one created was ugliness of sound. Mr. Munch and his men gave the symphony a conscientiously prepared and sympathetic performance.

• • •

As its Koechel number—622—shows, Mozart's clarinet concerto is among his most mature works. Its luminous clarity, limpid melody, and transcendental beauty are extraordinary even for Mozart. This concerto is, indeed, the epitome of classicism, the work of a creative soul who found what ordinary mortals never even glimpse: absolute peace and transfiguration in his art.

What can the amateur psychologists who write about musicians do with this miracle of balance and heavenly assuredness? Did Mozart not write this work at a time when his life was nearing its sorrowful end? What stories can be fastened to this radiant song? None, because this is the very miracle of creation.

The performance did not do justice to the work. Gino Cioffi is a first class clarinetist who plays with a beautiful tone and nimble fingers, but he showed no comprehensive concept of the concerto. Every passage was cleanly played, but it was a passage such as he would play while sitting at his usual place in the orchestra; the wondrous piece did not glow.

Neither was the orchestra fully equal to its task. To be sure, this ensemble always plays well, but that is not enough for this transparent work in which every note must be accounted for.

After the intermission Mr. Munch and his orchestra settled down to the comfortable familiarity of Franck's D minor Symphony which they do superlatively, but this writer took the fat ninth chords for a solemn recessional and retired from the scene.

David Diamond, whose Symphony No. 6 received its New York premiere Wednesday night.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 135,309
MAR 24 1957

The Lively Arts—

The Stiff Upper Lip

By T. H. Parker

The management of the Bushnell Memorial was thrown into a bit of a tizzy last week, owing to the concert by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Some time previously, Mr. Munch had informed the Bushnell that he intended to play David Diamond's Sixth Symphony here, as part of the Boston orchestra's program. The Bushnell gave its okay to the proposal. Since the Diamond work had not been heard here, the Bushnell was buying a pig-in-a-poke (now, now, Mr. Diamond, that's just an old Yankee phrase), but as the program also listed the Franck Symphony, Bushnell apparently figured things would balance out, one modern unknown against one thrice-familiar and favorite oldtimer. Besides, who ever expected that the conservative Boston Symphony, or the Boston Symphony with its conservative type audience (as we like to think) would put a shocker in its repertoire?

Then, a fortnight ago, Mr. Munch played Mr. Diamond's composition in Boston. He got real results. The symphony apparently set the audience on its ear, while the Boston reviewers had some decided things to say about it. It did not take the news long to travel from Ghent to Aix and make the Bushnell management apprehensive. It is my understanding that Bushnell suggested Mr. Munch replace the Diamond work with something else for the Hartford concert, but to no avail.

So, there was nothing to do but prepare the Hartford audience to bite the bullet. And when the audience assembled on that tremulous evening last Tuesday, they found in their programs a brief and perceptive essay written by Fritz Mahler, conductor of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra, on the salutary effects of new musical experience.

★

The outcome of the concert has already been chronicled in the columns of The Courant, and it is not my intention to go over it in this Sunday piece. What I wish to say here is that I feel Bushnell should show valor in situations of this kind. To be too fearful of audience reaction is to fail the cause of music on the one hand, and actually a little uncomplimentary to the public on the other.

Now, from the purely practical point of view, Bushnell really had nothing whatsoever to fear. People in this community who wish to hear the famous orchestras of this country and from abroad have no recourse but to patronize the Bushnell symphony series. In this respect, the Bushnell is in a position of unassailable strength. True, there may be irate letters, comments, mutterings on occasion. The critics may yawp or yawn. But in the long run such frettings are insignificant, particularly since the generally conservative programing at the Bushnell makes such occasions rare in the first place.

In the second place, the Bushnell audiences are far from being 100 per cent chestnut-chewers. There are many inquiring musical minds among them who will give an unfamiliar work a hearing regardless of whether they end up liking it or not. They have a right to hear and judge, and I should think they would resent being coddled, spoon-fed or kept ignorant of the musical facts of life.

In any event, the Bushnell would be ill-advised to let itself be completely guided by audience reactions. We already have a sample right here at home of what happens when an audience gets a stranglehold on a musical operation. Once an audience demands a certain kind of program, rigor mortis sets in. The audience will listen to nothing else, and ironically ends up being sick to death of its own chosen fare. Then comes the end.

Thus, whatever the historic merits of Mr. Diamond's symphony may be, it was musically therapeutic to perform it here. Audiences need to be tickled up occasionally. Bach had the right text, "Sleepers, Awake!" Those who liked the Diamond work added to their store of pleasure. Those who yelled in wrath or pain at least know they're not dead yet.

But beyond this, all the keepers of music here share a responsibility to art as well as audiences. This is a ministry which requires the heart for new or unfamiliar works, not especially because "we owe something to contemporary composers," but because in the popular phrase, music is a many-splendored thing and must be heard whole as well as steadily.

Such a show of principle is particularly the province of non-commercial groups. Commercial promoters of the arts are already hog-tied. They have no option but to cater to the public taste and only too often they feel no compunction about doing so. Mass communication at the hands of commerce is logically if unhappily aimed at [illegible] fore seld[illegible] requirem[illegible]

The pu[illegible] the large[illegible] the oblig[illegible] by the bo[illegible] willy-nilly [illegible] arts, thus [illegible] am not s[illegible] the Bush[illegible] lems, that [illegible] an econo[illegible] am I so s[illegible] that its m[illegible] us the n[illegible] from tim[illegible] why I wa[illegible] easiness [illegible] But to g[illegible] the arts [illegible] certain a[illegible] lowed to [illegible]

THE NATION
April 6, 1957

DAVID DIAMOND'S SIXTH Symphony was brought to Carnegie Hall recently by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It proved to be a searching, but not particularly "pretty" piece. Certainly, it was far removed from the composer's earlier, gentler music, and I am not at all sure that Diamond has subdued the insurgencies of this later style. The composition has the earmarks of a craftsman's revolt. The old tools have been tossed aside, but the new ones do not yet function smoothly. When they are made to do so, I suspect that Diamond's music will flow with the same internal strength, but with a bit more graciousness. It is evident that he seeks to make a succinct, original statement within a large format. And that, in itself, is admirable.

One of the most impressive aspects of this Symphony is the organic manner in which the composer has stated and employed his materials. Nothing gives the impression of being mere decoration or seasoning. The melodic material comes in great, organized gasps—almost brutal in their avoidance of surface prettiness. The colors (which are not always fetching in themselves) are flung onto the canvas in gobs and made to function structurally rather than cosmetically. The result is vaguely expressionistic, and despite the lack of actual exterior resemblance, I had the feeling that Diamond's message was not entirely removed from that of Berg's Wozzek. The last of the three movements is less convincing than the others, partly because a certain monotony of technique (and, perhaps, listener-fatigue) has set in by that time. But the explosive opening movement and its poignant successor are rich in substance and belligerently honest.

The Mozart A Major Clarinet Concerto, which followed the Diamond work, was played by Gino Cioffi of the Boston Orchestra's woodwind section. Neither it nor the Franck D Minor Symphony were up to the visiting group's usual standards. The latter work, particularly, was objectified to a degree which robbed it of all mystery. Unsentimental the playing was, and texturally clear. But it was also rather disenchanted. Franck emerged in certain spots as a sort of second-rate Mendelssohn; slightly banal, and tinged with Brahms and Wagner. Surely he was more distinctive than that.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
MAR 21 1957

Music: Diamond's 6th Symphony

Boston Symphony Back at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Equipped with superlative sound and technique, the symphonic pride of Boston was back in Carnegie Hall last night for the first of its monthly quota of local concerts.

Led by Charles Munch, the orchestra once more demonstrated the rich tone and compact strength that have given it worldwide prestige. This orchestra can make anything sound like a million dollars.

Even if David Diamond's latest sympohny wasn't quite in those upper-brackets, it was given every attribute of tone and technique to make it appear so. The composer had every reason to bless the man and orchestra he wrote it for.

Local Premiere.

This was Mr. Diamond's Sixth Symphony—a New York premiere and the product of an intensely agitated mood. It is music of a gnarled and tortured strength, fitful and jagged in rhythm, often clamorous in effect.

There is little room in this music for rest and relaxation. The cycle of themes zigzags back and forth in nervous, abrupt lunges, and the whole orchestra is kept on its toes by a ceaseless tension.

Though by no means Mr. Diamond's most attractive score, the symphony shows him at his boldest in bending old forms to suit tough new material. It certainly gave the Bostonians a chance to show off their volume.

Noble Legacy.

The rest and relaxation came with the next number, Mozart's Clarinet Concerto—the last concerto for any instrument written by the Salzburg genius and one of his noblest legacies in the whole domain of beauty.

The orchestra gave it crisp attention, while its first clarinetist, Gino Cioffi, unreeled the solo line as if born to its sweet and timeless elegance. The very breath of Mozart seemed on the playing.

Franck's D Minor Symphony further attested the power of this orchestra and the man who conducts it.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 22 1957

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By PAUL HENRY LANG

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Gino Cioffi, clarinetist.
The program:
Symphony No. 6.....David Diamond (first N. Y. performance)
Concerto for Clarinet in A major, K. 622 Mozart
Symphony in D minor.....Franck

The Boston Symphony, by tradition a friend of the American composer, opened its concert Wednesday night at Carnegie Hall with the first New York performance of David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. To the critic a new work is a very serious affair and I dread to listen to a major novelty without adequate preparation and study—it is easy to ignore secrets and pass over subtleties without noticing them. I regret to say the new symphony held no secrets and concealed no subtleties.

Wednesday night, with Margarita Zambrana as the vocal soloist.

After a rhapsodic start, the first movement embarked upon what seemed a logical development of a none too engaging idea. Everything went well, but the piece is coarse-grained and garish because of the lavish use of the heavy percussion and deliberately shrill writing for the brasses. In particular, Mr. Diamond uses a very annoying percussion instrument that sounds like a cap pistol which, one of my learned colleagues tells me, goes by the name of "slapstick." Why all this noise?

The slow movement moves by fits and starts. For isolated moments one is comforted by a mood of lyricism, but the mood is constantly threatened by shrill interlopers.

Noise, noise, and more noise. This is 1957, why must so many of our composers still use every pot, kettle, tub, pipe, and anvil that can be whacked with a stick? I could not concentrate on the music because of this constant racket. Even so, it seemed to me that the third movement was the weakest of this rather insignificant symphony.

Mr. Diamond is a good composer who has given us some very fine works, but the prevailing impression this one created was ugliness of sound. Mr. Munch and his men gave the symphony a conscientiously prepared and sympathetic performance.

• • •

As its Koechel number—622—shows, Mozart's clarinet concerto is among his most mature works. Its luminous clarity, limpid melody, and transcendental beauty are extraordinary even for Mozart. This concerto is, indeed, the epitome of classicism, the work of a creative soul who found what ordinary mortals never even glimpse: absolute peace and transfiguration in his art.

David Diamond, whose Symphony No. 6 received its New York premiere Wednesday night.

What can the amateur psychologists who write about musicians do with this miracle of balance and heavenly assuredness? Did Mozart not write this work at a time when his life was nearing its sorrowful end? What stories can be fastened to this radiant song? None, because this is the very miracle of creation.

The performance did not do justice to the work. Gino Cioffi is a first class clarinetist who plays with a beautiful tone and nimble fingers, but he showed no comprehensive concept of the concerto. Every passage was cleanly played, but it was a passage such as he would play while sitting at his usual place in the orchestra; the wondrous piece did not glow.

Neither was the orchestra fully equal to its task. To be sure, this ensemble always plays well, but that is not enough for this transparent work in which every note must be accounted for.

After the intermission Mr. Munch and his orchestra settled down to the comfortable familiarity of Franck's D minor Symphony which they do superlatively, but this writer took the fat ninth chords for a solemn recessional and retired from the scene.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 135,309
MAR 24 1957

The Lively Arts—

The Stiff Upper Lip

By T. H. Parker

The management of the Bushnell Memorial was thrown into a bit of a tizzy last week, owing to the concert by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Some time previously, Mr. Munch had informed the Bushnell that he intended to play David Diamond's Sixth Symphony here, as part of the Boston orchestra's program. The Bushnell gave its okay to the proposal. Since the Diamond work had not been heard here, the Bushnell was buying a pig-in-a-poke (now, now, Mr. Diamond, that's just an old Yankee phrase), but as the program also listed the Franck Symphony, Bushnell apparently figured things would balance out, one modern unknown against one thrice-familiar and favorite oldtimer. Besides, who ever expected that the conservative Boston Symphony, or the Boston Symphony with its conservative type audience (as we like to think) would put a shocker in its repertoire?

Then, a fortnight ago, Mr. Munch played Mr. Diamond's composition in Boston. He got real results. The symphony apparently set the audience on its ear, while the Boston reviewers had some decided things to say about it. It did not take the news long to travel from Ghent to Aix and make the Bushnell management apprehensive. It is my understanding that Bushnell suggested Mr. Munch replace the Diamond work with something else for the Hartford concert, but to no avail.

So, there was nothing to do but prepare the Hartford audience to bite the bullet. And when the audience assembled on that tremulous evening last Tuesday, they found in their programs a brief and perceptive essay written by Fritz Mahler, conductor of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra, on the salutary effects of new musical experience.

★

The outcome of the concert has already been chronicled in the columns of The Courant, and it is not my intention to go over it in this Sunday piece. What I wish to say here is that I feel Bushnell should show valor in situations of this kind. To be too fearful of audience reaction is to fail the cause of music on the one hand, and actually a little uncomplimentary to the public on the other.

Now, from the purely practical point of view, Bushnell really had nothing whatsoever to fear. People in this community who wish to hear the famous orchestras of this country and from abroad have no recourse but to patronize the Bushnell symphony series. In this respect, the Bushnell is in a position of unassailable strength. True, there may be irate letters, comments, mutterings on occasion. The critics may yawp or yawn. But in the long run such frettings are insignificant, particularly since the generally conservative programing at the Bushnell makes such occasions rare in the first place.

In the second place, the Bushnell audiences are far from being 100 per cent chestnut-chewers. There are many inquiring musical minds among them who will give an unfamiliar work a hearing regardless of whether they end up liking it or not. They have a right to hear and judge, and I should think they would resent being coddled, spoon-fed or kept ignorant of the musical facts of life.

In any event, the Bushnell would be ill-advised to let itself be completely guided by audience reactions. We already have a sample right here at home of what happens when an audience gets a stranglehold on a musical operation. Once an audience demands a certain kind of program, rigor mortis sets in. The audience will listen to nothing else, and ironically ends up being sick to death of its own chosen fare. Then comes the end.

Thus, whatever the historic merits of Mr. Diamond's symphony may be, it was musically therapeutic to perform it here. Audiences need to be tickled up occasionally. Bach had the right text, "Sleepers, Awake!" Those who liked the Diamond work added to their store of pleasure. Those who yelled in wrath or pain at least know they're not dead yet.

But beyond this, all the keepers of music here share a responsibility to art as well as audiences. This is a ministry which requires the heart for new or unfamiliar works, not especially because "we owe something to contemporary composers," but because in the popular phrase, music is a many-splendored thing and must be heard whole as well as steadily.

Such a show of principle is particularly the province of non-commercial groups. Commercial promoters of the arts are already hog-tied. They have no option but to cater to the public taste and only too often they feel no compunction about doing so. Mass communication at the hands of commerce is logically if unhappily aimed at quantity. In quality it therefore seldom rises above the elemental requirements of entertainment.

★

The pure Pierians, however, have the larger opportunity, which is to say the obligation, to pull the public up by the bootstraps, both for the public's willy-nilly sake and the sake of the arts, thus doing everyone a favor. I am not so simpleminded as to think the Bushnell faces no financial problems, that its opportunities do not have an economic frame of reference. Nor am I so short of memory as to imply that its management has not afforded us the new, strange and wonderful from time to time. It has. That is why I was surprised to see such uneasiness over the Diamond symphony. But to go onward and upward with the arts calls for persistence, and a certain amount of chips must be allowed to fall where they may.

THE NATION
April 6, 1957

which the composer has stated and employed his materials. Nothing gives the impression of being mere decoration or seasoning. The melodic material comes in great, organized gasps—almost brutal in their avoidance of surface prettiness. The colors (which are not always fetching in themselves) are flung onto the canvas in gobs and made to function structurally rather than cosmetically. The result is vaguely expressionistic, and despite the lack of actual exterior resemblance, I had the feeling that Diamond's message was not entirely removed from that of Berg's Wozzek. The artist jury selects pictures that is less connsiders to offer contemporary solu- ly because to the problem always facing the ique (and,

—the problem of presenting an idea set in by sual terms. e opening
th exhibitions contain many fine successor
s. Their common weakness lies in elligerently frequent exploitation of tricks—
s of air brush, knife, spatter and rinet Con-formulae of drawing and of stylis- Diamond vocation—employed more for their offi of the sake than for any useful expressive d section.
ose. Tricks such as these are what D Minor both shows what they have of an visiting cial" aspect. For, just as we apply he latter tingly "academic" to painting which fied to a undue reverence to things learned mystery.
chool, so "official" has come to was, and y the incontinent exploitation of so rather onable novelty. n certain Mendelsged with he was

Ancient Instruments Amuse Kids

BRIEF organ recital is given by Mrs. Elizabeth G. Derby, supervisor of the Lincoln public schools, during Symphony Hall tour. Instrumental students and members of school band took trip.

SERPENT HORNS get plenty of attention during inspection of Symphony Hall's old instrument room by students from Lincoln schools. Left to right are Kay Wilson, 10; Kathy Norton, 11; Mittie Parish, 9; Nat Taylor, 11; Bruce Billings, 13, and Craig Donaldson, 12.

Spot Shots

"POCKET VIOL" attracts Christopher Hall, 10½, (front row, third from left). Listening are (front row) Warren Flint, 11, and Ephraim Flint, 9. Standing in rear are Martha Norton, 13, and David Rogers, 13. In background is bass viol used by the late Serge Koussevitsky.

TANYA PERTZOFF, 11, entertains her companions with a selection on the 18th Century Trompette Marine, ancestor of the modern bull fiddle. Kneeling, left to right, are Chris Langton, 8; Tam Hall, 9; Standing, left to right, are Robin Culver, 11; Tanya, and Bruce Adler, 11.

QUINTET for early woodwinds is played by (left to right) John Carman, 10; Christopher Roberts, 13; Alan Donaldson, 11; John Sisson, 10, and Roger Bergen, 11.

GORDON DONALDSON, 12, demonstrates centuries-old hurdy gurdy to (left to right) Renee Schlaifer, 12; Judy Travers, 11, and Timothy Taylor, 12. Most of old instruments are part of Symphony's Cersadesus Collection.

MARY LOU FOLEY, 9, (right) strikes a note on ancient Hungarian cembalom. Listening (left to right) are Johnny Marchetti, 13; Richard Myer, 12, and Sandy Durnan, 11.

Ancient Instruments Amuse Kids

GORDON DONALDSON, 12, demonstrates centuries-old hurdy gurdy to (left to right) Renee Schlaifer, 12; Judy Travers, 11, and Timothy Taylor, 12. Most of old instruments are part of Symphony's Cersadesus Collection.

MARY LOU FOLEY, 9, (right) strikes a note on ancient Hungarian cen[illegible]. Listening (left to right) are Johnny Marchetti, 13; Richard Myer, 12, an[illegible]dy Durnan, 11.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (Evening)
Circ. D. 200,797
MAR 22 1957

The Week's Music

By George Kent Bellows

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Baltimore last night after an absence of nearly a quarter of a century, and gave one of the most electrifying concerts of the season under the direction of their permanent conductor, Charles Munch.

Their program comprised two symphonies, Beethoven's Fourth and Brahms's First, which opened and closed the concert. The other work was Ravel's second suite from his ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

It was obvious from the outset that it has been far too long since music lovers here have had the chance to hear the glories of this magnificent ensemble.

Not only has it been one of the unique organizations in the history of American music, but it has become one of the great orchestras of the world.

It is our oldest permanent orchestra, for although the New York Philharmonic was founded earlier, it was for years only a co-operative venture. It was due entirely to the artistic standards and excellent playing of the Boston Symphony that other groups in the country realized that in order to exist, they too had to be geared along similar lines.

ALTHOUGH many remember Mr. Munch's appearance here some years ago with the French Orchestra, an event which is still the talk of the town, last night was the first opportunity to hear him at the head of a group that has become his own.

It was an experience not to be forgotten, not only from the standpoint of his penetrating musicianship, but also because of his ability to produce such a wide variety of sumptuous colors, all of which were within the bounds of impeccable taste.

For the most part his conducting technique consists of small gestures and the slightest indication of entrances or releases.

But when he desires to enlarge a phrase to build a climax, he never hesitates to show his wishes with the most violent gestures.

The joy of hearing Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony is that each work sounds exactly as it should sound. Beethoven is as different from Brahms as both are from Ravel.

The Beethoven Fourth was splendid. The orchestra played with a restraint and an economy of means that perfectly suited Beethoven's compositions of this period, those works which came between the titanic "Eroica" and the powerful Fifth Symphony.

In those days the orchestra itself had not grown to the proportions of those at the time Brahms began to write for them, and how wise of Mr. Munch to not let his hearers lose sight of that fact.

COMING to the Ravel Suite, it was as though a great revolving stage swung around and we were in the midst of the Twentieth Century, when Paris had become the musical center of Europe and the great composers of the day vied with each other in writing some of their finest music for the Ballet Russe.

"Daphnis and Chloe" is by now as familiar to us as the Washington Monument, but last night Mr. Munich made us think we were hearing it for the first time.

Its multiplicity of detail has never seemed as clear, its tonal fragments as exquisitely played. But it was the final dance which brought down the house, with its blazing colors and dazzling sounds.

The closing Brahms symphony was yet another aural feast, an unorthodox interpretation, but one that Mr. Munich made as believable as everything else that he did.

For him Brahms is a human being, and his music is neither dry nor pompous. He does not hesitate to push his climaxes to bake his point, yet always he remains within the bounds of reason and good taste.

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER
Circ. D. 21,585
MAR 21 1957

Members Trace Evolution Of Symphony Orchestras

The study of the symphony orchestras throughout the United States was continued at the meeting of the Woman's Reading Club Tuesday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. George Hutto. Mrs. John Illges and Mrs. Allen Jones were cohostesses.

"The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra" was the subject of the paper given by Mrs. Esther McCormick.

"This orchestra," said Mrs. McCormick, "under Anatol Dorati, musical director, was a logical development in a community which, throughout its history, had a deep appreciation of music."

"Before the city became incorporated back in 1851, glee clubs and singing schools already were matters of course and the music being produced, as one historian said, "was strangely genteel for a frontier town."

Mrs. McCormick also stated that "From the beginning, the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra has had such conductors as Emil Oberhoffer, Artur Bodansky, Albert Coates, Walter Damrosch, Henry Verbrugghen, and Bruno Walter. Where ever music is played throughout the world the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and Anatol Dorati are known."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the subject of Miss Latimer Watson's paper.

The orchestra was the subject of Miss Latimer Watson's paper.

The orchestra was organized in 1881 through the generosity of a Boston banker, Mr. Higginson, who gave a million dollars for the purpose.

Miss Watson, on a visit to Tanglewood, Mass., heard the first concert there conducted by Charles Munch, the present conductor. The concert was dedicated to Dr. Kousvitzky, who brought to the Boston Symphony what many consider the highest peak of perfection in orchestral music.

The Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center claim some of this generations most famous men at the heads of different departments, such as Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department; Piatigorsky, head of chamber music and Leonard Bernstein and Stanley Chappell, guest conductors.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
MAR 21 1957

This Is No Gag! Kaye Will Direct Boston Symphony

I'll let you in on a little secret," said Danny Kaye to his audience at the Colonial Theater Tuesday night.

"How many of you go to symphony?"

Many hands were raised.

"I'm going to conduct the Boston Symphony in a Pension Fund benefit Wednesday night, Apr. 3. I hope you will all be there."

The applause was deafening. Some didn't believe it. Danny Kaye is a serious man who gets paid for being funny. So you never can tell when he is serious. But a checkup proved everything is on the up and up, or down and down, since a downbeat starts an orchestra going.

DANNY KAYE

Continued from the First Page

August Symphony Hall admits it has let its hair down. At an extra-special open rehearsal April 3 Danny will contribute his services for the Orchestra's pension fund.

Say Symphony Hall trustees:

"Between 7 and 8:30 p.m., Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

This will not be the first, and certainly not the last time that Danny Kaye will have conducted a symphony orchestra. He has done it in Los Angeles, Philadelphia and elsewhere. In fact, he knows Eugene Ormandy well enough to call him "Gene".

It will be Charley and Danny in Symphony Hall in a week or so.

And just in case you are in a hurry:

TICKETS WILL NOT GO ON SALE AT SYMPHONY HALL BOX OFFICE UNTIL NEXT MONDAY. Protect yourself in the stampede.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
MAR 21 1957

Danny Kaye to Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON, March 21 (INS)—Symphony Hall anticipates a "remarkable" program April 3 when comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the famed orchestra.

The program will be staged in behalf of the orchestra's pension fund. Symphony Hall trustees announced, "Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept and responsibility."

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564
MAR 21 1957

DANNY KAYE TO CONDUCT SYMPHONY UNIT

BOSTON, March 21 (UP) —Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 13,684
MAR 21 1957

Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (U.P.)—Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 21 1957

Danny Kaye to Appear With Boston Symphony

The debut of the young American conductor, Danny Kaye, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place Wednesday evening, April 3. He will make a guest conducting appearance at an extra-special Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall, for which he has generously agreed to contribute his services for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Between 7 o'clock and 8:30 he will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility.

Tickets will go on sale on Monday morning at the Symphony Hall box office. No telephone orders will be accepted.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
MAR 21 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Symphony April 3

A Symphony Hall spokesman confirmed last night what Danny Kaye told his Colonial Theater audience—that the comedian will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pension Fund benefit concert Wednesday night, April 3.

Kaye will take to the podium between 7 and 8:30 p.m., in an open rehearsal. A statement from Symphony Hall said Kaye would "present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 30,719
MAR 21 1957

Fiddles To Obey Mr. Danny Kaye

BOSTON (INS) — Symphony Hall anticipates a "remarkable" program April 3 when comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the famed orchestra.

The program will be staged in behalf of the orchestra's pension fund. Symphony Hall trustees announced:

"Between 7 and 8:30 p.m., Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
MAR 21 1957

Symphony Takes On Maestro Danny Kaye

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is considered capable of coping with anything, will have a chance to prove it April 3.

Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct a Pension Fund benefit concert on that evening.

A statement from Symphony Hall said that Kaye would present at the open rehearsal "a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
MAR 21 1957

Actor Danny Kaye Will Take Podium—BSO Fingers Crossed

Danny Kaye

BOSTON (UP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039
MAR 21 1957

Kaye To Conduct Symphony April 3

BOSTON (UP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
MAR 19 1957

AROUND BOSTON

Danny Kaye to Lead Hub Symphony Fete

By GEORGE CLARKE

IT'S NEWS TO REPORT that there's a whisper around to the effect that Danny Kaye, the one and only, is to be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a special concert for the Musician's Pension Fund. Should it eventuate, it won't be a brand new thing for Danny—he did it some time ago in Philadelphia with the Philadelphia Symphony and it came out all right.

In the meantime, it is [illegible] to report that his gross for the first week at the Colonial theater was $47,100, just $900 short of [illegible] sell-out, with much of that sum taken up [illegible], passes, etc., including some seats which [illegible] good and generally aren't sold at all.

He's due in Hollywood [illegible] picture commitment, so may extend his [illegible] here only by one week to allow a couple of weeks rest before going before the cameras.

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625
MAR 21 1957

Danny Kaye Will Conduct Symphony

BOSTON, March 21 (UP) — Boston Symphony orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
MAR 21 1957

Danny Strictly On His Own

Boston — (UP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall, where the concert will be given, issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005
MAR 21 1957

KAYE TO CONDUCT

BOSTON. — (UP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3. Officials of Symphony Hall, where the concert will be given, issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

MAR 21 1957

Kaye Conducts Boston Symphony

Boston — (UP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert Apr. 3, at Symphony Hall.

Kaye will "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility," a spokesman announced.

Journal (e)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 9,091

MAR 21 1957

Danny Kaye Will Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON (UP)— Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,485

MAR 21 1957

Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony

Boston, March 21—(UP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

MAR 21 1957

Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON—(UP) — Boston Symphony orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kay would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,840

MAR 21 1957

Kaye to Conduct

Boston (UP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesman today confirmed a report that Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3.

Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply canot accept any responsibility."

Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 5,435

MAR 21 1957

* * * * *

Boston (UP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3. Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 2,085

MAR 21 1957

Boston (UP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra spokesmen today confirmed a report that comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra in a benefit concert April 3. Officials of Symphony Hall where the concert will be given issued a statement saying Kaye would "conduct a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

* * * * *

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAR 23 1957

Kaye to Play Own Show Apr. 3 After Symphony Stint

Danny Kaye said last night that his appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening, April 3, will not interfere with his regular performance at the Colonial Theatre that night.

One of the most versatile performers in his field, Kaye heads an all-star International Review at the theater until Apr. 6, in a pre-Broadway engagement.

Trustees of the Boston Symhony said Kaye will conduct the orchestra during a 1½-hour special rehearsal at Symphony Hall starting at 7 p. m.

Proceeds of the evening will be turned over to the orchestra's Pension Fund, they said.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

MAR 23 1957

Kaye to Lead Symphony

The debut of the young American conductor, Danny Kaye, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Wednesday evening, April 3.

He will make a guest conducting appearance at an extra-special Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall for which he has generously agreed to contribute his services for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Between 7:00 and 8:30 p. m. he will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available.

Tickets will go on sale on Monday at the Symphony Hall box office. No telephone orders will be accepted.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,496

MAR 23 1957

Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra April 3, and officials have stated that they can accept no responsibility for the benefit performance. Perhaps not, but one thing they can be assured — there will be little difficulty in getting a full house.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

MAR 24 1957

Danny Kaye to Lead Symphony Rehearsal

The debut of the young American conductor, Danny Kaye, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Wednesday evening, April 3. He will make a guest conducting appearance at an extra-special Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall for which he has generously agreed to contribute his services for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Between 7:00 and 8:30 p.m. he will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility.

Tickets will go on sale tomorrow morning at the Symphony Hall Box Office. No telephone orders will be accepted.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

MAR 24 1957

What's This?

The debut of the young American conductor, Danny Kaye, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Wednesday evening, April 3. He will make a guest conducting appearance at an extra-special Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall for which he has generously agreed to contribute his services for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Between 7 and 8:30 p.m. he will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility.

Tickets will go on sale tomorrow morning at the Symphony Hall box office. No telephone orders will be accepted.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 23 1957

Maestro Kaye

The choice of Mr. Danny Kaye as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be welcomed by the musical community here. Although best-known for his Tschaikowsky, Mr. Kaye commands a vast repertory. If he did not exist Satie would have had to invent him.

As anyone knows who has heard Mr. Kaye, he exhibits every refinement of a good conductor. His accelerandi, rubati, ritardandi and expression are unimpeachable; the infinite shading of accents, tonal color, crescendi, diminuendi, portamenti, glissando, vibrato, the slightest pianissimo and the loudest forte lie within his scope.

We await his Pension Fund program with impatience. Symphony Hall assumes no responsibility but surely he should include "The Afternoon of a Faun" and, perhaps, in view of his UN work with children, "Danny Boy." Mr. Kaye's province does not lie as far apart from music as one might suppose.

For there is a German proverb that states, bad men don't sing. Neither do they c o n d u c t. Welcome, Maestro Kaye!

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

MAR 26 1957

DANNY KAYE'S DAY APRIL 3

Although Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a special Pension Fund open rehearsal April 3, regular performances of the Danny Kaye International Show will be held at the Colonial Theater April 3 at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m.

Kaye will conduct the Symphony Orchestra between 7 and 8:30 p. m., presenting "a remarkable program for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

The multiple-talented Danny has conducted symphony orchestras in Los Angeles, Philadelphia and elsewhere.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 23 1957

Kaye to Play Own Show Apr. 3 After Symphony Stint

Danny Kaye said last night that his appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening, April 3, will not interfere with his regular performance at the Colonial Theatre that night.

One of the most versatile performers in his field, Kaye heads an all-star International Review at the theater until Apr. 16, in a pre-Broadway engagement.

Trustees of the Boston Symhony said Kaye will conduct the orchestra during a 1½-hour special rehearsal at Symphony Hall starting at 7 p. m.

Proceeds of the evening will be turned over to the orchestra's Pension Fund, they said.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAR 26 1957

Two Shows by Danny Kaye April 3 Though He'll Also Conduct BSO

Although Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony at a special open rehearsal at Symphony Hall, Wednesday, April 3, for the benefit of the Pension Fund, at 7 p.m., regular performances of the Danny Kaye International Show will be given at the Colonial Theatre that day at 2:30 and 8:30.

Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony between 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Symphony Hall says: "Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Danny has conducted symphony orchestras in Los Angeles, Philadelphia and elsewhere.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

MAR 26 1957

Kaye Specialties For Symphony

Danny Kaye's conducting chore at Symphony Hall, Apr. 3, will not interfere with the regular performance of the Danny Kaye International Show at the Colonial Theater on that particular Wednesday at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m.

The superlatively talented Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a special open rehearsal for the benefit of the Pension Fund in Symphony Hall between 7 and 8:30 p. m. on Wednesday, Apr. 3.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 26 1957

Two Shows by Danny Kaye April 3 Though He'll Also Conduct BSO

Although Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony at a special open rehearsal at Symphony Hall, Wednesday, April 3, for the benefit of the Pension Fund, at 7 p.m., regular performances of the Danny Kaye International Show will be given at the Colonial Theatre that day at 2:30 and 8:30.

Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony between 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Symphony Hall says: "Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Danny has conducted symphony orchestras in Los Angeles, Philadelphia and elsewhere.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 26 1957

Busy Danny Kaye

Although Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony at a special open rehearsal in Symphony Hall Wednesday night, April 3, at 7 o'clock for the benefit of the Pension Fund, regular performances of the Danny Kaye International Show will be held at the Colonial Theater Wednesday, April 3, with matinee and evening performances at 2:30 and 8:30. Mr. Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony between 7 and 8:30.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

MAR 21 1957

CONDUCTOR Charles Munch, right, of Boston Symphony, and Conductor Robert Brawley of Hartt Schola Cantorum, discuss program for Schweitzer Benefit Concert Mar. 25. [Times.

Schweitzer Concert Slated Here Wins Munch Plaudits

The program for the Schweitzer Benefit Concert scheduled for Monday night at Bushnell Memorial, was given a professional pat on the back by Conductor Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the city Tuesday night for a performance of the Boston orchestra, Mr. Munch consulted with Robert Brawley, conductor of the Hartt Schola Cantorum. The latter and the Hartt Symphony will combine their talents to present the Schweitzer program.

Mr. Munch expressed great interest in the fact that the two local musical organizations will perform the Samuel Barber setting of "The Prayers of Kierkegaard," commissioned by the Boston Symphony and given its world premiere under the baton of Mr. Munch in Boston in December 1954.

Plaudits were also given by Mr. Munch to the artistry of Adele Addison, guest artist with the Cantorum, who has also sung with the Boston orchestra many times, and the rest of the program. The latter will also include the Villa-Lobos "Bachianas Brasilieras" for soprano and eight cellos, to be sung by Miss Addison, with Dorothy Fidlar as solo cellist.

The program here is being sponsored by the Friends of Albert Schweitzer, world-famed philosopher, doctor, missionary and organist. Mr. Munch also has a personal interest, being related by marriage to Dr. Schweitzer and having grown up with him in the same town in Alsace-Lorraine. When the father of the Boston conductor led sacred concerts at the cathedral in Gunsbach, Germany, the organist was Albert Schweitzer.

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
MARCH 22, 1957

Music Notes

Boston Symphony

By WELDON WALLACE

The audience at the Lyric Theater last night was swept off its feet, and to its feet, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing under the direction of Charles Munch.

This orchestra is an instrument of highly developed capacities. It performed in complete empathy with Mr. Munch, following unerringly his often individual concepts of phrasing and tempi.

The program listed three works, but so far as we were concerned the evening belonged to one composition, the suite No. 2 from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

It was as if, after hearing it all these years, we had suddenly discovered that this score is a work of three dimensions and not two. That is not quite accurate, for the most convincing previous account of this music was given us by Mr. Munch when he visited Baltimore with the French National Orchestra.

Are Differences

There are certain differences between his interpretations on the former occasion and last night. We will come to that presently.

Meanwhile, let us examine the qualities of Mr. Munch's evocation of this music with his Boston orchestra.

Inner voices, small values, minute tracings, came out with a clarity and a variety of timbre which we never dreamed were inherent in the score.

At certain points, Mr. Munch emphasized the rhythm in a way to give the music a strength we had not suspected.

Gathering Power

The conductor made the most of those passages where the theme rolls upward from the depths, gathering power as it surges into a fortissimo and bursts in a shower of tone.

In these crescendi Mr. Munch relied more on the physical impact of sound than he did on a purely musical realization. This was true, also, of some other passages, particularly for brass.

In this his interpretation differed from his rendition with the French orchestra.

Musically we prefer his old interpretation, but we hasten to add that the new one justified itself on its own terms by displaying the full resources of a great orchestra in a way to create an atmosphere of tense excitement—like the finale of a great horse race.

Overall Style

The overall style of this interpretation combined intellectual control and the atmosphere of a pagan rite.

Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4" opened the program. This was volatile and polished and all very pleasant, though we feel other conductors bring out the Geist of the music more convincingly.

As for the Geist of the Brahms "Symphony No. 1," which closed the program, it would have had a hard time keeping up with Mr. Munch's erratic tempi. He applied the methods here that he had used in the Ravel, but what succeeded admirably in Ravel merely unsettled the Brahms.

Mr. Munch was not content to let the music itself convey the feeling of crescendo and diminuendo but speeded up the tempo or slowed it down, as the case might be.

He was overliberal in his interpretation of the direction espressivo, tending to sentimentalize the slow passage; while in the exultant moments he whipped up the speed sufficiently to overbalance the music.

For all the superb qualities of the orchestra we regarded this Brahms as a failure.

Never mind. There had been the Ravel.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
Circ. D. 227,679

MAR 22 1957

CHARLES MUNCH CONDUCTS

Boston Symphony Orchestra Enthralls Lyric Audience

By HELEN A. F. PENNIMAN

An eager crowd thronged the Lyric last night, impatiently awaiting the appearance of Charles Munch, leading the Boston Symphony in its first Baltimore appearance in twenty-four years.

Not a few of this audience, sitting enthralled by the magic of the great ensemble, were not even born at the time of its last visit. Yet more were still in kindergarten—and their reactions at this first experience, were ecstatic.

Nor were their elders less carried away. Such remarks as: "If heaven is like this, I'll be satisfied!"—"The most beautiful concert I've ever heard"—met the ear on every hand. We find ourselves perplexed—daunted—by any attempt at analysis.

PERHAPS Mr. Munch's secert is that he always seeks and brings out the poetic in each composer's work, without sacrificing any iota of harmonic balance or power of sentiment.

His interpretation of Ravel's Second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, stands as the ultimate in evocation, and certainly the opening "Lever du Jour" raises the spirit to a fresh vision of what the dawn can mean. A young flutist, a slim girl, was brought forward to share the applause, for her delicate piping.

As for the Brahms First Symphony, its programming was especially timely, for only a few months have passed since its eightieth birthday.

Mr. Munch led a notable performance. Throughout the dynamic range of which his rich-hued and powerful group is capable, there was not one note of heaviness.

From these immortal opening chords to the mystery of the finale's initial measures, through the imposing chorale theme to the glorious end, all was as it should be, and the audience could not tire of applauding and recalling Mr. Munch for curtain calls.

THE SAME applies to the opening symphony, the fourth of Beethoven. Admirably integrated, the work was illuminated by a kindled imagination, making its playful movements completely gracious and the Adagio replete with tender sentiment. The orchestra and Mr. Munch play beautifully together and we look forward to their speedy return, for another memorable occasion.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

MAR 24 1957

'Pause That Refreshes'

Styles Force Calorie Tally

By MARJORIE MILLS

Dieting; it's the sawdust trail of calorie counting if you want to wear the enchanting middie dresses and swirling chiffon cocktail dresses in the spring collections. (You'll see them in the Fashion Group's Import Showing tomorrow at the Sheraton Plaza luncheon. Also Dior's sou-wester hat.)

Women Are Talking About

Drop that snack habit. It's "the pause that refleshes."

* * *

Nancy Hale's article "The Dresses You Never Forget" in the current Harper's Bazaar is full of references to her Boston growing-up years. Garb for Winsor School, subscription dances at Eliot Hall, sub-deb dances at The Country Club, tea-dancing at Shepard's Colonial . . . Remember your frenzy to look like Garbo in "Flesh and the Devil," the wild longing to wear black velvet when nice girls must wear white tulle or taffeta? . . . Remember your first lipstick?

FISHER

"One couldn't spare the lash in extracting something black out of one's parents," she says. Social success hung on it. Also she admits in retrospect the mauve knee-length robe de style she loved desperately must really have been appalling. Her new book "Heaven and Hardpan Farm" is due out this spring.

* * *

Discovered Danny Kaye likes to cook. "I drive everybody in the kitchen crazy, splatter everything up but what I cook turns out pretty good," he says pridefully. He likes to try foreign dishes, eats the food of whatever country he's in and has been abroad six times in 11 months for the United Nation's International Children's Emergency Fund.

He conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra and will conduct the Boston Symphony April 3 in an open rehearsal for the benefit of the Pension Fund. Under his zany exterior, he's a serious musician. Also he's deadly earnest about UNICEF.

* * *

Eddie Fisher told us Princess Margaret came back twice when he was playing London in '55 to hear "Outside of Heaven" . . . a song of unrequited love. Her favorite now with Pearl Bailey at the Palace is "My Man."

Fisher, in dark blue English flannel dressing gown and black velvet slippers, breakfasted one morning at least last week on baked beans and brown bread, coffee and a glass of coke.

* * *

Lord Mayor Robert Briscoe's summing up of his wife's qualities last week in Boston could be the pattern for the good wife . . . "The mother of seven, she has been my faithful companion in all the ups and downs and troubles attaching to my hectic and abnormal career.

"She has great fondness for children, loves animals and birds; is very interested in flowers and does a lot of reading. She loves long walks, likes preparing good substantial meals. She's a normal, sensible woman." And then he beamed at his wife of 38 "hectic" years with warm affection.

* * *

Elizabeth Taylor Todd and husband Mike probably will come to Boston for the Benefit opening of "Around the World in 80 Days," April 10, Marion Bird told us. A member of the Board of the New England Baptist Hospital League, she saw a good deal of Elizabeth's father and mother recently in Palm Beach.

ELIZABETH

* * *

Heard the definition of a cocktail party? "Where they cut sandwiches and friends in little bits of pieces."

* * *

Been to any committee meetings lately? Here's a definition . . . "A group of the unfit, appointed by the unwilling, to do the unnecessary." (That's amusing but a little unkind.)

Sixteen MARCH 26, 1957

Martinon Wishes He'd Brought His Irish Symphony to Boston

By CYRUS DURGIN

If Jean Martinon had realized that Boston is a center of interest in Irish culture, he'd have brought along his "Hibernian Symphony" to play. But the Boston Symphony guest conductor this week didn't find out in time, the instrumental parts are in Europe, and now it is too late.

"I wish I had known!", exclaimed the dynamic little Frenchman in the conductor's room at Symphony Hall, after rehearsal yesterday. "You see, I wrote the 'Hibernian Symphony' because I was captivated by Irish folklore when I was conducting the orchestra in Dublin. I went there for about four seasons to conduct a number of concerts. I heard Irish tunes sung, and I heard street fiddlers play reels and jigs.

"So eventually, I decided I had to compose an Irish Symphony. I made my own themes, but I based them on melodies in old collections of Irish tunes, from modern recordings at Radio Eirann, and from what I had heard from local musicians. Yes, indeed, I wish I had known! I got to know the East coast of Ireland quite well. It is extraordinarly powerful and beautiful. I much enjoyed working in Dublin."

But Martinon is going to give us one of his own compositions, the "Hymn to Life" which he wrote after the last war in a burst of joyous feeling occasioned both by the birth of his son and the ending of hostilities. He had been a German prisoner of war, and during his captivity he had written poem strongly-felt music, among it "The Captives' Song," a setting of the 136th Psalm, and "Music of Exile," more or less a jazz piece based upon old French folksongs.

As a musician who had to earn his own living as he could in earlier years, Martinon played fiddle in jazz bands and conducted them.

"I still like to listen to jazz to amuse myself," he says, "but I like it in small doses. I think I like to have a drink while I listen, too."

Born in Lyons, educated there and in Paris, Martinon is now a little past 47, a short, lithe and pare man with quick eyes, a wide grin and a shock of unruly gray hair. First a violinist, he soon gave much of his time to composing, and after his wartime captivity he abandoned the stringed instrument in favor of conducting. Today he is conductor of the Lamoureux Orchestra in Paris, but he spends even more time "on the road" as guest leader than he does in the Parisian capital.

"There are too many orchestras in Paris," he says. "Too many orchestras and too much competition. You can't play the kind of program you want. We are poor and therefore have to make money, but now it seems as if you have to play Beethoven's Fifth Symphony every Sunday to get along. I don't like it!

"My composing I do in three months in Summertime, at a chalet facing Mt. Blanc in Switzerland. There I can think, read, compose and climb the mountains. No, I don't touch the violin anymore, but I do have what probably is the only instrument of its kind in the world. You name it. It's an under-sized viola, which I had five strings put on so it goes from the lowest viola string to the highest —E—on the violin. The bass is weak and the top shrill, but I use it only to practice bowings on, so I'll mark them correctly in the score."

Martinon's latest complete music is a setting of the entire "Song of Songs" from Solomon, for big orchestra, chorus and two vocal soloists.

Two Shows by Danny Kaye April 3 Though He'll Also Conduct BSO

Although Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony at a special open rehearsal at Symphony Hall, Wednesday, April 3, for the benefit of the Pension Fund, at 7 p.m., regular performances of the Danny Kaye International Show will be given at the Colonial Theatre that day at 2:30 and 8:30.

Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony between 7 and 8:30 p.m. and Symphony Hall says: "Mr. Kaye will present a remarkable program, the details of which are not at the moment available, and for which the management simply cannot accept any responsibility."

Danny has conducted symphony orchestras in Los Angeles, Philadelphia and elsewhere.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, MARCH 24, 1957.

BOSTON PLAYERS TURN VIRTUOSOS

Symphony's Concertmaster and Violist Play Solos in Carnegie Hall Concert

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

The Boston Symphony put some of its own men to work as soloists in yesterday afternoon's Carnegie Hall concert. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's first violist, was heard in the William Walton Viola Concerto. Then the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, played the violin solos in Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

Opening the program was the first Carnegie Hall performance of Mr. Walton's "Johannesburg Festival Overture." It is festive, all right: a lively mixture of Prokofieff, jazz and whatnot, knowingly orchestrated. In a way this piece d'occasion is a spoof, and quite an engaging one. It is short—about eight minutes long — and brilliantly orchestrated, and it bounces merrily along.

The Viola Concerto, dating from 1929, is, of course, a much more serious work. It even ends with a long, drawn-out pianissimo section that is anything but display. Conservatively written, melodious and expertly put together, the score holds its own very well.

Mr. de Pasquale gave the work a beautiful performance. He was master of a glowing tone that had all the characteristics needed for music like this. He also felt the romantic nature of the music, and his interpretation was on a large scale without ever becoming sloppy. Mr. de Pasquale has rhythmic alertness, and this rhythm always managed to keep a tensile quality in the melodic line.

The Strauss tone poem received the kind of virtuoso treatment one always expects from the Boston Symphony. But of all the Strauss tone poems (the last two always excepted) this has become the champion bore. Its battles, its loves, its reminiscences of earlier works—how dated they all sound! And, in addition, how vulgar!

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAR 28 1957

Jean Martinon Guest Conductor March 24th Symphony Hall

The first United States appearance of the young French conductor, Jean Martinon, will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on returning from its last tour of the season, which will take it out of town this coming week.

At the concerts on Friday afternoon, March 29, Saturday evening, March 30, Sunday afternoon, March 31 and Tuesday evening, April 2, Mr. Martinon will conduct the first performance at these concerts of Handel's Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 11, Schumann's First Symphony, and the United States premiere of his own composition, "Hymne a la Vie." The program will be closed with a performance of the Suite from the Ballet, "Firebird" by Igor Stravinsky.

Charles Munch will conduct the fifth concert in the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, March 26. Dr. Munch will perform the new Johannesburg Festival Overture of Sir William Walton, and the same composer's Viola Concerto with the Orchestra's principal viola, Joseph de Pasquale, as soloist. The second half of the program will contain three works of Richard Wagner: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Gotterdaemmerung" and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure."

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,991 - S. 855,847

MAR 25 1957

IN CARNEGIE HALL:

Munch Winds Up Visits With Walton and Strauss

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH chose a peculiar program to wind up the seasonal visits of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. Two works of Walton comprised the first half, Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" the last. Fortunately the orchestra and its soloist Joseph De Pasquale were in top form.

New to the audience was Walton's "Johannesburg Festival Overture," a festive piece full of good spirits and brilliant orchestration. Almost half of it sounded as though it had come right out of Prokofieff, the rest was definitely Walton. It started this concert well, and can probably serve similarly at many others.

The same composer's viola concerto gave De Pasquale a fine opportunity to prove himself a soloist of the first-rank. He drew a big, warm tone from the viola, played with admirable finesse, and persuaded the audience that this was music worth the listening. It was a pleasure to hear him. The concerto is a thoroughly professional job with more than a touch of sophistication.

With the Bostonians at their virtuoso best, the Strauss became tolerable. It is aging fast in the light of contemporary scores; Its musical rhetoric grows much less convincing. After this brilliant performance, it might be shelved for at least a decade.

* * *

did not offer too much variety in treatment: soon they began to sound all alike.

Arpad Sandor played his notably artistic accompaniments.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

MAR 24 1957

Boston Symphony

French Conductor Martinon Makes United States Debut

The United States debut of Jean Martinon as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week, following its final tour of the season will bring to the audiences of next Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Tuesday, Mar. 29, 30, 31 and Apr. 2, a young French musician of whom much has been heard in Europe and South America.

Conductor of the famous Lamoureux Concerts in Paris, where he has appeared also with its various other orchestras, he has been guest conductor in England, Yugoslavia, Poland, Chile, and, most recently, in Canada.

At the conservatories of his native Lyons, then Paris, he studied violin and composition. It was to composition that he came to give his chief allegiance, and in this subject was fortunate in having the noted composer, Albert Roussel, as his principal instructor.

WAR PRISONER

After producing a "Symphoniette" and his First Symphony, he became a prisoner of war in Germany. But he turned his captivity to account by deriving from it the inspiration for a number of deeply - felt compositions. An experiment in jazz rhythms, "Musique d'exile," also came of this experience.

In his Boston Symphony appearances Mr. Martinon will present for the first time in the United States a work written after his liberation in 1943, "Hymn to Life." It was inspired by the birth of his son. Of interest in view of the recent Hibernian festivities is the fact that his compositions include an "Irish" symphony.

Symphony Program

The program for all four of Mr. Martinon's concerts will be:

Handel, Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra in A major; Schumann, Symphony No. 1; Martinon, Hymne a la Vie; Stravinsky, Suite From the Ballet "The Firebird."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 24 1957

Boston Symphony Presents Walton and Strauss Works

By Francis D. Perkins

Sir William Walton and Richard Strauss shared the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, where the English composer's new "Johannesburg Festival Overture' and Viola Concerto prefaced "Ein Heldenleben." Joseph De Pasquale, the orchestra's first violist, was the soloist in the concerto, which had its second performance in this auditorium—the first played by William Primrose with the Philadelphia Orchestra thirteen years ago.

Sir William's new overture, introduced to New York in the Bostonians' Brooklyn Friday night, was composed to honor Johannesburg's seventieth anniversary, and was first played in that South African metropolis last September. It is lively, tuneful, with two dominating melodies, both unconventional, but the score is generally marked by a colorful conservatism. A polished performance realized much, if not all, of its festive spirit.

The Walton concerto, in which a brief and spirited movement separates two more meditative sections, is instrumentally graceful; the solo viola has a mainly lyric role; bustling and athletic measures are few. The principal themes are broad and well defined; their range and structure present the viola with music best suited to the illustration of its most characteristic and appealing timbres.

The prevailing moods of the first and third movements of this well knit score are inclined toward sobriety, despite their frequent tunefulness, but the work is not threatened by expressive monotony. The waxing emotional tension in the finale's episode for orchestra alone, followed by the viola's grave epilogic close, gave a sense of imaginative contrast. Mr. de Pasquale's playing was appealing in tone, technically deft and emotionally convincing; the orchestra provided well proportioned co-operation.

Mr. Munch and his musicians gave a generally very eloquent, rich-toned account of the Strauss tone poem, particularly in the imposing sweep of the opening measures and the sustained reflectiveness of the closing pages. The upper voices in the section where Strauss lampoons his critics might have had slightly more acerbity. Parts of "Ein Heldenleben," including the noisy battle section, seem dated nowadays; the caprice of the solo violin music, admirably played by Richard Burgin, is long drawn out. But the score also includes some of Strauss' most convincing pages.

The Boston Symphony, again under Mr. Munch, will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for its usual quota of five Wednesday night and five Saturday afternoon concerts.

Herald Tribune (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Republican
Circ. 340,462
MAR 25 1957

Boston Symphony Presents Walton and Strauss Works

By Francis D. Perkins

Sir William Walton and Richard Strauss shared the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, where the English composer's new "Johannesburg" Festival Overture" and Viola Concerto prefaced "Ein Heldenleben." Joseph De Pasquale, the orchestra's first violist, was the soloist in the concerto, which had its second performance in this auditorium—the first played by William Primrose with the Philadelphia Orchestra thirteen years ago.

Sir William's new overture, introduced to New York in the Bostonians' Brooklyn concert Friday night, was composed to honor Johannnesburg's seventieth anniversary, and was first played in that South African metropolis last September. It is lively, tuneful, with two dominating melodies, both unconventional, but the score is generally marked by a colorful conservatism. A polished performance realized much, if not all, of its festive spirit.

The Walton concerto, in which a brief and spirited movement separates two more meditative sections, is instrumentally graceful; the solo viola has a mainly lyric role; bustling and athletic measures are few. The principal themes are broad and well defined; their range and structure present the viola with music best suited to the illustration of its most characteristic and appealing timbres.

The prevailing moods of the first and third movements of this well knit score are inclined toward sobriety, despite their frequent tunefulness, but the work is not threatened by expressive monotony. The waxing emotional tension in the finale's episode for orchestra alone, followed by the viola's grave epilogis close, gave a sense of imaginative contrast. Mr. de Pasquale's playing was appealing in tone, technically deft and emotionally convincing; the orchestra provided well proportioned co-operation.

Mr. Munch and his musicians gave a generally very eloquent, rich-toned account of the Strauss tone poem, particularly in the imposing sweep of the opening measures and the sustained reflectiveness of the closing pages. The upper voices in the section where Strauss lampoons his critics might have had slightly more acerbity. Parts of "Ein Heldenleben," including the noisy battle section, seem dated nowadays; the caprice of the solo violin music, admirably played by Richard Burgin, is long drawn out.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 28 1957

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

REWARDING INNOVATIONS of the season are the Boston Symphony's invitation Dutch Treat luncheons for subscribers. The theme is "Know Your Orchestra." At each luncheon the guests hear informal talks by two musicians of contrasting careers. Many interesting personal facts thus divulged have given concert-goers a new insight into the remarkable qualities of the orchestra's members. Now that the orchestra is back from a week's tour, there'll be a luncheon tomorrow in the intriguing Old Instruments Room at Symphony Hall. Hostesses will be wives of two trustees, Mrs. Charles H. Stockton and Mrs. E. Morton Jennings. Invitations have been accepted by the following concert subscribers: Mrs. Stephen B. Ames, Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Arthur C. Comey, Miss Mabel G. Finlay, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. Basil Gavin, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mrs. G. Howard Perkins, the Thomas E. Proctors, the John L. Saltonstalls, Mrs. Raymond W. Stanley, Mrs. John B. Swift, Mrs. Howland Walter, Mrs. Langdon Warner and Mrs. Raymond L. Whitman.

A TREAT IS IN STORE for members of the Wine and Food Society of Boston this afternoon. There'll be a tasting of white Burgundies and oysters at the Ritz-Carlton. Among those who will attend are Joseph P. Marto, president of the Society, and Mrs. Marto, Dr. and Mrs. Donald MacPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Asa E. Phillips, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard S. West, Mr. and Mrs. Percival Gilbert, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Stebbins, Eliot Bicknell, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Howells, Mr. and Mrs. Vassar Pierce, Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Bering and Mrs. E. Sohier Welch.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

MAR 28 1957

Vincent Show Rollicking

By ROSE WALSH

Who would ever have thought, back in April, 1892, when the newly-formed Boston socialite Vincent Club timidly put on its first benefit show—a series of ten living tableaux—in the formal drawing room of Mrs. Alexander Cochrane's Commonwealth ave. home (before a strictly female audience) that 65 years later it would proudly present the excellent, fast-moving, entertaining and colorfully-costumed musical, "Fair Exchange" that opened last night at New England Mutual Hall. Fathers, husbands, sweethearts, sons and brothers made up more than half of the enthusiastic audience that laughed heartily at the goings-on in small town Tatterton, setting for the show.

Congratulations went to Joseph T. Ryerson, Vincent president, and Mrs. Samuel S. Drury, first vice-president, co-authors of the story and of many of the lyrics of the clever songs. The music-writing talent of Mrs. Edwin W. Hiam, Mrs. Stearns Poor, Mrs. Lewis S. Dabney, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. William Stanley Parker, Peggy Stuart and Wilhelmina M. Eaton came to light in such numbers as "Let 'Em Roll," "Can't Wait, Can't You See," "Ain't We Quaint," and "Beat the Drum for Tatterton."

Susan Saltonstall wrote the music for the "Jamboree" scene featuring the Corn Festival Dancers and the Tatterton girls and boys show the Hollywood movie troupe that moved into town on location some real "Rockin' and Rollin'" in Godley's Apothecary Shop. The "Husking Bee" and "On the Broadway Beat" add their share of rollicking fun to the production which continues through Saturday matinee and night performance for the benefit of Vincent Memorial Hospital.

Alfred Burke and Edward Thommen staged the show and Ruby Newman took care of the music.

Helping on the various committees are Mrs. Robert M. Jenney, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Miss Caroline Cole Hollingsworth, Mrs. E. Francis Bowditch, who transported the actual corn shocks for the country scene from Little Boar's Head; Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Jr., Mrs. Ralph E. Thompson, Jr., Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Gardner Sutton, Mrs. Joseph W. Wallace, Jr., Mrs. Edward Dane, Mrs. Richard V. Wakeman, Mrs. William J. Mixter, Jr., Miss Marian L. Minot and Mrs. R. Willis Leith, Jr.

MRS. HUGH C. DONAHUE, center, chairman for the Ace of Clubs Fashion-Luncheon at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel Tuesday, chats with Mrs. Richard T. Dennis, left and Mrs. Robert A. Driscoll of Milton about last minute arrangements.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S Bi-weekly invitation Dutch Treat luncheons for subscribers to the concerts have grown very popular with the music-lovers who enjoy the informal talks on "Know Your Orchestra," given by two musicians of contrasting careers. Tomorrow's luncheon in the intriguing Old Instrument Room at Symphony Hall will have Mrs. Charles H. Stockton and Mrs. E. Morton Jennings sharing hostess honors.

Planning to attend are Mrs. Stephen B. Ames, Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Arthur C. Comey, Mrs. Max Eisenberg, Miss Mabel G. Finlay, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. Basil L. Gavin, Miss Florence A. Gragg, Mrs. Julius Grossman, Mrs. William G. F. Harris, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. S. Merrill, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Saltonstall, Mrs. Richard S. West and many others.

ACE OF CLUBS MEMBERS and friends have invited guests to the club's elaborate Fashion-Luncheon Tuesday at 12:30 in the ballroom of the Sheraton Plaza Hotel. Proceeds will benefit St. Coletta's School in Hanover. Mrs. Hugh S. Donahue of West Newton, chairman, has appointed Mrs. Donald Foley in charge of ushers. Among her helpers will be Mrs. Charles J. Burke, Jr., Mrs. James K. Fitzpatrick, Mrs. Richard S. Herlihy, Miss Adeline Hintlian, Mrs. John E. Lynch, Jr., Mrs. John R. Mulcahy, Mrs. James F. Noonan, Mrs. William J. O'Sullivan, Mrs. John M. Slattery, Mrs. Philip E. Brickley and Mrs. James L. Wheton.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 28 1957

Symphony Friends

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering 4213, have contributed $152,760.94 to the orchestra. This represents an increase of $19,000 over the amount given last season, and of 334 new members of the Friends. In addition to these contributions, $9663.30 has been realized by the Symphony from ticket re-sales this season, $3825 from premium advertising, and $996 in pledges.

These figures were stated at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, by Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman. The report of the board of trustees was presented by trustee Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court Raymond S. Wilkins, on behalf of Henry B. Cabot, president of the board, who was unable to attend.

Dr. Perkins also talked about the added drive for new funds from the business community which, he said, "neither supplants nor minimizes the value of its many Friends, without whose gifts the Symphony would no longer be in existence."

Charles Munch, music director directed the Orchestra in the "Tannhaeuser" Overture and Bacchanale after the business meeting. Tea was served in the foyer.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1957

Society: Vincent Club Show First Night Sees Many Precedents Broken

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

GETTING TO KNOW THE PLAYERS in the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the invitation series of Dutch treat luncheons is the privilege given every two weeks to subscribers joining members of the orchestra and its staff before Friday afternoon concerts.

Mr. Charles H. Stockton and Mrs. E. Morton Jennings will be hostesses at tomorrow's luncheon in the Old Instrument Room, welcoming back the orchestra after a week's tour. Guests will include Mr. and Mrs. C. H. S. Merrill, Mrs. G. Howard Perkins, Mrs. Alexander S. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Saltonstall, Mrs. Raymond W. Stanley, Mrs. John B. Swift, Mrs. Howland Walter, Mrs. Langdon Warner, Miss Elizabeth R. Weld, Mrs. R. S. West, Mrs. Raymond L. Whitman, Mrs. Catherine Wodell.

Also Mrs. Stephen B. Ames, Mrs. Thomas P. Beal, Mrs. Arthur C. Comey, Mrs. Max Eisenberg, Miss Mabel G. Finlay, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. Basil L. Gavin, Miss Florence A. Gragg, Mrs. Julius Grossman, Mrs. William G. F. Harris, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey and Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 29 1957

Annual Meeting Held Of Symphony Friends

At the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Chief Justice Raymond S. Wilkins, a trustee of the orchestra, presented the report of the president of the board of trustees on behalf of Mr. Henry B. Cabot, who was unable to be present. Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the Friends of the Boston Symphony, reported that $152,760.94 has been contributed this season by 4,213 Friends, an increase of $19,000 over last season's total on the same date, with 334 new Friends so far during the 1956-57 season.

In addition to the contributions of $152,760.94, income has been received during the current season from ticket resale of $9,663.30, from premium advertisers of $3,825.00 and from pledges of $996.00.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,496

MAR 28 1957

$125,000 Donated For Boston Symphony

BOSTON (UP)—Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have contributed $125,760 to support of the orchestra this year.

Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the group, reported at the annual meeting yesterday that the Friends had contributed $19,000 more than the previous year.

He said the orchestra received $9,663 from ticket resales and pledges totaling almost $1,000.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAR 28 1957

Symphony Friends

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering 4213, have contributed $152,760.94 to the orchestra. This represents an increase of $19,000 over the amount given last season, and of 334 new members of the Friends. In addition to these contributions, $9663.30 has been realized by the Symphony from ticket re-sales this season, $3825 from premium advertising, and $996 in pledges.

These figures were stated at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, by Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman. The report of the board of trustees was presented by trustee Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court Raymond S. Wilkins, on behalf of Henry B. Cabot, president of the board, who was unable to attend.

Dr. Perkins also talked about the added drive for new funds from the business community, which, he said, "neither supplants nor minimizes the value of its many Friends, without whose gifts the Symphony would no longer be in existence."

Charles Munch, music director, directed the Orchestra in the "Tannhaeuser" Overture and Bacchanale after the business meeting. Tea was served in the foyer.

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 8,809

MAR 28 1957

BOSTON—Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have contributed $125,760 to support the orchestra this year.

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 7,091

MAR 28 1957

Boston Symphony Receives $125,760

BOSTON (UP)—Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have contributed $125,760 to support of the orchestra this year.

Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the group, reported at the annual meeting yesterday that the Friends had contributed $19,000 more than the previous year.

He said the orchestra received $9,663 from ticket resales and pledges totaling almost $1,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

Sunday Herald Tribune
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Republican
Circ. 528,253

MAR 24 1957

of Brazilian Music

by the Boston Symphony the next year. Florent Schmitt's sec

Program of Brazilian Music

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Heitor Villa-Lobos, the noted Brazilian composer who celebrated his seventieth birthday March 5, will offer three novelties when he conducts the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra this week. One is his own "Mandú-Carara," described as a "Cantata Profana"; its story, also by the composer, is based on legends of Brazil's Amazon region. It has not been heard here before with orchestra, but in a version for two pianos and percussion it was performed by the Schola Cantorum under Hugh Ross at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 23, 1948.

The Schola will again sing in the Philharmonic performances, and the High School of Music and Art is again supplying a children's chorus. This is Mr. Villa-Lobos' second Philharmonic-Symphony engagement; the first was in 1945.

The other Brazilian novelty in this program, Camargo Guarnieri's Abertura (or Overture) Concertante, was first played in Sao Paulo in 1942, and introduced to the United States by the Boston Symphony the next year. Florent Schmitt's second "Salammbo" Suite is taken from the veteran French composer's score for a French film based in Flaubert's novel which was first shown in Paris in 1925.

* * *

Symphonic Novelties

Virgil Thomson's orchestral version of nine organ chorale preludes by Brahms will be first performed tomorrow evening by the New Orleans Symphony. This is the second "tranquil work to be commissioned for this orchestra by Edward B. Benjamin; the first commission went to Paul Nordoff.

When Jean Martinon, French composer and conductor, makes his American debut with the Boston Symphony next Friday afternoon, his program will include the first performance in the United States of his "Hymne a la Vie," composed in 1945. Another conductorial debut with the Bostonians will be made by Danny Kaye Wednesday night, April 3, in Boston's Symphony Hall as a pension fund benefit. The management announces that it "simply cannot accept any responsibility" for what will be a remarkable program.

* * *

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,485

MAR 29 1957

Fiedler Going To Argentina

Boston, March 29—(UP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will fly to Argentina this week end to conduct a series of concerts.

Fiedler, accompanied by his wife, Ellen, will leave New York by plane at 12:30 a. m. Sunday, arriving in Buenos Aires Monday at 9 a. m.

In Buenos Aires Fiedler will conduct an orchestra composed of 90 Argentine musicians in six concerts.

Fiedler recently returned from a 70-day concert tour which took him and his pops orchestra to 68 cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAR 28 1957

Makarios Release Ordered by Britain

The World's Day
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Europe: Year-Long Exile Comes to an End

The British Government announced in Parliament today it has ordered the release of Archbishop Makarios, leader of the Cyprus movement for union with Greece, from his year-long exile in the Seychelle Islands.

Despite differences in their interpretations of the Hungarian revolt, Yugoslav and French Communists will support Premier Janos Kadar's Hungarian government, it was announced from Belgrade where French Communist delegates are meeting with Yugoslavs.

Employers of one million striking British workers today agreed for the first time to negotiate directly with union leaders on their demand for a 10 per cent wage increase.

Reports that oil deposits have been found in Andalusia, southern Spain, are being checked by government specialists. Rumored to cover some 40 square miles near the town of Ubeda, the deposits would be the first to be found in Spain.

Bay State: Fiedler to Conduct in Buenos Aires

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra will conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires. He will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

The Ancient Frigate Constitution, oldest warship in the world in commission, returned to the water after repairs in a Boston Naval Shipyard drydock. After being floated out of drydock, she was returned to her usual berth near the Boston Naval Yard entrance in Charlestown.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

MAR 29 1957

Fiedler Flies To Argentina

BOSTON, March 29 (UP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pope Orchestra, will fly to Argentina this weekend to conduct a series of concerts.

Fiedler, accompanied by his wife, Ellen, will leave New York by plane at 12:30 a. m. Sunday, arriving in Buenos Aires Monday at 9 a. m.

In Buenos Aires, Fiedler will conduct an orchestra composed of 90 Argentine musicians in six concerts.

He recently returned from a 70-concert tour which took him and his pops orchestra to 68 cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 14,718

MAR 29 1957

FIEDLER TO CONDUCT IN THE ARGENTINE

BOSTON, March 29—(UP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will fly to Argentina this weekend to conduct a series of concerts.

Fiedler, accompanied by his wife, Ellen, will leave New York by plane at 12:30 a.m. Sunday, arriving in Buenos Aires Monday at 9 a.m.

In Buenos Aires Fiedler will conduct an orchestra composed of 90 Argentine musicians in six concerts.

Fiedler recently returned from a 70-concert tour which took him and his Pops orchestra to 68 cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

MAR 29 1957

Maestro Fiedler Going to Argentina

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and his wife will fly from New York Sunday to Buenos Aires, where Fiedler will conduct a series of six concerts by an Argentine orchestra beginning April 4. Fiedler recently conducted 70 concerts in 71 days in 68 cities in the U. S. and Canada.

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,909

MAR 28 1957

FIEDLER TO BUENOS AIRES

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

MAR 28 1957

Indefatiguable Fiedler Off for Argentina

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4. He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,496

MAR 29 1957

Fiedler To Conduct Concerts In B. A.

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

MAR 28 1957

Fiedler To Conduct Buenos Aires Concerts

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the Auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4. He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the pops tour orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 16,330

MAR 29 1957

Fiedler to Conduct In South America

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623

MAR 28 1957

6 Buenos Aires Concerts Scheduled For Fiedler

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,945

MAR 28 1957

Concern Plans Announced

BOSTON, March 28, (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035

MAR 28 1957

Arthur Fiedler to Conduct Six Concerts in Argentina

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 24 1957

Program of Brazilian Music

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Heitor Villa-Lobos, the noted Brazilian composer who celebrated his seventieth birthday March 5, will offer three novelties when he conducts the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra this week. One is his own "Mandu-Carara," described as a "Cantata Profana"; its story, also by the composer, is based on legends of Brazil's Amazon region. It has not been heard here before with orchestra, but in a version for two pianos and percussion it was performed by the Schola Cantorum under Hugh Ross at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 23, 1948.

The Schola will again sing in the Philharmonic performances, and the High School of Music and Art is again supplying a children's chorus. This is Mr. Villa-Lobos' second Philharmonic-Symphony engagement; the first was in 1945.

The other Brazilian novelty in this program, Camargo Guarnieri's Abertura (or Overture) Concertante, was first played in Sao Paulo in 1942, and introduced to the United States by the Boston Symphony the next year. Florent Schmitt's second "Salammbo" Suite is taken from the veteran French composer's score for a French film based in Flaubert's novel which was first shown in Paris in 1925.

• • •

Symphonic Novelties

Virgil Thomson's orchestral version of nine organ chorale preludes by Brahms will be first performed tomorrow evening by the New Orleans Symphony. This is the second "tranquil work to be commissioned for this orchestra by Edward B. Benjamin; the first commission went to Paul Nordoff.

When Jean Martinon, French composer and conductor, makes his American debut with the Boston Symphony next Friday afternoon, his program will include the first performance in the United States of his "Hymne a la Vie," composed in 1945. Another conductorial debut with the Bostonians will be made by Danny Kaye Wednesday night, April 3, in Boston's Symphony Hall as a pension fund benefit. The management announces that it "simply cannot accept any responsibility" for what will be a remarkable program.

...oun- ... the ... city ... and ... ncil- ... To- ... Vil- ... U., ... of ... To ... esi- ... ce- ... L.- ... on: ... as- ... ag- ... also ... VD, ... I— ... ees. ... os- ... all: ... olic ... er: ... yor ... the ... of ... he

6:30 p. m. (13)—Gov. Mey... Report: "New Jersey's S... for the Deaf."

Lord Mayor Briscoe

Movies

6 p. m. (9)—Million Dollar Movie: "Bombardier," with Pat O'Brien, Anne Shirley, Randolph Scott. Story of flying fortresses, and the men who fight and die in defense of their country. Also at 7:30 p. m., 10 p. m.). (1943).

10:30 p. m. (4)—Movie Four: "Crowded Paradise," with Hume Cronyn, Nancy Kelly. A Puerto Rican youth, newly arrived in New York, tries to win happiness for his family despite the ugly shadows of race prejudice. (1956), N. ... TV debut.)

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
...1957

239

...arios Release ...dered by Britain

The World's Day
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

...Year-Long Exile Comes to an End

...ernment announced in Parliament today it has ...elease of Archbishop Makarios, leader of the ...ent for union with Greece, from his year-long ...ychelle Islands.

...es in their interpretations of the Hungarian ...y and French Communists will support Premier ...Hungarian government, it was announced from ... French Communist delegates are meeting with ...

... million striking British workers today agreed ...he to negotiate directly with union leaders on ...or a 10 per cent wage increase.

...eposits have been found in Andalusia, southern ...g checked by government specialists. Rumored ...40 square miles near the town of Ubeda, the ...be the first to be found in Spain.

...iedler to Conduct in Buenos Aires

...onductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra will ...erts in Buenos Aires. He will lead an orchestra ...musicians in the auditorium of the faculty of ... and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings ... 4.

...e Constitution, oldest warship in the world in ...rned to the water after repairs in a Boston ... drydock. After being floated out of drydock, ...d to her usual berth near the Boston Naval ...n Charlestown.

...(e)
..., Mass.
...ent
Circ. 101,564

OM...
9:00-10:...
LIZZIE BORDE... took an ax and gave her moth...
40 whacks...

Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 14,718
MAR 29 1957

FIEDLER TO CONDUCT IN THE ARGENTINE

BOSTON, March 29—(UP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will fly to Argentina this weekend to conduct a series of concerts.

Fiedler, accompanied by his wife, Ellen, will leave New York by plane at 12:30 a.m. Sunday, arriving in Buenos Aires Monday at 9 a.m.

In Buenos Aires Fiedler will conduct an orchestra composed of 90 Argentine musicians in six concerts.

Fiedler recently returned from a 70-concert tour which took him and his Pops orchestra to 68 cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
MAR 29 1957

Maestro Fiedler Going to Argentina

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and his wife will fly from New York Sunday to Buenos Aires, where Fiedler will conduct a series of six concerts by an Argentine orchestra beginning April 4. Fiedler recently conducted 70 concerts in 71 days in 68 cities in the U. S. and Canada.

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,909
MAR 28 1957

FIEDLER TO BUENOS AIRES

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
MAR 28 1957

Indefatiguable Fiedler Off for Argentina

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4. He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,496
MAR 29 1957

Fiedler To Conduct Concerts In B. A.

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
MAR 28 1957

Fiedler To Conduct Buenos Aires Concerts

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the Auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4. He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the pops tour orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 16,330
MAR 29 1957

Fiedler to Conduct In South America

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623
MAR 28 1957

6 Buenos Aires Concerts Scheduled For Fiedler

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

MAR 29 1957

Fiedler Flies To Argentina

BOSTON, March 29 (UP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pope Orchestra, will fly to Argentina this weekend to conduct a series of concerts.

Fiedler, accompanied by his wife, Ellen, will leave New York by plane at 12:30 a. m. Sunday, arriving in Buenos Aires Monday at 9 a. m.

In Buenos Aires, Fiedler will conduct an orchestra composed of 90 Argentine musicians in six concerts.

He recently returned from a 70-concert tour which took him and his pops orchestra to 68 cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,945
MAR 28 1957

Concern Plans Announced

BOSTON, March 28, (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035
MAR 28 1957

Arthur Fiedler to Conduct Six Concerts in Argentina

BOSTON (AP)—Plans for Arthur Fiedler to conduct six concerts in Buenos Aires next month were announced today at Symphony Hall.

Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will lead an orchestra of 90 Argentine musicians in the auditorium of the Faculty of Social Sciences and Law Thursday and Saturday evenings beginning April 4.

He and Mrs. Fiedler will fly to Buenos Aires from New York next Sunday.

Fiedler recently returned with the Pops Tour Orchestra from a swing through 68 cities in 24 states and Canada. The musicians gave 70 concerts in 71 days.

340

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAR 30 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Jean Martinon conducting, gave the 20th program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Concerto Grosso in A, Op. 6, No. 11 ..... Handel
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38 ..... Schumann
Hymne a la Vie, Op. 37 ..... Martinon
"Firebird" ..... Stravinsky

By RUDOLPH ELIE

As much as I was impressed by the conducting of Jean Martinon, the 46-year-old conductor of the Concerts Lamoureux of Paris who made his Boston debut yesterday, I am even more impressed by his music.

A man precise in his every movement, forceful, of very decided views, Mr. Martinon displayed a highly refined musical sense, seeking out inner voices, drawing attention to this phrase and that and managing at all times to obtain the fullest orchestral response.

Of the three works not his own on the program, the Handel Concerto Grosso went least well, it seemed to me, there being occasional moments when the string band was not perfectly together in its ensemble. The only reason for it I can think of is that in it the conductor did not use a stick, and the clenched fist is not the most successful instrument with which to indicate a beat with utter clarity.

In the ensuing works he did use a stick, and there was not again any doubt as to his intentions as the conductor, an attractive man of modest, charming bearing, traversed first the Schumann "Spring" Symphony and then Stravinsky's brilliant "Firebird" (which, incidentally, the orchestra did at the very peak of its form).

In between M. Martinon presented the first American performance of his own "Hymne a la Vie." It proved to be, from the hushed mystery of its opening moments to its final triumphant utterance, a work of originality and of direct, powerful communication as well. Few contemporary works, in fact, have been so quickly and enthusiastically accepted by the audience as this was yesterday.

Urgently Written

The reason is that despite the sometimes aggressive dissonances, the brassy proclamations of the final hymn and the tumult of the full percussion, everything belongs. There is no suggestion of the lamp, either: It is music deeply felt and urgently written down. In general, perhaps, it might be said to have its roots in the Stravinsky idiom but with many additional exotic elements. It was interesting to compare anyway for the Stravinsky followed immediately to reveal its cleaner, drier more "classical" mood. And it was one time, too, that a new and untried work was not thrust into the shade by a contemporary masterwork.

Beginning with vague, ill-defined tremolos in the violins over ethereal comments by the celeste and odd taps on the xylophone, the work increases in tension until it is relieved by a perpetual motion section of great motor force. The rhythms are ever shifting in stress, but the scene of forward movement is irresistible in its orchestral color, in its exuberance, its vitality.

The hymn section itself seemed to flag a little because it introduced several widely contrasted passages of reflection moods before attaining its final culmination, but all in all it is a highly interesting work revealing a burning creativity graphically mirrored in the conductor-composer's own immense concentration in conducting the music.

I imagine this to be an exceedingly difficult piece from the musicians' point of view, but they gave it an electrifying performance guided by the man who obviously knows more about it than anyone else. It would be interesting to hear more of this composer's work—this is his 37th opus—for he not only masters the orchestra in a technical sense but reveals an overall musical inspiration combined with a remarkable sense of color and of melodic felicity. The conductor was called back to the stage three times when the work ended, which is a demonstration of acceptance not too often encountered in a first performance.

Next week Isaac Stern will be the soloist in Mozart's E flat Concerto (K.268) and Prokofieff's G minor Concerto. The concert begins with a new work by Emil Kornsand, a first violinist of the orchestra, and includes Dukas' "La Peri."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 30 1957

Seeberger

Jean Martinon, French conductor, making his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAR 30 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Martinon Superb Conductor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played yesterday at Symphony Hall, and will repeat tonight, the 20th program in the Friday-Saturday series. Jean Martinon, as guest conductor, presented this program: Handel: Concerto Grosso for Strings in A major, Op. 6, No. 11; Schumann: Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major; Martinon: "Hymn to Life" (first performance in the United States); Stravinsky: Suite from the Ballet "The Firebird."

By CYRUS DURGIN

Jean Martinon proved to be a superb conductor, when as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, he made his American debut. He is, I suspect, as much a "musician's conductor" as one with a definite appeal to the listening public. His technic is thorough and not in the least pedantic; he insists upon utmost care in detail, but he is not dry; his temperament obviously is passionate, but he does not go to emotional extremes nor is he an exhibitionist.

Altogether merited, therefore, following an afternoon of glorious music-making, was the ovation that Mr. Martinon received when "The Firebird" Suite had ended the concert. He was called back repeatedly, applause was swelled by cheers of "Bravo!" Mr. Martinon had captured the respect and the admiration of the Friday subscribers; quite likely he will be greeted even more warmly by the audience tonight.

The short, lithe Frenchman is quite as dynamic in his approach to music as his crisp appearance would indicate. There is a plastic nature to his conducting, in the turn of phrase, the rhythmic flow and the progress from one episode and section to another, that makes me think of Koussevitzky.

During it all, everything "sings," the balance of instrumental sections is delicately maintained, clarity prevails from the high woodwinds and fiddles down to string basses and tympani. As aforesaid, details are scrupulously managed, his cues for entrances are notably clear and exact, nuances are abundant, but all is in proportion to the general motion of the music, and an unmistakable "long line" of continuity. This is truly artistic and expert direction.

At first, when the strings, especially the violins, produced an almost too bright sonority, in the French manner, for Handel's Concerto Grosso, I feared we might be in for an overdose of forced brilliance. It worked out otherwise, for in Schumann and Stravinsky the string tone had greater depth and fluidity. I can recall no performance of Schumann's beautiful "Spring" Symphony more architecturally cohesive, and none wherein the orchestration seemed so luminously transparent. This was a brisk but sensitive reading, not too loud and not sentimentalized, but a model of proportion.

The same quality of luminous transparence was important in "The Firebird," and the same extraordinary neatness was present. Little things often are indicative of larger significance, and one such was that final chord of the Stravinsky Suite. Martinon did not hold it too long, swell it too loud or cut it off with a thunderous explosion. It was a musical conclusion, not a big bang of an applause trap.

Martinon's "Hymn to Life" runs in three connected movements—Prelude, Perpetual Motion and Hymn—and it is music of high exuberance, written with enormous skill both of construction and of instrumental scoring. There is constant forward motion and while the rhythmic patterns likely are complex in many pages, complexity never gets in the way of the musical flow. His use of dissonance, and there is much and strong, is actually very clever, for it serves to increase emotional tension. The brass chorale of the Hymn is an example. This is a large work, in dimensions, instruments and effect, perhaps a little suggestive of Roussel (and earlier Stravinsky) but, in the main, of individual style. I, for one, would like to hear it again.

Next week Isaac Stern will be soloist in two violin concertos, the G major (K-216) of Mozart and the G minor, No. 2, of Prokofieff. Charles Munch will also conduct first performance of the "Metamorphosis" by Emil Kornsand, a member of the Orchestra's first violin section, and the Danced Poem "La Peri" by Dukas.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAR 30 1957

Martinon's American Debut

Conductor Presents Own 'Hymne à la Vie'

By Harold Rogers

Jean Martinon, conductor of the Concerts Lamoureaux in Paris, is making his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~at its concerts~~ this ~~weekend.~~ The program yesterday in Symphony Hall will be played three times more—tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday evening. Thus all the Boston subscribers will have an opportunity to appraise this engaging Frenchman — young in face and white of hair—both as a conductor and as a composer.

As a composer he measured up to excellent standards as he presented the American première of his "Hymne à la Vie." As a conductor he was more impressive in the moderns—his own work and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Suite—than he was in the earlier periods—Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings in A major, Op. 6, and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

* * *

He composed his "Hymne à la Vie" in 1943-44 as "an outburst of rhythm, of life, and of hope" after his release from a German prison camp; but it is not alone an expression of joy over his own freedom. It is dedicated to the birth of his son, and the music embodies the mysterious processes of human life.

In the first part, for instance, the prelude takes shape in a quiet, cosmic mood, expressive of the prenatal state in which the individual seems to rally forces from the infinite. This mood changes into a Mouvement perpétuel, in which we find man in the turbulent stream of human living, its enthusiasms, stresses, and joys.

This in turn flows into the final section called Hymne, which is not so much a hymn of affirmation as a prayer of yearning. Here the individual is apparently seeking "his place in the impenetrable bosom of the universe." Mr. Martinon ends his piece with this unanswered prayer, to which he brings a marvelous display of radiant dissonance in huge blocks of sound.

In style M. Martinon is eclectic. The ear picks up echoes of Bartókian shimmer in the high strings, or again the orchestral fabric of early Stravinsky, or yet again the impassioned fervor of his late countryman, Honegger. But the references are subtle, and they are all fused into an expression that is largely personal and highly articulate. His "Hymne à la Vie" leaves one with a desire to hear more of his output.

As a conductor M. Martinon is demonstrative without being self-conscious. His directions are clear, careful, and generally expansive. He has something of a Koussevitzkian left hand in the way he uses it vibrantly to urge the players to more fire or to shush them into a pianissimo, but the likeness stops there. His conducting style is otherwise extremely individualistic.

M. Martinon is apparently drawn more to the fortissimo than to the pianissimo. The Handel Concerto Grosso, with which he opened, was agreeable as to its polished sound and baroque style, but it could have been enhanced by more of the subtleties found in the pianissimo range.

* * *

The Schumann "Spring" Symphony, too, was brilliant in its cheerful resonance as it frolicked along, more or less, in a triple-forte path. But as Warren Storey Smith said after yesterday's concert, it is not brilliance that one looks for in Schumann. One expects a glow—a different kind of illumination.

In the Handel and the Schumann M. Martinon seemed to be more concerned with the production of carefully ordered sound than the transmission of musical emotion. In his own work and in the Stravinsky he further set up an emotional rapport with his listeners. They responded with an ovation.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Montag, 8. April 1957

Carnegie Hall

Bostonianische Harmonien im kritischen Nachhall

Von ROBERT PIRK

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra verabschiedete sich für diese Saison gleich mit drei Erstaufführungen in einer Woche. David Diamond aus Rochester widmete seine sechste Symphoneo Charles Munch, der sich ihr seinerseits mit hingebendster Dirigiervirtuosität widmete. Hochspannung herrscht im dreisätzigen Opus, Pardon wird nicht gegeben, Ohrenrast verweigert.

Lyrisches Melos setzt ein, bricht ab — losbricht die Hölle sämtlichen ungedämpften Schlagzeugs. Weit ausholend, breit ausladend das Adagio; mystische Gongschläge unterbrechen den Fluß der Streicherkantilene — sollen sie von der Tatsache ablenken, daß die thematische Entwicklung im Kreis verläuft, eine akustisch schimmernde Schlange, die sich selbst in den Schwanz beißt?

Mit anderen Worten: das Material der späteren Sätze kehrt dauernd zu den Themen des ersten zurück: ein Riesenrondo ohne Ende. Zuletzt eine rhythmisch ungemein "gepfefferte" Fuge, hierauf eine nach heftigem Schreckschlag einsetzende Passacaglia. Lauter Überrumpelungen — aber aparte Klangfarbenmischungen, instrumentale Gruppenbildungen, sich akkordisch effektvoll zusammenballend. Starke Kontrastwirkungen, zumal, wenn die Posaunen, mit gewaltigen Schritten, das Zeitmaß angebend, das ganze Orchester mitzureißen scheinen.

Von William Walton gab es zwei Premieren: die anläßlich des 70jährigen Gründungstages der Stadt komponierte Johannesburg-Fest-Ouvertüre, in kapriziösem Presto und einer aus Lokalkolorit gut treffenden "afrikanisch" farbigen Instrumentierung. Sehr willkommen das Konzert für Viola und Orchester. Hier wird einer Lücke in der Bratschenliteratur abgeholfen. Harmonische Finessen würzen die sangbare Einleitung, auf die eine Art Temporekord folgt — der Solist hat alle Hände und Saiten voll.

Im zweiten Satz, Vivo, wecken die Synkopen, während der Kontrabaß obstinat den Rhythmus angibt, Ragtime-Assoziationen. Noch tänzerischer wird der Jazz-Rhythmus im Finale, das mit groteskem Thema einsetzt; die Doppelgriffe auf der Viola sind sehr eindrucksvoll. Eine tief empfundene Weise leitet zum Schluß über . . . im pp stufenweise himmelansteigend . . . vom scheuen Pizzicato der übrigen Streicher begleitet. Der Bratschist Josef de Pasquale kennt alle Möglichkeiten seines sonoren Instruments und läßt auf der tiefsten (C-)Saite Töne wie von menschlicher Altstimme erklingen.

Nicht ohne Begriffenheit vermag man Mozarts A-Dur-Klarinettenkonzert zu lauschen; die hohe Köchelnummer, 622, verrät das Spätwerk. Der kranke, schwer heimgesuchte Meister schrieb es kurz vor seinem Tode. Andacht und Weihe des Mittelsatzes empfand man in dieser devoten Wiedergabe ganz als Trauergesang für den Schöpfer. Der Solist, Gino Coffi, entlockt in der (von ihm hinzugefügten) Kadenz Fagott-, ja Harfenklänge, schwebende Klarinette, obgleich die letzte Verklärung dieser völlig transzendentalen Tondichtung weder von ihm noch durch das Orchester erreicht wurde.

Dagegen siegte die Bravour der Bostonianer mit César Francks (zwar nicht so bravouröse) mächtig gemeinten D-Moll-Symphonie und, zumal, in Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben", das Charles Munch musikalisch analysierte, zugleich aber zu einem epischen Ganzen zusammenfaßte. Tristanisch die Streicher und die wagnerisch schlechthin die Tuben, Posaunen; in der Schlachtfeldszene focht der Dirigent mit seinem Stab nicht minder heftig und tödlich wie der Held mit seinem Degen.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 1 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 1 1957

Kaye Tells Of Career On Podium

By Harold Rogers

There is a young American conductor on the concert horizon, and whenever any young conductor comes into view — American or otherwise — there is joy in the musical heavens. This young conductor is not entirely unknown — his name is Danny Kaye—and those who have seen him before an orchestra say his performance is nothing short of inspired.

Mr. Kaye's career as a conductor is expanding rapidly, however. He has already conducted the Dallas Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Israel Philharmonic, the Stockholm Symphony, and he has dates scheduled with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, the St. Louis Symphony, and several others.

Wednesday night, from 7 to 8:30, he will make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, conducting what is called an Extra-Special Open Rehearsal for the Pension Fund. Tickets are selling rapidly, of course, but music lovers should not be deluded by false reports that Mr. Kaye's performance is already sold out. His conducting career is not that well established, but word is getting around that he will shortly skyrocket to the big-time podium circuit. It might be better to buy your seats while you can.

* * *

Even according to Mr. Kaye's word—or words, many of which he shared with the press a few days ago—his Symphony Hall performance promises to partake of the extraordinary. His repertoire, for one thing, is growing rapidly. It now consists of three pieces which he conducts from memory. There's no need to conduct from music, anyway, when you can't read the stuff.

What will he play?

Well, Mr. Kaye prefers to keep his program secret, because he doesn't want to stir up competition from other young American conductors.

What will he wear?

Well, that depends on how he should feel the night of his debut. He will probably put on a tie, he said, but he may take it off again. It sometimes gets pretty hot up there on that podium.

What will he say?

Well, he will probably talk about other conductors—not specifically by name but specifically by styles. Mr. Kaye, being a versatile musician, has already mastered all the known styles of conducting and has developed a few techniques of his own. These, he promises, he will demonstrate.

How did Mr. Kaye become interested in conducting?

It all began one day when he was visiting Walter Hendl's rehearsal in Dallas. Mr. Hendl suggested that Mr. Kaye try his hand at the baton. Mr. Kaye did, the ambition caught him, and he now admits that conducting orchestras gives him a lift nothing else does.

* * *

Not long after this, Eugene Ormandy asked Mr. Kaye if he wouldn't take part in some kind of a fund-raising performance in Philadelphia. Mr. Kaye didn't let on that he was aching to conduct, so he said, "Look, Gene, if I give in to doing this for you, then all the charities will be after me, and I won't have a spare minute to myself. And besides, what could I possibly do on a program like that?" (The program, incidentally, featured several other promising artists like Marian Anderson and Isaac Stern.)

"Oh, do whatever you like," Mr. Ormandy answered, "—dance, sing, conduct the orchestra . . ."

"Brother!" shouted Mr. Kaye, "you've got yourself a date!"

This engagement with the Philadelphians proved so astonishing that a certain prominent socialite in Los Angeles asked him if he wouldn't conduct some members of the Los Angeles Philharmonic at a charitable concert.

"How many men will I have?" he asked.

"Ninety," she said.

"Only ninety!" he exclaimed. "What will I say to Gene Ormandy when he asks me how many men I had in my orchestra? I will conduct 105 men, or nothing."

And how many men did you conduct, Mr. Kaye?

"105."

MAESTRO DANNY KAYE
"Can't Read a Note, Honest!"

By CYRUS DURGIN

"I swear to you I can't read a note of music, but how I love to conduct!", said Maestro Danny Kaye as he further mussed his already rumpled red-brown hair. "I don't know why, exactly. Maybe it's because I've been fond of music as far back as I can remember. Maybe it's a sense of neurotic power when you have 100 men in front of you playing on your signal. But anyway, I love to conduct!"

We'll have a chance to sample Danny's conducting at 7 o'clock Wednesday night at Symphony Hall, when he takes over the Boston Symphony in a special open rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's pension fund. Danny has given his services for the occasion, which promises to be full of comicalities, since Danny is a natural-born funnyman. Already the tickets have been selling briskly, and if you plan to be on hand, you'd better hustle right over to the Symphony Hall boxoffice before it's too late.

"Of course I wouldn't even think of taking money for anything like this. But I do get a kick out of doing it for free, to help a good cause, and the Boston Symphony's pension fund is a good cause. I know I'll have a good time, and I think other people will, too.

"First Mr. Munch will rehearse something serious—Dukas' 'La Peri', I think—and then I'll go into my stuff."

It's All Hush-Hush

What that stuff will be remains largely Danny's secret. Already the management of the orchestra has stated that it cannot accept any responsibility for what may happen. But people who have seen Danny in his International Show at the Colonial Theater have a pretty good notion of what to expect. Danny is a very, very funny guy.

Incidentally, let's try to clear up some confusion which has arisen about the International Show on Wednesday. There will be the usual matinee and evening performances at the Colonial. Danny can do the Boston Symphony stint in between, because he does not go on at the very beginning of the International Show.

"What a day!" exclaimed Danny, rumpling his hair some more and putting back on the battered blue rain hat he wears around town. "First the matinee, then the open rehearsal, then the evening show, and then I crawl back into the oxygen tent."

How did Danny's subdivision career as conductor begin? Let him tell it:

"Well, so long as I can remember, music has fascinated me. The best of music, that is. The best of opera, symphony, songs, chamber music, folk music, ballads, jazz—and if I've left out anything you name it."

He Conducts a Riot

"The first time I ever conducted was in Los Angeles. Then a little later, my friend Eugene Ormandy asked me to be on a program celebrating the anniversary of the Philadelphia Orchestra. What a riot!

"I made my first entrance by walking in from one side, clear across the stage and off the other! Then I went back! I decided to take off my coat and did so, and I said to the orchestra: 'Hey, fellers, let's take off our coats.' Can you believe it? Next minute the whole Philadelphia Orchestra was sitting there playing in shirtsleeves!

"No, honest, I can't read a note. I memorize music by listening to recordings," and he gestured toward a heap of discs beside a portable phonograph in his Ritz Carlton suite. "I listen over and over and get it that way. But I've learned how to beat two, three, four, and maybe even five. I memorize all the cues for people to come in, too."

"Even down to the second horn every time it enters?" I queried.

Danny looked mock quizzical.

"Well, not the second horn, perhaps—say, listen, I'm concerned only with the first desk men. Anyway, it will all depend on the mood I'm in. What I'll wear Wednesday night will depend on my mood. I may turn up in a sweatshirt. I might even be so formal as to put on a shirt and tie. Who knows?"

Indeed, who does know? But we will come Wednesday night. We will, we will, and I for one am convinced the open rehearsal is going to prove one of the great occasions in the history of music and Danny Kaye.

Good luck, Maestro!

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

ORLANDO, FLA.
STAR
Circ. D. 23,227

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Tries Conducting

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

DANNY KAYE

AGNES MOOREHEAD

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
APR 2 1957

Music's Wonderful World Is Just One Big Discord

In the music world, it appeared today, nothing—from rock 'n' roll to the Met—is immune to discord.

The Metropolitan Opera Assn., for instance, was all set today to open in Baltimore after arriving in town heralded by auto horns instead of mellow trumpets.

The huge trucks carrying the Met's stage settings and equipment snarled rush hour traffic while unloading yesterday in downtown Baltimore.

Caught in the resulting "Cacaphony in A" (for auto horns) was Baltimore Traffic Director Barnes.

"Some people seem to think that because they're the Met, they're something special," Barnes said above the din. "Well, I don't know—maybe they are."

* * *

In Camden, N. J., the waltz reigns supreme today.

Well, maybe it isn't the waltz, but it certainly isn't rock 'n' roll.

Judge Marino, imposing jail sentences and fines on five youths arrested Friday during a rock 'n' roll brawl which sent four teenagers to the hospital, said: "I'll see to it that there are no more rock 'n' roll sessions in this county and never again will there be an incident of this kind."

An estimated 8,000 persons were at the shindig when the battle started.

"It was a miracle someone wasn't killed," the judge commented.

* * *

Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, who are hip to such things as pizzicatos and diminuendos, will have to learn to dig a git gat gittle by tomorrow's Comedian Danny Kaye will rehearsal.

conduct the orchestra for a benefit.

* * *

In Boonville, Mo., Kathryn Jayne Kempf, 17, and her date were sitting in the car, while the radio was on. The music was infectious and Kathryn Jayne just couldn't keep her toe from tapping.

Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked auto. Damage: $25.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,355
APR 2 1957

Sink To End Remarkable Career At Ann Arbor

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

Rummaging through my assembled papers has not convinced me that the plans of the Boston Orchestra for its summer festival at Tanglewood are yet in final form. Therefore we shall postpone the observation of the Berkshire doings until some later week.

And perhaps it is as well. For it is quite fitting that some note should be made of the passing to be of Charles Sink from the musical scene in Ann Arbor.

The motto of the University Musical Society in Ann Arbor is "Ars longa, vita brevis." So far as I know, Mr. Sink boasts no motto. But one might well think of him in terms of vita longa. And quite a well preserved one at that.

Started In Office In 1904

We need not be concerned with the year of Mr. Sink's birth. It is enough to recall that he was executive secretary of the University Musical Society as early as 1904; that he served in that position until 1927; that in the latter year he became president of the organization, a post he will have held for a full 30 years when he retires next September. All of which means that Mr. Sink has looked at the face of music for a long time.

In any discussion of music and music business in Ann Arbor it is always good to separate at once the forces of applied music from the machinery to the end of giving concerts. Any connection that Charles Sink has with the School of Music of the University of Michigan is purely historical.

And in an institution of learning as large as the one in Ann Arbor that is a very strange thing to think about. Because the University Musical Society did in 1879 organize the first school of music in Ann Arbor. That was called the Ann Arbor School of Music and was reorganized in 1892 into the University School of Music. But it had no connection with the university proper. In fact it was not until 1929 that the university came actively into the picture and at that time the activity was in limited quantity. As of that date the university began to provide partial support for the School of Music and its students and faculty were given university status. But it was only in 1940 that the University of Michigan took full control and responsibility for the School of Music in Ann Arbor.

Purposes Were Outlined

When the University Musical Society was founded its purposes were stated as maintaining a choral society and orchestra, providing public concerts, organizing and maintaining a school of music. We have already considered the passing—at an astonishingly late date—of the school of Music to the university. We know that the University Musical Society no longer maintains an orchestra. The University Choral Union of course is the choral society to which the University Musical Society referred in its letters of dedication. And the concerts which the society administers annually in Ann Arbor have been known for decades over a much larger area than the community in which they are heard.

And that is Mr. Sink's position. He is an entrepreneur in Ann Arbor. The building in which he has his offices is, so far as I know, owned by the university.

Not Governed By University

And I believe that the halls in which he gives his concerts are also university property. In his post as giver of concerts he does not govern by any university authority nor is he in any way governed by it.

There are as many types of entrepreneurs as there are instruments in an orchestra. We need not, I believe, go beyond three. There are the entrepreneurs who should be something else. There are those who serve the cause with an unfailing efficiency. And there are those who more or less evolved into the business out of a musical background.

By present day standards there is no reason that Mr. Sink should not be an entrepreneur. In addition he has been unfailingly efficient. He is not musical.

But recall that Mr. Sink became connected with the University Musical Society in 1904, only 10 years after the first May Festival was produced in Ann Arbor. Recall too that it was after 1904 that the concert series was gradually increased to 10 concerts annually, that the May Festival concerts were enlarged from three to six. And one does not forget that in 1941 an annual festival of chamber music was instituted; that in 1943 an added series of five annual concerts was got under way; that in 1946 Handel's "The Messiah" was put on an annual two-concerts-a-year basis.

For all these accomplishments and they are large ones. — I cannot say that Mr. Sink is or is not entirely responsible. I simply don't know. By and large the yearly array of concerts in Ann Arbor is considerably superior in first team and bench strength to any other concert series in the neighborhood. Which is not to say that I have always been in the most amiable agreement with Mr. Sink's way of planning and maintaining a concert series.

But after he has relinquished his office next September what Mr. Sink can say, if he cares to, is simply — look at the record. And serious investigation will prove for many years to come that the record was a pretty substantial one.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 48,495
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Symphony Orchestra

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Conductor For Boston Symphony

Look, fellows, Danny Kaye is a very worried man.

Sure he can fill the Colonial every night and matinees, too, with his International Show (plus Danny Kaye) through April 20 (free adv.).

But tomorrow night he' got the pension fund bit for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He's agreed to go on up to Symphony Hall at 7 p.m. and conduct for an hour and a half before his stint at the Colonial.

He's terrified. Nobody will show up. Again he's terrified. Supposing the whole hall is filled. This man has problems.

Danny, in a crushed corduroy jacket and a positively bruise blue cotton hat, sat with hi feet up on a table in the Symphony offices talking about to morrow.

The versatile comedian interviewing the city's music critic should have been tape-recorded

He says he can't read a note of music. Everything he conducts has been learned by listening to recordings. "I have a fairly good memory," he says with fine modesty.

Always sings when conducting. Of course, only the orchestra hears this. The privileged ones have been the Los Angeles Symphony, Philadelphia, Dallas, Stockholm and the Israeli Orchestra.

He tosses off that he has also been invited to conduct the Denver orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

What he will do tomorrow night for the pension fund is known only to Mr. Kaye, if anyone. When he conducted in Philadelphia it was for a very posh benefit audience. All he could see were white ties and decolletages.

So he decided it was very warm, stripped off his jacke ordered the orchestra to follo his example and finished th concert in shirt sleeves.

He had to put his foot dow on his conducting job. He wa covered an orchestra of only 9 men. He thought with shudder of how Munch or the other great would feel about such a deal.

He demanded 105 men—anc he got them.

So don't let Danny down tomorrow night. He's not going to make a cent, but he wants the Orchestra's benefit fund to. . .

A.V.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,191
APR 2 1957

Kaye Vs. Boston Symphony Wed.

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today: "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,936
APR 2 1957

CONDUCTOR KAYE

BOSTON. —(AP)— Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musician's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony Practice

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
TORRINGTON, Conn.
Independent Republican

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Hampshire Gazette (e)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 22,749
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Lead Symphony

BOSTON — (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
APR 2 1957

Music's Wonderful World Is Just One Big Discord

In the music world, it appeared today, nothing—from rock 'n' roll to the Met—is immune to discord.

The Metropolitan Opera Assn., for instance, was all set today to open in Baltimore after arriving in town heralded by auto horns instead of mellow trumpets.

The huge trucks carrying the Met's stage settings and equipment snarled rush hour traffic while unloading yesterday in downtown Baltimore.

Caught in the resulting "Cacaphony in A" (for auto horns) was Baltimore Traffic Director Barnes.

"Some people seem to think that because they're the Met, they're something special," Barnes said above the din. "Well, I don't know—maybe they are."

* * *

In Camden, N. J., the waltz reigns supreme today.

Well, maybe it isn't the waltz, but it certainly isn't rock 'n' roll.

Judge Marino, imposing jail sentences and fines on five youths arrested Friday during a rock 'n' roll brawl which sent four teenagers to the hospital, said:

"I'll see to it that there are no more rock 'n' roll sessions in this county and never again will there be an incident of this kind."

An estimated 8,000 persons were at the shindig when the battle started.

"It was a miracle someone wasn't killed," the judge commented.

* * *

Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, who are hip to such things as pizzicatos and diminuendos, will have to learn to dig a git gat gittle by tomorrow's rehearsal.

Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct the orchestra for a benefit.

* * *

In Boonville, Mo., Kathryn Jayne Kempf, 17, and her date were sitting in the car, while the radio was on. The music was infectious and Kathryn Jayne just couldn't keep her toe from tapping.

Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked auto. Damage: $25.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,355
APR 2 1957

Sink To End Remarkable Career At Ann Arbor

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

Rummaging through my assembled papers has not convinced me that the plans of the Boston Orchestra for its summer festival at Tanglewood are yet in final form. Therefore we shall postpone the observation of the Berkshire doings until some later week.

And perhaps it is as well. For it is quite fitting that some note should be made of the passing to be of Charles Sink from the musical scene in Ann Arbor.

The motto of the University Musical Society in Ann Arbor is "Ars longa, vita brevis." So far as I know, Mr. Sink boasts no motto. But one might well think of him in terms of vita longa. And quite a well preserved one at that.

Started In Office In 1904

We need not be concerned with the year of Mr. Sink's birth. It is enough to recall that he was executive secretary of the University Musical Society as early as 1904; that he served in that position until 1927; that in the latter year he became president of the organization, a post he will have held for a full 30 years when he retires next September. All of which means that Mr. Sink has looked at the face of music for a long time.

In any discussion of music and music business in Ann Arbor it is always good to separate at once the forces of applied music from the machinery to the end of giving concerts. Any connection that Charles Sink has with the School of Music of the University of Michigan is purely historical.

And in an institution of learning as large as the one in Ann Arbor that is a very strange thing to think about. Because the University Musical Society did in 1879 organize the first school of music in Ann Arbor. That was called the Ann Arbor School of Music and was reorganized in 1892 into the University School of Music. But it had no connection with the university proper. In fact it was not until 1929 that the university came actively into the picture and at that time the activity was in limited quantity. As of that date the university began to provide partial support for the School of Music and its students and faculty were given university status. But it was only in 1940 that the University of Michigan took full control and responsibility for the School of Music in Ann Arbor.

Purposes Were Outlined

When the University Musical Society was founded its purposes were stated as maintaining a choral society and orchestra, providing public concerts, organizing and maintaining a school of music. We have already considered the passing—at an astonishingly late date—of the school of Music to the university. We know that the University Musical Society no longer maintains an orchestra. The University Choral Union of course is the choral society to which the University Musical Society referred in its letters of dedication. And the concerts which the society administers annually in Ann Arbor have been known for decades over a much larger area than the community in which they are heard.

And that is Mr. Sink's position. He is an entrepreneur in Ann Arbor. The building in which he has his offices is, so far as I know, owned by the university.

Not Governed By University

And I believe that the halls in which he gives his concerts are also university property. In his post as giver of concerts he does not govern by any university authority nor is he in any way governed by it.

There are as many types of entrepreneurs as there are instruments in an orchestra. We need not, I believe, go beyond three. There are the entrepreneurs who should be something else. There are those who serve the cause with an unfailing efficiency. And there are those who more or less evolved into the business out of a musical background.

By present day standards there is no reason that Mr. Sink should not be an entrepreneur. In addition he has been unfailingly efficient. He is not musical.

But recall that Mr. Sink became connected with the University Musical Society in 1904, only 10 years after the first May Festival was produced in Ann Arbor. Recall too that it was after 1904 that the concert series was gradually increased to 10 concerts annually, that the May Festival concerts were enlarged from three to six. And one does not forget that in 1941 an annual festival of chamber music was instituted; that in 1943 an added series of five annual concerts was got under way; that in 1946 Handel's "The Messiah" was put on an annual two-concerts-a-year basis.

For all these accomplishments and they are large ones — I cannot say that Mr. Sink is or is not entirely responsible. I simply don't know. By and large the yearly array of concerts in Ann Arbor is considerably superior in first team and bench strength to any other concert series in the neighborhood. Which is not to say that I have always been in the most amiable agreement with Mr. Sink's way of planning and maintaining a concert series.

But after he has relinquished his office next September what Mr. Sink can say, if he cares to, is simply — look at the record. And serious investigation will prove for many years to come that the record was a pretty substantial one.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 48,495
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Symphony Orchestra

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Conductor For Boston Symphony

Look, fellows, Danny Kaye is a very worried man.

Sure he can fill the Colonial every night and matinees, too, with his International Show (plus Danny Kaye) through April 20 (free adv.).

But tomorrow night he' got the pension fund bit for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He's agreed to go on up to Symphony Hall at 7 p.m. and conduct for an hour and a half before his start at the Colonial.

He's terrified. Nobody will show up. Again he's terrified. Supposing the whole hall is filled. This man has problems.

Danny, in a crushed corduroy jacket and a positively bruised blue cotton hat, sat with his feet up on a table in the Symphony offices talking about tomorrow.

The versatile comedian interviewing the city's music critic should have been tape-recorded.

He says he can't read a note of music. Everything he conducts has been learned by listening to recordings. "I have a fairly good memory," he says with fine modesty.

He always sings when conducting. Of course, only the orchestra hears this. The privileged ones have been the Los Angeles Symphony, Philadelphia, Dallas, Stockholm and the Israeli Orchestra.

He tosses off that he has also been invited to conduct the Denver orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

What he will do tomorrow night for the pension fund is known only to Mr. Kaye, if anyone. When he conducted in Philadelphia it was for a very posh benefit audience. All he could see were white ties and decolletages.

So he decided it was very warm, stripped off his jacke ordered the orchestra to follo his example and finished th concert in shirt sleeves.

He had to put his foot dow on his conducting job. He wa offered an orchestra of only 9 men. He thought with shudder of how Munch or the other great would feel about such a deal.

He demanded 105 men—anc he got them.

So don't let Danny down tomorrow night. He's not going to make a cent, but he wants the Orchestra's benefit fund to. . .

A.V.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,191
APR 2 1957

Kaye Vs. Boston Symphony Wed.

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today: "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,936
APR 2 1957

CONDUCTOR KAYE

BOSTON. —(AP)— Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musician's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony Practice

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the fund.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
APR 2 1957

Music's Wonderful World Is Just One Big Discord

In the music world, it appeared today, nothing—from rock 'n' roll to the Met—is immune to discord.

The Metropolitan Opera Assn., for instance, was all set today to open in Baltimore after arriving in town heralded by auto horns instead of mellow trumpets.

The huge trucks carrying the Met's stage settings and equipment snarled rush hour traffic while unloading yesterday in downtown Baltimore.

Caught in the resulting "Cacaphony in A" (for auto horns) was Baltimore Traffic Director Barnes.

"Some people seem to think that because they're the Met, they're something special," Barnes said above the din. "Well, I don't know—maybe they are."

* * *

In Camden, N. J., the waltz reigns supreme today.

Well, maybe it isn't the waltz, but it certainly isn't rock 'n' roll.

Judge Marino, imposing jail sentences and fines on five youths arrested Friday during a rock 'n' roll brawl which sent four teenagers to the hospital, said:

"I'll see to it that there are no more rock 'n' roll sessions in this county and never again will there be an incident of this kind."

An estimated 8,000 persons were at the shindig when the battle started.

"It was a miracle someone wasn't killed," the judge commented.

* * *

Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, who are hip to such things as pizzicatos and diminuendos, will have to learn to dig a git gat gittle by tomorrow's Comedian Danny Kaye will rehearsal.
conduct the orchestra for a benefit.

* * *

In Boonville, Mo., Kathryn Jayne Kempf, 17, and her date were sitting in the car, while the radio was on. The music was infectious and Kathryn Jayne just couldn't keep her toe from tapping.

Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked auto. Damage: $25.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,355
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Conductor For Boston Symphony

Look, fellows, Danny Kaye is a very worried man.

Sure he can fill the Colonial every night and matinees, too, with his International Show (plus Danny Kaye) through April 20 (free adv.).

But tomorrow night he' get the pension fund bit for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He's agreed to go on up to Symphony Hall at 7 p.m. and conduct for an hour and a half before his first at the Colonial.

He's terrified. Nobody will show up. Again he's terrified. Supposing the whole hall is filled. This man has problems.

Danny, in a crushed corduroy jacket and a positively bruise blue cotton hat, sat with hi feet up on a table in the Symphony offices talking about to morrow.

The versatile comedian inter viewing the city's music critic should have been tape-recorded

He says he can't read a note of music. Everything he conducts has been learned by listening to recordings. "I have a fairly good memory," he says with fine modesty.

Always sings when conducting. Of course, only the orchestra hears this. The privileged ones have been the Los Angeles Symphony, Philadelphia, Dallas, Stockholm and the Israeli Orchestra.

He tosses off that he has also been invited to conduct the Denver orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.

What he will do tomorrow night for the pension fund is known only to Mr. Kaye, if anyone. When he conducted in Philadelphia it was for a very posh benefit audience. All he could see were white ties and decolletages.

So he decided it was very warm, stripped off his jacke ordered the orchestra to follo his example and finished th concert in shirt sleeves.

He had to put his foot dow on his conducting job. He wa offered an orchestra of only 9 men. He thought with shudder of how Munch or the other great would feel about such a deal.

He demanded 105 men—anc he got them.

So don't let Danny down tomorrow night. He's not going to make a cent, but he wants the Orchestra's benefit fund to. . .

A.V.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,191
APR 2 1957

Kaye Vs. Boston Symphony Wed.

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today: "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cue Is Set To L

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orche putting on an open rehe Wednesday to raise money its musicians' pension fund, find itself with a guest ductor who can't read a n music: comedian Danny

Kaye admitted today th offering to conduct the b performance he had succe in scaring himself. He sa hadn't expected to be fea so heavily in the adv notices.

With the eyes of music-cr Boston upon him, he rea today, "I could appear as a comic." But he pro brushed aside that idea, s "I'm announced as con and that's what I'm goi be."

Follow Orchestra Not Dann

"Couldn't you merely the orchestra?" someone

"Absolutely not!" said "All my life I've loved And conducting fascinate I've studied how it was do Toscanini, Ormandy, Mun others.

"Now, I'm putting in a

New England Newsclip A
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchm
Telegraph (e
NASHUA, N.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 195

Oddities

Binghamton, NY, aston sent into the B 6-cent airmail star cents regular posta answer was wrong

Boston, April 2 (A can't read a note o of the Boston Symp raise money for the Santo Monica, Ca time partner Eddie St John's Hospital a year-old song and d ation last January.

Santa Monica, Cali 50, has sued actor- charged cruelty and

Sacramento, Cal Transportation Com it a crime to fall a

Boonville, Mo, A tapping her toe in car. Accidentally, gear, took off and s ing in $25 damage

New England Newscl
Box 2078. Boston 6 • R
Kennebec Jou
AUGUSTA
Non-Parti
Circ. 12,
APR 2

Comedia Read No

BOSTON, April Symphony Orches an open rehearsa raise money for pension fund, will a guest conductor a note of music: Kaye admitted

Sink To End Remarkable Career At Ann Arbor

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

Rummaging through my assembled papers has not convinced me that the plans of the Boston Orchestra for its summer festival at Tanglewood are yet in final form. Therefore we shall postpone the observation of the Berkshire doings until some later week.

And perhaps it is as well. For it is quite fitting that some note should be made of the passing to be of Charles Sink from the musical scene in Ann Arbor.

The motto of the University Musical Society in Ann Arbor is "Ars longa, vita brevis." So far as I know, Mr. Sink boasts no motto. But one might well think of him in terms of vita longa. And quite a well preserved one at that.

Started In Office In 1904

We need not be concerned with the year of Mr. Sink's birth. It is enough to recall that he was executive secretary of the University Musical Society as early as 1904; that he served in that position until 1927; that in the latter year he became president of the organization, a post he will have held for a full 30 years when he retires next September. All of which means that Mr. Sink has looked at the face of music for a long time.

In any discussion of music and music business in Ann Arbor it is always good to separate at once the forces of applied music from the machinery to the end of giving concerts. Any connection that Charles Sink has with the School of Music of the University of Michigan is purely historical.

And in an institution of learning as large as the one in Ann Arbor that is a very strange thing to think about. Because the University Musical Society did in 1879 organize the first school of music in Ann Arbor. That was called the Ann Arbor School of Music and was reorganized in 1892 into the University School of Music. But it had no connection with the university proper. In fact it was not until 1929 that the university came actively into the picture and at that time the activity was in limited quantity. As of that date the university began to provide partial support for the School of Music and its students and faculty were given university status. But it was only in 1940 that the University of Michigan took full control and responsibility for the School of Music in Ann Arbor.

Purposes Were Outlined

When the University Musical Society was founded its purposes were stated as maintaining a choral society and orchestra, providing public concerts, organizing and maintaining a school of music. We have already considered the passing—at an astonishingly late date—of the school of Music to the university. We know that the University Musical Society no longer maintains an orchestra. The University Choral Union of course is the choral society to which the University Musical Society referred in its letters of dedication. And the concerts which the society administers annually in Ann Arbor have been known for decades over a much larger area than the community in which they are heard.

And that is Mr. Sink's position. He is an entrepreneur in Ann Arbor. The building in which he has his offices is, so far as I know, owned by the university.

Not Governed By University

And I believe that the halls in which he gives his concerts are also university property. In his post as giver of concerts he does not govern by any university authority nor is he in any way governed by it.

There are as many types of entrepreneurs as there are instruments in an orchestra. We need not, I believe, go beyond three. There are the entrepreneurs who should be something else. There are those who serve the cause with an unfailing efficiency. And there are those who more or less evolved into the business out of a musical background.

By present day standards there is no reason that Mr. Sink should not be an entrepreneur. In addition he has been unfailingly efficient. He is not musical.

But recall that Mr. Sink became connected with the University Musical Society in 1904, only 10 years after the first May Festival was produced in Ann Arbor. Recall too that it was after 1904 that the concert series was gradually increased to 10 concerts annually, that the May Festival concerts were enlarged from three to six. And one does not forget that in 1941 an annual festival of chamber music was instituted; that in 1943 an added series of five annual concerts was got under way; that in 1946 Handel's "The Messiah" was put on an annual two-concerts-a-year basis.

For all these accomplishments and they are large ones — I cannot say that Mr. Sink is or is not entirely responsible. I simply don't know. By and large the yearly array of concerts in Ann Arbor is considerably superior in first team and bench strength to any other concert series in the neighborhood. Which is not to say that I have always been in the most amiable agreement with Mr. Sink's way of planning and maintaining a concert series.

But after he has relinquished his office next September what Mr. Sink can say, if he cares to, is simply — look at the record. And serious investigation will prove for many years to come that the record was a pretty substantial one.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 48,495
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Symphony Orchestra

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,936
APR 2 1957

CONDUCTOR KAYE

BOSTON. —(AP)— Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musician's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony Practice

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

ny a an
Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: and that's what I'm going to be." "I'm announced as conductor

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
BIDDEFORD, Me.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 16,330

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,909

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 27,830
APR 2 1957

Kaye to Wield Baton At Symphony Rehearsal

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
BIDDEFORD, Me.
Independent
Circ. 8,546
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Indepen

New England Ne
Box 2078, Boston

News-T
DANBU
Inde
Circ

New Engla
Box 2078, B

Ne
CO

New Box

DANNY KAYE TO CONDUCT

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kay , who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Conduct

BOSTON, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

But It Got There

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Fellow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.

Danny Kaye Conducts?

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

CONDUCTOR KAYE

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an ex[illegible] Tschaikowsky or[illegible]

* *

"I HAVE a pr[illegible] ory," he explain[illegible] know every no[illegible] cue for various [illegible] me, I'm going t[illegible]

"What, no co[illegible] body asked. "W[illegible] ence feel gypped[illegible]

"Well," said [illegible] thinking of gi[illegible] ture on condu[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, I" was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

Of Joe Louis

COMIC IN NEW ROLE

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
BIDDEFORD, Me.
Independent
Circ. 8,546
APR 2 1957

TO CONDUCT REHEARSAL

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

ducting fascinates me.

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the au[illegible] feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HAVE a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today. "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

APR 2 1957

NON-MUSICIAN KAYE TO LEAD SYMPHONY

BOSTON, April 2 — (AP) Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 2 1957

Comic, Cues Memorized, Is Set To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

Follow Orchestra Not Danny

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!".

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program — maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 10,728
APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Oddities In The News

Binghamton, NY, April 2 (AP)—The entry that H. S. Payston sent into the Binghamton Sun puzzle contest carried a 6-cent airmail stamp, a 20-cent special delivery stamp, 7 cents regular postage and was sent by certified mail. His answer was wrong.

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Santo Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Jimmy Durante's long-time partner Eddie Jackson is reported in good condition at St John's Hospital after a second hernia operation. The 61-year-old song and dance man underwent the previous operation last January.

Santa Monica, Calif, April 2 (AP)—Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, has sued actor-director Robert Gist, 36, for divorce. She charged cruelty and asked $1 a month token alimony.

Sacramento, Calif, April 2 (AP) — The State Assembly Transportation Committee has defeated legislation to make it a crime to fall asleep while driving.

Boonville, Mo, April 2 (AP)—Kathryn Jayne Kempt, 17, was tapping her toe in time with the radio music in her date's car. Accidentally, her foot touched the starter. The car, in gear, took off and struck another parked automobile, resulting in $25 damage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986
APR 2 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 116,012
APR 2 1957

Kaye in Boston — Wednesday Program Promises Surprises

DANNY KAYE
Guest Conductor

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduling an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its Musicians' Pension Fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: Comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

* * *

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he added, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program —maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

* * *

"I HA[illegible] ory," he [illegible] know e[illegible] cue for [illegible] me, I'm [illegible]

"W[illegible] body [illegible] end[illegible] "[illegible] thi[illegible] ture[illegible]

[illegible]pletely Washable!
[illegible], yellow, mint green, grounds [illegible]trasting white stripes, closely [illegible]rsucker cotton, drip and dry.
[illegible]OWNSTAIRS STORE
[illegible]EWARES DEPT.
[illegible]ORE BROKEN SLATS!
$[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758
APR 2 1957

Kaye Leads Boston Symphony In Benefit Concert Tonight

BOSTON, April 1 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

WITH THE EYES of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" some asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

THE WORK, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained, "Already I know every note and every cut for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,730
APR 2 1957

LEAVE IT TO DANNY

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Danny Kaye To Lead Symphony Rehearsal

BOSTON, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Comedian Danny Kaye Who Can't Read Note to Conduct Orchestra

BOSTON, April 1 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians's pension fund, will find itself with a guest conductor who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Kaye admitted today that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned today, "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Kaye. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot — serious work on this Boston Symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, Kaye indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tschaikowsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Will Conduct Boston Symphony Orch.

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Danny admitted yesterday that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Danny. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others.

"Now, I'm putting in a lot of serious work on this Boston symphony engagement of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, he indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tchaikovsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Danny, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct

BOSTON, April 2 (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor, and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 94,428 - S. 155,054

APR 3 1957

In the News

Sir Anthony Eden, warned of a recurrence of his old bile duct trouble, decided at Auckland, New Zealand, to cut short his vacation and leave by plane Thursday for treatment at Boston.

Ex-President Harry S. Truman, stopping at Washington on a side trip from a visit to New York, paid a surprise visit to Congress and held long chats with Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson and House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas.

The Aga Khan, 79, spiritual leader of the Ismaeli Moslems, was reported in failing health with a chronic bronchial condition at his villa on the Riviera at Nice, France.

Senator John F. Kennedy (Dem., Mass.) told the Women's National Press Club at Washington that women were "less bound by party lines" and would be "the greatest swing vote in 1960," suggesting that the Democrats select a presidential candidate who would appeal to women voters.

Senator Jose P. Laurel Sr., president of the puppet Philippines republic set up by the Japanese during World War II, put himself in the running to succeed the late President Ramon Magsaysay by announcing as a candidate for the nomination of Magsaysay's Nacionalista Party.

Ancher T. Nelsen, former head of the Rural Electrification Administration has been "sounded out" for the prospective vacancy on the Tennessee Valley Authority Board, but "flatly declined to consider taking it," the Chattanooga Times reported.*

Mr. and Mrs. Andy Brown of Jericho, Tex., who sheltered 91 travelers from a blizzard's fury last week, said they had received many letters and "love gifts" from those who found refuge in their seven-room farm house.

The Dalai Lama, chief spiritual ruler of Tibet, has returned to his capital of Lhasa, where he was welcomed by 30,000 Tibetans and Chinese after a two-month journey to India for Buddhist ceremonies, Peking radio said.

Actress Agnes Moorehead, 50, filed suit for divorce at Santa Monica, Cal., against actor-director Robert Gist, 36, charging cruelty.

Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today, but brushed aside any idea that he would appear simply as a comic—"I'm announced as a conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of West Germany arrived at Istanbul for a brief visit to Turkey en route home from Iran.*

"Cemetery" Perteet, aging Negro caddy at the Augusta (Ga.) National Golf Course, has been "relieved of his duties" as personal caddy for President Eisenhower because he "is getting a little old and he can't keep up with the president," golf pro Ed Dudley disclosed at Augusta.

K. D. McKellar, 88, former Democratic senator from Tennessee who underwent an operation February 18 for removal of duodenal ulcers, has left the hospital and returned to his Memphis hotel apartment.

Fuller Warren, former governor of Florida who was a target of the Senate Crime Committee a few years ago, was present at the opening of the Florida legislature at Tallahassee, billed as a "superannuated public servant" who is writing a daily column for the Orland Sentinel.

Clarence Green, 32, turned up as a printer for a paper company at Chicago and said he was "much happier" and glad he quit abruptly as mayor of Dalton, Ga.—"Being mayor had to many headaches because too many people tried to run things."

Prince Philip, with a test driver beside him, drove a new British sports car more than 100 miles an hour on a banked racing circuit at Lindley, England.

Dr. Paul P. Petticord of Portland, Ore., president of the National Association of Evangelicals, told the organization at Buffalo, N. Y., that it must "struggle against certain forces that would oppose the message of evangelical Christianity," referring for example to what he called efforts by the National Council of Churches to have radio and television stations allocate free time to religious groups and let the Council direct the programming.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,235

APR 2 1957

Mitty Lives Again

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Independent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 3 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,340

APR 4 1957

Boston Symphony Orchestra Richer Thanks to Kaye

Boston (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

Conductor Charles Munch warmed up the orchestra with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," then dragged Kaye "reluctantly" on stage. Joyous bedlam followed as the 104 players tried to follow Conductor Kaye's beat. At one point, Kaye turned backwards—so the audience could see him front view.

Society: Boston Unit Wins High Honor At National Girls' Club Meeting

(Fay)

MANY HOSTESSSES are sharing the entertainment honors as plans are made for next week's meetings of the American College of Physicians, Apr. 8 - 12. Among the members of the Ladies' Committee, whose headquarters will be at the Statler, are seated, l. to r.: Mrs. Chester Jones, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, chairman; Mrs. Earle M. Chapman. Standing, l. to r.: Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst and Mrs. Richard P. Stetson.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Tribute to one of Boston's most vigorous organizations, its 20-year-old Girls' Club, is being paid in New York this week. The occasion is the 12th annual conference of Girls' Clubs of America, at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

Two Bostonians, Mrs. Robert F. Herrick and the late Mrs. Hugh Bancroft are the recipients of the 1957 Girls' Clubs of America Meritorious Service Award for 20 years of devotion to the organization. Another Bostonian, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, is receiving the honor of unanimous re-election to the National Council.

Mrs. Tosi will present awards at a Girls' Club dinner at the Bunker Hill Clubhouse next month.

Boston delegates sharing conference ideas with honorary chairman Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower and leaders from all over the country include: Arthur T. Burger, executive director of the clubs here; Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Elaine Redgate, program director at Charlestown; Miss Jean Sweeney of the South Boston clubhouse, and associated director Miss Mary Sweeney. Mrs. Dwight Ellis of Longmeadow, national president, is leading today's sessions.

A FIRST CHILD, Cynthia Lyman, was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Malcolm Forbes (Ariadne Politis) of Cambridge on Apr. 1 at the Boston Lying-In Hospital. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Copley Amory Jr. of Cambridge and Mr. and Mrs. John S. Politis of Salonika, Greece.

A COMMAND PERFORMANCE by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra is begin given for the wives of 6000 doctors arriving Sunday for the 38th annual session of the American College of Physicians at the Hotel Statler. The concert will be given Monday at 8:30 at Symphony Hall for members of the college. Also scheduled during the conference is an open house party for wives of newly elected members planned by Mrs. Walter Palmer, wife of the president of the organization, Monday morning at 10, a 12:30 luncheon and fashion show on Tuesday and a cocktail party the same day at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

On Wednesday members' wives will visit private art collections in Boston homes, go to tea at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and finish their day with dancing at the Statler Ballroom. Thursday's schedule will include a trip to Old Sturbridge Village and the annual conference banquet, at which Dr. Howard B. Sprague will present Prof. Allan R. Foley with "Tales from the Vermont Hills."

Brookline physicians' wives named with hundreds of others to assist Mrs. Theodore L. Badger and Mrs. Frank P. Foster in entertaining visitors' wives include: Mrs. Edwin B. Astwood, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst, Mrs. Victor J. Balboni, Mrs. Edward F. Bland, Mrs. Belton A. Burrows, Mrs. William B. Castle, Mrs. Earle M. Chapman, Mrs. Andrew W. Contratto, Mrs. Lewis Dexter, Mrs. Eugene C. Eppinger, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Mrs. Reginald Fitz, Mrs. Greene Fitzhugh, Mrs. John R. Graham, Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Albert A. Hornor, Mrs. Lyman H. Hoyt, Mrs. Chester S. Keefer, Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Mrs. Harold D. Levine, Mrs. A. J. Lockhart, Mrs. Alexander Marble, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert T. Monroe, Mrs. Robert S. Palmer, Mrs. Samuel Proger, Mrs. Howard F. Root, Mrs. Maurice S. Segal, Mrs. Charles S. Short, Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Richard P. Stetson and Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee.

A MAY WEDDING is being planned by Miss Amy I. Coit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sumner Coit of Cambridge, who are announcing her engagement to Charles Stephen of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stephen of Montreal. Miss Coit is studying at McGill University. Mr. Stephen is completing his fourth year at the McGill Medical School.

IN BRIGHTON, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bernard Smith (Mary Rita Fouhy) are announcing the birth of their third son and sixth child, Paul Gregory, on Mar. 12, at Archbishop Cushing Pavillion of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

A FIRST CHILD, Nathaniel Adamson 3d, was born to Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel E. Adamson Jr. (Anne White) of Belmont, Mar. 17 at Richardson House. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. White of Newburyport and Nathaniel Adamson of Portsmouth, Va.

ANNUAL MEETING for the Woman's Auxiliary to the Norfolk District Medical Society will be held Tuesday, Apr. 9, at 11:30 at the University Club. A luncheon at 1 will follow the meeting. Mrs. Solomon Bell, president, is arranging the program.

750 FRIDAY LUNCHEON INVITATIONS are out for O.R.T. Honor Roll members whose extra efforts have made possible the remarkable record of the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training program, helping train 22,000 students in 19 countries. Luncheon cochairmen are Mrs. Charles Feinson and Mrs. Benjamin Levin. Guests will include Mrs. Foster Furcolo. The luncheon will be at the Statler.

THE BUCKINGHAM SCHOOL Dramatic Club will present Shakespeare's "The Taming of tthe Shrew" at a matinee tomorrow at 3:15 and on Friday, at 8:15 p.m. at the Buckingham Gymnasium, 10 Buckingham st., Cambridge.

The play, under the direction of Mrs. Paul Matteson, will benefit the Hungarian Relief.

Costumes designed by Mrs. Klaus Liepmann, are in charge of Mrs. James M. Dunning. In the cast are Siiri Woodward, Diana Kirkwood, Marina Levin, Johanna Zacharias, Dorothea Friedrich, Jennifer Dawes, Toby Lerner, Joan Floe, and Ellen Corcoran.

THE BOSTON HOMOEOPATHIC LAYMAN'S LEAGUE will have Dr. Clarence W. Lindeman of Waynesboro Pa., as guest speaker at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School Apr. 8 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Lindeman, president of the International Hahnemannian Assn., will speak on "Primum, non Nocere."

Miss Dorothy and Miss Priscilla Cornish will give a small dinner at the Country Club for Dr. and Mrs. Lindeman before the lecture.

Refreshment hostesses at the Perry School include: Mrs. F. G. Perry Jr., Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Will Conduct Boston Symphony Orch.

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Danny admitted yesterday that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned "I could appear simply as a comic." But he promptly brushed aside that idea, saying: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be."

"Couldn't you merely follow the orchestra?" someone asked.

"Absolutely not!" said Danny. "All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Or- ... rs. ... a lot ... Bos- ... t of mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, he indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tchaikovsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Danny, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

Try any two of these top quality Swanson products
Boned Chicken
Boned Turkey
Chicken a la King
Boned Chicken
Fricassee
HERE'S ALL YOU DO: Buy any 2 Swanson Chicken and Turkey Products. Send the labels with your name and address to SPECIAL OFFER, Box 45-B, Mt. Vernon 10, N.Y. Receive 35c cash refund. Limited time only. One refund per family.
Boned Chicken 35¢
Boned Turkey 33¢

KAYE'S CONDUCTING WORTH $10,000

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 89,259

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct

BOSTON, April 2 (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor, and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,235

APR 2 1957

Mitty Lives Again

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 3 1957

Society: Boston Unit Wins High Honor At National Girls' Club Meeting

(Fay)

MANY HOSTESSSES are sharing the entertainment honors as plans are made for next week's meetings of the American College of Physicians, Apr. 8 - 12. Among the members of the Ladies' Committee, whose headquarters will be at the Statler, are seated, l. to r.: Mrs. Chester Jones, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, chairman; Mrs. Earle M. Chapman. Standing, l. to r.: Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst and Mrs. Richard P. Stetson.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Tribute to one of Boston's most vigorous organizations, its 20-year-old Girls' Club, is being paid in New York this week. The occasion is the 12th annual conference of Girls' Clubs of America, at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

Two Bostonians, Mrs. Robert F. Herrick and the late Mrs. Hugh Bancroft are the recipients of the 1957 Girls' Clubs of America Meritorious Service Award for 20 years of devotion to the organization. Another Bostonian, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, is receiving the honor of unanimous re-election to the National Council.

Mrs. Tosi will present awards at a Girls' Club dinner at the Bunker Hill Clubhouse next month.

Boston delegates sharing conference ideas with honorary chairman Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower and leaders from all over the country include: Arthur T. Burger, executive director of the clubs here; Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Elaine Redgate, program director at Charlestown; Miss Jean Sweeney of the South Boston clubhouse, and associated director Miss Mary Sweeney. Mrs. Dwight Ellis of Longmeadow, national president, is leading today's sessions.

A FIRST CHILD, Cynthia Lyman, was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Malcolm Forbes (Ariadne Politis) of Cambridge on Apr. 1 at the Boston Lying-In Hospital. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Copley Amory Jr. of Cambridge and Mr. and Mrs. John S. Politis of Salonika, Greece.

A COMMAND PERFORMANCE by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being given for the wives of 6000 doctors arriving Sunday for the 38th annual session of the American College of Physicians at the Hotel Statler. The concert will be given Monday at 8:30 at Symphony Hall for members of the college. Also scheduled during the conference is an open house party for wives of newly elected members planned by Mrs. Walter Palmer, wife of the president of the organization. Monday morning at 10, a 12:30 luncheon and fashion show on Tuesday and a cocktail party the same day at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

On Wednesday members' wives will visit private art collections in Boston homes, go to tea at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and finish their day with dancing at the Statler Ballroom. Thursday's schedule will include a trip to Old Sturbridge Village and the annual conference banquet, at which Dr. Howard B. Sprague will present Prof. Allan R. Foley with "Tales from the Vermont Hills."

Brookline physicians' wives named with hundreds of others to assist Mrs. Theodore L. Badger and Mrs. Frank P. Foster in entertaining visitors' wives include: Mrs. Edwin B. Astwood, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst, Mrs. Victor J. Balboni, Mrs. Edward F. Bland, Mrs. Belton A. Burrows, Mrs. William B. Castle, Mrs. Earle M. Chapman, Mrs. Andrew W. Contratto, Mrs. Lewis Dexter, Mrs. Eugene C. Eppinger, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Mrs. Reginald Fitz, Mrs. Greene Fitzhugh, Mrs. John R. Graham, Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Albert A. Hornor, Mrs. Lyman H. Hoyt, Mrs. Chester S. Keefer, Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Mrs. Harold D. Levine, Mrs. A. J. Lockhart, Mrs. Alexander Marble, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert T. Monroe, Mrs. Robert S. Palmer, Mrs. Samuel Proger, Mrs. Howard F. Root, Mrs. Maurice S. Segal, Mrs. Charles S. Short, Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Richard P. Stetson and Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee.

A MAY WEDDING is being planned by Miss Amy I. Coit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sumner Coit of Cambridge, who are announcing her engagement to Charles Stephen of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stephen of Montreal. Miss Coit is studying at McGill University. Mr. Stephen is completing his fourth year at the McGill Medical School.

IN BRIGHTON, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bernard Smith (Mary Rita Fouhy) are announcing the birth of their third son and sixth child, Paul Gregory, on Mar. 12, at Archbishop Cushing Pavillion of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

A FIRST CHILD, Nathaniel Adamson 3d, was born to Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel E. Adamson Jr. (Anne White) of Belmont, Mar. 17 at Richardson House. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. White of Newburyport and Nathaniel Adamson of Portsmouth, Va.

ANNUAL MEETING for the Woman's Auxiliary to the Norfolk District Medical Society will be held Tuesday, Apr. 9, at 11:30 at the University Club. A luncheon at 1 will follow the meeting. Mrs. Solomon Bell, president, is arranging the program.

750 FRIDAY LUNCHEON INVITATIONS are out for O.R.T. Honor Roll members whose extra efforts have made possible the remarkable record of the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training program, helping train 22,000 students in 19 countries. Luncheon cochairmen are Mrs. Charles Feinson and Mrs. Benjamin Levin. Guests will include Mrs. Foster Furcolo.

The luncheon will be at the Statler.

THE BUCKINGHAM SCHOOL Dramatic Club will present Shakespeare's "The Taming of tthe Shrew" at a matinee tomorrow at 3:15 and on Friday, at 8:15 p.m. at the Buckingham Gymnasium, 10 Buckingham st., Cambridge.

The play, under the direction of Mrs. Paul Matteson, will benefit the Hungarian Relief.

Costumes designed by Mrs. Klaus Liepmann, are in charge of Mrs. James M. Dunning. In the cast are Siiri Woodward, Diana Kirkwood, Marina Levin, Johanna Zacharias, Dorothea Friedrich, Jennifer Dawes, Toby Lerner, Joan Floe, and Ellen Corcoran.

THE BOSTON HOMOEOPATHIC LAYMAN'S LEAGUE will have Dr. Clarence W. Lindeman of Waynesboro Pa., as guest speaker at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School Apr. 8 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Lindeman, president of the International Hahnemannian Assn., will speak on "Primum, non Nocere."

Miss Dorothy and Miss Priscilla Cornish will give a small dinner at the Country Club for Dr. and Mrs. Lindeman before the lecture.

Refreshment hostesses at the Perry School include: Mrs. F. G. Perry Jr., Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 94,428 - S. 105,054

APR 3 1957

In the News

Sir Anthony Eden, warned of a recurrence of his old bile duct trouble, decided at Auckland, New Zealand, to cut short his vacation and leave by plane Thursday for treatment at Boston.

Ex-President Harry S. Truman, stopping at Washington on a side trip from a visit to New York, paid a surprise visit to Congress and held long chats with Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson and House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas.

The Aga Khan, 79, spiritual leader of the Ismaeli Moslems, was reported in failing health with a chronic bronchial condition at his villa on the Riviera at Nice, France.

Senator John F. Kennedy (Dem., Mass.) told the Women's National Press Club at Washington that women were "less bound by party lines" and would be "the greatest swing vote in 1960," suggesting that the Democrats select a presidential candidate who would appeal to women voters.

Senator Jose P. Laurel Sr., president of the puppet Philippines republic set up by the Japanese during World War II, put himself in the running to succeed the late President Ramon Magsaysay by announcing as a candidate for the nomination of

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 255,047 - S. 300,922

APR 3 1957

By Herald Wire Services

DANNY KAYE, a comedian who confesses he can't read a note of music, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal today to raise money for the orchestra's musician pension fund.

PEOPLE

Kaye at first admitted he was scared, then went on from there:

"I could appear simply as a comic"; but "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others. And have I been working!

"I have a pretty good memory. Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" someone asked. "Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye Will Conduct Boston Symphony Orch.

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, putting on an open rehearsal Wednesday to raise money for its musicians' pension fund, will find itself with a guest who can't read a note of music: comedian Danny Kaye.

Danny admitted yesterday that in offering to conduct the benefit performance he had succeeded in scaring himself. He said he hadn't expected to be featured so heavily in the advance notices.

With the eyes of music-critical Boston upon him, he reasoned "I could appear simply mine on Wednesday night. And have I been working!"

The work, he indicated, has consisted of listening to recordings . . . Rossini, Johann Strauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I want to do something serious, consistent with a symphony program—maybe an excerpt from Tchaikovsky or Wagner."

"I have a pretty good memory," he explained. "Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" somebody asked. "Won't the audience feel gypped?"

"Well," said Danny, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

oned Turkey 23¢
oned Chicken 35¢
Bonded Chicken
Bonded Turkey
Chicken a la King
Bonded Chicken Fricassee
swanson products
Meaty—4-6 Lb Avg
Ready to Cook
Here Are Two Delicious, Boneless Roasts That Virtually Has No Waste. All Cut from Heavy Corn-Fed Steer Beef.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct

BOSTON, April 2 (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor, and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,235

APR 2 1957

Mitty Lives Again

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 3 1957

Show Biz

UPROAR IN BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund was $9,995.50 richer today because Danny Kaye conducted an open rehearsal of the orchestra last night. Critic Geoffrey Bush wrote in the Boston Herald that Kaye probably had intended to conduct a serious program, but little things kept getting in his way. "He tripped over the conducting stand; in loud passages he was frightened by the trumpet section; in quiet passages he forgot what he was doing." Additionally, the comedian imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner, conducted the audience in applause, at times confronted the orchestra with an expression of the most sincere hatred, and at other times, with secret and confidential glee, winked at his audience.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 94,428 - S. 105,054

APR 3 1957

In the News

Sir Anthony Eden, warned of a recurrence of his old bile duct trouble, decided at Auckland, New Zealand, to cut short his vacation and leave by plane Thursday for treatment at Boston.

Ex-President Harry S. Truman, stopping at Washington on a side trip from a visit to New York, paid a surprise visit to Congress and held long chats with Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson and House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas.

The Aga Khan, 79, spiritual leader of the Ismaeli Moslems, was reported in failing health with a chronic bronchial condition at his villa on the Riviera at Nice, France.

Senator John F. Kennedy (Dem., Mass.) told the Women's National Press Club at Washington that women were "less bound by party lines" and would be "the greatest swing vote in 1960," suggesting that the Democrats select a presidential candidate who would appeal to women voters.

Senator Jose P. Laurel Sr., president of the puppet Philippines republic set up by the Japanese during World War II, put himself in the running to succeed the late President Ramon Magsaysay by announcing as a candidate for the nomination of

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 255,047 - S. 300,922

APR 3 1957

By Herald Wire Services

PEOPLE

DANNY KAYE, a comedian who confesses he can't read a note of music, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal today to raise money for the orchestra's musician pension fund.

Kaye at first admitted he was scared, then went on from there:

"I could appear simply as a comic"; but "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others. And have I been working!

"I have a pretty good memory. Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" someone asked. "Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

Society: Boston Unit Wins High Honor At National Girls' Club Meeting

(Fay)

MANY HOSTESSSES are sharing the entertainment honors as plans are made for next week's meetings of the American College of Physicians, Apr. 8 - 12. Among the members of the Ladies' Committee, whose headquarters will be at the Statler, are seated, l. to r.: Mrs. Chester Jones, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, chairman; Mrs. Earle M. Chapman. Standing, l. to r.: Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst and Mrs. Richard P. Stetson.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Tribute to one of Boston's most vigorous organizations, its 20-year-old Girls' Club, is being paid in New York this week. The occasion is the 12th annual conference of Girls' Clubs of America, at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

Two Bostonians, Mrs. Robert F. Herrick and the late Mrs. Hugh Bancroft are the recipients of the 1957 Girls' Clubs of America Meritorious Service Award for 20 years of devotion to the organization. Another Bostonian, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, is receiving the honor of unanimous re-election to the National Council.

Mrs. Tosi will present awards at a Girls' Club dinner at the Bunker Hill Clubhouse next month.

Boston delegates sharing conference ideas with honorary chairman Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower and leaders from all over the country include: Arthur T. Burger, executive director of the clubs here; Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Elaine Redgate, program director at Charlestown; Miss Jean Sweeney of the South Boston clubhouse, and associated director Miss Mary Sweeney. Mrs. Dwight Ellis of Longmeadow, national president, is leading today's sessions.

A FIRST CHILD, Cynthia Lyman, was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Malcolm Forbes (Ariadne Politis) of Cambridge on Apr. 1 at the Boston Lying-In Hospital. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Copley Amory Jr. of Cambridge and Mr. and Mrs. John S. Politis of Salonika, Greece.

A COMMAND PERFORMANCE by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being given for the wives of 6000 doctors arriving Sunday for the 38th annual session of the American College of Physicians at the Hotel Statler. The concert will be given Monday at 8:30 at Symphony Hall for members of the college. Also scheduled during the conference is an open house party for wives of newly elected members planned by Mrs. Walter Palmer, wife of the president of the organization, Monday morning at 10, a 12:30 luncheon and fashion show on Tuesday and a cocktail party the same day at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

On Wednesday members' wives will visit private art collections in Boston homes, go to tea at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and finish their day with dancing at the Statler Ballroom. Thursday's schedule will include a trip to Old Sturbridge Village and the annual conference banquet, at which Dr. Howard B. Sprague will present Prof. Allan R. Foley with "Tales from the Vermont Hills."

Brookline physicians' wives named with hundreds of others to assist Mrs. Theodore L. Badger and Mrs. Frank P. Foster in entertaining visitors' wives include: Mrs. Edwin B. Astwood, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst, Mrs. Victor J. Balboni, Mrs. Edward F. Bland, Mrs. Belton A. Burrows, Mrs. William B. Castle, Mrs. Earle M. Chapman, Mrs. Andrew W. Contratto, Mrs. Lewis Dexter, Mrs. Eugene C. Eppinger, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Mrs. Reginald Fitz, Mrs. Greene Fitzhugh, Mrs. John R. Graham, Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Albert A. Hornor, Mrs. Lyman H. Hoyt, Mrs. Chester S. Keefer, Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Mrs. Harold D. Levine, Mrs. A. J. Lockhart, Mrs. Alexander Marble, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert T. Monroe, Mrs. Robert S. Palmer, Mrs. Samuel Proger, Mrs. Howard F. Root, Mrs. Maurice S. Segal, Mrs. Charles S. Short, Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Richard P. Stetson and Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee.

A MAY WEDDING is being planned by Miss Amy I. Coit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sumner Coit of Cambridge, who are announcing her engagement to Charles Stephen of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stephen of Montreal. Miss Coit is studying at McGill University. Mr. Stephen is completing his fourth year at the McGill Medical School.

IN BRIGHTON, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bernard Smith (Mary Rita Fouhy) are announcing the birth of their third son and sixth child, Paul Gregory, on Mar. 12, at Archbishop Cushing Pavillion of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

A FIRST CHILD, Nathaniel Adamson 3d, was born to Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel E. Adamson Jr. (Anne White) of Belmont, Mar. 17 at Richardson House. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. White of Newburyport and Nathaniel Adamson of Portsmouth, Va.

ANNUAL MEETING for the Woman's Auxiliary to the Norfolk District Medical Society will be held Tuesday, Apr. 9, at 11:30 at the University Club. A luncheon at 1 will follow the meeting. Mrs. Solomon Bell, president, is arranging the program.

750 FRIDAY LUNCHEON INVITATIONS are out for O.R.T. Honor Roll members whose extra efforts have made possible the remarkable record of the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training program, helping train 22,000 students in 19 countries. Luncheon cochairmen are Mrs. Charles Feinson and Mrs. Benjamin Levin. Guests will include Mrs. Foster Furcolo.

The luncheon will be at the Statler.

THE BUCKINGHAM SCHOOL Dramatic Club will present Shakespeare's "The Taming of tthe Shrew" at a matinee tomorrow at 3:15 and on Friday, at 8:15 p.m. at the Buckingham Gymnasium, 10 Buckingham st., Cambridge.

The play, under the direction of Mrs. Paul Matteson, will benefit the Hungarian Relief.

Costumes designed by Mrs. Klaus Liepmann, are in charge of Mrs. James M. Dunning. In the cast are Siiri Woodward, Diana Kirkwood, Marina Levin, Johanna Zacharias, Dorothea Friedrich, Jennifer Dawes, Toby Lerner, Joan Floe, and Ellen Corcoran.

THE BOSTON HOMOEOPATHIC LAYMAN'S LEAGUE will have Dr. Clarence W. Lindeman of Waynesboro Pa., as guest speaker at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School Apr. 8 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Lindeman, president of the International Hahnemannian Assn., will speak on "Primum, non Nocere."

Miss Dorothy and Miss Priscilla Cornish will give a small dinner at the Country Club for Dr. and Mrs. Lindeman before the lecture.

Refreshment hostesses at the Perry School include: Mrs. F. G. Perry Jr., Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,0[illegible]

APR 3 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, [illegible]

Danny Kaye [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] doesn't so that [illegible] Tonight at 7 o'clo[illegible] debut as a condu[illegible] kovsky, Johann [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible]

Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 1[illegible]

APR 4 [illegible]

Korns[illegible]

At its Symp[illegible] certs this wee[illegible] Symphony Orc[illegible] direction of Ch[illegible] present the pr[illegible] work composed [illegible] its first violin s[illegible] poser is Emil Ko[illegible] new work is ca[illegible] phosis."

After his early [illegible] ing in his native [illegible] ruhe, Baden, [illegible] continued his stu[illegible] with Sam Frank[illegible] Wilhelm Klatte [illegible] at the Stern Con[illegible] ly completing hi[illegible] with Karl Kli[illegible] study in compos[illegible] lowed with Frie[illegible] at the Hochschul[illegible]

He was then e[illegible] violinist with th[illegible] Opera, and beca[illegible] of the Edwin Fis[illegible] Music Orchestra [illegible] continental Europ[illegible] years he was a [illegible] faculty at the [illegible] Scharwenka Co[illegible] Berlin.

Upon his arriv[illegible] States Mr. Korn[illegible] gaged by Arturo [illegible] the NBC Orche[illegible] mained there only [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

Boned Chicken 35¢
Boned Turkey 33¢
Chicken a la King
Boned Turkey
Boned Chicken
Fricassee
Swanson products
FREE'S ALL YOU DO: Buy any 2 Swanson Chicken and Turkey Products. Send the coupons with your name and address to SPECIAL OFFER, P.O. Box 45-B, Mt. Vernon 10, N.Y. Receive 35c cash refund. Limited time only. One refund per family.

...ill Conduct ...ny Orch.

...line on Wednesday night. ...nd have I been working!"

The work, he indicated, has ...onsisted of listening to re-...ordings . . . Rossini, Johann ...trauss, Leroy Anderson. "Then again," he adds, "I ...ant to do something serious, ...onsistent with a symphony ...rogram—maybe an excerpt ...om Tchaikovsky or Wag-...er."

"I have a pretty good mem-...ry," he explained. "Already I ...now every note and every ...ue for various pieces. Believe ...me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" some-...body asked. "Won't the audi-...ence feel gypped?"

"Well," said Danny, "I was thinking of giving a little lec-...ture on conducting."

...with Teamster Union affairs i... New York City.

He said the committee als... would explore possible racke... influence in Long Island locals of the International Union o... Operating Engineers and the United Brotherhood of Carpen...ters.

The coin-vending machine... business, Kennedy said, has grown to an estimated three... billion dollars a year.

In committee hearings five weeks ago, he added, west coast gambling operator James B. Elkins testified that a gambling ring had hoped to obtain a pin...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 89,259

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye To Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 2 1957

Danny Kaye to Conduct

BOSTON, April 2 (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor, and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 94,428 - S. 105,054

APR 3 1957

In the News

Sir Anthony Eden, warned of a recurrence of his old bile duct trouble, decided at Auckland, New Zealand, to cut short his vacation and leave by plane Thursday for treatment at Boston.

Ex-President Harry S. Truman, stopping at Washington on a side trip from a visit to New York, paid a surprise visit to Congress and held long chats with Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson and House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas.

The Aga Khan, 79, spiritual leader of the Ismaeli Moslems, was reported in failing health with a chronic bronchial condition at his villa on the Riviera at Nice, France.

Senator John F. Kennedy (Dem., Mass.) told the Women's National Press Club at Washington that women were "less bound by party lines" and would be "the greatest swing vote in 1960," suggesting that the Democrats select a presidential candidate who would appeal to women voters.

Senator Jose P. Laurel Sr., president of the puppet Philippines republic set up by the Japanese during World War II, put himself in the running to succeed the late President Ramon Magsaysay by announcing as a candidate for the nomination of

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,235

APR 2 1957

Mitty Lives Again

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, will conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow. Purpose is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 3 1957

Kaye's Podium Style Crude But Remunerative

BOSTON, April 4 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra at an open rehearsal last night —all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

Society: Boston Unit Wins High Honor At National Girls' Club Meeting

(Fay)

MANY HOSTESSSES are sharing the entertainment honors as plans are made for next week's meetings of the American College of Physicians, Apr. 8 - 12. Among the members of the Ladies' Committee, whose headquarters will be at the Statler, are seated, l. to r.: Mrs. Chester Jones, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, chairman; Mrs. Earle M. Chapman. Standing, l. to r.: Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst and Mrs. Richard P. Stetson.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Tribute to one of Boston's most vigorous organizations, its 20-year-old Girls' Club, is being paid in New York this week. The occasion is the 12th annual conference of Girls' Clubs of America, at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

Two Bostonians, Mrs. Robert F. Herrick and the late Mrs. Hugh Bancroft are the recipients of the 1957 Girls' Clubs of America Meritorious Service Award for 20 years of devotion to the organization. Another Bostonian, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, is receiving the honor of unanimous re-election to the National Council.

Mrs. Tosi will present awards at a Girls' Club dinner at the Bunker Hill Clubhouse next month.

Boston delegates sharing conference ideas with honorary chairman Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower and leaders from all over the country include: Arthur T. Burger, executive director of the clubs here; Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Elaine Redgate, program director at Charlestown; Miss Jean Sweeney of the South Boston clubhouse, and associated director Miss Mary Sweeney. Mrs. Dwight Ellis of Longmeadow, national president, is leading today's sessions.

A FIRST CHILD, Cynthia Lyman, was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Malcolm Forbes (Ariadne Politis) of Cambridge on Apr. 1 at the Boston Lying-In Hospital. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Copley Amory Jr. of Cambridge and Mr. and Mrs. John S. Politis of Salonika, Greece.

A COMMAND PERFORMANCE by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being given for the wives of 6000 doctors arriving Sunday for the 38th annual session of the American College of Physicians at the Hotel Statler. The concert will be given Monday at 8:30 at Symphony Hall for members of the college. Also scheduled during the conference is an open house party for wives of newly elected members planned by Mrs. Walter Palmer, wife of the president of the organization, Monday morning at 10, a 12:30 luncheon and fashion show on Tuesday and a cocktail party the same day at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

On Wednesday members' wives will visit private art collections in Boston homes, go to tea at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and finish their day with dancing at the Statler Ballroom. Thursday's schedule will include a trip to Old Sturbridge Village and the annual conference banquet, at which Dr. Howard B. Sprague will present Prof. Allan R. Foley with "Tales from the Vermont Hills."

Brookline physicians' wives named with hundreds of others to assist Mrs. Theodore L. Badger and Mrs. Frank P. Foster in entertaining visitors' wives include: Mrs. Edwin B. Astwood, Mrs. Henry J. Bakst, Mrs. Victor J. Balboni, Mrs. Edward F. Bland, Mrs. Belton A. Burrows, Mrs. William B. Castle, Mrs. Earle M. Chapman, Mrs. Andrew W. Contratto, Mrs. Lewis Dexter, Mrs. Eugene C. Eppinger, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Mrs. Reginald Fitz, Mrs. Greene Fitzhugh, Mrs. John R. Graham, Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Albert A. Hornor, Mrs. Lyman H. Hoyt, Mrs. Chester S. Keefer, Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Mrs. Harold D. Levine, Mrs. A. J. Lockhart, Mrs. Alexander Marble, Mrs. George R. Minot, Mrs. Robert T. Monroe, Mrs. Robert S. Palmer, Mrs. Samuel Proger, Mrs. Howard F. Root, Mrs. Maurice S. Segal, Mrs. Charles S. Short, Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Richard P. Stetson and Mrs. Winthrop Wetherbee.

A MAY WEDDING is being planned by Miss Amy I. Coit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sumner Coit of Cambridge, who are announcing her engagement to Charles Stephen of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stephen of Montreal. Miss Coit is studying at McGill University. Mr. Stephen is completing his fourth year at the McGill Medical School.

IN BRIGHTON, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bernard Smith (Mary Rita Fouhy) are announcing the birth of their third son and sixth child, Paul Gregory, on Mar. 12, at Archbishop Cushing Pavillion of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

A FIRST CHILD, Nathaniel Adamson 3d, was born to Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel E. Adamson Jr. (Anne White) of Belmont, Mar. 17 at Richardson House. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. White of Newburyport and Nathaniel Adamson of Portsmouth, Va.

ANNUAL MEETING for the Woman's Auxiliary to the Norfolk District Medical Society will be held Tuesday, Apr. 9, at 11:30 at the University Club. A luncheon at 1 will follow the meeting. Mrs. Solomon Bell, president, is arranging the program.

750 FRIDAY LUNCHEON INVITATIONS are out for O.R.T. Honor Roll members whose extra efforts have made possible the remarkable record of the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training program, helping train 22,000 students in 19 countries. Luncheon cochairmen are Mrs. Charles Feinson and Mrs. Benjamin Levin. Guests will include Mrs. Foster Furcolo.

The luncheon will be at the Statler.

THE BUCKINGHAM SCHOOL Dramatic Club will present Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" at a matinee tomorrow at 3:15 and on Friday, at 8:15 p.m. at the Buckingham Gymnasium, 10 Buckingham st., Cambridge.

The play, under the direction of Mrs. Paul Matteson, will benefit the Hungarian Relief.

Costumes designed by Mrs. Klaus Liepmann, are in charge of Mrs. James M. Dunning. In the cast are Siiri Woodward, Diana Kirkwood, Marina Levin, Johanna Zacharias, Dorothea Friedrich, Jennifer Dawes, Toby Lerner, Joan Floe, and Ellen Corcoran.

THE BOSTON HOMOEOPATHIC LAYMAN'S LEAGUE will have Dr. Clarence W. Lindeman of Waynesboro Pa., as guest speaker at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School Apr. 8 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Lindeman, president of the International Hahnemannian Assn., will speak on "Primum, non Nocere."

Miss Dorothy and Miss Priscilla Cornish will give a small dinner at the Country Club for Dr. and Mrs. Lindeman before the lecture.

Refreshment hostesses at the Perry School include: Mrs. F. G. Perry Jr., Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 255,047 - S. 300,922

APR 3 1957

PEOPLE

By Herald Wire Services

DANNY KAYE, a comedian who confesses he can't read a note of music, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal today to raise money for the orchestra's musician pension fund.

Kaye at first admitted he was scared, then went on from there:

"I could appear simply as a comic"; but "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. I've studied how it was done by Toscanini, Ormandy, Munch and others. And have I been working!

"I have a pretty good memory. Already I know every note and every cue for various pieces. Believe me, I'm going to conduct!"

"What, no comedy?" someone asked. "Well," said Kaye, "I was thinking of giving a little lecture on conducting."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,...

APR 3 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, ...

Danny Kaye ... Boston Symphony ... doesn't go that ... Tonight at 7 o'clock ... debut as a conduct... kovsky, Johann St...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 ...

Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON
Non-par...
Circ. 1...

APR 4 ...

Korns...

At its Sym... certs this we... Symphony Or... direction of C... present the p... work composed... its first violin s... poser is Emil K... new work is "c... phosis."

After his earl... ing in his nativ... ruhe, Baden, ... continued his st... with Sam Frank... Wilhelm Klatte ... at the Stern Con... ly completing h... with Karl Ki... study in compo... lowed with Frie... at the Hochschul...

He was then e... violinist with th... Opera, and beca... of the Edwin Fis... Music Orchestra ... continental Europ... years he was a ... faculty at the ... Scharwenka Co... Berlin.

Upon his arriv... States Mr. Korn... gaged by Arturo ... the NBC Orche... mained there only...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 3 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

'Ouch! What Was That?'

Danny Kaye pauses to make a correction as he rehearsed the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. "Who says it doesn't go that way!" he exclaimed. "Rewrite it that way!" Tonight at 7 o'clock in Symphony Hall he will make his Boston debut as a conductor in a program of works by Rossini, Tchaikovsky, Johann Strauss, Sousa, and Wagner.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
APR 3 1957

Kaye Will Lead Symphony Group

Boston —(AP)— Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra Wednesday.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music. And conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 44,460 - S. 80,195
APR 3 1957

Kaye To Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON, April 2 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye, who says he can't read a note of music, is scheduled to conduct an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow.

He brushed aside any idea that he appear simply as a comic with the comment: "I'm announced as conductor and that's what I'm going to be. All my life I've loved music, and conducting fascinates me."

Purpose of his appearance is to raise money for the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 3 1957

Cooper

Emil Kornsand, whose "Metamorphosis" will have its première by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the week-end concerts in Symphony Hall.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES HERALD
Circ. D. 30,319
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Wows 'Em As Symphony Leader

By JOE DOHERTY
Herald Tribune News Service

BOSTON—A boy from Brooklyn who can't read a note of music stood on the podium in Symphony Hall last night and directed one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The inimitable Danny Kaye, demonstrating that he has a good ear for music and a highly developed sense of rhythm, wowed a capacity audience of 2,631 who subscribed $9,593 for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The hour-and-a-half "Open Rehearsal" was presented between the matinee and evening performances of his own show, the Danny Kaye International Show, at the Colonial Theater.

There were few serious moments but plenty of excellent music as one of America's top showmen led the 101 mem and two women who comprise the local symphony.

"I don't know about you and I care less, but I'm having the greatest time of my life," the master of buffoonery told his audience.

In a sequence of demonstations in the various methods of conducting orchestras, Kaye declared:

"THIS GIVES ONE of the greatest feeling of neurotic power." Whereupon he gave 10 false starts to "Trepak" from the Nutcracker Suite by Tchaikovsky while the musicians waited with bated breath.

In this selection he did take-offs on the maestro with the coffee grinder approach, another as a meat chopper, the new father pushing a baby carriage and finally a conductor with an allergy.

He gave the eminent Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, a new nickname of Chuck and constantly called for the latter's approval of his efforts. He ordered replayed several bars of Lagazza Ladra overture by Rossini for two pretty girls who were latecomers. He kissed the young lady who plays the piccolo and frequently passed among the musicians clasping their hands firmly to express his "appreciation" for their response.

Kaye's red-blood hair went completely askew when he led the orchestra in "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a number dedicated to those who "use electric razors," and the show's finale, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

For "Lohengrin Introduction Act III," by Wagner Kaye faced the audience to "show what the musicians see but the public never sees." The grimaces, pleadings, cajoling and expressions of utter delight sent the audience into gales of laughter.

IN "FIDDLE-FADDLE" by Anderson he begged the strings to sing and he hummed and sang several measures. The "Tritsch-Tratsch" polka by Strauss sent him into high glee and when the percussion reverberated to the sharp pointing of his finger chortled his extreme satisfaction wtih a couple of extra bows before the number was finished.

There was a serious moment at the start when conductor Munch led "Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas and just before the finale when Kaye made a brief address.

He thanked the orchestra and the audience for allowing him to "indulge myself."

He said his principal interests in addition to acting are medicine and music and declared:

"One of the great things that should happen in our society is that we should live for one another. It is most gratifying to know that these men and women who have dedicated their lives to music may face the future free from care when their days of playing are at an end."

Kaye had only a two-hour rehearsal with the orchestra but in his few serious moments one would have believed he had been with them for months.

It was not generally known but for the past week he has been attending the regular symphony concerts observing Munch and the noted French conductor Jean Martinon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram-News (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Democrat
Circ. 21,784
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Scores Hit With Symphony

BOSTON, April 4. (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall last night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 4 1957

Kornsand Music in Preview

At its Symphony Hall concerts this weekend the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will present the première of a new work composed by a member of its first violin section. The composer is Emil Kornsand, and the new work is called "Metamorphosis."

After his early musical training in his native city of Karlsruhe, Baden, Mr. Kornsand continued his studies in Berlin with Sam Franko in violin and Wilhelm Klatte in composition at the Stern Conservatory, finally completing his violin training with Karl Klingler. Further study in composition then followed with Friedrich E. Koch, at the Hochschule Für Musik.

He was then engaged as first violinist with the Berlin State Opera, and became a member of the Edwin Fischer Chamber Music Orchestra which toured continental Europe. For several years he was a member of the faculty at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin.

Upon his arrival in the United States Mr. Kornsand was engaged by Arturo Toscanini for the NBC Orchestra. He remained there only one season, at Koussevitzky variations) would not give enough indication of its true nature. The two themes are stated in the Recitative, with intermittent quotation of a kind of leitmotiv consisting of the twelve available tones of the chromatic scale, arranged in a strictly symmetrical order.

* * *

"In the following Air, the leitmotiv becomes a continuous texture as a background upon which the two themes are embroidered in a broad cantabile. The March employs mainly theme No. 1, whereas in the Jig, theme No. 2 is more in the foreground. This section represents more a kind of development leading to the Fugato, which is a bridge to the Finale.

"The Finale opens with the recapitulation of the March theme, and breaks off suddenly in order to give way to a scherzolike episode in which the leitmotiv has now grown to a full size theme: metamorphosis at last completed! The coda leads to a surprising E major, in which the leitmotiv, quoted by the glochenspiel, flute, and clarinet, expires half way. Then with two abrupt measures of the March, my 'Metamorphosis' finds its conclusion."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 3 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts B.S.O. Rehearsal to Aid Fund Tonight

Danny Kaye will conduct a special open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the benefit of its pension fund, at Symphony Hall tonight at 7 o'clock. The rehearsal will run to 8:30, and what the famed entertainer will do as his share of the program remains his secret. Charles Munch will also rehearse one serious number.

This special rehearsal will not affect the usual matinee and evening performances of Danny Kaye's International Show at the Colonial Theater. Since Mr. Kaye does not go on at the beginning of the International Show, he will be able to appear in all three.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

APR 4 - 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300

APR 4 1957

UP Telephoto

'CONDUCTING' the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a benefit last night, comedian Danny Kaye rolled 'em in the aisles and helped clear nearly $10,000 for the musicians pension fund. Kaye claims he "can't read a note." At one point he turned his back to the 104 musicians so the audience could see him. "How's that, Chuck?" he asked Conductor Charles Munch.

"Conductor" Danny Kaye ack arm motions and leaping all over the stand and eventually falling off it.

Kaye remarked after the number, "You know, I'm having the most marvelous time of my life doing this. I'm so delighted that if I were any more delighted I'd be in an institution. There's no greater feeling of neurotic power in the world than conducting. I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

Boston music critics agreed that Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Geoffrey Fush wrote in the Boston Herald, "Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance which side had won."

The orchestra won. Its pension fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 4 1957

Kaye Is Wow At Symphony

Chuck Munch had better look o his laurels. Danny Kaye was retty hot on the baton last night irecting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its Pension Fund Benefit.

Also Mr. Kaye had better look o his. When Conductor Munch arried through the first number, he did all right on the aughs, too. He really gave the vorks to the late-comers.

It was Danny, who dubbed Mr. Munch "Chuck." He was in a very relaxed mood. His routine yesterday was a matinee of his show at the Colonial, conducting the rehearsal of the symphony, an evening performance at the Colonial and then the oxygen tent at the hotel.

He was extremely lucky not o have been entombed in Symphony Hall. There was such stamping and applause for him t was a wonder the building didn't cave in.

Danny's only trouble with directing is that he fractures the orchestra members so that the fiddle players have a hard time finding a hollow place under their chins. And the wood winds just can't get in it at all.

The introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin" was directed by Danny facing the audience. He wanted everyone to know what the orchestra's view of a conductor is.

He also made like an allergic conductor, a coffee grinder, a meat chopper — all familiar types on the stand. He declared that conducting gave him the "greatest feeling of neurotic power."

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, one of the finest flute players in the country, took her share of ribbing as a woman. And the concert master had his hand shaken by Danny so many times it will be a wonder if he plays the week-end concerts.

The great moment came with "The Stars and Stripes Forever." It was nothing less than full-lunged.

As a curtain speech, Danny told the excited audience that if he were any more delighted to be in Boston than he is, he would be ready for a sanitarium. His fans are beginning to look a little whacky, too. A. V. M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035

APR 4 1957

'Maestro' Danny Kaye Conducts in Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

But He Can't Read Music

By JOE DOHERTY
(SPECIAL TO THE DETROIT NEWS)

BOSTON, April 4. — A boy from Brooklyn who can't read a note of music stood on the podium in Symphony Hall last night and directed one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The inimitable Danny Kaye, demonstrating that he has a good ear for music and a highly developed sense of rhythm vowed a capacity audience of 2,631 who subscribed $9,593 for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TIME OF HIS LIFE

The hour-and-a-half "open rehearsal" was presented between the matinee and evening performances of his own show, the Danny Kaye International Show, at the Colonial Theatre.

There were few serious moments but plenty of excellent music as one of America's top showmen led the 101 men and two women who comprise the local symphony.

"I don't know about you and I care less, but I'm having the greatest time of my life," the master of buffoonery told his audience.

In a sequence of demonstrations in the various methods of conducting orchestras, Kaye declared:

BURLESQUES LEADERS

"This gives one of the greatest feeling of neurotic power." Whereupon he gave 10 false starts to "Trepak" from the Nutcracker Suite by Tschaikovsky while the musicians waited with bated breath.

In this selection he did take offs on the maestro with the coffee grinder approach, another as a meat chopper, the new father pushing a baby carriage and finally a conductor with an allergy.

He gave the eminent Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, a new nickname of "Chuck" and constantly called for the latter's approval of his efforts.

Kaye's red-blond hair went completely askew when he led the orchestra in "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a number dedicated to those who "use electric razors," and the show's finale, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 4 1957

START OF A CLASSICAL EVENING—Danny Kaye prepares to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall last night, usurping the podium usually occupied by Mr. Charles Munch. Danny's style was greatly appreciated by the capacity audience, but will hardly set standard for the musical world of the future.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
APR 4 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 452,721 - S. 537,740
APR 4 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300
APR 4 1957

Kaye Cavorts As Conductor

Boston Symphony, Audience in Stitches

BOSTON, April 4 (INS) — Music lovers conceded today the Boston Symphony Orchestra selected the right leader when the famed musical group devoted an evening to having fun—and raising money for its pension fund.

The leader was comedian Danny Kaye, who had a capacity audience and the orchestra in stitches as he clowned on the podium.

Kaye gave imitations of famed conductors Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner, called the orchestra's regular conductor, Charles Munch, "Chuck," and directed the audience in its applause.

Conductors Caricatured

Kaye interrupted the proceedings to shake hands with many of the orchestra members and gave a kiss to 1st flutist Doriot Anthony.

A highlight of his performance was his caricature of various types of conductors. As the orchestra played the Trepak from Tschaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite," Kaye first showed how he would conduct it. Then he swung into an illustration of the "coffee grinder" type of Lezder, who gave a big, rolling beat.

Next was the "meat chopper" type who beat up and down, "the conductor who has just become a new father and pushes a baby carriage"—that one pushed with his arms.

Kaye 'Can't Read a Note'

The "allergic" type was demonstrated with vigorous scratching, while, finally, the nervous type, demonstrated with flailing arm motions and leaping all over the stand and eventually falling off it.

Kaye remarked after the number, "You know, I'm having the most marvelous time of my life doing this. I'm so delighted that if I were any more delighted I'd be in an institution. There's no greater feeling of neurotic power in the world than conducting. I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

Boston music critics agreed that Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Geoffrey Fush wrote in the Boston Herald, "Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance which side had won."

The orchestra won. Its pension fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
APR 4

—Associated Press Wirephoto

"Conductor" Danny Kaye acknowledges applause in Boston's Symphony Hall.

stamping and applause for h t was a wonder the didn't cave in.

Danny's only trouble with recting is that he fractures t orchestra members so that t fiddle players have a hard ti finding a hollow place und their chins. And the wood win just can't get in it at all.

The introduction to the thi act of "Lohengrin" was direct by Danny facing the audien
He wanted everyone to kn what the orchestra's view of conductor is.

He also made like an aller conductor, a coffee grinder, meat chopper — all famil types on the stand. He declar that conducting gave him
"greatest feeling of neuro power."

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, of the finest flute players in country, took her share of bing as a woman. And the cert master had his hand shak by Danny so many times it be a wonder if he plays week-end concerts.

The great moment came w
"The Stars and Stripes F ever." It was nothing less th full-lunged.

As a curtain speech, Dan told the excited audience th if he were any more delight to be in Boston than he is,
would be ready for a sanitarium
His fans are beginning to look little whacky, too. A. V. M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035
APR 4 1957

'Maestro' Danny Kaye Conducts in Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

Thursday, April 4, 1957—

KNOWS THE SCORE

Kaye Leads Symphony but He Can't Read Music

By JOE DOHERTY
(SPECIAL TO THE DETROIT NEWS)

BOSTON, April 4. — A boy from Brooklyn who can't read a note of music stood on the podium in Symphony Hall last night and directed one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The inimitable Danny Kaye, demonstrating that he has a good ear for music and a highly developed sense of rhythm vowed a capacity audience of 2,631 who subscribed $9,593 for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TIME OF HIS LIFE

The hour-and-a-half "open rehearsal" was presented between the matinee and evening performances of his own show, the Danny Kaye International Show, at the Colonial Theatre.

There were few serious moments but plenty of excellent music as one of America's top showmen led the 101 men and two women who comprise the local symphony.

"I don't know about you and I care less, but I'm having the greatest time of my life," the master of buffoonery told his audience.

In a sequence of demonstrations in the various methods of conducting orchestras, Kaye declared:

BURLESQUES LEADERS

"This gives one of the greatest feeling of neurotic power." Whereupon he gave 10 false starts to "Trepak" from the Nutcracker Suite by Tschaikovsky while the musicians waited with bated breath.

In this selection he did take offs on the maestro with the coffee grinder approach, another as a meat chopper, the new father pushing a baby carriage and finally a conductor with an allergy.

He gave the eminent Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, a new nickname of "Chuck" and constantly called for the latter's approval of his efforts.

Kaye's red-blond hair went completely askew when he led the orchestra in "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a number dedicated to those who "use electric razors," and the show's finale, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 4 1957

START OF A CLASSICAL EVENING—Danny Kaye prepares to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall last night, usurping the podium usually occupied by Mr. Charles Munch. Danny's style was greatly appreciated by the capacity audience, but will hardly set standard for the musical world of the future.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

APR 4 - 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 452,721 - S. 537,740

APR 4 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300

APR 4 1957

Kaye Is Under Way As Co[illegible]

Boston Audien[illegible]

BOSTON, [illegible]sic lovers [illegible] Boston Sym[illegible] lected the [illegible] famed musi[illegible] evening to [illegible] ing money [illegible]

The leade[illegible] ny Kaye, [illegible] audience a[illegible] stitches as [illegible] podium.

Kaye gave [illegible] onductors [illegible] nd Fritz R[illegible] chestra's r[illegible] Charles Mun[illegible] Chuck," and directed the audience in its applause.

Conductors Caricatured

Kaye interrupted the proceedings to shake hands with many of the orchestra members and gave a kiss to 1st flutist Doriot Anthony.

A highlight of his performance was his caricature of various types of conductors. As the orchestra played the Trepak from Tschaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite," Kaye first showed how he would conduct it. Then he swung into an illustration of the "coffee grinder" type of Lezder, who gave a big, rolling beat.

Next was the "meat chopper" type who beat up and down, "the conductor who has just become a new father and pushes a baby carriage"—that one pushed with his arms.

Kaye 'Can't Read a Note'

The "allergic" type was demonstrated with vigorous scratching, while, finally, the nervous type, demonstrated with flailing arm motions and leaping all over the stand and eventually falling off it.

Kaye remarked after the number, "You know, I'm having the most marvelous time of my life doing this. I'm so delighted that if I were any more delighted I'd be in an institution. There's no greater feeling of neurotic power in the world than conducting. I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

Boston music critics agreed that Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Geoffrey Fush wrote in the Boston Herald, "Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance which side had won."

The orchestra won. Its pension fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

vill win a $25 gift certificate from McGee's Photo Supply. Two second prizes will be awarded, ne for black and white and the other for a color picture. Prizes vill be $10 gift certificates from Converse Photo Supply. There vill also be four honorable mention ribbons and prizes.

Grand prize for attendance at he show will be a trip to Bermuda or two persons, for any week hey choose.

WE BUY GUNS
McGee's 1446 ACUSHNET AVE

Old Classmate Fails

BALTIMORE, April 4 (AP) It had been many years but two women employes of the service laundry thought they

Political Advertisemen
ENOS
7th
ON THE BALLOT
Vivian Tay
415 Dartmouth

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 4 1957

Kaye Is Wow At Symphony

Chuck Munch had better look o his laurels. Danny Kaye was retty hot on the baton last night irecting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its Pension Fund Benefit.

Also Mr. Kaye had better look o his. When Conductor Munch arried through the first number, he did all right on the aughs, too. He really gave the vorks to the late-comers.

It was Danny, who dubbed Mr. Munch "Chuck." He was in a very relaxed mood. His routine yesterday was a matinee of his show at the Colonial, conducting he rehearsal of the symphony, an evening performance at the Colonial and then the oxygen tent at the hotel.

He was extremely lucky not o have been entombed in Symphony Hall. There was such stamping and applause for him t was a wonder the building didn't cave in.

Danny's only trouble with directing is that he fractures the orchestra members so that the fiddle players have a hard time finding a hollow place under their chins. And the wood winds just can't get in it at all.

The introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin" was directed by Danny facing the audience. He wanted everyone to know what the orchestra's view of a conductor is.

He also made like an allergic conductor, a coffee grinder, a meat chopper — all familiar types on the stand. He declared that conducting gave him the "greatest feeling of neurotic power."

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, one of the finest flute players in the country, took her share of ribbing as a woman. And the concert master had his hand shaken by Danny so many times it will be a wonder if he plays the week-end concerts.

The great moment came with "The Stars and Stripes Forever." It was nothing less than full-lunged.

As a curtain speech, Danny told the excited audience that if he were any more delighted to be in Boston than he is, he would be ready for a sanitarium. His fans are beginning to look a little whacky, too. A. V. M.

Thursday, April 4, 1957—

KNOWS THE SCORE

Kaye Leads Symphony but He Can't Read Music

By JOE DOHERTY
(SPECIAL TO THE DETROIT NEWS)

BOSTON, April 4. — A boy from Brooklyn who can't read a note of music stood on the podium in Symphony Hall last night and directed one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The inimitable Danny Kaye, demonstrating that he has a good ear for music and a highly developed sense of rhythm vowed a capacity audience of 2,631 who subscribed $9,593 for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TIME OF HIS LIFE

The hour-and-a-half "open rehearsal" was presented between the matinee and evening performances of his own show, the Danny Kaye International Show, at the Colonial Theatre.

There were few serious moments but plenty of excellent music as one of America's top showmen led the 101 men and two women who comprise the local symphony.

"I don't know about you and I care less, but I'm having the greatest time of my life," the master of buffoonery told his audience.

In a sequence of demonstrations in the various methods of conducting orchestras, Kaye declared:

BURLESQUES LEADERS

"This gives one of the greatest feeling of neurotic power." Whereupon he gave 10 false starts to "Trepak" from the Nutcracker Suite by Tschaikovsky while the musicians waited with bated breath.

In this selection he did take offs on the maestro with the coffee grinder approach, another as a meat chopper, the new father pushing a baby carriage and finally a conductor with an allergy.

He gave the eminent Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, a new nickname of "Chuck" and constantly called for the latter's approval of his efforts.

Kaye's red-blond hair went completely askew when he led the orchestra in "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a number dedicated to those who "use electric razors," and the show's finale, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035

APR 4 1957

'Maestro' Danny Kaye Conducts in Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 4 1957

START OF A CLASSICAL EVENING—Danny Kaye prepares to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall last night, usurping the podium usually occupied by Mr. Charles Munch. Danny's style was greatly appreciated by the capacity audience, but will hardly set standard for the musical world of the future.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
APR 4 1957

COMEDIAN DANNY KAYE seems well pleased with himself as he turns to an applauding audience at Boston Symphony Hall last night. Kaye was invited as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal to raise money for its musicians' pension fund. Danny admitted he had to scare himself to undertake the conducting task.

(Story on Page 44)

AP Photo

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
APR 4 1957

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Danny Kaye Leads, Symphony Howls

For the musicians' pension fund, a good cause, Danny Kaye conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an hour and a half last night, at Symphony Hall. What a show he and they put on!

In the last 25 years, there has been no such hilarity in Symphony hall. The young maestro reduced the audience to hysterics, the orchestra to something like helplessness and the works of certain composers to shreds. In the end, he received a demonstration that might have turned the head of a maharajah. The audience sat and stamped on the floor and cheered. Then they stood up and cheered to show that even in Boston, and even in Symphony Hall, a great talent exercised in a great cause can be greatly appreciated.

Elliot Norton

Charles Munch, the grand old conductor of the orchestra, sat in a first-balcony seat during most of the evening, grave and silent. At intervals, a beaming Danny Kaye shouted a greeting to him. Danny calls him "Chuck!" Chuck had no comment.

LIGHT HEARTED

H. E. Dickonson opened the program and set the tone. This, he explained, was to be "an open rehearsal" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it would be called this because the management couldn't think of anything else. He was light-hearted but apprehensive.

Then Dr. Munch, who had not yet been christened Chuck, appeared and led the orchestra through a precise and stimulating performance of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Dukas. Short and swift, sensitive and brilliant, this showed the band at its best.

Then the old maestro led the young one onstage, and pandemonium began to reign.

For the next 45 minutes, the audience, which filled the hall to the topmost tier and the ultimate perch alternately chuckled, tittered, giggled, and howled with joy, as Danny Kaye turned the world of music into a house of hilarity, with one of the world's great hands as his willing instrument.

KAYE AT HIS EASE

He shook hands with the concert master — every few minutes. He also shook hands with other members of the orchestra frequently. He kissed one of the lady members. He conducted the whole band and portions of it. When it became necessary to address himself to a special choir, he walked through the chairs to lead them individually.

When the mood was on him, he hummed as they played. When they offended, he shouted in annoyance. For musicians who pleased, he shouted "bravo!" loudly.

MUSICIANS HOWL

Presenting excerpts from such standard composers as Rossini, Tchaikovsky, Wagner and Strauss ("This one is SAM Strauss!" he insisted!) he moved his arms in time with the music and, although he cannot read a note, succeeded most of the time in suggesting that he was actually leading. Once, he ended a beat ahead. "Ah," he said quickly to the orchestra, "You beat me!" In another selection, he was a beat behind. He shrugged it off with his happy boyish smile, and the men of the orchestra, who were frequently in a state of total hilarity, howled with joy.

He conducted the introduction to Wagner's "Lohengrin" (Act III) with his back to the orchestra, so that the audience could see "what a conductor looks like to the orchestra." This particular conductor responded with wild violence to the music. He writhed; he groaned; he mugged; he sobbed; he smiled; he collapsed. So did the audience—and the orchestra, too.

Danny imitated various kinds of orchestra leaders. In the process, he conducted with his hands, his head, his heels, his hips. Through all of it, the remarkably well disciplined orchestra played what they were supposed to play and played it rather well. Did any comedian ever have 100 "stooges" of such distinction?

Danny's clowning earned nearly $10,000 for the pension fund. In a quiet moment, he acknowledged this with genuine sentiment and good taste. Then he stood up again and led the orchestra through what must have been the loudest rendition of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" which anyone has ever heard anywhere. It was, a happily uproarious end to a happy and uproarious occasion.

(See photo in center fold.)

Elliott Norton broadcasts every Friday at 9:30 p. m. on WBZ.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,274
APR 4 1957

Thanks to Danny; Symphony Richer

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

Conductor Charles Munch warmed up the orchestra with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," then dragged Kaye "reluctantly" on stage. Joyous bedlam followed a the 104 players tried to follow Conductor Kaye's beat. At one point, Kaye turned around and conducted backwards—so the audience could see him front view.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 30,719
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Has 'Em In The Aisles

BOSTON (INS)—Music lovers conceded today the Boston Symphony Orchestra selected the right leader when the famed musical group devoted an evening to having fun—and raising money for its pension fund.

The leader was Comedian Danny Kaye, who had a capacity audience—and the orchestra in stitches as he clowned on the podium.

Kaye gave imitations of famed conductors Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner, called the orchestra's regular conductor, Charles Munch, "Chuck," and directed the audience in its applause.

Kaye interrupted the proceedings to shake hands with many of the orchestra members and gave a kiss to first flutist Doriot Anthony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,496
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye "Leads" Boston Symphony

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Rolls In Money, Laughs

BOSTON—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall last night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 4 1957

(Globe Photo by Jack O'Connell)

MAESTRO AT WORK—Danny Kaye, his hair a proper mess, conducts the Boston Symphony before packed house.

Symphony Hall Rocks Under Kaye's Direction

By CYRUS DURGIN

Danny Kaye all but took the roof off Symphony Hall last night as he worked over the Boston Symphony in a special open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. For more than an hour the thin, rubber-boned tousled-headed comedian kept a capacity audience in stitches—and the players themselves, for that matter—as he capered on the podium.

He conducted—that is, he beat time. He danced. He clowned. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner. He called Charles Munch "Chuck," and the conductor beamed. He shook the hands of at least a dozen members of the orchestra, and gave first flutist Doriot Anthony a kiss. He conducted the audience in applause. All this to a constant flow of that quick, sharp patter that is so very amusing.

Danny's antics netted $9953.50 for the Boston Symphony's pension fund.

This was no doubt the funniest evening ever enjoyed in the usually staid Symphony Hall. It surely was the weirdest blend of comicality and music that this chronicler ever experienced. To make it possible Danny gave his services, and, of course, the Orchestra gave theirs.

DANNY KAYE

Page Twenty-five

become. It is a great privilege to be able to do this, though you might think it is a lark, and I admit it is. But there are two things in which I take a violent interest—medicine and music."

That was it, all except a long barrage of applause and cheers and stamping, with the audience standing in a real show of homage to Maestro Danny.

On the way out, someone said: "I think Maj Higginson, who founded the Orchestra, would have turned over in his grave had he known about this."

Maybe. But I suspect he would have smiled as he did so.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 4 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to onducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 4 1957

Society: Oldest Symphony Subscribers Enjoy Kaye's Comical Capers

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Danny Kaye took over the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night and made a sold-out house and standees so happy they blocked the streets to watch him leave Symphony Hall for his own show at the Colonial. He made himself so happy, too, he confessed. "If I were any happier I'd be in an institution!"

While he writhed and roared through versions of conducting styles from "coffee grinder" to "Meat Chopper," he was giving the orchestra (which he kept very busy) a chance to earn a handsome stipend for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Subscribers who have heard every conductor in Symphony's history found the evening just as hilarious as their grandchildren.

They didn't have to depend on movements of Mr. Kaye's back, because he wasn't turning around to compare notes with "Chuck" Munch or beaming at trustees like Charles Cabot and the conference to [illegible]ation of [illegible]onductor [illegible]e. Mar[illegible] members [illegible]re Sym[illegible] Thomas [illegible]nd John [illegible]laughter, who folincluded [illegible]ert, Dr. [illegible]ms, Mr. [illegible]ch, Max[illegible] C. Titcombs, the Edward Tafts and Mrs. William Stanley Parker.

Others at Boston's funniest benefit in years included Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Gamble, Dr. and Mrs. Cesare Lombroso, Miss Marilli Paccini of Montreal, Mrs. George Clarke, Miss Irena Antonovicz, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stagg, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Forbes, Miss Amy Sacker, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Miss Eleanor Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kelleher, Robert Sylvester, and the G. Wallace Woodworths and their son, Ellery.

DOCTORS' DINNERS are in the majority among parties planned before the benefit preview of "A New Girl in Town" at the Shubert Theater on Apr. 16 to aid the Boston Lying-In Hospital Administrators and Service League members are also taking part in the festivities, including Mrs. Henry L. Mason Jr., Service League president, and Mr. Mason, who will have as their dinner and theater guests Dr. and Mrs. William Benjamin Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Dearborn Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert L. Steward, Mr. and Mrs. O. Kelley Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Hollingsworth Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Willis P. Beal and Mr. and Mrs. George D. Aldrich.

Hospital Pres. and Mrs. John R. Quarles will have their son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. John C. Harper of Foxboro, and their daughter, Betsy, at a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow are also having a family group with Mr. and Mrs. William D. Manice Jr. (Olivia Ames), and Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow Jr. (Julia Simonds), and Mr. and Mrs. E. Miles Herter (Lee Bigelow).

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Allen Jr. will have dinner with Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne and their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne Jr., are another family party. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin T. Pfaelzer will have their son, A. Goodhue Pfaelzer, and his Harvard roommate, Bonner Field, as their guests.

Dr. and Mrs. James H. Jackson and Dr. and Mrs. Henry Freeman Allen plan to be together that evening. Mrs. Jackson is chairman of the Service League tours for prospective patients and Mrs. Allen is chairman of the gift shop.

A SECOND DAUGHTER, Jane Clifford, was born Mar. 6 at St. Margaret's Hospital to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Goode (Margaret Clifford) of Milton. Mrs. James Clifford of West Roxbury and M[illegible] D[illegible] of [illegible]

(Warren Kay Vantine)

A JUNE WEDDING is planned by Miss Rollene Snowden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merton E. Snowden of Vineyard Haven, who are announcing her engagement to Carlyle L. Helber Jr. of Forest Hills, N.Y. She graduated from the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals School of Nursing and he is an M.I.T. student.

IN WASHINGTON and in Boston today, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Trowbridge of Washington are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Janet Sherman, to Edwin Upton Curtis Bohlen, son of Mrs. Carleton Pike of Lubec, Me., and Chestnut Hill, and the late Henry Morgan Bohlen.

Miss Trowbridge graduated from Putney School, Vermont, and from Smith College. She is a member of the Junior League of Washington. Mr. Bohlen is a graduate of St. Mark's and of Harvard, class of 1951. His clubs include Hasty Pudding—Institute of 1770, Varsity and Porcellian, and the Somerset Club of Boston.

He is a foreign service officer, currently stationed in Kabul, Afghanistan, and he and Miss Trowbridge plan to be married this month in Stockholm, where Miss Trowbridge's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Burgwin Holmes, are living.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 22,749
APR 4 1957

Comedian Kaye Leads Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund, which was enriched by $9995.50.

APR 4 1957

Society Happily Hysterical As Kaye Conducts Symphony

By MAVIS WHITE

Friday afternoon at Symphony is never like that! That's what the dignified elderly ladies, who for years have occupied the same seats at Symphony Hall, will probably say when they recover from the shock of last night's special performance there by Maestro Danny Kaye. These Proper Bostonians, as well as other socially prominent devotees of music, went along with the rest of the crowd for a good laugh. However, they ended up in a happy state of hysteria while the orchestra performers themselves seemed to be in the final stages of collapse by the time the Pension Fund concert was over.

Conductor Charles Munch made the perfect choice when he opened the evening with the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," for the gathering was throughly bewitched from the moment Mr. Kaye took over the baton to his final blaring direction of "The Stars and Stripes Forever". Speaking of batons, Maestro Kaye arrived with a dozen which were broken into bits or tossed aside in half a minute.

Among those watching the antics of this most unusual conductor who has terrorized the symphonic world from West to East were: "Chuck" Munch, seated in the first balcony, and Mrs. William Stanley Parker, who resolutely climbed to the second. Mrs. George Lyon was there as were Miss Eleanor Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sanger, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. Edward Sanders, Mrs. John Palfrey, Mrs. Franklin Dexter, Mrs. David Evans, Miss Helen Gilbert and Miss Eleanor Allen.

Mrs. Thomas Allen attended as did Miss Elizabeth Jackson, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Mrs. Charles A. Newhall, Mrs. David G. Black, Mrs. William A. Parker, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taft, the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Stagg and Mr. and Mrs. Theodore White.

Still others were Miss Amy Sacker, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Bemis, Mr. Robert Ramsey, Mr. and Mrs. John Burke, Mr. Maxim Karolick, Mr. Robert Sylvester, Mrs. Alan Forbes, and Mr. and Mrs. George Huberman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 6,812
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye 'Leads' Boston Symphony in An Unusual Concert

BOSTON, (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

Conductor Charles Munch warmed up the orchestra with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," then dragged Kaye "reluctantly" on stage. Joyous bedlam followed as the 104 players tried to follow Conductor Kaye's beat. At one point, Kaye turned around and conducted backwards — so the audience could see him front view.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 6,747
APR 4 1957

Maestro Danny Kaye Still Good Comedian

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

...NY KAYE

Continued from the First Page

As Harry Ellis Dickson said as he gave a little preliminary talk before the "open rehearsal" exploded, no one knew what Maestro Danny would do, except they were pretty sure he'd conduct Rossini's "La Gazza Ladra" ("The Thieving Magpie") Overture. From there out, Danny was on his own, and Dickson might have added: "Hold on to your hats and side-rails!"

Here's about what happened: First Charles Munch came out and really conducted something high-class, Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer." After a bow, he bounded off-stage, only to reappear, dragging by the hand a Danny Kaye so immaculately dressed, his hair combed so neatly that you'd hardly know him. At that point Danny looked serious, even frightened.

Carefully Selects Baton

Munch then produced a sheaf of batons, and having kept one out, gave them to Danny. Much as he might pick a golf stick, Danny took one, piled the rest upon the conductor's music stand, where there wasn't any music.

First Number: "Grand Chords." A BIG BANG! Danny turned around to give us all a "So you thought I couldn't do it!" grin. Then he broke off a bit of the baton, then another Grand Chord. As the baton got broken smaller and smaller, the chords got shorter and softer until the last one, as the stick was shorter than a pencil, when the boys on the stage tricked him and made a blast that almost bounced him in the air.

Finally they all got down to Rossini's Overture, which went well among the musicians, but had some of the fanciest gestures I never saw before from the red-haired Maestro. This part no one could describe. Only a cameraman could do justice to it.

Danny next gave his full treatment to the [illegible] from Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker," showing us first how Maestro Kaye would conduct it. Then he illustrated the "coffee grinder" type of conductor, who gave a big, rolling beat, after that the "meat chopper" species who just beat up and down, the conductor who has become a new father and pushes a baby carriage" (that kind just moves his arms); the "allergic" [illegible] who seems to itch all over and vigorously scratches. Last of all, the "emotional type" who really gets into the music and all over the stand, leaping, flailing, kneeling and ultimately falling off.

There had to be a little stop for patter after this illustration of the fine art of conducting.

"You know, I'm having the most marvelous time of my life doing this," beamed Danny. "I'm so delighted that if I were any more delighted I'd be in an institution. There's no greater feeling of neurotic power in the world than conducting. I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting.

"'Chuck' Munch, he's a very nice man. Well, let's do a little number dedicated to those who use an electric razor."

So into "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a familiar Pops number based upon airwaves commercials.

"Now let's have a little intermission. I want to change my clothes, then we'll come back for the rest. Why don't you go out and smoke?"

We did.

When Maestro Danny emerged again he wore an impeccable gray suit instead of the darker one of the first half.

"I changed my shirt. I got terribly hot up here. Now, you have been coming to concerts for years, and for years you have always seen the conductor from the back. For the first time in music, I am going to show you what the players see when a conductor conducts.

"Thees will display the conductor's vee-sage" (and he gave it the French pronunciation). "How's that, Chuck?" and Maestro Danny blew a kiss to Mr. Munch, who was seated up in the first balcony. (Jean Martinon, recent Symphony guest conductor, was sitting just one seat in front of Munch, and both of them seemed to be holding their sides.) Munch waved back.

After the last chord, Danny bid the audience rise and acknowledge the applause of the Orchestra, to which he bowed gravely.

At this point came the imitation of Beecham as Danny said he once had seen him, "looking rather disabled." Violists de Pasquale and Cauhape took Danny by the arms and eased him into a chair which they placed on the stand. A microphone came up out of somewhere. Danny sat and talked into it.

"I've always had a special affection for Boston," he grinned. "I've an even greater one now. I don't know what I might have become if I hadn't become what I did become. It is a great privilege to be able to do this, though you might think it is a lark, and I admit it is. But there are two things in which I take a violent interest—medicine and music."

That was it, all except a long barrage of applause and cheers and stamping, with the audience standing in a real show of homage to Maestro Danny.

On the way out, someone said: "I think Maj Higginson, who founded the Orchestra, would have turned over in his grave had he known about this."

Maybe. But I suspect he would have smiled as he did so.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 4 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 4 1957

Society: Oldest Symphony Subscribers Enjoy Kaye's Comical Capers

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Danny Kaye took over the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night and made a sold-out house and standees so happy they blocked the streets to watch him leave Symphony Hall for his own show at the Colonial. He made himself so happy, too, he confessed. "If I were any happier I'd be in an institution!"

While he writhed and roared through versions of conducting styles from "coffee grinder" to "Meat Chopper," he was giving the orchestra (which he kept very busy) a chance to earn a handsome stipend for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Subscribers who have heard every conductor in Symphony's history found the evening just as hilarious as their grandchildren.

They didn't have to depend on movements of Mr. Kaye's back, because he wasn't turning around to compare notes with "Chuck" Munch or beaming at trustees like Charles Cabot and [illegible] he conference to [illegible]ation of [illegible]onductor [illegible]e. Mar[illegible] members [illegible]re Sym[illegible] Thomas [illegible]nd John [illegible]daughter, [illegible] who fol[illegible] included [illegible]ert, Dr. [illegible]ms. Mr. [illegible]ch, Max[illegible]t C. Titcombs, the Edward Tafts and Mrs. William Stanley Parker.

Others at Boston's funniest benefit in years included Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Gamble, Dr. and Mrs. Cesare Lombroso, Miss Marilli Paccini of Montreal, Mrs. George Clarke, Miss Irena Antonovicz, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stagg, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Forbes, Miss Amy Sacker, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Miss Eleanor Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kelleher, Robert Sylvester, and the G. Wallace Woodworths and their son, Ellery.

DOCTORS' DINNERS are in the majority among parties planned before the benefit preview of "A New Girl in Town" at the Shubert Theater on Apr. 16 to aid the Boston Lying-In Hospital Administrators and Service League members are also taking part in the festivities, including Mrs. Henry L. Mason Jr., Service League president, and Mr. Mason, who will have as their dinner and theater guests Dr. and Mrs. William Benjamin Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Dearborn Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert L. Steward, Mr. and Mrs. O. Kelley Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Hollingsworth Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Willis P. Beal and Mr. and Mrs. George D. Aldrich.

Hospital Pres. and Mrs. John R. Quarles will have their son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. John C. Harper of Foxboro, and their daughter, Betsy, at a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow are also having a family group with Mr. and Mrs. William D. Manice Jr. (Olivia Ames), and Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow Jr. (Julia Simonds), and Mr. and Mrs. E. Miles Herter (Lee Bigelow).

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Allen Jr. will have dinner with Mrs. Frank G. Allen. Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne and their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne Jr., are another family party. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin T. Pfaelzer will have their son, A. Goodhue Pfaelzer, and his Harvard roommate, Bonner Field, as their guests.

Dr. and Mrs. James H. Jackson and Dr. and Mrs. Henry Freeman Allen plan to be together that evening. Mrs. Jackson is chairman of the Service League tours for prospective patients and Mrs. Allen is chairman of the gift shop.

A SECOND DAUGHTER, Jane Clifford, was born Mar. 6 at St. Margaret's Hospital to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Goode (Margaret Clifford) of Milton. Mrs. James Clifford of West Roxbury and M[illegible]

(Warren Kay Vantine)

A JUNE WEDDING is planned by Miss Rollene Snowden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merton E. Snowden of Vineyard Haven, who are announcing her engagement to Carlyle L. Helber Jr. of Forest Hills, N.Y. She graduated from the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals School of Nursing and he is an M.I.T. student.

parents, and Thomas D. O'Connor of Dorchester is her great-grandfather.

IN WASHINGTON and in Boston today, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Trowbridge of Washington are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Janet Sherman, to Edwin Upton Curtis Bohlen, son of Mrs. Carleton Pike of Lubec, Me., and Chestnut Hill, and the late Henry Morgan Bohlen.

Miss Trowbridge graduated from Putney School, Vermont, and from Smith College. She is a member of the Junior League of Washington. Mr. Bohlen is a graduate of St. Mark's and of Harvard, class of 1951. His clubs include Hasty Pudding—Institute of 1770, Varsity and Porcellian, and the Somerset Club of Boston.

He is a foreign service officer, currently stationed in Kabul, Afghanistan, and he and Miss Trowbridge plan to be married this month in Stockholm, where Miss Trowbridge's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Burgwin Holmes, are living.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490

APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to onducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

APR 4 1957

Society Happily Hysterical As Kaye Conducts Symphony

By MAVIS WHITE

Friday afternoon at Symphony is never like that! That's what the dignified elderly ladies, who for years have occupied the same seats at Symphony Hall, will probably say when they recover from the shock of last night's special performance there by Maestro Danny Kaye. These Proper Bostonians, as well as other socially prominent devotees of music, went along with the rest of the crowd for a good laugh. However, they ended up in a happy state of hysteria while the orchestra performers themselves seemed to be in the final stages of collapse by the time the Pension Fund concert was over.

Conductor Charles Munch made the perfect choice when he opened the evening with the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," for the gathering was throughly bewitched from the moment Mr. Kaye took over the baton to his final blaring direction of "The Stars and Stripes Forever". Speaking of batons, Maestro Kaye arrived with a dozen which were broken into bits or tossed aside in half a minute.

Among those watching the antics of this most unusual conductor who has terrorized the symphonic world from West to East were: "Chuck" Munch, seated in the first balcony, and Mrs. William Stanley Parker, who resolutely climbed to the second. Mrs. George Lyon was there as were Miss Eleanor Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sanger, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. Edward Sanders, Mrs. John Palfrey, Mrs. Franklin Dexter, Mrs. David Evans, Miss Helen Gilbert and Miss Eleanor Allen.

Mrs. Thomas Allen attended as did Miss Elizabeth Jackson, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Mrs. Charles A. Newhall, Mrs. David G. Black, Mrs. William A. Parker, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taft, the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Stagg and Mr. and Mrs. Theodore White.

Still others were Miss Amy Sacker, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Bemis, Mr. Robert Ramsey, Mr. and Mrs. John Burke, Mr. Maxim Karolick, Mr. Robert Sylvester, Mrs. Alan Forbes, and Mr. and Mrs. George Huberman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 22,749

APR 4 1957

Comedian Kaye Leads Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund, which was enriched by $9995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 6,812

APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye 'Leads' Boston Symphony in An Unusual Concert

BOSTON, (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

Conductor Charles Munch warmed up the orchestra with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," then dragged Kaye "reluctantly" on stage. Joyous bedlam followed as the 104 players tried to follow Conductor Kaye's beat. At one point, Kaye turned around and conducted backwards — so the audience could see him front view.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 6,747

APR 4 1957

Maestro Danny Kaye Still Good Comedian

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 4 1957

...NY KAYE

Continued from the First Page

As Harry Ellis Dickson said as he gave a little preliminary talk before the "open rehearsal" exploded, no one knew what Maestro Danny would do, except they were pretty sure he'd conduct Rossini's "La Gazza Ladra" ("The Thieving Magpie") Overture. From there out, Danny was on his own, and Dickson might have added: "Hold on to your hats and side-rails!"

Here's about what happened: First Charles Munch came out and really conducted something high-class, Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer." After a bow, he bounded off-stage, only to reappear, dragging by the hand a Danny Kaye so immaculately dressed, his hair combed so neatly that you'd hardly know him. At that point Danny looked serious, even frightened.

Carefully Selects Baton

Munch then produced a sheaf of batons, and having kept one out, gave them to Danny. Much as he might pick a golf stick, Danny took one, piled the rest upon the conductor's music stand, where there wasn't any music.

First Number: "Grand Chords." A BIG BANG! Danny turned around to give us all a "So you thought I couldn't do it!" grin. Then he broke off a bit of the baton, then another Grand Chord. As the baton got broken smaller and smaller, the chords got shorter and softer until the last one, as the stick was shorter than a pencil, when the boys on the stage tricked him and made a blast that almost bounced him in the air.

Finally they all got down to Rossini's Overture, which went well among the musicians, but had some of the fanciest gestures I never saw before from the red-haired Maestro. This part no one could describe. Only a cameraman could do justice to it.

Danny next gave his full treatment to the [illegible] Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker," showing us first how Maestro Kaye would conduct it. Then he illustrated the "coffee grinder" type of conductor, who gave a big, rolling beat; after that the "meat chopper" species who just beat up and down; the "conductor who has become a new father and pushes a baby carriage" (that kind just rocks his arms); the "allergic" [illegible] who seems to itch all over and vigorously scratches. Last of all, the "emotional type" who really gets into the music and all over the stand, leaping, flailing, kneeling and ultimately falling off.

There had to be a little stop for patter after this illustration of the fine art of conducting.

"You know, I'm having the most marvelous time of my life doing this," beamed Danny. "I'm so delighted that if I were any more delighted I'd be in an institution. There's no greater feeling of neurotic power in the world than conducting. I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting.

"'Chuck' Munch, he's a very nice man. Well, let's do a little number dedicated to those who use an electric razor."

So into "Look Sharp—Be Sharp," a familiar Pops number based upon airwaves commercials.

"Now let's have a little intermission. I want to change my clothes, then we'll come back for the rest. Why don't you go out and smoke?"

We did.

When Maestro Danny emerged again he wore an impeccable [illegible] suit [illegible] the [illegible] "DERBY" [illegible] ribbl[illegible] bee[illegible] and [illegible] see[illegible] For[illegible] goi[illegible] ers [illegible] tor[illegible] the [illegible] tha[illegible] ble [illegible] (Together, June—[illegible] guest conductor, was sitting just one seat in front of Munch, and both of them seemed to be holding their sides.) Munch waved back.

After the last chord, Danny bid the audience rise and acknowledge the applause of the Orchestra, to which he bowed gravely.

At this point came the imitation of Beecham. Danny said he once had seen hi[illegible]ng rather disabled." Vi[illegible]quale and Cauhape t[illegible] arms and eased [illegible]ch they pla[illegible] crophon[illegible] where [illegible] it.

"Tv[illegible] tion [illegible] an [illegible] kn[illegible] if [illegible]

By Dal Curtis

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 4 1957

Society: Oldest Symphony Subscribers Enjoy Kaye's Comical Capers

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Danny Kaye took over the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night and made a sold-out house and standees so happy they blocked the streets to watch him leave Symphony Hall for his own show at the Colonial. He made himself so happy, too, he confessed. "If I were any happier I'd be in an institution!"

While he writhed and roared through versions of conducting styles from "coffee grinder" to "Meat Chopper," he was giving the orchestra (which he kept very busy) a chance to earn a handsome stipend for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

Subscribers who have heard every conductor in Symphony's history found the evening just as hilarious as their grandchildren.

They didn't have to depend on movements of Mr. Kaye's back, because he wasn't turning around to compare notes with "Chuck" Munch or beaming at trustees like Charles Cabot and Rev. Palfrey Perkins, he conducted facing the audience to give a "visage" interpretation of "Lohengrin."

Visiting French conductor Jean Martinon and Mme. Martinon were delighted members of the audience as were Symphony administrators Thomas Perry and Mrs. Perry, and John Burk, his wife and daughter, Margaret.

Symphony regulars who followed every gesture included Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Dr. and Mrs. Archie Abrams, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ehrlich, Maxim Karolik, the Albert C. Titcombs, the Edward Tafts and Mrs. William Stanley Parker.

Others at Boston's funniest benefit in years included Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Gamble, Dr. and Mrs. Cesare Lombroso, Miss Marilli Paccini of Montreal, Mrs. George Clarke, Miss Irena Antonovicz, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stagg, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Forbes, Miss Amy Sacker, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Miss Eleanor Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kelleher, Robert Sylvester, and the G. Wallace Woodworths and their son, Ellery.

DOCTORS' DINNERS are in the majority among parties planned before the benefit preview of "A New Girl in Town" at the Shubert Theater on Apr. 16 to aid the Boston Lying-In Hospital Administrators and Service League members are also taking part in the festivities, including Mrs. Henry L. Mason Jr., Service League president, and Mr. Mason, who will have as their dinner and theater guests Dr. and Mrs. William Benjamin Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Dearborn Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert L. Steward, Mr. and Mrs. O. Kelley Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Hollingsworth Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Willis P. Beal and Mr. and Mrs. George D. Aldrich.

Hospital Pres. and Mrs. John R. Quarles will have their son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. John C. Harper of Foxboro, and their daughter, Betsy, at a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow are also having a family group with Mr. and Mrs. William D. Manice Jr. (Olivia Ames), and Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow Jr. (Julia Simonds), and Mr. and Mrs. E. Miles Herter (Lee Bigelow).

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Allen Jr. will have dinner with Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne and their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Browne Jr., are another family party. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin T. Pfaelzer will have their son, A. Goodhue Pfaelzer, and his Harvard roommate, Bonner Field, as their guests.

Dr. and Mrs. James H. Jackson and Dr. and Mrs. Henry Freeman Allen plan to be together that evening. Mrs. Jackson is chairman of the Service League tours for prospective patients and Mrs. Allen is chairman of the gift shop.

A SECOND DAUGHTER, Jane Clifford, was born Mar. 6 at St. Margaret's Hospital to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Goode (Margaret Clifford) of Milton. Mrs. James Clifford of West Roxbury and M[illegible] D[illegible]

(Warren Kax Vantine)

A JUNE WEDDING is planned by Miss Rollene Snowden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merton E. Snowden of Vineyard Haven, who are announcing her engagement to Carlyle L. Helber Jr. of Forest Hills, N.Y. She graduated from the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals School of Nursing and he is an M.I.T. student.

IN WASHINGTON and in Boston today, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Trowbridge of Washington are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Janet Sherman, to Edwin Upton Curtis Bohlen, son of Mrs. Carleton Pike of Lubec, Me., and Chestnut Hill, and the late Henry Morgan Bohlen.

Miss Trowbridge graduated from Putney School, Vermont, and from Smith College. She is a member of the Junior League of Washington. Mr. Bohlen is a graduate of St. Mark's and of Harvard, class of 1951. His clubs include Hasty Pudding—Institute of 1770, Varsity and Porcellian, and the Somerset Club of Boston.

He is a foreign service officer, currently stationed in Kabul, Afghanistan, and he and Miss Trowbridge plan to be married this month in Stockholm, where Miss Trowbridge's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Burgwin Holmes, are living.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 6,812

APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye 'Leads' Boston Symphony in An Unusual Concert

BOSTON, (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra was richer by about $10,000 and a million laughs today because of Danny Kaye.

The entertainer conducted the orchestra in an open rehearsal at staid Symphony Hall Wednesday night while a capacity audience rolled in the aisles with laughter. The musicians almost broke up, too.

The "concert" was to benefit the orchestra's pension fund and everyone donated their services, including Kaye, who is appearing in Boston with his own revue.

Conductor Charles Munch warmed up the orchestra with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," then dragged Kaye "reluctantly" on stage. Joyous bedlam followed as the 104 players tried to follow Conductor Kaye's beat. At one point, Kaye turned around and conducted backwards — so the audience could see him front view.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Maine
Republican
Circ. 15,490
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to onducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

Society Happily Hysterical As Kaye Conducts Symphony

By MAVIS WHITE

Friday afternoon at Symphony is never like that! That's what the dignified elderly ladies, who for years have occupied the same seats at Symphony Hall, will probably say when they recover from the shock of last night's special performance there by Maestro Danny Kaye. These Proper Bostonians, as well as other socially prominent devotees of music, went along with the rest of the crowd for a good laugh. However, they ended up in a happy state of hysteria while the orchestra performers themselves seemed to be in the final stages of collapse by the time the Pension Fund concert was over.

Conductor Charles Munch made the perfect choice when he opened the evening with the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," for the gathering was throughly bewitched from the moment Mr. Kaye took over the baton to his final blaring direction of "The Stars and Stripes Forever". Speaking of batons, Maestro Kaye arrived with a dozen which were broken into bits or tossed aside in half a minute.

Among those watching the antics of this most unusual conductor who has terrorized the symphonic world from West to East were: "Chuck" Munch, seated in the first balcony, and Mrs. William Stanley Parker, who resolutely climbed to the second. Mrs. George Lyon was there as were Miss Eleanor Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sanger, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. Edward Sanders, Mrs. John Palfrey, Mrs. Franklin Dexter, Mrs. David Evans, Miss Helen Gilbert and Miss Eleanor Allen.

Mrs. Thomas Allen attended as did Miss Elizabeth Jackson, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Mrs. Charles A. Newhall, Mrs. David G. Black, Mrs. William A. Parker, Miss Harriet Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taft, the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Stagg and Mr. and Mrs. Theodore White.

Still others were Miss Amy Sacker, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Bemis, Mr. Robert Ramsey, Mr. and Mrs. John Burke, Mr. Maxim Karolick, Mr. Robert Sylvester, Mrs. Alan Forbes, and Mr. and Mrs. George Huberman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 22,749
APR 4 1957

Comedian Kaye Leads Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund, which was enriched by $9995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 6,747
APR 4 1957

Maestro Danny Kaye Still Good Comedian

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye: Maestro

(United Press Photos)

DIRECTOR AND THE COMIC—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and comedian Danny Kaye compare notes (above) on how things should be run at Symphony Hall. Danny wowed a capacity audience with his antics as he helped raise money for the orchestra's pension fund. At right, Danny displays extreme facial contortions during hilarious open rehearsal.

"I can't read a note," the funny man said, "but I sure love conducting." He commented, "I'm having the time of my life. I'm so delighted that if I were more delighted I'd be in an institution."

He called Dr. Munch "Chuck" and the conductor beamed. Danny shook hands with at least a dozen of the musicians and gave first flutist Doriot Anthony a kiss.

He illustrated the "coffee grinder" type of conductor, who gave a big, rolling beat; after that the "meat chopper" species who just beat up and down; the "conductor who has become a new father and pushes a baby carriage" (that kind just shoves his arms!).

Then he showed the "allergic type," who seems to itch all over and vigorously scratches. Last of all, the "emotional type," who really gets into the music and all over the stand, leaping, flailing, kneeling and ultimately falling off.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039
APR 4 1957

SYMPHONY GOES POPS — The usually staid Boston Symphony Orchestra tries desperately to keep its dignity while stage and movie comic Danny Kaye directs the famed group during an open rehearsal before a packed Symphony Hall in Boston last night. Kaye took time out between matinee and evening performances of his own stage show to appear for the musicians' pension fund. (Unifax)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Scores Success Conducting Boston Symphony

But It Is as a Comedian Rather Than a Musician That He Wins Critics' Acclaim

BOSTON, April 4 (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed that Danny Kay, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Cyrus Durgin said of Kaye's performance:

"He conducted—that is, he beat time. He danced, He clowned. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner. He conducted the audience in applause. All this to a constant flow of that quick, sharp patter that is so very amusing."

Geoffrey Bush found:

"Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance, which side had won.

"Perhaps his interpretation of musical form should be described as passionate, but erratic. At times he confronted the orchestra with an expression of the most sincere hatred, and at other times, with secret and confidential glee, he winked at his audience."

Bush also wrote that Kaye probably had intended to conduct a serious program, but little things kept getting in his way.

"He tripped over the conducting stand; in loud passages he was frightened by the trumpet section; in quiet passages he forgot what he was doing."

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

The fund was enriched by $9995.50 as a result of the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,717
APR 4 - 1957

HE CAN'T READ A NOTE but Danny Kaye seems pleased with himself as a guest maestro as he turns to applauding audience at Boston Symphony Hall. (AP Photo)

Comedian Danny Kaye Has Fun Conducting Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night — all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Elliot Norton of the Daily Record wrote:

"In the last 25 years there has been no such hilarity in Symphony Hall. The young maestro reduced the audience to hysterics, the orchestra to something like helplessness and the works of certain composers to shreds."

Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe said of Kaye's performance:

"He conducted — that is, he beat time. He danced. He clowned. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner. He conducted the audience in applause. All this to a constant flow of that quick, sharp patter that is so very amusing."

Geoffrey Fush wrote in the Boston Herald:

"Kaye's encounter with orchestra music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance, which side had won."

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,052
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Turns Conductor, All In Fun

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 4 1957

Symphony Snaps To
Danny Kaye Wields Baton

By Harold Rogers
Music Critic of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

When Danny Kaye neared the end of his conducting debut with the Boston Symphony April 3, he sat down on the podium for one of his intimate chats with the audience.

"I don't suppose that any of you would believe," he said, "that I can't read a single note of music." Then he reconsidered "Or perhaps you would!"

If it had not been for his engaging honesty, however, few would have been any the wiser, because—judging by any standards you may choose—Danny Kaye is an extraordinary conductor. There are many today who could take lessons from him. He has a graphic flexible technique. Though he beats time correctly, he is no mere time beater. He is a master of the nuance, of the diminuendo and crescendo, of the rallentando and the blast.

Not wishing to deprive a couple of late-comers of what they had missed, Mr. Kaye did a quick recapitulation of the first half hour.

Repeat Offered

He told them Harry Ellis Dickson had announced that through the generosity of all these wonderful people in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's pension fund had been swelled by $9,593.50! He told them that Charles Munch, whom he warmly referred to as Chuck, had conducted "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Then he said that he himself had opened his part of the program with Rossini's Overture to "La Gazza Ladra." He even offered to repeat part of the overture for the tardy couple, so he turned and asked the musicians to start from that place where it goes "ta-dah, dah-tee-tah-dah-tee-tah-dah."

"Oh, you mean più mosso," said Joseph de Pasquale, consulting his music.

"Più mosso," gasped Mr. Kaye incredulously. "That's where Chiang Kai-shek is!"

Before launching into the frivolities of the "Tritsch-Tratsch" Polka, he told his listeners that it was composed in 1947 by Strauss. "Sam Strauss," he added.

Audience Faced

As he played the Trepak from Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" Suite, he demonstrated the various conducting styles, such as the coffee grinder, the meat chopper, the baby carriage pusher, the hyperemotional type, the fellow who doesn't want to lose touch with his audience, and the man whose hour of glory is inevitably accompanied by the itch.

In another of his few relaxed moments he said: "I don't know what kind of a time you're having, and I don't care what kind of a time you're having, but I can certainly tell you that I am having the time of my life!"

He went on to say that conducting an orchestra gives one the "greatest feeling of neurotic power" that any human being can have. And then he demonstrated, by a mere lift of the baton, how the musicians snap to.

His program included "Look Sharp — Be Sharp," dedicated, he said, to every one who uses an electric razor; "Fiddle-Faddle," which he promised to play faster than it has ever been played in the history of this world, and did so; the Miniature Overture to "The Nutcracker," in which he urged the fiddles to SING; the Introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," which he conducted facing the audience, "because so few people, you know, ever get an opportunity to see a conductor's face while he's working." We looked, we responded, we dissolved.

After his concluding selection "The Stars and Stripes Forever"—he left Symphony Hall for the Colonial Theater to do his evening show there. He had already given an hour-and-a-half performance at a matinee, which means that he put in some five hours of single-handed entertaining for one day.

At the Colonial a man in the audience asked Mr. Kaye to show them what he had just been doing in Symphony Hall.

"Why should I?" retorted Mr. Kaye. "I didn't show the people in Symphony Hall what I do here at the Colonial."

Seriously, if Mr. Kaye could read music, he could easily become one of our leading conductors. And we need conductors, too.

But there is only one Danny Kaye, and we need him more.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,909
APR 4 1957

DANNY KAYE CONDUCTS

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Fitful Genius
Comic Leads (?) Boston Symphony

By GEOFFREY BUSH

Danny Kaye proved himself at Symphony Hall last night to be a conductor of strange and fitful genius. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assembled in extraordinary session to benefit their pension fund, and the only empty seat in the house would have belonged to the violinist who collapsed in uncontrollable mirth whom Kaye, with terrible rage but without success, endeavored to have thrown out.

Mighty Opposites

Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell, at the end of his remarkable performance, which side had won.

Perhaps his interpretation of musical form should be described as passionate, but erratic. At times he confronted the orchestra with an expression of the most sincere hatred, and at other mint. He announced that he would deliver Fiddle Faddle "at a tempo absolutely impossible to play." He manipulated the Lohengrin in a fashion never before attempted by any conductor—facing the audience. In moments of exultation he could be heard crying "Bravo" to himself, in rich foreign accents, and at the successful termination of a complicated passege he gazed intently at Mr. Charles Munch, seated happily in the balcony, and cried, "Assez bon, huh?"

(Continued on Page Twelve)

He shook hands both with the first players and with practically every other member of the orchestra. He leaped, slouched, wept and went to sleep. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham by having himself supported onto the stage and lifted into a chair, where he smoked a cigarette while the orchestra played by itself.

STANDING OVATION

At the conclusion of his astonishing recital, he sat down and spoke briefly and quietly about the orchestra's pension fund and the devoted life of musicians. He said how happy he was to be of any help—if he were any happier, he declared in a moment of manic joy "they'd have to put me in an institution."

He had conducted not only the orchestra, but the audience himself, and the entire evening. To end the program he conducted a stirring performance of "Stars and Stripes." He seemed, all at once, a young and slender andal most touching figure; and he was given a standing ovation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640
APR 4 - 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Orchestra Rehearsal

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,138
APR 4 - 1957

Ability as Comedian Saves Danny Kaye In Orchestra Role

BOSTON, (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,717
APR 4 - 1957

HE CAN'T READ A NOTE but Danny Kaye seems pleased with himself as a guest maestro as he turns to applauding audience at Boston Symphony Hall. (AP Photo)

Comedian Danny Kaye Has Fun Conducting Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night — all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Elliot Norton of the Daily Record wrote:

"In the last 25 years there has been no such hilarity in Symphony Hall. The young maestro reduced the audience to hysterics, the orchestra to something like helplessness and the works of certain composers to shreds."

Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe said of Kaye's performance:

"He conducted — that is, he beat time. He danced. He clowned. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner. He conducted the audience in applause. All this to a constant flow of that quick, sharp patter that is so very amusing."

Geoffrey Fush wrote in the Boston Herald:

"Kaye's encounter with orchestra music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance, which side had won."

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you, I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,062
APR 4 1957

Danny Kaye Turns Conductor, All In Fun

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,909
APR 4 1957

DANNY KAYE CONDUCTS

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 4 1957

Symphony Snaps To

Danny Kaye Wields Baton

By Harold Rogers
Music Critic of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

When Danny Kaye neared the end of his conducting debut with the Boston Symphony April 3, he sat down on the podium for one of his intimate chats with the audience.

"I don't suppose that any of you would believe," he said, "that I can't read a single note of music." Then he reconsidered "Or perhaps you would!"

If it had not been for his engaging honesty, however, few would have been any the wiser, because—judging by any standards you may choose—Danny Kaye is an extraordinary conductor. There are many today who could take lessons from him. He has a graphic flexible technique. Though he beats time correctly, he is no mere time beater. He is a master of the nuance, of the diminuendo and crescendo, of the rallentando and the blast.

Not wishing to deprive a couple of late-comers of what they had missed, Mr. Kaye did a quick recapitulation of the first half hour.

Repeat Offered

He told them Harry Ellis Dickson had announced that through the generosity of all these wonderful people in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's pension fund had been swelled by $9,593.50! He told them that Charles Munch, whom he warmly referred to as Chuck, had conducted "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Then he said that he himself had opened his part of the program with Rossini's Overture to "La Gazza Ladra." He even offered to repeat part of the overture for the tardy couple, so he turned and asked the musicians to start from that place where it goes "ta-dah, dah-tee-tah-dah-tee-tah-dah."

"Oh, you mean più mosso," said Joseph de Pasquale, consulting his music.

"Più mosso," gasped Mr. Kaye incredulously. "That's where Chiang Kai-shek is!"

Before launching into the frivolities of the "Tritsch-Tratsch" Polka, he told his listeners that it was composed in 1947 by Strauss. "Sam Strauss," he added.

Audience Faced

As he played the Trepak from Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" Suite, he demonstrated the various conducting styles, such as the coffee grinder, the meat chopper, the baby carriage pusher, the hyperemotional type, the fellow who doesn't want to lose touch with his audience, and the man whose hour of glory is inevitably accompanied by the itch.

In another of his few relaxed moments he said: "I don't know what kind of a time you're having, and I don't care what kind of a time you're having, but I can certainly tell you that I am having the time of my life!"

He went on to say that conducting an orchestra gives one the "greatest feeling of neurotic power" that any human being can have. And then he demonstrated, by a mere lift of the baton, how the musicians snap to.

His program included "Look Sharp — Be Sharp," dedicated, he said, to every one who uses an electric razor; "Fiddle-Faddle," which he promised to play faster than it has ever been played in the history of this world, and did so; the Miniature Overture to "The Nutcracker," in which he urged the fiddles to SING; the Introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," which he conducted facing the audience, "because so few people, you know, ever get an opportunity to see a conductor's face while he's working." We looked, we responded, we dissolved.

After his concluding selection "The Stars and Stripes Forever"—he left Symphony Hall for the Colonial Theater to do his evening show there. He had already given an hour-and-a-half performance at a matinee, which means that he put in some five hours of single-handed entertaining for one day.

At the Colonial a man in the audience asked Mr. Kaye to show them what he had just been doing in Symphony Hall.

"Why should I?" retorted Mr. Kaye. "I didn't show the people in Symphony Hall what I do here at the Colonial."

Seriously, if Mr. Kaye could read music, he could easily become one of our leading conductors. And we need conductors, too.

But there is only one Danny Kaye, and we need him more.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Rep
Circ. 134
APR

Kaye Leads (?) The Symphony

(Continued from First Page)

times, with secret and confidential glee, he winked at his delighted audience.

It was evident, from his efforts to preserve a front of icy solemnity, that he had intended to lead a concert of the utmost seriousness. What got in his way were the little things. When he marched to the conducting stand, he tripped over it; in loud passages he was frightened by the trumpet section; in soft passages he forgot what he was doing.

His program consisted, more or less, of a Rossini overture, a work by Strauss, part of the Nutcracker Suite, the introduction to Act III of Lohengrin, a bit of Carmen, Fiddle Faddle, and two extravagant marches. There were besides a series of edifying lessons delivered by Mr. Kaye on how to conduct like a coffee grinder, how to conduct like someone pushing a baby carriage, how to achieve a "deathly hush" in the auditorium, and how to conduct with "neurotic power."

'ASSEZ BON'

No musical feat was beyond him. He announced that he would deliver Fiddle Faddle "at a tempo absolutely impossible to play." He manipulated the Lohengrin in a fashion never before attempted by any conductor—facing the audience. In moments of exultation he could be heard crying "Bravo" to himself, in rich foreign accents, and at the successful termination of a complicated passege he gazed intently at Mr. Charles Munch, seated happily in the balcony, and cried, "Assez bon, huh?"

He shook hands both with the first players and with practically every other member of the orchestra. He leaped, slouched, wept and went to sleep. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham by having himself supported onto the stage and lifted into a chair, where he smoked a cigarette while the orchestra played by itself.

STANDING OVATION

At the conclusion of his astonishing recital, he sat down and spoke briefly and quietly about the orchestra's pension fund and the devoted life of musicians. He said how happy he was to be of any help—if he were any happier, he declared in a moment of manic joy "they'd have to put me in an institution."

He had conducted not only the orchestra, but the audience, himself, and the entire evening. To end the program he conducted a stirring performance of "Stars and Stripes." He seemed, all at once, a young and slender andal most touching figure; and he was given a standing ovation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640
APR 4 - 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Orchestra Rehearsal

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,138
APR 4 - 1957

Ability as Comedian Saves Danny Kaye In Orchestra Role

BOSTON, (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by $9,995.50.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

APR 4 1957

Maestro

Banter

Versatile actor Danny Kaye must have had the music masters rolling over in their graves when he took up the baton to direct the Boston Symphony open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. For more than an hour his antics delighted a filled house, netted the group $9953.30.

Record-American Photos by Dan Sheehan

DANNY EMOTES THE "EMOTIONAL TYPE" WHO HAS FEELING FOR HIS MUSIC

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

APR 5 1957

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Danny Kaye Leads, Symphony Howls

Reprinted from Yesterday's Late Edition

For the musicians' pension fund, a good cause, Danny Kaye conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an hour and a half last night, at Symphony Hall. What a show he and they put on!

In the last 25 years, there has been no such hilarity in Symphony hall. The young maestro reduced the audience to hysterics, the orchestra to something like helplessness and the works of certain composers to shreds. In the end, he received a demonstration that might have turned the head of a maharajah. The audience sat and stamped on the floor and cheered. Then they stood up and cheered to show that even in Boston, and even in Symphony Hall, a great talent exercised in a great cause can be greatly appreciated.

Elliot Norton

Charles Munch, Music Director of the orchestra, sat in a first balcony seat during most of the evening, grave and silent. At intervals, a beaming Danny Kaye shouted a greeting to him. Danny calls him "Chuck!" Chuck had no comment.

LIGHT HEARTED

H. E. Dickson opened the program and set the tone. This, he explained, was to be "an open rehearsal" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it would be called this because the management couldn't think of anything else. He was light-hearted but apprehensive.

Then Dr. Munch, who had not yet been christened Chuck, appeared and led the orchestra through a precise and stimulating performance of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Dukas. Short and swift, sensitive and brilliant, this showed the band at its best.

Then the old maestro led the young one onstage, and pandemonium began to reign.

For the next 75 minutes, the audience, which filled the hall to the topmost tier and the ultimate perch alternately chuckled, tittered, giggled, and howled with joy, as Danny Kaye turned the world of music into a house of hilarity, with one of the world's great bands as his willing instrument.

He shook hands with the concert master — every few minutes. He also shook hands with other members of the orchestra frequently. He kissed one of the lady members. He conducted the whole band and portions of it. When it became necessary to address himself to a special choir he walked through the chairs to lead them individually.

When the mood was on him, he hummed as they played. When they offended, he shouted in annoyance. For musicians who pleased, he shouted "bravo!" loudly.

MUSICIANS HOWL

Presenting excerpts from such standard composers as Rossini, Tchaikovsky, Wagner and Strauss ("This one is SAM Strauss!" he insisted!) he moved his arms in time with the music and, although he cannot read a note, succeeded most of the time in suggesting that he was actually leading. Once, he ended a beat behind. "Ah," he said quickly to the orchestra, "You beat me!" In another selection, he was a beat ahead. He shrugged it off with his happy boyish smile, and the men of the orchestra, who were frequently in a state of loud hilarity, howled with joy.

He conducted the introduction to Wagner's "Lohengrin" (Act III) with his back to the orchestra, so that the audience could see "what a conductor looks like to the orchestra." This particular conductor responded with wild violence to the music. He writhed; he groaned; he mugged; he sobbed; he smiled; he collapsed. So did the audience—and the orchestra, too.

Danny imitated various kinds of orchestra leaders. In the process, he conducted with his hands, his head, his heels, his hips. Through all of it, the remarkably well disciplined orchestra played what they were supposed to play and played it rather well. Did any comedian ever have 100 "stooges" of such distinction?

Danny's clowning earned nearly $10,000 for the pension fund. In a quiet moment, he acknowledged this with genuine sentiment and good taste. Then he stood up again and led the orchestra through what must have been the loudest rendition of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" which anyone has ever heard anywhere. It was a happily uproarious end to a happy and uproarious occasion.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625

APR 5 1957

The Sun Dial

By Philip Garrigan

When you come to the end of an imperfect day, the song doesn't mention how you just sit there wondering who turned on the fan in the first place. Even more so at the end of a week, when you count your marbles and find there aren't as many as last week.

Still, this Monday through Friday stretch had some bright points. And what is more, I missed a few things I'm just as well off without. Danny Kaye took over the Boston symphony; and everybody rolled in the aisles. If I'd been there, they'd have taken me for an old crab, because I haven't seen Danny since his "Inspector General" movie—and I haven't regretted a moment of it.

Then I was lucky the man started shooting in Methuen, when it could just as easily have been Lowell. And I wouldn't have lived through the day if I'd been there when the old-agers rejected the good-natured governor's offer of free rides on everything on wheels in Massachusetts.

I tell you, there's a lot to be said for being depressed. Of course, it can be overdone; so I have to limit it to one day of my busy week. On the others I'm respectively amazed, proud, plaintive and vituperative (this last within reason, naturally.)

That's five days. The other two are supposed to be lost. Union rules, you know; and I have a mighty strong union. Not very much good for rich or pretty—but pretty much good for the kind of fatherly firmness that lets you know what's what or else.

So on my day to be depressed, I look around and see that the world's about the same as last week; and so is the great republic; and Massachusetts is not much worse off. That leaves Lowell—and I've been wondering if leaves might not be a truer word than we know.

I spend some time every day on the downtown streets, and some also in the quieter and less crowded evening. The things I notice nowadays are those that aren't there any more. Yesterday's little store, with its slow-changing window display and its expensive neon sign—where did it go? There's no exact answer; it's just gone.

Most people you ask about these things will go another step with you (at any rate they do with me) and predict which stores will be gone next week or the week after. Nobody talks replacements at all.

I throw all this talk into the pepper-mill I like to think of as my mind; and add what I remember of this or that local owner selling his mill to someone I never heard of in my life. What I grind out is really a dusty answer. You don't get tired of Lowell, any more than you do of living. But some people are getting tired IN Lowell.

I have a modest proposal. I want, if it's possible, for our industrial commission to get more industrious; for our chamber of commerce to get more commercial—and for each of us to stick a finger into the holes of the dike. At least we could be sort of getting ready to.

One of Lowell's most substantial citizens, if you're thinking in terms of only money, said recently and sadly that we seem to be on a treadmill—and as fast as we get something good set up, another and older moneymaker quits on us.

It's 30 years and more since we had to lift ourselves out of the loss of our cotton mills. An effort like that might not succeed another time. So now that I've mentioned it, let's not go so far as right to the bottom.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 5 1957

EMIL KORNSAND, violinist of the Boston Symphony, who [illegible] Methuen orchestra, opens the weekend concerts under Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BARRE, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 8,248

APR 5 1957

Danny Kaye Conducts Symphony At Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal Wednesday night—all in fun.

Three learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund which was enriched by [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

APR 5 1957

Ice Chips of '57' Opens

The medical profession turned out in large numbers for last night's colorful opening of the "Ice Chips of 1957" which was a benefit event for the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals at the Boston Garden sponsored by the Hospitals' Aid Association. The Skating Club of Boston's annual production, continuing tonight and tomorrow night with Saturday matinee, has taken on a professional polish and the enthusiastic audience was quick to recognize the smoothness and charm of the show.

The small fry opened the program in a garden number of birds, bees and flowers. Lorraine Hanlon as the firebug, Helen Dane, a bluebird and Alice Ingram, a canary, had solo parts. Youthful 11-year-old champion Gregory Kelley, son of Dr. and Mrs. Vincent Kelley of Newton, held the spotlight in his role of the hunter.

The Graduation Ball featured the teenage group including Christie Allen, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Allen; Mary Cooper, daughter of Mrs. Alice Cooper, Robert Parmenter, Bradley Lord, national junior champion, Rosemary Crowley as headmistress and Dudley Richards, head General.

★ ★ ★

WHETHER THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, the audience or Maestro Danny Kaye had the most fun at Wednesday evening's rehearsal at Symphony Hall is a tossup. Everyone present was in a hilarious mood during the hour and a half uproarious program benefitting the Pension Fund. At one point the great guest conductor faced the audience and announced, "I don't know how you feel—and I couldn't care less—but I am having the best time of my life."

Veteran symphony subscribers climbed to first and second balcony seats for the notable event and found the effort most rewarding. Prominent Vincent Club member, Mrs. William Stanley Parker, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. John Gorham Palfrey, Mrs. David Evans and Maxim Karolik were among the prominent Bostonians noted. Also glimpsed were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Stagg, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taft, the Rev. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, Miss Eleanor Allen, Mrs. Vincent L. Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb and Mrs. Allan Forbes.

★ ★ ★

DR. CLARENCE W. LINDEMAN of Waynesboro, Penn., is coming here Monday to be guest speaker at the Boston Homeopathic Layman's League at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School at 8 p. m. President of the International Hahnemannian Ass'n; one of the great world medical organizations, Dr. Lindeman has chosen as his topic, "Primum, non Nocere."

Before the lecture the Misses Dorothy and Priscilla Cornish are giving a small dinner at the Brookline Country Club for the honor guest and Mrs. Lindeman. Hostessing the later evening hospitality at the school will be Mr. [illegible] G. Perry, Jr., Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

COSTUMED Alice Ingram and Charlie Dane as they appeared last night before the opening of the 45th annual Ice Chips of the Skating Club of Boston at Boston Garden, continuing through Sunday afternoon. Star of show is Carol Heiss, figure skating champ. Co-starring is David Jenkins. It is the 45th annual exhibition by the organization.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

BRISTOL, VA.
HERALD-COURIER
Circ. D. 23,879

APR 5 1957

Danny Kaye Directs Boston Symphony In Fun

BOSTON, April 4 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224

APR 5 1957

DANNY KAYE

Danny Kaye Gets Laughs As Maestro

BOSTON, April 4 (AP) —Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night —all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

The fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

Hilarious Event

Elliott Norton of the Daily Record wrote:

"In the last 25 years there has been no such hilarity in Symphony Hall. The young maestro reduced the audience to hysterics, the orchestra to something like helplessness and the works of certain composers to shreds."

Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe said of Kaye's performance:

"He conducted — that is, he beat time. He danced. He clowned. He imitated Sir Thomas Beecham and Fritz Reiner. He conducted the audience in applause. All this to a constant flow of that quick, sharp patter that is so very amusing."

Geoffrey Bush wrote in the Boston Herald:

"Kaye's encounter with orchestral music was a battle between two mighty opposites, and it was difficult to tell at the end of his remarkable performance which side had won.

"Perhaps his interpretation of musical form should be described as passionate, but erratic. At times he confronted the orchestra with an expression of the most sincere hatred, and at other times, with secret and confidential glee, he winked at his audience."

Bush also wrote that Kaye probably had intended to conduct a serious program, but little things kept getting in his way.

"He tripped over the conducting stand; in loud passages he was frightened by the trumpet section; in quiet passages he forgot what he was doing."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NORFOLK, VA.
Virginian Pilot
Circ. D. 104,258 - S. 120,816
APR 5 1957

Danny Kaye Becomes Conductor—All in Fun

BOSTON, April 4 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

The fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 166,814
APR 5 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 444,193 - S. 469,816
APR 5 1957

Names an

Ken Dodd has buck teeth. He they are worth $28,000.

That's what the TV comedia Thursday in Birmingham, England Dodd $70 a year, but he said it wa he said, get him laughs.

Kaye Gets Laughs as

"I tell you I can't read a note of music," said Comedian Danny Kaye, "but I love conducting."

The star commented after he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal. It was a benefit for the musicians' fund. The performance raised almost $10,000.

Music critics thought Kaye's conducting was pretty bad, but funny.

... and Maestro The eminent and multi-talented Dr. Danny Kaye was guest conductor at an "open" rehearsal of the Boston Symphony for the benefit of the Musicians' Fund. Rumor has it the musicians followed his direction perfectly and the audience was so awed that panic was narrowly averted. Dr. Kaye maintains that in the righthand picture he was overwhelmed by the music, not overcome.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
APR 5 1957

'Ice Chips of '57' Opens

The medical profession turned out in large numbers for last night's colorful opening of the "Ice Chips of 1957" which was a benefit event for the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals at the Boston Garden sponsored by the Hospitals' Aid Association. The Skating Club of Boston's annual production, continuing tonight and tomorrow night with Saturday matinee, has taken on a professional polish and the enthusiastic audience was quick to recognize the smoothness and charm of the show.

The small fry opened the program in a garden number of birds, bees and flowers. Lorraine Hanlon as the firebug, Helen Dane, a bluebird and Alice Ingram, a canary, had solo parts. Youthful 11-year-old champion Gregory Kelley, son of Dr. and Mrs. Vincent Kelley of Newton, held the spotlight in his role of the hunter.

The Graduation Ball featured the teenage group including Christie Allen, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Allen; Mary Cooper, daughter of Mrs. Alice Cooper, Robert Parmenter, Bradley Lord, national junior champion, Rosemary Crowley as headmistress and Dudley Richards, head General.

★ ★ ★

WHETHER THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, the audience of Maestro Danny Kaye had the most fun at Wednesday evening's rehearsal at Symphony Hall is a tossup. Everyone present was in a hilarious mood during the speaker at the Boston Homeopathic Layman's League at the Perry Kindergarten Normal School at 8 p. m. President of the International Hahnemannian Ass'n; one of the great world medical organizations, Dr. Lindeman has chosen as his topic, "Primum, non Nocere."

COSTUMED Alice Ingram and Charlie Dane as they appeared last night before the opening of the 45th annual Ice Chips of the Skating Club of Boston at Boston Garden, continuing through Sunday afternoon. Star of show is Carol Heiss, figure skating champ. Co-starring is David Jenkins. It is the 45th annual exhibition by the organization.

Before the lecture the Misses Dorothy and Priscilla Cornish are giving a small dinner at the Brookline Country Club for the honor guest and Mrs. Lindeman. Hostessing the later evening hospitality at the school will be Mrs. [illegible] G. Perry, Jr., Mrs. Charles [illegible] Dennis, Mrs. R. B. Thomas, Mrs. Ray W. Spalding and Mrs. Robert W. Wadman.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NORFOLK, VA.
Virginian Pilot
Circ. D. 104,258 - S. 120,816
APR 5 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 166,814
APR 5 1957

Danny Kaye Becomes Conductor—All in Fun

BOSTON, April 4 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the Orchestra Musicians' Pension Fund.

The fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
BRISTOL, VA.
HERALD-COURIER
Circ. D. 23,879
APR 5 1957

Danny Kaye Directs Boston Symphony In Fun

BOSTON, April 4 (AP)—Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 444,193 - S. 469,816
APR 5 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 97,224
APR 5 1957

DANNY KAYE

Danny Kaye Gets Laughs As Maestro

BOSTON, April 4 (AP) —Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal last night —all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund.

The fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the perform-

Names and Faces

Ken Dodd has buck teeth. He's always had them. Now they are worth $28,000.

That's what the TV comedian had them insured for Thursday in Birmingham, England. The insurance will cost Dodd $70 a year, but he said it was worth it. The choppers, he said, get him laughs.

Kaye Gets Laughs as Conductor

"I tell you I can't read a note of music," said Comedian Danny Kaye, "but I love conducting."

The star commented after he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at an open rehearsal. It was a benefit for the musicians' fund. The performance raised almost $10,000.

Music critics thought Kaye's conducting was pretty bad, but funny.

Danny Kaye

. . . and Maestro The eminent and multi-talented Dr. Danny Kaye was guest conductor at an "open" rehearsal of the Boston Symphony for the benefit of the Musicians' Fund. Rumor has it the musicians followed his direction perfectly and the audience was so awed that panic was narrowly averted. Dr. Kaye maintains that in the righthand picture he was overwhelmed by the music, not overcome.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 6 - 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the first of the 21st season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Isaac Stern, violin. The program:

Kornsand
Metamorphosis
Mozart
Concerto in G K.216
Dukas
La Peri
Prokofieff
Violin Concerto No 2, Op 63

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I have no doubt that few members of the audiences of the Boston Symphony concerts ever suspected, as they might have glanced at a quiet, middle-aged, be-spectacled violinist occupying the last chair in the first row, that they were looking upon a composer as well as a musician of attainment.

They certainly found out yesterday afternoon, for Emil Kornsand's "Matamorphosis" was given its first performance and quickly made its way as an interesting and effective orchestral essay notable for its invention, its concise form and its clean, clear sound throughout.

In six movements played without pause, one blending imperceptibly with another, Metamorphosis is especially interesting for the fact that while it is based on the 12-tone technique, it is by no means shackled to it. Indeed, save for the statement of the first theme (which contains the "row" of the 12 different tones of the chromatic scale), its relation to Schoenberg's system is not only not evident but doesn't appear to be involved at all.

Leading Motive

This 12-tone row becomes a sort of leading motive in the work thereafter, contrasted with a broader, more lyric theme. Kid, as the ear can fix both firmly in mind, their evolutions may be followed with interest, the overall design emerging as a pleasing, effective whole. If anything is lacking, from the listener's point of view, it is rhythmic vigor; it moves along but not perhaps quite forcefully enough.

Mr. Kornsand, who has composed much music (including a viola concerto), displayed a fine sense of orchestration and orchestral color, and provided us, in short, with a very pleasant and interesting opening to the afternoon. He was called forth from his position in the row of first violinists by Mr. Munch and given a very hearty welcome.

What to say about Isaac Stern? Looking back over the years I find I have said everything; indeed, the adjectives in his favor are so refulgent as to be appalling and I won't trot them out for another airing at this point. Suffice it to say he played the Mozart Concerto so beautifully, so effortlessly and at the same time so charmingly as to make it a miracle, especially in the light of Mr. Munch's sensitive accompaniment. Later on the Prokofieff G minor provided another miracle, its slow movement in particular disclosing a rapid beauty of tone impossible to describe. The violinist got an ovation on both occasions.

It was interesting, after some 22 years, to hear Dukas' "La Peri" again. Despite the marvelous array of effects this piece contains, despite its exotic textures and rising climaxes, it somehow just does not seem to make contact as a really impressive piece of music.

It makes an effect, to be sure; it holds the attention; yet always seems to miss the mark in some inexplicable way. I get the feeling it tries too hard, though doubtless in its proper frame as music for a ballet it would undoubtedly prove effective indeed. In any case, Mr. Munch gave it an exciting reading, the orchestra in peak form.

Pierre Monteux returns next week to guest conduct a program, offering Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, Tchaikovsky's Fifth and Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 6 - 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the scultpured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place o tympani. These, to be sure, nr details of orchestration, but the are salient points musically, a well.

Mr. Stern, using printed musi instead of relying entirely upo his memory, performed Prokofie with glittering virtuosity, but als with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsan joined the comparatively sma ranks of present and former Bos ton Symphony members who hav had their own music played b this orchestra. (Others have in cluded cellist Jacobus Langendoer Charles Martin Loeffler, Henr Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," give first performance, proved an agree able, solidly-constructed and well scored piece.

It runs in six connected section —Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fu gato and Finale, and, written ir 1955, is a revision and amplificatior of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

APR 6 - 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the scultpured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place of tympani. These, to be sure, are details of orchestration, but they are salient points musically, as well.

Mr. Stern, using printed music instead of relying entirely upon his memory, performed Prokofieff with glittering virtuosity, but also with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsand joined the comparatively small ranks of present and former Boston Symphony members who have had their own music played by this orchestra. (Others have included cellist Jacobus Langendoen, Charles Martin Loeffler, Henry Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos). Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," given first performance, proved an agreeable, solidly-constructed and well-scored piece.

It runs in six connected sections —Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato and Finale, and, written in 1955, is a revision and amplification of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 244,295 - S. 284,929

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 6 - 1957

Honors for Danny

The Boston Symphony Orchestra—conductor, management and players—did honor yesterday to comedian Danny Kaye. In recognition of his generosity in giving his services to conduct the special pension fund open rehearsal at Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening, conductor Charles Munch signed a special diploma commemorating the event.

Mgr. Thomas D. Perry presented Danny with the medal of the Orchestra's 75th Anniversary.

Gaston Dufresne, chairman of the Boston Symphony Members' Assn. Committee, conferred honorary membership upon Kaye, the first individual outside the ranks of Boston Symphony musicians to be so designated.

The informal ceremony was held in the tuning room after the Symphony concert yesterday afternoon.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 6 1957

Kornsand Première at Symphony

Isaac Stern Soloist in Two Concertos

By Harold Rogers

In every respect it was a distinguished concert that Charles Munch gave yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. It was distinguished first of all by the première of a composition by a member of the Boston Symphony, Emil Kornsand—the first composer in many years to emerge from the ranks of the players. It was further distinguished by the presence of Isaac Stern, whose violin sings with a silken voice.

Mr. Kornsand was seated in his accustomed place at the far left of the first violins as Dr. Munch opened the program with "Metamorphosis," written by Mr. Kornsand in 1955. The composer was therefore a performer in his own work, which turned out to be an ingratiating piece of music, intelligently wrought with care, economy, and affection.

* * *

Its six small sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato, and Finale—moved logically from one to the next, changing their shape as the title indicates. The moods are in miniature—like pastoral poems of tranquility, or of rhapsodic nostalgia, or even the remembrance of former glories as the dreamlike march passes by.

In the finale Mr. Kornsand rallies his forces for a forte not quite truly a climax, but more as the memory of a climax. Perhaps he is a neo-romantic, a man slightly saddened that the age of romance has passed. If so, the perfume of that period hovers over his music—but not the real perfume. Only the memory.

* * *

At the conclusion Mr. Kornsand took a bow from his seat. He was then urged by Dr. Munch to come center stage where he was warmly applauded both by the listeners and his colleagues. He returned twice again to receive the applause.

Mr. Stern played two concertos—the Mozart G. major, No. 3, K. 216, heard before the intermission, and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 in G minor, with which the program closed. Something very special happens when Mr. Stern plays a slow movement—as happened in the Mozart Adagio when his tone took on an ethereal lightness, like a cloud sailing serenely through the blue.

This refined poetic quality was again noted in the Andante assai of the Prokofiev, where he sounded a lovely cantilena over a strumming accompaniment. Warmth of tone, technical accuracy, emotional communication, and a sensitive spirit—these are the qualities by which Mr. Stern has earned a ready welcome to the concert halls of the world; and judging by the hearty ovation he won yesterday, he is especially beloved by Bostonians.

Dr. Munch revived Paul Dukas' "La Péri": Poème dansé—absent from Symphony Hall for 22 years. It was a glorious revival, too—done with that rare gift of Dr. Munch's for extracting the essence from the French impressionists so that the orchestral colors shine with burnished light. The score itself is a lush tapestry of color, depicting epical scenes of Oriental imagination. Dr. Munch, when conducting music like this, is unsurpassed.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 6 - 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, gave the opening of the 21st season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Isaac Stern, violin. The program:

Kornsand: Metamorphosis
Mozart: Concerto in G
Dukas: La Peri
Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, Op. 63

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I have no doubt that few members of the audiences of the Boston Symphony concerts ever suspected, as they might have glanced at a quiet, middle-aged, be-spectacled violinist occupying the last chair in the first row, that they were looking upon a composer as well as a musician of attainment.

They certainly found out yesterday afternoon, for Emil Kornsand's "Matamorphosis" was given its first performance and quickly made its way as an interesting and effective orchestral essay notable for its invention, its concise form and its clean, clear sound throughout.

In six movements played without pause, one blending imperceptibly with another, Metamorphosis is especially interesting for the fact that while it is based on the 12-tone technique, it is by no means shackled to it. Indeed, save for the statement of the first theme (which contains the "row" of the 12 different tones of the chromatic scale), its relation to Schoenberg's system is not only not evident but doesn't appear to be involved at all.

Leading Motive

This 12-tone row becomes a sort of leading motive in the work thereafter, contrasted with a broader, more lyric theme. And, as the ear can fix both firmly in mind, their evolutions may be followed with interest, the overall design emerging as a pleasing, effective whole. If anything is lacking, from the listener's point of view, it is rhythmic vigor; it moves along but not perhaps quite forcefully enough.

Mr. Kornsand, who has composed much music (including a viola concerto), displayed a fine sense of orchestration and orchestral color, and provided us, in short, with a very pleasant and interesting opening to the afternoon. He was called forth from his position in the row of first violinists by Mr. Munch and given a very hearty welcome.

What to say about Isaac Stern? Looking back over the years I find I have said everything; indeed, the adjectives in his favor are so refulgent as to be appalling and I won't trot them out for another airing at this point. Suffice it to say he played the Mozart Concerto so beautifully, so effortlessly and at the same time so charmingly as to make it a miracle, especially in the light of Mr. Munch's sensitive accompaniment. Later on the Prokofieff G minor provided another miracle, its slow movement in particular disclosing a rapt beauty of tone impossible to describe. The violinist got an ovation on both occasions.

It was interesting, after some 22 years, to hear Dukas' "La Peri" again. Despite the marvelous array of effects this piece contains, despite its exotic textures and rising climaxes, it somehow just does not seem to make contact as a really impressive piece of music.

It makes an effect, to be sure; it holds the attention; yet always seems to miss the mark in some inexplicable way. I get the feeling it tries too hard, though doubtless in its proper frame as music for a ballet it would undoubtedly prove effective indeed. In any case, Mr. Munch gave it an exciting reading, the orchestra in peak form.

Pierre Monteux returns next week to guest conduct a program, offering Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, Tchaikovsky's Fifth and Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 6 - 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the sculpured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place of tympani. These, to be sure, are details of orchestration, but they are salient points musically, as well.

Mr. Stern, using printed music instead of relying entirely upon his memory, performed Prokofieff with glittering virtuosity, but also with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsand joined the comparatively small ranks of present and former Boston Symphony members who have had their own music played by this orchestra. (Others have included cellist Jacobus Langendoen, Charles Martin Loeffler, Henry Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos) Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," given first performance, proved an agreeable, solidly-constructed and well-scored piece.

It runs in six connected sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato and Finale, and, written in 1955, is a revision and amplification of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
APR 6 - 1957

253

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the sculpured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place of tympani. These, to be sure, are details of orchestration, but they are salient points musically, as well.

Mr. Stern, using printed music instead of relying entirely upon his memory, performed Prokofieff with glittering virtuosity, but also with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsand joined the comparatively small ranks of present and former Boston Symphony members who have had their own music played by this orchestra. (Others have included cellist Jacobus Langendoen, Charles Martin Loeffler, Henry Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos) Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," given first performance, proved an agreeable, solidly-constructed and well-scored piece.

It runs in six connected sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato and Finale, and, written in 1955, is a revision and amplification of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 6 1957

Kornsand Première at Symphony

Isaac Stern Soloist in Two Concertos

By Harold Rogers

In every respect it was a distinguished concert that Charles Munch gave yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. It was distinguished first of all by the première of a composition by a member of the Boston Symphony, Emil Kornsand—the first composer in many years to emerge from the ranks of the players. It was further distinguished by the presence of Isaac Stern, whose violin sings with a silken voice.

Mr. Kornsand was seated in his accustomed place at the far left of the first violins as Dr. Munch opened the program with "Metamorphosis," written by Mr. Kornsand in 1955. The composer was therefore a performer in his own work, which turned out to be an ingratiating piece of music, intelligently wrought with care, economy, and affection.

* * *

Its six small sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato, and Finale—moved logically from one to the next, changing their shape as the title indicates. The moods are in miniature—like pastoral poems of tranquility, or of rhapsodic nostalgia, or even the remembrance of former glories as the dreamlike march passes by.

In the finale Mr. Kornsand rallies his forces for a forte not quite truly a climax, but more as the memory of a climax. Perhaps he is a neo-romantic, a man slightly saddened that the age of romance has passed. If so, the perfume of that period hovers over his music—but not the real perfume. Only the memory.

* * *

At the conclusion Mr. Kornsand took a bow from his seat. He was then urged by Dr. Munch to come center stage where he was warmly applauded both by the listeners and his colleagues. He returned twice again to receive the applause.

Mr. Stern played two concertos—the Mozart G. major, No. 3, K. 216, heard before the intermission, and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 in G minor, with which the program closed. Something very special happens when Mr. Stern plays a slow movement—as happened in the Mozart Adagio when his tone took on an ethereal lightness, like a cloud sailing serenely through the blue.

This refined poetic quality was again noted in the Andante assai of the Prokofiev, where he sounded a lovely cantilena over a strumming accompaniment. Warmth of tone, technical accuracy, emotional communication, and a sensitive spirit—these are the qualities by which Mr. Stern has earned a ready welcome to the concert halls of the world; and judging by the hearty ovation he won yesterday, he is especially beloved by Bostonians.

Dr. Munch revived Paul Dukas' "La Péri": Poème dansé—absent from Symphony Hall for 22 years. It was a glorious revival, too—done with that rare gift of Dr. Munch's for extracting the essence from the French impressionists so that the orchestral colors shine with burnished light. The score itself is a lush tapestry of color, depicting epical scenes of Oriental imagination. Dr. Munch, when conducting music like this, is unsurpassed.

Kaye OK'd

BOSTON —(AP)— Comedian Danny Kaye turned maestro for an evening to conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra at an open rehearsal—all in fun.

Two learned music critics agreed in competing morning newspapers that Danny Kaye, when it comes to conducting, is a wonderful comedian.

Kaye's comment of his own performance was: "I tell you I can't read a note of music, but I love conducting."

The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra musicians' pension fund. The fund was enriched by $9,995.50 as a result of the performance.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 6 - 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, gave the [illegible] of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Isaac Stern, violin. The program:

Kornsand ..... Metamorphosis
Mozart ..... Concerto in G K 216
Dukas ..... "La Peri"
Prokofieff ..... Violin Concerto No. 2, Op. 63

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I have no doubt that few members of the audiences of the Boston Symphony concerts ever suspected, as they might have glanced at a quiet, middle-aged, be-spectacled violinist occupying the last chair in the first row, that they were looking upon a composer as well as a musician of attainment.

They certainly found out yesterday afternoon, for Emil Kornsand's "Matamorphosis" was given its first performance and quickly made its way as an interesting and effective orchestral essay notable for its invention, its concise form and its clean, clear sound throughout.

In six movements played without pause, one blending imperceptibly with another, Metamorphosis is especially interesting for the fact that while it is based on the 12-tone technique, it is by no means shackled to it. Indeed, save for the statement of the first theme (which contains the "row" of the 12 different tones of the chromatic scale), its relation to Schoenberg's system is not only not evident but doesn't appear to be involved at all.

Leading Motive

This 12-tone row becomes a sort of leading motive in the work thereafter, contrasted with a broader, more lyric theme. And, as the ear can fix both clearly in mind, their evolutions may be followed with interest, the overall design emerging as a pleasing, effective whole. If anything is lacking, from the listener's point of view, it is rhythmic vigor; it moves along but not perhaps quite forcefully enough.

Mr. Kornsand, who has composed much music (including a viola concerto), displayed a fine sense of orchestration and orchestral color, and provided music short, with a very pleasant and interesting opening to the afternoon. He was called forth from his position in the row of first violinists by Mr. Munch and given a very hearty welcome.

What to say about Isaac Stern? Looking back over the notes I had I have said everything, indeed, the adjectives in the notes are so refulgent as to be startling and I won't trot them out for another airing at this time. Suffice it to say he played the Mozart Concerto so beautifully, so effortlessly and at the same time so charmingly as to make it a miracle, especially in the light of Mr. Munch's perfect accompaniment. Later the Prokofieff G minor provided rather miracle, its slow movement in particular disclosing a rapt beauty of tone impossible to describe. The violinist's ovation on both occasions was [illegible] interesting, after some 22 years, to hear Dukas' "La Peri" again. Despite the marvelous array of effects this piece contains, despite its exotic textures and rising climaxes, it somehow just does not seem to make contact as a really impressive piece of music.

It makes an effect, to be sure; it holds the attention; yet always seems to miss the mark in some inexplicable way. I get the feeling it tries too hard, though doubtless in its proper frame as music for a ballet it would undoubtedly prove effective indeed. In any case, Mr. Munch gave it an exciting reading, the orchestra in peak form.

Pierre Monteux returns next week to guest conduct a program, offering Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, Tchaikovsky's Fifth and Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring."

tra—conductor, management and players—did honor yesterday to comedian Danny Kaye. In recognition of his generosity in giving his services to conduct the special pension fund open rehearsal at Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening, conductor Charles Munch signed a special diploma commemorating the event.

Mgr. Thomas D. Perry presented Danny with the medal of the Orchestra's 75th Anniversary.

Gaston Dufresne, chairman of the Boston Symphony Members Assn. Committee, conferred honorary membership upon Kaye, the first individual outside the ranks of Boston Symphony musicians to be so designated.

The informal ceremony was held in the tuning room after the Symphony concert yesterday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 6 - 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the sculptured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place of tympani. These, to be sure, are details of orchestration, but they are salient points musically, as well.

Mr. Stern, using printed music instead of relying entirely upon his memory, performed Prokofieff with glittering virtuosity, but also with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsand joined the comparatively small ranks of present and former Boston Symphony members who have had their own music played by this orchestra. (Others have included cellist Jacobus Langendoen, Charles Martin Loeffler, Henry Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos) Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," given first performance, proved an agreeable, solidly-constructed and well-scored piece.

It runs in six connected sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato and Finale, and, written in 1955, is a revision and amplification of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
APR 6 - 1957

253

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Isaac Stern Violin Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 21st program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Emil Kornsand: "Metamorphosis" (first performance); Mozart: Violin Concerto in G major (K. 216); Dukas: "La Peri"; Prokofieff: Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor. Isaac Stern was soloist in the concertos.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Violinist Isaac Stern delivered himself of some great playing as soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday. To my mind he is one of the few supremely fine artists of his instrument today, and he was in top form. Between the Mozart and the Prokofieff Concertos he covered a broad range of exactions in style, technic and expression. When the concert was over he was hailed with applause and cheers, all of which he justly merited.

The flawless legato, the marvelously gentle, unforced manner of his Mozart playing really took you by the heart. This was real communication, direct to the listener, of the substance of one of Mozart's priceless treasures of creation. The slow movement, especially, was a long and rapturous song, unforgettable both in the shining quality of tone and the sculptured grace of Stern's phrasing.

Prokofieff's G minor Concerto is in a different musical world from that of Mozart, and where Mozart had glowed so beautifully, Prokofieff's wizardry dazzled. Even though it is not quite so much a display piece as Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, the G minor is still extremely vivid and formidably difficult. But it is also excellent music, and clever, too. There is genuine feeling in that luscious tune of the slow movement, and an excellent invention at the end when the solo violin plays the pizzicati first heard from the massed strings, while the cello section plays the tune, and the string bass gives out with a fine-gauged but telling effect of muted notes. No less fascinating is the use of bass drum and snare drum in place of tympani. These, to be sure, are details of orchestration, but they are salient points musically, as well.

Mr. Stern, using printed music instead of relying entirely upon his memory, performed Prokofieff with glittering virtuosity, but also with enormous musicality.

Metamorphosis Gentle

First violinist Emil Kornsand joined the comparatively small ranks of present and former Boston Symphony members who have had their own music played by this orchestra. (Others have included cellist Jacobus Langendoen, Charles Martin Loeffler, Henry Eichheim and Fernandez Arbos) Kornsand's "Metamorphosis," given first performance, proved an agreeable, solidly-constructed and well-scored piece.

It runs in six connected sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato and Finale, and, written in 1955, is a revision and amplification of an Air nad March for Trombone and Orchestra which Kornsand composed for John W. Coffey, former Boston Symphony trombonist. One of its two themes is an ingenious and completely symmetrical 12-tone figure containing all the semitones of the scale, notable for the fact that but one interval of the theme is dissonant.

"Metamorphosis" flows easily but gently, with not a marked amount of vigorous forward motion save in the March. I could have wished for more individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand, upon conductor Charles Munch's bidding, walked from his place and acknowledged the cordial applause.

It was good to hear Dukas' "La Peri" once more, for the first time since the Boston Symphony last played it in 1935. This late romantic score, which begins peculiarly a little like Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," is a richly-colored tapestry of sound, and the colors have not faded. It is music of refinement but it also has power, Mr. Munch and the orchestra, who earlier had been at their superlative best, gave "La Peri" a truly sumptuous performance, as, in the enusing music of Prokofieff, they provided a glorious background for Mr. Stern.

Next week Pierre Monteux again will be guest conductor, he will present "The Hebrides" Overture of Mendelssohn, the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 6 1957

Kornsand Première at Symphony

Isaac Stern Soloist in Two Concertos

By Harold Rogers

In every respect it was a distinguished concert that Charles Munch gave yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. It was distinguished first of all by the premiere of a composition by a member of the Boston Symphony, Emil Kornsand—the first composer in many years to emerge from the ranks of the players. It was further distinguished by the presence of Isaac Stern, whose violin sings with a silken voice.

Mr. Kornsand was seated in his accustomed place at the far left of the first violins as Dr. Munch opened the program with "Metamorphosis," written by Mr. Kornsand in 1955. The composer was therefore a performer in his own work, which turned out to be an ingratiating piece of music, intelligently wrought with care, economy, and affection.

* * *

Its six small sections—Recitative, Air, March, Jig, Fugato, and Finale—moved logically from one to the next, changing their shape as the title indicates. The moods are in miniature—like pastoral poems of franquility, or of rhapsodic nostalgia, or even the remembrance of former glories as the dreamlike march passes by.

In the finale Mr. Kornsand rallies his forces for a forte not quite truly a climax, but more as the memory of a climax. Perhaps he is a neo-romantic, a man slightly saddened that the age of romance has passed. If so, the perfume of that period hovers over his music—but not the real perfume. Only the memory.

* * *

At the conclusion Mr. Kornsand took a bow from his seat. He was then urged by Dr. Munch to come center stage where he was warmly applauded both by the listeners and his colleagues. He returned twice again to receive the applause.

Mr. Stern played two concertos—the Mozart G. major, No. 3, K. 216, heard before the intermission, and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 in G minor, with which the program closed. Something very special happens when Mr. Stern plays a slow movement—as happened in the Mozart Adagio when his tone took on an ethereal lightness, like a cloud sailing serenely through the blue.

This refined poetic quality was again noted in the Andante assai of the Prokofiev, where he sounded a lovely cantilena over a strumming accompaniment. Warmth of tone, technical accuracy, emotional communication, and a sensitive spirit—these are the qualities by which Mr. Stern has earned a ready welcome to the concert halls of the world; and judging by the hearty ovation he won yesterday, he is especially beloved by Bostonians.

Dr. Munch revived Paul Dukas' "La Péri": Poème dansé—absent from Symphony Hall for 22 years. It was a glorious revival, too—done with that rare gift of Dr. Munch's for extracting the essence from the French impressionists so that the orchestral colors shine with burnished light. The score itself is a lush tapestry of color, depicting epical scenes of Oriental imagination. Dr. Munch, when conducting music like this, is unsurpassed.

Jean MARTINON à BOSTON

par Georges ZILBERSTEIN

JEAN MARTINON est [illegible] en 1910 et a étudié au Conservatoire de cette ville avant de monter à Paris où, tout en poursuivant ses études de violon, il travailla la composition, avec Albert Roussel notamment.

L'Hymne à la Vie, dont nous avons eu la primeur vendredi dernier, fut écrit en 1943 et 1944 — donc pendant l'Occupation — et après la libération de Jean Martinon d'un stalag où il avait composé un "Chant des Captifs", "Absolve Domine" et une "Musique d'Exil" (expériences de rythmes du jazz). Tout cela se sent dans l'"Hymne à la Vie" qui est, de plus, dédié à la naissance du fils du compositeur. L'idiome en est moderne — rappelant parfois Roussel et Stravinsky — mais d'une écriture [illegible] et intelligente, celle d'un [illegible] qui connaît à fond et ne [illegible] pas les néologismes. C'est, [illegible] le dit une description dans le programme, "une explosion de rythme, de vie et d'espoir après la période sombre de la vie de prisonnier de guerre..." Et la vie y est présentée depuis sa formation embryonnaire — des thèmes simplement suggérés par les flûtes et piccoli sur un murmure de cordes en sourdine — jusqu'à son plein épanouissement dans un mouvement perpétuel qui est un hymne de l'homme à la gloire de la vie.

La Vie, telle que la conçoit Jean Martinon, est une lutte continuelle qui a, cependant, ses moments de joie qu'il exalte, sans se laisser aller aux dépressions passagères, sans se laisser arrêter par les difficultés qui surgissent à chaque instant. C'est la conception d'un homme fort, énergique qui trouve en lui-même — et dans son Art — les ressources qui lui permettent d'avoir confiance dans l'avenir, [illegible] les turpitudes du moment.

Comme chef d'orchestre, Jean Martinon paraît méticuleux et nous imaginons que les virtuoses de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ont dû travailler dur, en répétitions, pour lui donner exactement la nuance, l'accentuation, qu'il désirait. Il dirige d'ailleurs avec beaucoup de fougue, de chaleur et, en même temps, avec précision, chacun de ses gestes ayant une signification bien claire et clairement exprimé.

Il nous faut dire, cependant, que si nous étions entré dans la salle sans savoir qui était au pupitre, nous aurions affirmé au bout de quelques minutes que c'était un Français: non pas en tant que chef, mais comme homme; Jean Martinon a des attitudes, des mouvements, que l'on ne voit qu'à des Français et qui rappellent les tables du Café du Commerce où le notaire, le médecin et le sous-préfet discutent des événements. Très curieux, en vérité, mais si presque tous les chefs français que nous avons vus ont, de temps à autre, un geste qui rappelle irrésistiblement la France, chez Jean Martinon ce souvenir ne vous quitte pas et vous donne la nostalgie du pays.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 9 1957

Boston Symphony:

Orchestra Records Key Role

Many cities in the United States today have come to recognize the aesthetic value and cultural advantages of having symphony orchestras of their own and of supporting them.

In response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has written a series of three articles about this world-renowned institution, describing its varied activities and the reasons why public support is so essential.

This is the first article.

By Thomas D. Perry, Jr.
Manager, Boston Symphony Orchestra
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

Having been invited to prepare three articles on what might be labeled "The Care and Feeding of a Symphony Orchestra," I find it desirable to go over certain fundamentals of what an orchestra is and why.

Music, with drama and the dance, is one of the performed arts that require an intermediary to bring them to life. A piece of music on paper means nothing until it is translated into sound, and is merely a memorandum of the combinations of sounds in the composer's imagination.

The composer may have had in mind any one of a number of sounds—perhaps a voice, perhaps the piano, perhaps a combination such as the string quartet. As his imaginings become more complex, it requires a more complex treatment to perform them, and the symphony orchestra is the most complex of all musical instruments.

It must play and be capable of playing a wide range of music, from the early to the new, from the simple to the most difficult; it must play well and with conviction. It must be capable of a variety of sounds ranging from an almost inaudible pianissimo to an impressive decibel output at full cry.

Long Task to Build

It is made up not only of a combination of instruments but a combination of performers upon them. It is a hundred highly skilled individuals capable not only of playing their own instruments but of adjusting instantaneously to the conductor's wishes and what is going on around them.

It is an instrument of great sensitivity and flexibility requiring loving care, not built in a day or a year or a decade and, like most things so large, elaborate and sensitive, very expensive indeed.

It takes a long time and a great deal of care to make a symphony orchestra, and the pains of growing to maturity can be great and complicated.

Boston was remarkably fortunate in the formation of its orchestra. It was founded in 1881 on the initiative of one man of unusual vision, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who saw to its needs, took care of it, and paid its bills almost single-handed for more than 35 years, when he turned it over to a board of trustees in 1918.

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

PUBLICITY PLANNING: Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown here in his Symphony Hall office with Mary Smith, director of publicity.

Boston received its symphony orchestra on a silver platter, already equipped with wise traditions and a reputation for excellence. Even after it became the responsibility of a board of trustees rather than a single man, the orchestra was fortunate up through the difficult 1930's in having the almost unlimited benefactions of a few men, particularly Ernest B. Dane.

The orchestra has been fortunate, too, in having an altogether remarkable series of conductors over the years; men of vision, vigor, and consummate skill in serving their art, including Wilhelm Gericke, Artur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and the present music director, Charles Munch.

Vital Intermediary

The orchestra, as I have said, is an intermediary between the composer and the listener, and therefore serves not only the art of music but also the public. This requires giving as many concerts as possible consistent with the endurance of the players and the needs of preparing the music carefully.

The Boston Symphony gives concerts for 46 weeks a year: 30 weeks of concerts during the winter season in Boston and on tour; 9 weeks of concerts by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, in May and June; and 3 weeks of free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which partly overlap a 6-week season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in the western part of Massachusetts.

This totals around 200 concerts a year. If each concert is scheduled to last about two hours, this means on the average that the orchestra is playing one hour and 10 minutes a day all year round. In the course of doing this, the orchestra plays, with repetitions, something like 250 different compositions, all of them carefully prepared in the rehearsals for each program.

The orchestra plays in person for an audience of about 700,000 persons a year. This audience is greatly increased by the broadcasts of the regular Friday and Saturday concerts over WGBH-FM in Boston and on the NBC network. Added to this must be those who hear the orchestra on records, a figure which runs well into the millions.

This is certainly an outstanding amount of activity and public service. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has the reputation throughout the world of being an orchestra of the first rank, and it may be said that the community of Boston enjoys the services of a most distinguished and very industrious organization.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

Traverse City, Mich.
RECORD-EAGLE
Circ. D. 7,873
APR 8 1957

Music

NEW YORK—(UP)—Lest anyone should imagine there is competition among America's top orchestras, Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, went to Philadelphia, and Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, went to Boston and each took over the other's home-ground chores for a couple of concerts.

Ormandy, conducting his own orchestra in New York's Carnegie Hall, enraptured an audience with a performance of Verdi's mighty Requiem Mass such as is rarely heard. Indeed, it was so effectively done that many in the audience were saying that surely this was the single masterpiece of a composer who has many masterpieces.

A bold man in music's name, this Ormandy. For the Tuba Mirum he stationed three trumpeters in the back of the highest gallery, from whence they blasted the last trumpet a la Verdi. But the most striking thing was the wonderfully disciplined responsiveness of the combined Philadelphia Orchestra Choir and the Rutgers University Choir. The amount of drilling to get such unity and accuracy must have been enormous.

Ormandy engaged the very best singers for soloists — Leontyne Price, Nann Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi. The requiem requires such singing but doesn't always get it, the reason being that orchestra conductors usually have the last word about performances and orchestra conductors as a class aren't too discriminating about singing.

Another high-emotion occasion at Carnegie Hall was a pension fund concert of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, an all-Beethoven program, with venerable Bruno Walter conducting and Dame Myra Hess as soloist in the fourth piano concerto. There were brief preliminary speeches commemorating Walter's long service for the orchestra and his semi-retirement after this season.

Dame Myra presented him with a first edition score of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. Walter acknowledged the compliments with

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 10 1957

355

Economics Set Tempo

Income-Outgo Bared by Boston Symphony

In the second of a series of articles on the Boston Symphony Orchestra written in response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, outlines some of the economic necessities involved in running an orchestra of this magnitude and distinction.

By Thomas D. Perry, Jr.
Manager of
The Boston Symphony Orchestra
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

Yesterday I discussed the function of a symphony orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in particular. Today I should like to set forth some of the economic facts of orchestral life.

However successful an orchestra may be in terms of number of concerts given, and number of people played for, its economics are subject to several limitations.

First, the number of concerts an orchestra can give is limited by the endurance of its players and their capacity to maintain a high artistic standard.

The Boston Symphony averages during its seasons just under four concerts a week and this, with the rehearsals necessary to prepare them, approaches the limit of what a player can be expected to do and do well.

Seating Capacity Limited

Second, the seating capacity of auditoriums is limited. Symphony Hall seats 2,631 and the other halls where the orchestra plays, with the exception of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, are usually of a similar size. This is a limitation, not only because these halls already exist and would be enormously expensive to enlarge, but also because, speaking very generally, there is a relationship between the size of an auditorium and its acoustical quality: beyond a certain size, the ability of the audience to hear well and to feel a part of the performance begins to fall off, and therefore becomes less satisfactory.

Third, since an orchestra is a public institution, it must be available to the public: its ticket prices must not be too high. What is "too high" is, of course, debatable. The Boston Symphony Orchestra tickets range from $2.50 to $6.00, which is higher than most, but has not proved to be prohibitive to the public.

Earning Power Bounded

These three factors, the limited number of concerts, a limited hall capacity, and a limited proper charge for tickets, restricted the earning power of any orchestra. A casual observer looking at the Boston Symphony concerts might, and not infrequently has, drawn a parallel with a "hit show" in the theater: the Boston Symphony gives a large number of performances every year, is almost invariably sold out at its concerts in a hall seating 2,600 (almost double the size of a normal theater) at what seem like handsome prices.

To reply to this observation, one must carry the parallel a bit further and recognize that the orchestra is in effect a repertory company, playing a different program each week, is limited in the number of concerts it gives by the need of almost incessant rehearsal to prepare this repertoire, and that it performs with an all-star cast of 160.

In other words, while the box office is magnificent, the production costs are staggering.

Earnings in '56 Disclosed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last year earned from ticket sales $1,189,000, which was 75 per cent of its income. Fees for broadcasting and recording royalties came to another $176,000 (11 per cent of income), interest on endowments at $53,000 was only 3 per cent of income, and the balance of $193,000 came from gifts, some bequests and other non-operating receipts. The total income of the orchestra was $1,584,000. The earned income of ticket sales plus radio and recording totals 86 per cent of the income, a truly remarkable proportion in a field where earnings of only 40-50 per cent are not unusual.

The great bulk of the outgo is, properly, for the performing services of musicians, the players, conductors and soloists, totaling 60 per cent of the expenses at $1,041,000. Other concert costs such as rental of halls, transportation, and publicity accounted for 20 per cent, the operation of our own Symphony Hall and Tanglewood 6 per cent. The remaining administrative costs, capital expenses, the operation of the orchestra's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Center, totaled 13 per cent, with a total expense of $1,720,000.

Appeal to Community

These proportions have not changed materially over the years: the amounts have simply gone up. In the last 10 years the income of the orchestra has risen, partly through raised ticket prices, partly through added recording (offset by reduced broadcasting income) from $1,247,000 to $1,584,000, or $337,000.

During the same period, the total expenses have increased from $1,228,000 to $1,720,000, an increase of $492,000.

Until three or four years ago, with occasional sponsored radio programs, through the unfailing and remarkable generosity of the Friends of the Orchestra and the sold-out concerts, the orchestra succeeded in making ends meet.

A graph of these trends now shows a rather startling and, as far as one can see, continuing gap between income and outgo. The earning power of the orchestra is about as high as it can reasonably be expected to go, short of some remarkable new development which one cannot now foresee.

Yet this continuing gap between income and outgo remains, and it is this that the trustees are calling upon the community to help close. They feel that a public institution like the orchestra, serving its function well, will not be permitted to limit its activities in either quantity or quality, and they are convinced that the community of Boston will rally to their support. Nevertheless, the problem exists and must be faced.

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry, manager, in whose hands are placed the major problems of securing financial support for the Boston Symphony.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
READING, PA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 36,120
APR 10 1957

Danny Kaye May Have Ideas For Longer-Haired Maestros

It is a matter of considerable regret to us that we could not have been in Boston last Wednesday, when Danny Kaye conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a benefit for the orchestra's pension fund. Danny says he cannot read a note of music, yet he conducted the musicians in a program that included Wagner, Johann Strauss, Rossini, and Tschaikowsky. He was applauded wildly—at least as wildly as a Boston Symphony audience is capable of applauding—and his performance netted the pension fund by nearly $9,600.

According to reports coming from Boston, Mr. Kaye is a highly unorthodox but highly amusing conductor. In our view, he had a few tricks up his sleeve that the longer-haired baton-wielders might profitably copy, though we greatly doubt that they will.

Danny conducted one of the numbers facing the audience, on the theory that audience never get a chance to see a conductor's face when he's working. We'd like to see Eugene Ormandy pull that switch some time, just to see what his mobile little face looks like when he's squeezing a tough passage out of the woodwinds. Mr. Kaye repeated the first half-hour of his program so as not to deprive a pair of late-comers of any of the music. This was very good of him but we're afraid if it were in general use, it would merely encourage late arrivals. He introduced novelties, such as a thing called "Look Sharp, Be Sharp," dedicated to the users of electric razors.

Oh, to have been in Boston now that April's here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
La Notizia (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,575
APR 10 1957

Danny Kaye dirige la orchestra senza conoscere una sola nota

Il comico Danny Kaye si è improvvisato maestro per dirigere l'orchestra sinfonica di Boston in una esecuzione all'aperto... Tutto per ridere.

I critici musicali, commentando l'esecuzione nei giornali del mattino, sono stati concordi nel definire Danny Kaye un meraviglioso commediante. Elliot Morton, del "Daily Record", così si esprimere al riguardo: "Negli ultimi 25 anni non c'è mai stata tanta ilarità nella sala. Il giovane direttore è riuscito a ridurre il pubblico all'isterismo, l'orchestra al caos e l'opera di certi compositori in brandelli".

Il commento di Kaye alla sua esecuzione è stato: "Vi dirò: non conosco una sola nota musicale, ma adoro dirigere".

I proventi del concerto sono stati devoluti al fondo dei musicisti in pensione che ha così accresciuto il proprio capitale di 9995 dollari e 41 cent.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 11 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

ORCHESTRA SEEKS FRIENDS: The newest trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is E. Morton Jennings, vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston. Mr. Jennings is responsible for the solicitation of contributions from the business community. Here he is assisted by Mrs. Augustus L. Putnam, secretary of the Friends of the Boston Symphony.

Boston Symphony

Business Urged to Aid Culture

In the third and last article on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, discusses the various means of helping an orchestra of this magnitude bridge the gap between income and outgo, and the growing possibilities of corporate support for artistic institutions. The series was written in response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor.

By Thomas D. Perry, Jr.
Manager of The
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

In the preceding two articles I discussed the function of an orchestra in a community, how it goes about paying its way, and observed that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the peak of its earning power and activity, faces a continuing and probably increasing gap between what it can earn and what it must spend.

Today I should like to discuss what we must do about it.

Like most public institutions, such as schools, hospitals, and art museums, symphony orchestras have depended upon philanthropy to make ends meet.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in its early years was the happy object of the private philanthropy of Maj. Henry Lee Higginson and later of Ernest B. Dane. In more recent years, what with changing times and taxes, such private gifts and the fortunes that permitted them have pretty much faded out.

Foreseeing this, a number of years ago, the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was established to encourage individual contributions in any amount with the idea of making up in numbers what the gifts might lack in size. This society has been remarkably successful and in fact has been the salvation of the orchestra.

The total number of friends is now in the vicinity of 4,000 and in the past several years, the total of their gifts has been in the vicinity of $150,000 a year, a combination of living endowment and multidonored philanthropy.

The orchestra last year earned $1,365,000 from the sale of tickets, broadcasting and record royalties. The income on its endowment fund, $53,000, brought this income to $1,418,000. Its expenses were $1,720,000, a difference of approximately $300,000. It is this gap that must be filled.

In addition to the friends receipts of about $150,000 a year, there must be an increase in giving or a new source of philanthropy must be found.

The support of interested individuals which has endured for centuries is being more and more supplanted by corporate giving. In many fields of welfare, it is a concept and habit already established; for example, many corporations contribute to the Red Cross and community fund. The role of corporate giving in education in the form of scholarships and research grants, which was greatly spurred by the effort during World War II, has also been increasing.

The awareness on the part of corporations that they have not only a responsibility to their communities for their welfare, but gain by having these agencies in a thriving condition, is more and more widely accepted.

The government endorses the idea of public philanthropy both by individuals and corporations in the form of exemption from taxation, in varying degrees under varying circumstances.

This tax exemption is the form which government subsidy of public institutions has taken in this country; and it is in this direction that the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are turning for added support.

The idea of corporate support for artistic institutions is not yet fully accepted by any means; but it is coming, as more and more businessmen and leaders of the community recognize what such an institution as the Boston Symphony Orchestra can mean to the community.

At a recent luncheon given by the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce in salute to the orchestra and attended by many Boston businessmen, Thomas G. Dignan, president of Boston Edison Company, said, in part: "Boston business has a special interest in the symphony . . . which has contributed immeasurably to the cultural and economic life of this city. . . . We know what needs to be done and we shall do our share, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a community asset. It belongs to all of us, and must be preserved for the present and future generations."

C. D. Jackson, vice-president of Time, Inc., a trustee of the orchestra from New York City spoke of the value of the orchestra to the community and to the nation: "A very interesting thing has happened in America culture is no longer a sissy word. Nations like ours can be virile and successful, but the glue that holds things together is the national coefficient of idealism, and in today's titanic contest for the allegiance of half the world's peoples, the indispensable ally of guns and dollars is this coefficient of idealism.

"The tangible, visible, and audible expression of national idealism is culture. Of all the expressions of culture, music is the most universal. Of all the expressions of present-day musical culture, the Boston Symphony is the best. You have the best, and you've got to keep it that way."

The orchestra serves to enrich the community in which businessmen do business. They realize that it is an element setting a tone of quality that is valuable in carrying out their affairs, and in many cases has the completely practical advantage of providing an attraction for bringing talents into their staffs which might otherwise go elsewhere.

In a world where the competition for talent and brains is very keen, the lure of an institution such as the Boston Symphony Orchestra may often be the determining factor.

And what of the future? A situation where $300,000 must be raised every year requires a longer range view than just paying the bills each year.

The trustees of the orchestra are turning their minds and efforts not only to raising for the annual needs, but for an increase in the endowment that provides a bulwark against changing conditions.

This is a long process and the immediate need is pressing, but the trustees feel full confidence that an institution like the Boston Symphony Orchestra, serving as well and energetically as it does the musical needs of Boston, and for that matter this country, deserves and will have the help it needs.

coverage for all of the of the space devoted Symphony Hall podiu
last week, an event fo editors, music critics with each other. The Suffice it for this purposes that the new took a mighty chance ing an hour-and-a-h structured and alm
pletely unrehearsed
and that he came th

Bradley Dewey, Mrs. Edgar J. Driscoll, Mrs. Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, Mrs. Richard Higgins, Mrs. James C. Hinkle, Mrs. Frederick J. Leviseir and Mrs. Harry S. Middendorf.

and com-musical in-the orches-natural ication are g.
re that we
the end of ctivities.

symphony
he violinist ace of conrt's 3rd in pfieff's 2nd
rn is a vir-
everything.
pretentious,
w to keep om intrud-
nd lets the t were for rt was unveetness of ne and re-
his Proko-with all the and biting
s work the classic that gram, along eri: Poeme premiere of ber of the olin section,

by Emil piece was a d side in its harmonies heavily on it yet had ents than a new works
course of a
Mr. Munch's orchestra in composition merits highest commendation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 12 1957

Joe Petrovec

Pierre Monteux will honor Igor Stravinsky's 75th anniversary by conducting "Le Sacre du Printemps" at the Boston Symphony's concerts this afternoon, Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1957 C 41

INCREASINGLY POPULAR are the bi-weekly invitation Dutch Treat luncheons for Symphony concert subscribers. This delightful innovation continues to stimulate a more personal acquaintance with the orchestra. Today, in the fascinating Old Instrument Room on the second floor of Symphony Hall, guests will hear informal talks by two musicians of contrasting avocations. They are Victor Manusevitch, violinist and inventor of "gadgets;" and Emil Kornsand, the violinist who composed the opening number of last week's Friday and Saturday concerts. Among those who will be present are Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Miss Helen Almy, Mrs. Thomas M. Claflin, Mrs. Roger Damon, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Bradley Dewey, Mrs. Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, Mrs. Richard Higgins, Mrs. James G. Hinkle, Mrs. Donald T. Hood, Mrs. Frederick J. Leviseur, Mrs. Leon M. Little, Mrs. Harry S. Middendorf, Mrs. Langdon Parsons, Mrs. John A. Perkins, Mrs. Arthur Perry, Mrs. Franklin T. Pfaelzer, Mrs. Curtis Prout, Mrs. Benjamin M. Rice, Miss Harriet Robeson and Mrs. Alexander Wheeler.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078. Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 18 1957

James Abbott

Adele Addison will be the soprano soloist in the Bach St. Matthew Passion, to be given next week by the Boston Symphony Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 11 1957

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

ORCHESTRA SEEKS FRIENDS: The newest trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is E. Morton Jennings, vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston. Mr. Jennings is responsible for the solicitation of contributions from the business community. Here he is assisted by Mrs. Augustus L. Putnam, secretary of the Friends of the Boston Symphony.

Boston Symphony

Business Urged to Aid Culture

In the third and last article on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, discusses the various means of helping an orchestra of this magnitude bridge the gap between income and outgo, and the growing possibilities of corporate support for artistic institutions. The series was written in response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor.

By Thomas D. Perry, Jr.
Manager of The Boston Symphony Orchestra
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

In the preceding two articles I discussed the function of an orchestra in a community, how it goes about paying its way, and fortunes that permitted them have pretty much faded out.

Foreseeing this, a number of years ago, the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was established to encourage individual contributions in any amount with the idea of making up in numbers what the gifts might lack in size. This society has been remarkably successful and in fact has been the salvation of the orchestra.

The total number of friends is now in the vicinity of 4,000 and in the past several years, the total of their gifts has been in the vicinity of $150,000 a year, a combination of living endowment and multidonored philanthropy.

The orchestra last year earned $1,365,000 from the sale of tickets, broadcasting and record orchestra and attended by many Boston businessmen, Thomas G. Dignan, president of Boston Edison Company, said, in part: "Boston business has a special interest in the symphony . . . which has contributed immeasurably to the cultural and economic life of this city. . . . We know what needs to be done and we shall do our share, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a community asset. It belongs to all of us, and must be preserved for the present and future generations."

C. D. Jackson, vice-president of Time, Inc., a trustee of the orchestra from New York City, spoke of the value of the orchestra to the community and to the nation: "A very interesting thing has happened in America: culture is no longer a sissy word. Nations like ours can be

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
APR 11 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 12 1957

Job Petrovec

Pierre Monteux will honor Igor Stravinsky's 75th anniversary by conducting "Le Sacre du Printemps" at the Boston Symphony's concerts this afternoon, Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1957 C 141

INCREASINGLY POPULAR are the bi-weekly invitation Dutch Treat luncheons for Symphony concert subscribers. This delightful innovation continues to stimulate a more personal acquaintance with the orchestra. Today, in the fascinating Old Instrument Room on the second floor of Symphony Hall, guests will hear informal talks by two musicians of contrasting avocations. They are Victor Manusevitch, violinist and inventor of "gadgets;" and Emil Kornsand, the violinist who composed the opening number of last week's Friday and Saturday concerts. Among those who will be present are Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Miss Helen Almy, Mrs. Thomas M. Claflin, Mrs. Roger Damon, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Bradley Dewey, Mrs. Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, Mrs. Richard Higgins, Mrs. James G. Hinkle, Mrs. Donald T. Hood, Mrs. Frederick J. Leviseur, Mrs. Leon M. Little, Mrs. Harry S. Middendorf, Mrs. Langdon Parsons, Mrs. John A. Perkins, Mrs. Arthur Perry, Mrs. Franklin T. Pfaelzer, Mrs. Curtis Prout, Mrs. Benjamin M. Rice, Miss Harriet Robeson and Mrs. Alexander Wheeler.

* * *

Music in Review

By GERALD A. BERLIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a guest conductor on the average of one every three weeks this season and one or two have indeed achieved a succes formidable. But the press coverage for all of them combined scarcely amounts to a tithe of the space devoted to Danny Kaye's appearance on the Symphony Hall podium for the annual Pension Fund Concert last week, an event for whose chronicling city reporters, society editors, music critics and editorial writers have already vied with each other. The story, then, is largely pre-empted by now.

Suffice it for this corner's purposes that the new maestro took a mighty chance in assaying an hour-and-a-half of unstructured and almost completely unrehearsed horseplay and that he came through with a thumping triumph. That he is one of the great clowns of our day needs no belaboring. The salient fact that emerges in addition is that he seems to possess prodigious and completely untutored musical intuition. The men in the orchestra report that his natural powers of communication are simply overwhelming.

It vouchsafes here that we have not yet seen the end of Mr. Kaye's baton activities.

* * *

The course of a big symphony week also brought the violinist Isaac Stern in a brace of concerts, namely, Mozart's 3rd in G-major and Prokofieff's 2nd in G-minor. Mr. Stern is a virtuoso who has everything. Modest, relaxed, unpretentious, he manages somehow to keep his colossal gifts from intruding upon the music and lets the scores sing out, as it were for themselves. His Mozart was unsurpassable in its sweetness of tone, elegance of line and refinement of phrase; his Prokofieff came through with all the hot lyrical sweep and biting drive that makes this work the great modern violin classic that it is.

Also on the program, along with Dukas' "La Peri: Poeme Danse," was the premiere of a work of a member of the orchestra's first violin section, "Metamorphosis," by Emil Kornsand. If this piece was a bit on the disjointed side in its structure and if its harmonies leaned rather heavily on Richard Strauss, it yet had more pleasant moments than a good many other new works one hears in the course of a season. In any case Mr. Munch's gesture toward the orchestra in doing a player's composition merits highest commendation.

* * *

Boston Daily Record
April 12

TODAY'S DUTCH TREAT luncheon for Symphony Concert subscribers will have Victor Manusevitch, violinist and inventor of "gadgets" and Emil Kornsand, the violinist who composed the opening number of last week's Friday and Saturday concerts, as informal speakers. The invitation list for the pre-concert party includes Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Miss Helen Almy, Mrs. Thomas M. Claflin, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Bradley Dewey, Mrs. Edgar J. Driscoll, Mrs. Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, Mrs. Richard Higgins, Mrs. James C. Hinkle, Mrs. Frederick S. Leviseir and Mrs. Harry S. Middendorf.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 12 1957

James Abbott

Adele Addison will be the soprano soloist in the Bach St. Matthew Passion, to be given next week by the Boston Symphony Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 13 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

Boston Symphony orchestra, Monteux conducting, gave the opening of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

"The Hebrides," Op. 26 ..... Mendelssohn
No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 ..... Tchaikovsky
"Le du Printemps" ..... Stravinsky

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Pierre Monteux, that 82-year-old musical legend, returned yesterday afternoon for his second appearance with the orchestra this season and provided, as always, another formidable display of his mastery of the orchestra.

Mr. Monteux does not conduct in the contemporary sense of the term. There is nothing whatever theatrical about him either in appearance or manner. He merely marches to the conductor's stand, his great white mustachios in vivid contrast to his mane of hair as black as the inside of a coal mine, turns to the orchestra and beats the time. Occasionally he phrases a passage with his left hand or signals an entrance, but that is all. The rest is the miracle of the stock: the men of the orchestra, as secure in [illegible] of the conductor's [illegible] have no concerts but [illegible].

The results, if it is hardly ever incandescent, is on the other hand hardly ever subject to interpretative carpings on the part of public and critics alike. There it is, Mr. Monteux's broad back seems to suggest, the way it was written, and if you have any complaints, kindly take them up with Mr. Tchaikovsky.

Speak for Self

There is no danger of anyone trying to do this in the case of that composer's Fifth Symphony, given for the first time since the late Guido Cantelli conducted it some four years ago. Mr. Monteux might have got a great deal more out of the work by emphasizing some of its more obvious melodrama, but he didn't do that: he played it absolutely straightforwardly and let it speak for itself. And that it did, attaining an ovation for conductor and orchestra at the end. It may be added that the orchestra played with remarkable precision and James Stagliano, meantime, traversed the horn solo of the slow movement beautifully.

Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," introduced to the world by Mr. Monteux in a riotous Parisian premiere some 44 years ago, has long since lost its shock value and, although it still holds its own among the noisiest pieces ever written, it remains one of the true masterworks of the 20th century, at once colorful, exotic, passionate, barbarous and exciting, in its volcanic rhythms, its tightness of structure, its free-ranging melodies.

I couldn't help but think what a tremendous impact this would have on the stage today in Massine's choreography, the music provided by such an orchestra and conductor as this, in a day when the average listener is no more dismayed by this music than by that of Strauss. However, nearly 30 years have passed since it was mounted in this country, and doubtless 30 or more will pass before it is again. On this occasion Mr. Monteux, who conducted it all from memory when he did it in Paris in 1952 with the Boston Symphony, used a score.

Next week Mr. Munch returns to do Part II of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion with Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mack Harrell and James Joyce as soloists. Assisting are the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The concert is on Thursday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

APR 13 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY

They Still Walk O[illegible]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 22d program of the Friday-Saturday series. Pierre Monteux, as guest, conducted "The Hebrides" ("Fingal's Cave") Overture of Mendelssohn, the Symphony No. 5, in E minor, by Tchaikovsky, and "The Rite of Spring," by Stravinsky.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Pierre Monteux returns this week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the climax of his program is a score with which he has been uniquely associated for 44 years: Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring." He conducts it in honor of the approaching 75th birthday, next June 17, of the composer.

This chronicler would not wish to distort a report of yesterday afternoon's concert, or give a minor and extraneous manifestation undue emphasis. But he was really surprised, during the course of Stravinsky's masterpiece, to see that people still walk out upon it. Quite a number did, from the floor and two balconies.

It just goes to show how one's own attitude and taste cannot be a reliable barometer of those of the ultimately final critic: the public. Of course there was a fearful pandemonium and scandal when Monteux conducted the very first performance of the "Rite", in Paris in 1913. But after 39 years had passed the audience at the same Theatre Du Champs Elysees, when Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony in it during the European tour of 1952, applauded wildly. Now, four more years have passed [illegible]

I would have thought that most people, even if they had not taken the work to their hearts, now would regard it with composure. Perhaps it is a matter of generation. Those who have made acquaint[illegible] rhythm[illegible] in, say[illegible] sider it [illegible] suprem[illegible] the ear[illegible] violent[illegible] clever [illegible] position[illegible]

At a[illegible] yesterd[illegible] and col[illegible] the nei[illegible] Monteu[illegible] power [illegible]

Tchai[illegible] phony [illegible] characte[illegible] an imp[illegible] and fee[illegible] the mai[illegible] ment wa[illegible] but tem[illegible] matter [illegible] Monteux brought out some of the inner voices, too, in some places too much, so that the principal tune of the moment was obscured. But, once again, the strength of his reading was notable.

It is a tribute to his own powers that, at the age of 82, Monteux can communicate so effectively from composer to orchestra to audience. More than one person I heard say when the concert was over: "What a really grand old man!"

Next week Charles Munch will return, to present the second part of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion in observance of Easter. The choruses will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth; the soloists Adele Addison, soprano, Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrell and James Joyce [illegible]

N. B.: The afternoon [illegible] next week will be given Thursday, to avoid Good Friday. The evening concert will be Saturday, as usual.

Society: Cambridge Art Association Plans Lucky 13th Exhibition

PRACTICING for the Buckingham School Circus May 14 is Dave Sohier, whose mother, Mrs. William D. Sohier Jr. will see that dozens of small Buckingham clowns are costumed for this gala day.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Thirteen will be a lucky number as far as members of the Cambridge Art Assn. are concerned. They are planning a particularly extensive exhibition for their 13th annual Spring show at Harvard's Busch-Reisinger Museum. Set to open on Apr. 14 with a members' preview from 2 to 5, the exhibition will remain on public view through May 4.

Mrs. Baird Hastings, wife of the president of the Art Association, will be hostess at the Sunday preview, for which Mrs. Robert B. Nathanson will plan the refreshments and Miss Edith Henderson will arrange the flowers. Exhibition details are being worked out by Miss Ethel Bassett, Mrs. Arthur Greeley, Miss Frances Henderson, Charles Demetropoulos and Thomas O'Hara.

Pourers serving with Mrs. Hastings will include Mrs. Roger Johnson, Miss Dora Pintner, Mrs. Greeley Curtis, Mrs. Isabella Halstead, Mrs. William Morris Hunt and Mrs. Harold Sproul. Hostesses will also include Miss Priscilla Montgomery, Miss Elizabeth MacLean-Smith, Mrs. C. M. Casagrande, Mrs. Kathreen Post, Miss Anna Faull, Mrs. Thomas Philips, Mrs. Alix Robinson, and Miss Mabel Colgate.

IT TOOK A BOSTON AUDIENCE a little more than two hours and a quarter to go "Around the World in 80 Days" Wednesday night at the gala benefit preview of Mike Todd's prize winning movie. The New England Baptist Hospital arranged the party. Searchlights, the Scituate High School band and the presence of Mike Todd himself kept the crowd waiting outside the Saxon Theater until well after the 8:30 curtain.

SNAPSHOTS — Everyone in the capacity audience (the benefit was sold out three days before) turning their heads when a flash bulb popped to make sure Mrs. Todd (Elizabeth Taylor) hadn't come after all. . . Mayor Hynes, handing his blue ticket to the doorman himself. . . Dr. and Mrs. Richard Cattell (he's Sir Anthony Eden's doctor) among the prompt arrivals. . . Mrs. George Peabody Jr. and her small son watching from orchestra seats. . . Margaret Brown, on from the Institute of Contemporary Art's party, where she was a member of the ladies' committee. . . Mr. and Mrs. Ingersoll Cunningham. . . Ann Sargent . . . Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Worthen.

SAILING TODAY on the Vulcania are Rear Adm and Mrs. Samuel Eliot Morison, who will drive through Portugal and proceed to England. Adm Morison has been invited to lecture on American naval strategy at Oxford. They will return in June, dividing the Summer between Newport, R. I., and their Summer house, "Good Hope" at Northeast Harbor, Me.

THE BOSTON FESTIVAL will be the subject of a discussion presented by its staff and Ford Hall Forum on Sunday evening at Jordan Hall. The relation of the artist to the public and the public to the critics will be explored in the 8 o'clock panel program conducted by Mitchell Siporin of Brandeis University, Bartlett H. Hayes Jr., director of the Addison Gallery of American Art, Paul Sample of Dartmouth, and Festival director Peter Temple.

TWIN DAUGHTERS, Anne Elizabeth and Joan Claudia, were born at Emerson Hospital in Concord to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Curley (Constance MacAllister) on Apr. 4. They are the grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph MacAllister of Arlington.

TODAY IS THE FIRST BIRTHDAY of the North Shore Babies' Hospital Thrift Shop at its new location at 20½ Federal st. in Salem. Mrs. Lawrence P. Pleasants of Marblehead will cut the huge birthday cake with one candle and members and guests will inspect the bargains on the racks.

Volunteers on duty will be Mrs. Roger I. Moore, Mrs. Thurl D. Brown and Mrs. James S. Muzzy.

The Thrift Shop is run by the Thrift Shop committee of the auxiliary for the hospital. Serving on the committee are Mrs. Edgar Harding, Marblehead, chairman; Mrs. C. Irving Rand, Marblehead, vice chairman; Mrs. Paul D. Giles, Salem, treasurer; Mrs. Morton R. Creesy, Mrs. Roger A. Fowler, Mrs. Harold V. Langmaid, Mrs. Eben Parsons, Mrs. Pleasants, Mrs. Daniel B. Ruggles, 3d, all of Marblehead; Mrs. Roland H. Knight of Beverly, and Mrs. Lawrence White of Ipswich.

A JOINT CONCERT, featuring music of Mendelssohn, Beethoven and Wagner, will be offered on Sunday evening by the Tufts University Community Orchestra and M.I.T. Prof. John Corley of M.I.T. will conduct and Prof. Kenneth MacKillop of Tufts will be in charge of the evening program at Tufts, Cohen Auditorium, Talbot av., Somerville.

A DAUGHTER, Rima Elise Mazzeo, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo (Kate Roys) of 114 The Fenway, at Richardson House, Mar. 27. Mr. Mazzeo is the bass clarinetist of the Boston Symphony. The baby is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francesco Mazzeo of Shrewsbury and of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Roys of Seattle.

A DAUGHTER, Nancy Walt, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Walt (Geraldine Bolter) of Waban, Mar. 22, at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Mr. Walt is the principal bassoonist of the Boston Symphony. The baby's grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Walt of Virginia, Minn., and of Mr. and Mrs. Myron Bolter of Minneapolis.

AN IMPORTANT DATE during the fund-raising efforts of the Boston Association for Retarded Children will be the Apr. 29 meeting at the Sidney Hill Country Club. Plans will be discussed for the nursery school, retardation unit at the Children's Medical Center, and the Saturday recreation program in Newton by Mrs. Tye Wolf.

Membership drive captains planning to attend the meeting include Marvin Axelrod, Mrs. Warren Burroughs, Mrs. Albert Cohen, Mrs. Leon Hammer, Mrs. Arthur Handler, Mrs. Bertram Rodman, Mrs. Roland Stroyman, Mrs. Martin Umana, all of Newton, and Mrs. Norman Mamber, Mrs. Saul Robbins and Mrs. Stanley Schwartz of Brookline.

A FIRST SON was born to Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Pashoian Jr. (Claire Le Vaugie) of Malden at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Brighton on March 30. The child, who will be named Norman E. Pashoian 3d is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. LeVaugie of Brookline and Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Pashoian of Malden.

FATHER'S DAY at Goucher College in Baltimore will come on Apr. 26, 27 and 28. Katherine A. Maclaurin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Rupert Maclaurin of Lincoln is in charge of plans for fathers' week-end, which include a play on Friday evening, a variety show and a reception.

ANOTHER ART EXHIBIT opening on Palm Sunday will be the Copley Society's oil and watercolors by members, which will feature the work of Mr. and Mrs. George Bigelow, Mrs. John W. Farley, Miss Helen Dyer, Mrs. Walter Bennett, Bret Montague, John Clancy, James H. Walsh, John A. Shelton, Richard Rourke, Miss Bessie Howard, Joseph Corish, Ivar J. Matheson, Mrs. Annabelle Williams and Pasquale D'Orsi, all members of the Needham Art Assn.

Pourers at the opening on Sunday which will be followed by a public viewing through Apr. 26, will include Mrs. Herbert C. Williams, president of the association; Mrs. Tully Nettleton, Mrs. Lewis Nickerson, Mrs. George Cowlard and Mrs. Samuel Lunt, president of the Lexington Painters' Guild.

To Wed in July

Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Flynn of Jamaica Plain announce the engagement of their daughter, Ann Therese, to William R. Coakley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Coakley of Dorchester.

(Hookallo Studio)
MISS ANN T. FLYNN

Miss Flynn graduated from Emmanuel College in 1956.

Mr. Coakley is attending Boston College intown.

The wedding is planned for July.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 13 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Monteux conducting, gave the [illegible] of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The [illegible]

"The Hebrides," Op. 26 ..... Mendelssohn
No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 ..... Tchaikovsky du Printemps" ..... Stravinsky

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Pierre Monteux, that 82-year-old musical legend, returned yesterday afternoon for his second appearance with the orchestra this season and provided, as always, another formidable display of his mastery of the orchestra.

Mr. Monteux does not conduct in the contemporary sense of the term. There is nothing whatever theatrical about him either in appearance or manner. He merely marches to the conductor's stand, his great white mustachios in vivid contrast to his mane of hair as black as the inside of a coal mine, turns to the orchestra and beats the time. Occasionally he phrases a passage with his left hand or signals an entrance, but that is all. The rest is the miracle of the stock: the men of the orchestra, as secure in [illegible] of the conductor's [illegible] have no concern [illegible]

The result, if it is hardly ever incandescent, is on the other hand hardly ever subject to interpretative carpings on the part of public and critics alike. There it is, Mr. Monteux's broad back seems to suggest, the way it was written, and if you have any complaints, kindly take them up with Mr. Tchaikovsky.

Speak for Self

There is no danger of anyone trying to do this in the case of [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

APR 13 1957

Society: Cambridge Art Association Plans Lucky 13th Exhibition

PRACTICING for the Buckingham School Circus May 14 is Dave Sohier, whose mother, Mrs. William D. Sohier Jr. will see that dozens of small Buckingham clowns are costumed for this gala day.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Rosario Mazzeo (Kate Roys) of 114 The Fenway, at Richardson House, Mar. 27. Mr. Mazzeo is the bass clarinetist of the Boston Symphony. The baby is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francesco Mazzeo of Shrewsbury and of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Roys of Seattle.

A DAUGHTER, Nancy Walt, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Walt (Geraldine Bolter) of Waban, Mar. 22, at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Mr. Walt is the principal bassoonist of the Boston Symphony. The baby's grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Walt of Virginia, Minn., and of Mr. and Mrs. Myron Bolter of Minneapolis.

AN IMPORTANT DATE during the fund-raising efforts of the Boston Association for Retarded Children will be the Apr. 29 meeting at the Sidney Hill Country Club. Plans will be discussed for the nursery school, retardation unit at the Children's Medical Center, and the Saturday recreation program in Newton by Mrs. Tye Wolf.

Membership drive captains planning to attend the meeting include Marvin Axelrod, Mrs. Warren Burroughs, Mrs. Albert Cohen, Mrs. Leon Hammer, Mrs. Arthur Handler, Mrs. Bertram Rodman, Mrs. Roland Stroyman, Mrs. Martin Umana, all of Newton, and Mrs. Norman Mamber, Mrs. Saul Robbins and Mrs. Stanley Schwartz of Brookline.

A FIRST SON was born to Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Pashoian Jr. (Claire Le Vaugie) of Malden at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Brighton on March 30. The child, who will be named Norman E. Pashoian 3d is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. LeVaugie of Brook-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 13 1957

Monteux at Symphony

'Sacre' Presented in Honor Of Stravinsky's 75th Year

By Harold Rogers

On June 17 Igor Stravinsky will celebrate his 75th anniversary, and Pierre Monteux, who is seven years Stravinsky's senior, is playing "Le Sacre du Printemps" at the Symphony Hall concerts this weekend for old time's sake.

Nearly everyone knows by now, of course, that Mr. Monteux conducted the première in Paris 'way back in 1913. But not everyone knows about the first time Mr. Monteux himself heard the score of "Sacre." Stravinsky played it for him on the piano and then asked him what he thought of it.

"It will cause a scandal," Mr. Monteux replied, "but I will conduct it."

He did, and it did.

Bostonians have heard it many times since 1924 (yes, Mr. Monteux was on the podium then, too) and they must now consider it a dear old friend, something of a charming piece that may have its rowdy moments, of course, but no surprises.

There were no surprises yesterday in Mr. Monteux's performance, unless one happened to be watching Danny Kaye's kinetic responses to some of the more insistent portions of the score. Mr. Kaye had his wife and young daughter with him, and the latter was of the opinion that she liked it very much. "But," as her father explained, "she likes all kinds of weird sounds."

* * *

Well, perhaps this performance didn't have the electrical content found in Mr. Monteux's 1951 performance, but that memorable [illegible] also [illegible] the excitement [illegible] to Symphony Hall after an absence of 25 years.

This is not to say that yesterday's performance had no electricity [illegible] The pair of [illegible] when they battered [illegible] the drums, has carried such high voltage. But the traversal was slightly unfocused at times, a condition that will doubtless disappear at the performances tonight and Sunday afternoon. After all, it is an extremely complex score, and it still takes a bit of doing to whip it into shape each time it is programed.

* * *

Mr. Monteux opened with Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture, otherwise known as "The Hebrides," and again the ebb and flow of roaring waters surrounded us, recalling the composer's delight in his visit to the strange cavern.

The remaining item on Mr. Monteux's program was the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony, out of which he wrung a full measure of decibeled emotion while hardly moving a muscle. He gives his musicians careful guidance with his baton, but he lets them do the work.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

They Still Walk Out on "Rite"

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 22d program of the Friday-Saturday series. Pierre Monteux, as guest, conducted "The Hebrides" ("Fingal's Cave") Overture of Mendelssohn, the Symphony No. 5, in E minor, by Tchaikovsky, and "The Rite of Spring," by Stravinsky.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Pierre Monteux returns this week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the climax of his program is a score with which he has been uniquely associated for 44 years: Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring." He conducts it in honor of the approaching 75th birthday, next June 17, of the composer.

This chronicler would not wish to distort a report of yesterday afternoon's concert, or give a minor and extraneous manifestation undue emphasis. But he was really surprised, during the course of Stravinsky's masterpiece, to see that people still walk out upon it. Quite a number did, from the floor and two balconies.

It just goes to show how one's own attitude and taste cannot be a reliable barometer of those of the ultimately final critic: the public. Of course there was a fearful pandemonium and scandal when Monteux conducted the very first performance of the "Rite", in Paris in 1913. But after 39 years had passed the audience at the same Theatre Du Champs Elysees, when Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony in it during the European tour of 1952, applauded wildly. Now, four more years have passed [illegible]

I would have thought that most people, even if they had not taken the work to their hearts, now would regard it with composure. Perhaps it is a matter of generation. Those who have made acquaintance with this giant among rhythmically virtuosic pieces within, say, 20 years, probably consider it much as I do: as one of the supremely great masterworks of the early 20th Century, loud and violent, to be sure, but enormously clever and a landmark in composition. Still, you never can tell!

At any rate, this performance yesterday was a marvel of vigor and color. It may not have been the neatest reading of the score Monteux has given, but its power was overwhelming.

Tchaikovsky's passionate Symphony in E minor was likewise characterized by genuine intensity, an impressive surge of melody and feeling. Perhaps the pace of the main body of the first movement was a trifle slow at the start, but tempo—up to a point—is a matter of individual preference. Monteux brought out some of the inner voices, too, in some places too much, so that the principal tune of the moment was obscured. But, once again, the strength of his reading was notable.

It is a tribute to his own powers that, at the age of 82, Monteux can communicate so effectively from composer to orchestra to audience. More than one person I heard say when the concert was over: "What a really grand old man!"

Next week Charles Munch will return, to present the second part of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion in observance of Easter. The choruses will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth; the soloists Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and [illegible] Harrell and James [illegible]

N. B.: The afternoon [illegible] next week will be given Thursday, to avoid Good Friday. The evening concert will be Saturday, as usual.

258

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704
APR 14 1957

Boston Symphony Here Tuesday

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will give its last Providence concert of the season Tuesday at 8:15 p.m., in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's first clarinetist, will be the soloist. The program:

I.
Johannesburg Festival Overture ..... Walton
Concerto for Clarinet in A Major, K.622 ..... Mozart
Allegro
Adagio
Rondo: Allegro
II.
"Till Eulenspiegel," Tone Poem, Op. 48 ..... Strauss

Cioffi joined the orchestra in 1950 after having been solo clarinet with the Radio City Music Hall, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York Philharmonic Symphonies, the Metropolitan Opera House and the NBC Symphony under the late Toscanini.

From his boyhood in his native Naples he studied and played the clarinet. After graduation from the Naples Conservatory at the age of 17 he was solo clarinet in leading concert bands, symphonies and opera houses throughout Italy.

His father was a clarinetist, his grandfather a pianist, and both Cioffi's sons, now in the United States Army, are musicians. One, a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, is assistant first clarinet in the Army Band in Washington, D. C. The other is first trumpet in the Arkansas Army Band.

In addition to his duties with the Boston Symphony, Cioffi teaches advanced clarinet students at the New England Conservatory of Music, the Boston University College of Music and the Berkshire Music Center.

Gino Cioffi will be soloist with Boston Symphony Orchestra here Tuesday evening.

THE BRAHMS CLUB will hold its annual President's Day this afternoon at the Music Mansion beginning with a reception for the president, Mrs. Arthur C. Guay, at 2:30, followed by a concert at 3:30. The program:

Ballade, Op. 118, No. 3 .... Brahms
Intermezzo, Op. 118, No. 6 .. Brahms
Annette Guay Olivier, pianist
Andante ..... Verdalle
Aeolian Harp ..... Hassellmans
Waltz ..... Durand
Dorothy Place, harpist
"Bois Epais" ..... Lully
"Quand la Flame de l'Amour" .. Bizet
Lucien Olivier, baritone; Annette Guay Olivier, accompanist
"Les Collines d'Anacapri" .. Debussy
"Feuilles Mortes" ..... Debussy
Alborada del Gracioso, from the Suite "Miroir" ..... Ravel
Annette Guay Olivier
Pavanna ..... Traditional
Spanish Dance ..... Tedeschi
"The Lord's Prayer" ..... Malotte
Dorothy Place
"Verborgenheit" ..... Wolf
"Ich Grollet Nicht" .... Schumann
"When I Think Upon the Maidens" Head
Lucien Olivier, Annette Guay Olivier

THE GRACE CHURCH choir of men and boys will present the Lenten cantata, "The Darkest Hour" by Harold Moore, in the church this evening at 7:30. Soloists will be Lawrence Davidson, bass-baritone, and Charles Anthony, lyric tenor, both of the Metropolitan Opera Association, and A. Parker Richardson.

Davidson will have the role of Jesus. Anthony will be the narrator and sing the role of Pilate. Richardson will be Caiaphas, the High Priest. Fred Cronhimer, organist and choirmaster, will direct the cantata and play the organ.

The Grace Church Choristers will sing the 16th century melody "O Lamb of God," an arrangement by Willan of "Hosanna to the Son of David," and "Ride on in Majesty" by George.

COMBINED CHOIRS of the People's Baptist Church, Auburn, and the Cranston Street-Roger Williams Baptist Church, Providence, will sing Gaul's sacred cantata, "The Holy City," in the latter church this evening at 7:30 Earl C. Snow and Grace Calvert Garth are co-directors and the soloists are Mrs. Grath, soprano; Emilie John, contralto; Gilbert Patten, bass; Prof. William Findley, tenor, and Adele Adams, organist.

GEORGE BUTLER, organist of Pembroke College, will give an organ recital in Sayles Hall tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. The recital is the first under the new graduate school program. Butler is enrolled in Music 155-6, a course designed to include at least one recital or concert during the academic year. The program:

I.
Sinfonia, "We Thank Thee, O God" (Cantata 29) ..... Bach
Toccata in F ..... Bach
Largo e Spiccato (Concerta in D Minor) ..... Vivaldi-Bach
Introduction, Passacaglia and Fugue ..... Willan
II.
Fast and Sinister (Symphony in G) ..... Sowerby
Arja ..... Peeters
Two Etudes ..... Jeanne Demessieux
"Repeated Notes"
"Octaves"

BROWN UNIVERSITY'S department of music will present Haydn's "The Seven Last Words" at a Service of Music for Good Friday in Sayles Hall Friday at 8:30 p.m. President Barnaby C. Keeney will read the text.

Also taking part in the service will be the University String Quartet (Arlan Coolidge, Martin Fischer, Charles Dickerson and Otto Van Koppenhagen) and a vocal double quartet under the direction of Daniel Abbott, assistant in the music department.

A PIANO RECITAL will be given by Madeleine Bousquet McKnight of Woonsocket, a member of the University of Rhode Island's first graduating class in the music education program, in Edwards Hall, Kingston, today at 4 p.m.

Her program will be Prelude and Fugue No. 15 in G Major, Bach; Sonata (Pastoral), Op. 28, Beethoven; Ballade in G Minor, Chopin; and Concerto in F, Gershwin, accompanied in the latter by her instructor, Miss Ruth Tripp. During her four years at the university Mrs. McKnight has been accompanist for the University Chorus and has appeared as soloist with the orchestra and band.

ARTISTS AND DATES for the University of Rhode Island's Music Series of four concerts for next season in Edwards Hall, Kingston, are announced, opening with the Juilliard String Quartet Oct. 24. Phyllis Curtin, leading soprano of the New York City Opera Company, will give the second recital on Nov. 12.

The third program will be a joint concert by Carroll Glenn, violinist, and Eugene List, pianist, a husband and wife team well known as solo recitalists. Boris Goldovsky and his New England Opera Company, in Donizetti's "Don Pasquale," will close the series on April 15.

A limit of 650 reserved seats has been set for subscribers. Current subscribers may retain their reservations until May 1, according to Prof. Arnold V. Clair, head of the music department.

JEAN MADEIRA, wife of Francis Madeira, conductor of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra, and leading contralto of the Metropolitan and Vienna opera companies, will be the guest on the "Voice of Firestone" program Monday, April 29, at 8:30 p.m., on ABC-TV, Channel 7.

JOAN D. BALLOU, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Ballou of East Providence, was presented in a degree recital last week in Sprague Memorial Hall, New Haven, by the Yale School of Music where she is a candidate for a Bachelor of Music degree.

Miss Ballou has been studying piano with Donald Currier of the music faculty since entering the school in 1952. She also plays bass clarinet in the University Orchestra and is a member of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra.

MAKING its first tour of the United States, the International Staff Band of the Salvation Army of London, England, will present a concert in the Boston Opera House Wednesday evening, May 1. The band, which has played in many of the world's largest cities in Europe and Canada, numbers 35 pieces and is under the direction of Brigadier Bernard Adams.

THE MACDOWELL Club will hold its annual meeting and election of officers tomorrow evening at 8 at the home of Mrs. Arthur Youngberg, 3 Viking Rd., Cranston. Mrs. Frank Ellis and Miss Lydia Ellis will be co-hostesses.

OFFICERS will be elected at the meeting of the Chopin Student Musicians Saturday at 7:30 p.m., in the Music Mansion. Four new members from the junior club will give a musical program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
APR 14 1957

KOKOMO, IND.
TRIBUNE
APR 17 1957

Boost for Co

One of the distingu of our culture is that things through organiz nected with governme money for research
diseases, for example;
public endeavor are such organizations; most charity and welfare groups fall into this category.

Increasingly, also, cultural activities are coming to be sponsored and supported by groups of citizens organized for the purpose. This arises from a growing realization that art and music and literature require nurture and proper soil for their best growth.

An interesting example of such an undertaking is the International lief that t

mate creat

In the Mozart, th often spon wealthy pa
tom has be Internation of substitu
limited means in many nations may become, in effect, patrons of whatever new Beethovens and Mozarts may appear on the scene.

avoid giving it
Patterson also Pro Musica Chorus
ducts in Beet phony, which conduct at the 76th season, Apr. 26, 27.

MACK HARRELL
soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra
formances of Bach's "St.
Matthew,"
Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704
APR 14 1957

Boston Symphony Here Tuesday

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will give its last Providence concert of the season Tuesday at 8:15 p.m., in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's first clarinetist, will be the soloist. The program:

I.

Johannesburg Festival Overture ..... Walton

Concerto for Clarinet in A Major, K.622 ..... Mozart
Allegro
Adagio
Rondo: Allegro

II.

Till Eulenspiegel, Tone Poem, Op. 40 ..... Strauss

Cioffi joined the orchestra in 1950 after having been solo clarinet with the Radio City Music Hall, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York Philharmonic Symphonies, the Metropolitan Opera House and the NBC Symphony under the late Toscanini.

From his boyhood in his native Naples he studied and played the clarinet. After graduation from the Naples Conservatory at the age of 17 he was solo clarinet in leading concert bands, symphonies and opera houses throughout Italy.

His father was a clarinetist, his grandfather a pianist, and both Cioffi's sons, now in the United States Army, are musicians. One, a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, is assistant first clarinet in the Army Band in Washington, D. C. The other is first trumpet in the Arkansas Army Band.

In addition to his duties with the Boston Symphony Cioffi teaches advanced clarinet students at the New England Conservatory of Music, the Boston University College of Music and the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 874,544
APR 14 1957

TONITE THRU TUES.
BILL HALEY
DON'T KNOCK THE ROCK
ALAN DALE · ALAN FREED
ALSO Donnel
OPP. QUONSET NAVAL STATION
DRIVE-IN
HILL-TO
TONITE TH
WAYNE! — in his biggest!
M-G-M presents in METROC
JOHN WAYNE • DAN DALEY •
The WINGS of E
CO-FEA
THE FIRST INS
SLANDER MA
M-G-M presents VAN
STEVE COCHRAN
WED.! Robert Ryan, Alic
Marla English "
NOW!
A NEW experience in screen entertainment!
Come Kelly IN Invitation to the Dance
PLUS
"REMBRANDT A SELF-PORTRAIT"
—AT—
2 45—5 10
7:30—9:40
Hi Fi BY FABRA
Professional Hi-Fi Console AM-FM 14 Watt Amp 4 Speed Diamond Stylus Magnetic 20-20,000 C.P.S.
$249.95 Plus Tax
Mahogany
Or You Can Custom Build Your Own With the Same Professional Units. AM-FM 14 Watt Amplifier.
$79.95 Plus Tax
FABRA RESEARCH LTD., 217 Conant St., Pawtucket, R. I.
(Conrad Mill) Hours 7-10 P.M. Monday thru Friday

their initial screen venture, preceding "Stay Away, Joe." The latter was to have been their first film when they signed with Metro last August. However, in November a change of plans was announced in which Fever and Martin would first present "Stay Away, Joe" on Broadway as a musical comedy. The play and the film are to be adapted from the novel of the same title by Dan Cushman.

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster are reported to be competing to purchase screen right to Walter Lord's newly published book, "Day of Infamy."

The author's reconstruction of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor originally had attracted the interest of Metro. The studio took an option on the screen rights last April, when Lord was writing the book. It then went under the title "East Wind, Rain," after the code signal used by the Japanese.

KOKOMO, IND.
TRIBUNE
APR 17 1957

"St. Matthew" Passion at Symphony

Boost for Composers

One of the distinguishings marks of our culture is that we do many things through organizations not connected with government. We collect money for research on various diseases, for example; many kinds of public endeavor are stimulated by such organizations; most charity and welfare groups fall into this category.

Increasingly, also, cultural activities are coming to be sponsored and supported by groups of citizens organized for the purpose. This arises from a growing realization that art and music and literature require nurture and proper soil for their best growth.

An interesting example of such an undertaking is the International Music Fund created by the late Serge Koussevitzky, who achieved his greatest fame as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This group seeks to encourage young composers by helping them in their studies and by arranging for performance of their works. The program springs out of Koussevitzky's belief that the composer is the "ultimate creator" in the field of music.

In the days of Beethoven and Mozart, this "ultimate creator" was often sponsored and supported by wealthy patrons. In our time, the custom has been largely abandoned. The International Music Fund is a sort of substitute, by which persons of limited means in many nations may become, in effect, patrons of whatever new Beethovens and Mozarts may appear on the scene.

Second Part of "St. Matthew Passion" At the Week's Boston Symphony Concerts

Dr. Charles Munch, according to his annual custom of presenting one of the Bach Passions for Holy Week, will conduct the second part of the Passion According to St. Matthew.

Soloists will include Adele Addison as the maid, Pilate's wife and soprano soloist; Florence Kopleff as contralto soloist; John McCollum as Evangelist and tenor soloist; Mack Harrell as Jesus and baritone soloist; James Joyce, bass, as a priest, Peter, Judas and Pilate. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist. Featured instrumentalists will be Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba; Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

The concerts this we[illegible] be Thursday afternoon a[illegible]day evening. The aftern[illegible]cert has been advanced to [illegible] avoid giving it [illegible]

Patterson also [illegible] the Pro Musica Chorus [illegible] he conducts in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which Charles Munch will conduct at the final concerts of the 76th season, Apr. 26, 27.

MACK HARRELL [illegible] be baritone soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] formances of the second [illegible] Bach's "St. Matthew," [illegible] on Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704
APR 14 1957

Boston Symphony Here Tuesday

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will give its last Providence concert of the season Tuesday at 8:15 p.m., in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Gino Cioffi, the orchestra's first clarinetist, will be the soloist. The program:

I.
Johannesburg Festival Overture ..... Walton
Concerto for Clarinet in A Major, K. 622 ..... Mozart
Allegro
Adagio
Rondo: Allegro

II.
"Till Eulenspiegel," Tone Poem, Op. 40 ..... Strauss

Cioffi joined the orchestra in 1950 after having been solo clarinet with the Radio City Music Hall, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York Philharmonic Symphonies, the Metropolitan Opera House and the NBC Symphony under the late Toscanini.

From his boyhood in his native Naples he studied and played the clarinet. After graduation from the Naples Conservatory at the age of 17 he was solo clarinet in leading concert bands, symphonies and opera houses throughout Italy.

His father was a clarinetist, his grandfather a pianist, and both Cioffi's sons, now in the United States Army, are musicians. One, a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, is assistant first clarinet in the Army Band in Washington, D. C. The other is first trumpet in the Arkansas Army Band.

In addition to his duties with the Boston Symphony Cioffi teaches advanced clarinet students at the New England Conservatory of Music, the Boston University College of Music and the Berkshire Music Center.

HI FI BY FABRA
Professional Hi-Fi Console AM-FM 14 Watt Amp 4 Speed Diamond Stylus Magnetic 20-20,000 C.P.S.
$249.95 Plus Tax
Mahogany
Or You Can Custom Build Your Own With the Same Professional Units. AM-FM 14 Watt Amplifier.
$79.95 Plus Tax
FABRA RESEARCH LTD., 217 Conant St., Pawtucket, R. I.
(Conrad Mill) Hours 7-10 P.M. Monday thru Friday

Quonset
OPP. QUONSET NAVAL STA.
DRIVE-IN
TONITE THRU TUES.
BILL HALEY
DON'T KNOCK THE ROCK
ALSO
ALAN DALE · ALAN FREED

NOW!
Come Kelly in Invitation to the Dance
A NEW experience in screen entertainment!
PLUS
"REMBRANDT A SELF-PORTRAIT"

HILL-TO
TONITE TH

WAYNE! —in his biggest!
JOHN WAYNE • DAN DAILEY •
The WINGS of E
CO-FEA
THE FIRST TIME
SLANDER MA
STEVE COCHRAN
WED.! Robert Ryan, Alc
Marla English

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 874,544
APR 14 1957

their initial screen venture, preceding "Stay Away, Joe." The latter was to have been their first film when they signed with Metro last August. However, in November a change of plans was announced in which Feuer and Martin would first present "Stay Away, Joe" on Broadway as a musical comedy. The play and the film are to be adapted from the novel of the same title by Dan Cushman.

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster are reported to be competing to purchase screen right to Walter Lord's newly published book, "Day of Infamy."

The author's reconstruction of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor originally had attracted the interest of Metro. The studio took an option on the screen rights last April, when Lord was writing the book. It then went under the title "East Wind, Rain," after the code signal used by the Japanese.

"St. Matthew" Passion at Symphony

...sers

...marks of our culture is that we do many things through organizations not connected with government. We collect money for research on various diseases, for example; many kinds of public endeavor are stimulated by such organizations; most charity and welfare groups fall into this category.

Increasingly, also, cultural activities are coming to be sponsored and supported by groups of citizens organized for the purpose. This arises from a growing realization that art and music and literature require nurture and proper soil for their best growth.

An interesting example of such an undertaking is the International Music Fund created by the late Serge Koussevitzky, who achieved his greatest fame as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This group seeks to encourage young composers by helping them in their studies and by arranging for performance of their works. The program springs out of Koussevitzky's belief that the composer is the "ultimate creator" in the field of music.

In the days of Beethoven and Mozart, this "ultimate creator" was often sponsored and supported by wealthy patrons. In our time, the custom has been largely abandoned. The International Music Fund is a sort of substitute, by which persons of limited means in many nations may become, in effect, patrons of whatever new Beethovens and Mozarts may appear on the scene.

Second Part of "St. Matthew Passion"
At the Week's Boston Symphony Concerts

Dr. Charles Munch, according to his annual custom of preserving one of the Bach Passions for Holy Week, will conduct the second part of the Passion According to St. Matthew.

Soloists will include Adele Addison as the maid, Pilate's wife and soprano soloist; Florence Kopleff as contralto soloist; John McCollum as Evangelist and tenor soloist; Mack Harrell as Jesus and baritone soloist; James Joyce, bass, as a priest, Peter, Judas and Pilate. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist. Featured instrumentalists will be Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba; Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

The concerts this week will be Thursday afternoon and Friday evening. The afternoon concert has been advanced to [illegible] avoid giving it the [illegible]

Patterson also is [illegible] the Pro Musica Chorus [illegible] he conducts in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which Dr. Munch will conduct at the regular concerts of the 76th season, Apr. 26, 27.

MACK HARRELL will be baritone soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra performances of the second part of Bach's "St. Matthew," on Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

14 1957

Double-Time Blessing

Two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are receiving felicitations on the arrival of "new blessings — daughters — in families. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Walt (Geraldine Bolter) of Virginia have named their girl, born March 22 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital, "Nancy." Her grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Walt of Virginia, Minn., and Mr. and Mrs. Myron Bolter of Minneapolis, and her father is the principal bassoonist in the Boston Symphony.

Selma Elise Mazzeo was born to Mr. and Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo (Claude Clare Roys) of Boston, March 27, at Richardson House. Her father is bass clarinetist. Mr. and Mrs. Francesco Mazzeo of Shrewsbury and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Roys of Seattle, Wash., share grandparent honors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

APR 15 1957

WCRB Inaugurates New Transmitter

Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday took part in ceremonies inaugurating the new 5000-watt transmitter of radio station WCRB in Waltham.

Munch congratulated the station for "bringing good music into the home and creating a deeper interest in our art."

The conductor switched on the new transmitter which is expected to extend the station's listening audience to four times its previous size.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 13,684

APR 15 1957

WCRB Starts 5000-Watt Transmitter

Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday participated in ceremonies inaugurating the new 5000-watt transmitter of Radio Station WCRB and congratulated the nine-year-old station on its work in "bringing good music into the home and creating a deeper interest in our art."

The conductor switched on the new transmitter expected to extend the station's area to four times as many listeners especially north, south, and west of Boston. "I am proud," he said, "to signal the increase in power that will multiply four times the number of people who may enjoy the excellent programs of your fine music station."

Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops, pianist Jesu Maria Sanroma, and other dignitaries of the concert music world congratulated the station on the power increase in recorded interviews.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 15 1957

New Transmitter Begins Operation At Station WCRB

Radio station WCRB of Waltham, Mass., has put its new 5,000-watt transmitter into service that is expected to extend the station's area to four times as many listeners north, south, and west of Boston.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, switched on the new transmitter and congratulated the nine-year-old station on its work in "bringing good music into the home and creating a deeper interest in our art."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

APR 16 1957

Rob't Shaw to Conduct Symphony Next Season

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited three guests to share conducting duties for the Orchestra's 77th season, 1957-58.

Pierre Monteux, whose long association with the Boston Symphony began when he was its regular conductor between 1919 and 1924, will direct the Orchestra for three weeks (beginning January 3 and 4), and a week's tour to New York.

Two American conductors will appear for the first time with the orchestra in Boston — Robert Shaw on January 24, 25, 28, and Thomas Schippers on February 21, 22, 23 and February 25 in Providence.

Robert Shaw, associate conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, was born in California.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 18,052

APR 15 1957

Symphony Announces Guest Conductors

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited three guests to share conducting duties for the orchestra's 77th season, 1957-58.

Pierre Monteux, whose long association with the Boston Symphony began when he was its regular conductor between 1919 and 1924, and who has been a frequent guest conductor in recent years, will direct the orchestra for three weeks, including two pairs of Friday and Saturday concerts, a Tuesday and a Sunday concert in Symphony Hall, and a week's tour to New York.

Two American conductors will appear for the first time with the orchestra in Boston — Robert Shaw on January 24, 25, 28 and Thomas Schippers on February 21, 2, 23 and February 25 in Providence, Rhode Island.

Robert Shaw, who is the associate conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, was born in California. He attended Pomona College where he directed his college glee club, and following his graduation continued his choral activities, climaxing in the formation of the Collegiate Chorale which performed many of the great choral works with Arturo Toscanni and the N. B. C. Symphony.

Thomas Schippers appeared with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York for the first time in March, 1955, and has also conducted the orchestras of San Francisco, Montreal and Rochester, in addition to the City Center Opera and performances with the Metropolitan Opera, including "Tales of Hoffmann" and "Don Pasquale." He was conductor of several operas by Gian Carlo Menotti, including "The Consul" in New York and on tour in the United States and Europe, and most recently "The Saint of Bleecker Street."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 15 1957

WCRB Inaugurates New Transmitter

Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday took part in ceremonies inaugurating the new 5000-watt transmitter of radio station WCRB in Waltham.

Munch congratulated the station for "bringing good music into the home and creating a deeper interest in our art."

The conductor switched on the new transmitter which is expected to extend the station's listening audience to four times its previous size.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 16 1957

Mack Harrell will be the baritone soloist in Handel's Passion According to St. Matthew, to be presented by the Boston Symphony Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening under Charles Munch's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

APR 17 1957

Music in Review

Hub Orchestra Gives Fifth Concert Here

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, played the fifth and final concert of the season last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. The concert attracted a capacity audience which was well rewarded by an interesting program played with the consummate artistry which marks the work of this group.

Gino Cioffi, clarinetist, was the soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A major, K.622. Mr. Cioffi is the first clarinetist of the orchestra. The program also included Richard Strauss' Tone Poem "Ein Heldenleben," Op. 40 and the first performance here of William Walton's Johannesburg Festival Overture, a work written last spring and first played last September by the Symphony Orchestra of the South African Broadcasting Company, in celebration of the 70th anniversary of the founding of Johannesburg.

The richness of tone color and the depth and subtlety of the interpretation which Charles Munch brought to the Strauss music made the concert a memorable one. This may or may not be one's favorite Strauss score. In any case, there was nothing which Strauss put into it which Dr. Munch and his expert musicians did not bring out. Program notes may make suggestions to lead one to a clearer understanding of the meaning of the composer. It takes such an interpretation as we heard last evening to make program notes superfluous. There was no question of the points in the music at which human frailty, conflict, happiness and tragedy were disclosed. Richard Burgin's solo violin themes, together with the eloquent orchestral background, were matchless in their descriptive power. The most dramatic moments came with the tense silence between the movements of the symphonic poem. Percussion, brass and reeds took turns in providing contrasts for the narration and the entire work was carried out to a superb finale.

Gino Cioffi was well received in his artistic performance of the Mozart Clarinet Concerto. His tone quality was rich and smooth. His rapid passage work was expertly delivered and his breath control was amazing. The high point of this work came in the middle movement when the grateful melodic line of the music was played to perfection by the soloist with a devoted accompaniment by the orchestra.

The Walton work was a good program opener. It was a contrived piece, put together in the manner of the Shostakovich writing of 15 years ago or the Prokofieff style of a few years earlier. It was neatly hung together with the strong, confident rhythm of modern British writing and thanks to the excellent percussion section. It arrived at a brilliant but not surprising climax. We hope that Johannesburg liked the Overture and that the anniversary celebration lent an air of originality to the music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,717

APR 17 1957

Music In Review

Hub Symphony, Under Munch, Reaches Musical Heights

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was greeted with salvos of applause last night in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, and Charles Munch received an ovation as he entered to conduct the first work. It was as though he had been away for a long time. He demonstrated what an Olympian orchestra this can be under his directing.

The orchestra performed here last month under a guest conductor and it seemed an entirely different aggregation. Last night they reached the heights of musical grandeur under Dr. Munch.

The opening number, Walton's "Johannesburg Festival Overture," was a carnival of joy in its crisp, racing, staccato style. The brasses were as vociferous as a circus band even when muted. The whole work had a happy, [illegible] sometimes plunging rhythm, that seemed to pace a holiday crowd. When it was ended, the applause was deafening, and Dr. Munch was recalled twice, an unusual thing for a first number. It seemed to express a gladness for his return after last month's absence.

Gino Cioffi, principal clarinetist, was featured soloist in the graceful and gay "Concerto for Clarinet in A Major" by Mozart. The fine intonation, the exactly measured tempos and the delicate articulations of Mr. Cioffi gave his performance a virtuoso quality. The adagio second movement was played in a provocative, dreamy style, an eloquent serenade in a moon-drenched garden, it seemed. A long, undulating cadenza that swelled and diminished, marked by the deft touch of his racing fingers on this responsive instrument, was a serenade in itself. The final movement, rondo allegro, was a recapitulation of the melodies and harmonies that preceded, and he gathered them into his basket of charm and showered the sparkling, shimmering tones in a burst of musical fire.

The after-intermission work was the "Ein Heldenleben" tone poem by Strauss, an example of pure music, blended and matched in tonal color from the gray through the pastels to the bravura and flamboyant. A full-throated brass chorus sang throughout the work with matchless beauty and expression, and with incomparable richness in the voices of the tuba and euphonium.

A solo violin interlude was played with impeccable grace by Richard Burgin. This preceded a woodwind choir of superb eloquence through which a single horn articulated with mellowness. Then two woodwinds talked and answered over a backdrop of a sustained, pulsating bass on the strings.

Suddenly came a riot of bravura tones, weird and barbaric and chilling, to dissolve into a glory of blended sound that was harmonic magnificance.

At the close, the audience would not let Dr. Munch go; it was the final concert of this season's series. The prolonged applause recalled him six times and the listeners bade him a reluctant farewell with their slowly diminishing handclapping.

C. H. L.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

APR 18 1957

Music in Review

Pierre Monteux Conducts BSO

By ALLAN SLY

The BSO's twenty-second program last Saturday, with Pierre Monteux conducting, turned out to be a tremendous experience. It began modestly enough with Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, the orchestra communing with itself in chamber-music fashion, Mr. Monteux presiding with a minimum of intrusion, so that the piece was well-mannered, no larger than life-size, yet sounding exactly right.

In the Tchaikovsky Fifth, which followed, the Romantic virus was at work all right. But so well did conductor and orchestra agree with each other by this time, that as the great symphony unfolded we seemed to be sharing Mr. Monteux's insight—long in experience, deep in reflection, wide in compassion and marvelously without strain — an unforgettable performance.

By having had the second violins migrate into the usual viola territory, and vice versa, Mr Monteux achieved some sonorities that were pleasingly new to us and perhaps an improvement, especially when the whole width of the Symphony Hall stage became a single eloquent unity, whether in a soaring theme or in a shimmering curtain of sound, or in incisive rhythmic figures. By intermission time all these elements of a uniquely successful concert were well established.

We returned to hear what many had come for in the first place — the Stravinsky Sacre du Printemps and now Mr. Monteux laid aside his quiet, restrained demeanor and with score and lively baton movement carried the great orchestra, and the audience, through as illuminating performance as one is likely ever to hear. The precision and color betokened the superlative skill and absorbed devotion of the orchestra, but these things might have been achieved under the leadership of a young man; the quality that was present last Saturday, and which I feel only Mr. Monteux could have brought out, was an extraordinary subjectivity, a hypnotic, dreamlike reality, compared with which our mundane existence seems to be a hollow sham. The historic and sociological reflections which we had brought along to the concert fell away as irrelevant. We left the hall humbled and somewhat inarticulate, as always in the presence of great art, carrying the indelible mark of another great experience in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux must return here often; not every conductor can prove to an audience that it has grown up to the stature of a Sacre, but that this was proved last Saturday by its rapt attention no one can doubt. Mr. Monteux and the BSO will repeat this exact program at Tanglewood July 20.

Today (Thursday) and Saturday Mr. Munch will conduct Part II of Bach's St. Matthew Passion with solists and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

APR 18 1957

Passion by Bach at Symphony

Dr. Charles Munch, in accordance with his annual custom of presenting one of the Bach Passions for Holy Week, will conduct the second part of the Passion According to St. Matthew this afternoon and Saturday night.

Soloists will include Adele Addison as the Maid, Pilate's Wife and soprano soloist; Florence Kopleff, contralto soloist; John McCollum, Evangelist and tenor soloist; Mack Harrell, Jesus and baritone soloist; James Joyce, bass, as a Priest, Peter, Judas and Pilate.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist: Featured instrumentalists will be Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba; Daniel Pinkhan, harpsichord, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

Mr. Patterson will change his role to that of choral conductor for concerts of the final week (April 26-27) when his Chorus Pro Musica will be heard with the orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

APR 18 1957

Music for Holy Week at the Symphony

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during Holy Week will take place this afternoon and Saturday evening, April 20, under the direction of Charles Munch. (No Performance Good Friday).

Dr. Munch, according to his annual custom of presenting one of the Bach Passions for Holy Week, will conduct the second part of the Passion According to St. Matthew. Soloists will include Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone, and James Joyce, bass. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist. Featured instrumentalists will be Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba; Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

Mr. Patterson will change his role to that of choral conductor for the concerts of the final week (April 26-27) when his Chorus Pro Musica will be heard with the orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch in Beethoven's 9th Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

APR 19 1957

My Boston

By Alan Frazer

NIFTY LINE in one of the "New Girl In Town" lyrics: "The sunshine girl has raindrops in her eyes" . . . From another . . . "Flings is wonderful things, but they gotta be flung when you're young."

VARIETY'S New Haven reviewers called this show's "Red Light Ballet" either "artistic or blue according to individual interpretation," blue in this case, meaning off-color, risque.

THE producers must have decided it wasn't artistic but blue, because it was pulled out before the Boston opening—but after the Boston charity preview.

IT will be replaced by another—artistic, not blue. The producers deserve congratulations. They acted voluntarily.

AMONG the highlights of DANNY KAYE'S visit, ending tomorrow night, was his reference to DR. CHARLES MUNCH, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as "Chuck Munch."

WALTER SLEZAK has a dachshund named Siegfried von Knodle. The star, who is QUEEN VICTORIA'S uncle in "The "First Gentleman," owns a letter written by the real Victoria to his father, Leo, congratulating him as a great operatic tenor.

CALYPSO thrush PAT MATHEWS of the Hotel Bostonian's Jewel Room will sing before the Adclub next Tuesday, telling the lunchers how spaghetti supplanted the Boston baked beans. (It it did).

MAILBAG: "Dear Alan: Just to say thanks for your courtesy and kindness during my visit to Boston. It was a memorable trip. Sincerely, EDDIE (Fisher)."

From SPENCER SAWYER, of the Sheraton Plaza: "JACK DEMPSEY was in town and wouldn't leave until he shook the hand of two 'oldtimers,' GENEVIEVE O'NEIL of functions and yours truly." Reminds me of the old saying: "Shake the hand that shook the hand of JOHN L. SULLIVAN."

LOU CLINE, Colonial Theater mgr., takes exception to a statement by another columnist who said FANNY BRICE created Baby Snooks.

HER creator, avers Lou, was RAE DOOLEY, later MRS. EDDIE DOWLING. Rae was Baby Snooks in the pre-World War I Ziegfield Follies, W. C. FIELDS was her father and FANNY BRICE her mother.

But after Fanny played Baby Snooks on the radio, Eddie Dowling told Lou that Rae could never do it again. People would say she stole it from Fanny!

I AGREE with sportswriter JOHN GILLOOLY that FRANK FONTAINE, of Winchester, hit a grand slam on that "Salute to Baseball" on TV.

DOM PAPPALEO, ex-football star and wrestler, has changed the name of the Neponset showboat (the old ferryboat) to Pirate's Cove. Its murals are by TOMMY KING, artist, musician, singer, —and chef!

JIMMY JOYCE, who is soloing sacred music with the Boston Symphony this week, will headline at Blinstrub's in June. Jimmy is a new habitant of Natick.

AL DONAHUE'S summer chore will be at the classy Westchester (NY) Country Club.

MIKE TODD, before quitting Boston, wrote as follows to four feminine drama critics, one radio personality and MRS. GEORGE HOLLAND:

"THIS is a form note inasmuch as it is going to six of you girls who I feel practically started me in show business.

"THE POSIES are because that I regret that I became such a tycoon-type fellow that I couldn't sit and visit like we used to.

"AND if any of you are jealous or blame me and think that I was rushing back to Elizabeth who is just an old friend, you are damn right. Love. MIKE TODD.

"P.S. I WILL come back after Europe with Liz and maybe you will be able to figure out why I left in such a hurry."

DOLPH MARTIN reports that State Representative JAMES R. LAWTON of Brockton will present awards on the Youth On Parade show over WBMS tomorrow forenoon. He'll also speak on what it means to be an alumnus of Y. O. P.

SOLVING what's a mystery to many, the Statler states on table cards that haddock weighing less than 2½ pounds is called scrod. It is sometimes spelled schrod. But when spelled schroode, it means young cod, prepared in strips cut across the grain for broiling.

THE Statler adds:

"Here in the City of Boston,
Home of the Bean and the Cod,
There's constant and violent argument
Anent the nature of Scrod (Schrod, Schroode).

"All agree it's a Fish,
Without doubt a tasty Dish.
But adherents of the Haddock School
Consider a Cod Man a Fin-Flam Fool!"

THE Copley Theater has been leased by RICHARD DAVIS, owner of the Fine Arts Theater in New York. It will screen art and foreign films.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 19 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played yesterday afternoon and will repeat tomorrow night, the 23d program of the "regular" series. Charles Munch, music director, presented the opening chorus and most of Part 2 of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion. The choruses were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrell, basses. Featured instrumentalists were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, to the extent of the opening chorus and most of part two, forms the program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this week immediately before Easter. The afternoon concert, by custom, was given on Thursday, to avoid Good Friday. The evening performance will be Saturday, as usual.

In general, yesterday's concert was glorious music-making of a devotional order. Only the smallest and most unimportant flaws could be found in the instrumental playing, the choral and solo singing. The substance of a great masterpiece was superbly communicated, a masterpiece huge and very special. But no matter how special, some of the audience applauded as usual, though it was obvious that no applause was desired. Mr. Munch left the stand, at intermission, without turning to the public. He did likewise when the Passion had been finished; the soloists followed him, and none returned.

Yet the handclapping went on. I wonder if casual Bostonian informality cannot sometimes be too casual and too informal. What possesses people to burst out with the noise of slapping palms when good taste indicates otherwise? They applauded the Passion yesterday, "Parsifal" last Sunday; they applaud an opera aria and break up continuity of performance, they applaud before a curtain is down and so obliterate the last few measures. They applaud, applaud, applaud! Why? Thoughtlessness? Exhibitionism? Both? Quite likely!

The Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, always well-prepared, seem this year to excel the standards of the past, both in technical ability and a large, firm, warm tone. Sometimes these young voices are too light, but such was not the case yesterday. There was weight as well as flexibility, enough to bring out in all its horrible, frightening intensity that cry of the mob upon the word "Barrabas!" and enough to make quite plain Bach's moving contrapuntal parts.

The soloists were exceptionally well chosen. Miss Addison as always, sang with a gorgeous quality of tone, with great polish and flawless style. Miss Kopleff sang in a musicianly fashion, but unaccountably you could not hear her above the orchestra much of the time. The delivery of the Evangelist's narrative, by John McCollum, testified to the enormous strides in artistry this young tenor has made. Some of the uppermost notes made a little strain upon his (was he somewhat out of voice?) but his grasp of subtle rhythm and his [illegible] were superlative. Mack Harrell's work was sonorous and noble, for, as we have known these many years, he is a true musician among singers. Mr. Joyce managed his part creditably.

Mr. Pinkham's crisp but plastic accompaniment of recitatives, the graceful gamba playing by Alfred Zighera, and Mr. Patterson's management of the organ (a little more solid and more churchly-sounding than the instrument is ordinarily made to sound) all contributed importantly to the sum total.

Mr. Munch, invariably different in Bach from the Munch we know in French music and the standard repertory, conducted in what can be described only as a dedicated fashion. You might disagree with his tempi (I did not happen to) but they were never dragged or stretched, nor were they perfunctory.

Next week the season will end with first American performance of Henry Barroud's Te Deum in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, will participate, and the soloists will be Mariquita Moll, Marth Lipton, and Messrs. McCollum and Harrell.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 19 1957

Bach's St. Matthew Passion

Boston Symphony Assisted By Harvard-Radcliffe Group

By Harold Rogers

In the eight years that Charles Munch has been conductor of the Boston Symphony he has established a tradition of his own — that of alternately presenting the Bach Passions, according to St. Matthew or to St. John, during the Easter season. This spring the turn has fallen to St. Matthew, and Dr. Munch, as usual, has prepared a consecrated performance.

There are times when one may disagree with Dr. Munch's performances of Beethoven, or take sharp issue with his Wagner, but Bach is one German composer whom he conducts with a reverence that commands approval. His performances of the Passion music, both yesterday and in years past, have been virtually flawless. Bach was careful not to lose an ounce of the drama of Jesus' trial and crucifixion, and Dr. Munch always recaptures the full essence.

In this performance, to be repeated in Symphony Hall tomorrow night, Dr. Munch again had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, trained to a refined sensitivity by their conductor, [illegible] Wallace Woodworth. Dr. Munch always does something wonderful with chorales; they are barely whispered and take to, he sit like eiderdown—as, for instance, "When I too am departing."

John McCollum again gave eloquent utterance to the tenor part of the Evangelist, a role somewhat thankless in that it requires a great deal of recitative singing with no arias to display the voice in its more beautiful aspects. Though it may sound heretical to say so, at least one listener found the Evangelist's music more than a trifle tedious.

But in the many other arias are abundant compensations, as in that for the bass: "Let my heart be pure as Thine." Here Mack Harrell sang with fervor and admirable musicianship. His handling of Jesus' outcry, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani!" was powerfully and poignantly presented.

Adele Addison, whose sweet and radiant soprano was heard not half enough, brought a celestial quality to the tender aria, "From love unbounded." Florence Kopleff again proved to be an artist of many winning qualities, her contralto firmly pitched and clearly focused. Several of the minor bass parts were carried by James Joyce, whose singing, though beautiful in tone, did not always leave us with the conviction [illegible] secure in pitch.

Superb choral singing was heard in the [illegible] chorus, "Come, ye Daughters, share my anguish," and again in the moving close, "In tears of grief here sit we weeping." Munch jumped from the [illegible] chorus to Part II, owing to the work's inordinate length, and even so, the concert ran a half hour longer than usual.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 19 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 23d program of the 76th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and James Joyce and Mack Harrell, bass. Assisting were the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The performance was given over to Bach's Passion According to St. Matthew, Part II.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Charles Munch's happy idea of alternating Bach "St. John" and "St. Matthew" Passions at this time of year brought forward the last named of the two this year and it all resulted in an atmosphere of hush verging on the devotional, as indeed it should.

But, due to the odd way in which the work was presented, in terms of cuts and so on, it seemed in many respects to be an entirely different work than usual with an entirely different effect. Mr. Munch began with the opening chorus of the work, then skipped to Part II, which he did with but few important cuts thereafter, though one of those cuts seemed almost incomprehensible to me, for the contralto aria with the whispered "Wohin?" of the chorus is certainly one of the most magical moments in the whole score.

On the other hand he included two bass arias hardly ever done outside a full performance of the work, one of them particularly interesting for the marvelous (and very difficult) obbligato of the viola da gamba. This was played by Mr. Zighera most effectively once he got into it, and it was sung with grave beauty by Mack Harrell, whose vocal quality throughout was fine and expressive.

GIGANTIC WORK

To be sure, were Sebastian Bach himself to make the cuts necessary for a contemporary audience, compressing this gigantic work into two hours, somebody would doubtless complain about them. So this isn't to be construed as a complaint: it is simply that this particular version of the work, though it maintained the continuity of the narrative line, seemed considerably less effective in the omission of a number of the greatest arias, such as "Ich will bei meine Jesu wachen."

This was a fine though perhaps not an outstanding performance of the work. The chorus, as always, disclosed the superb training given it by G. Wallace Woodworth, producing a wide variety of tonal effects from the lightest but well focused tone to an outburst of fortissimo of great impact. The care with which Mr. Woodworth prepares his chorus for an affair like this turns up with particular effect in the accuracy of his sopranos taking their high notes at less than half voice; it is quite an achievement in any student choral group.

All of the principals are well known and much admired at these concerts. John McCollum, whose role is protracted and very difficult, seemed to have little difficulty at first with his top notes but presently settled down and sang the recitative of the Evangelist most graphically. Adele Addison had little to do in this version of the work, but displayed, as always, the charming quality of her voice and her high vocal attainment as well. Florence Kopleff, with the major share of the solo singing, also sang with much distinction, doing the marvelous "Ebarme dich" with great effect to the violin solo obligato of Richard Burgin. James Joyce took the roles of Pilate and others in the drama and did them very well indeed, while the orchestra, as always, played the instrumental score beautifully.

The last concert of the season next week offers Barraud's "Te Deum," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with soloists and chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,800

APR 19 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played yesterday afternoon and will repeat tomorrow night, the 23d program of the "regular" series. Charles Munch, music director, presented the opening chorus and most of Part 2 of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion. The choruses were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and James Joyce and Mack Harrell, basses. Featured instrumentalists were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba, and Alfred Nash Patterson, organ.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, to the extent of the opening chorus and most of part two, forms the program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this week immediately before Easter. The afternoon concert, by custom, was given on Thursday, to avoid Good Friday. The evening performance will be Saturday, as usual.

In general, yesterday's concert was glorious music-making of a devotional order. Only the smallest and most unimportant flaws could be found in the instrumental playing, the choral and solo singing. The substance of a great masterpiece was superbly communicated, a masterpiece huge and very special. But no matter how special, some of the audience applauded as usual, though it was obvious that no applause was desired. Mr. Munch left the stand, at intermission, without turning to the public. He did likewise when the Passion had been finished; the soloists followed him, and none returned.

Yet the handclapping went on. I wonder if casual Bostonian informality cannot sometimes be too casual and too informal. What possesses people to burst out with the noise of slapping palms when good taste indicates otherwise? They applauded the Passion yesterday, "Parsifal" last Sunday; they applaud an opera aria and break up continuity of performance, they applaud before a curtain is down and so obliterate the last few measures. They applaud, applaud, applaud! Why? Thoughtlessness? Exhibitionism? Both? Quite likely!

The Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, always well-prepared, seem this year to excel the standards of the past, both in technical ability and a large, firm, warm tone. Sometimes these young voices are too light, but such was not the case yesterday. There was weight as well as flexibility, enough to bring out in all its horrible, frightening intensity that cry of the mob upon the word "Barrabas!" and enough to make quite plain Bach's moving contrapuntal parts.

The soloists were exceptionally well chosen. Miss Addison as always, sang with a gorgeous quality of tone, with great polish and flawless style. Miss Kopleff sang in a musicianly fashion, but unaccountably you could not hear her above the orchestra much of the time. The delivery of the Evangelist's narrative, by John McCollum, testified to the enormous strides in artistry this young tenor has made. Some of the uppermost notes made a little strain upon his (was he somewhat out of voice?) but his grasp of subtle rhythm and his [illegible] were superlative. Mack Harrell's work was sonorous and noble, for, as we have known these many years, he is a true musician among singers. Mr. Joyce managed his part creditably.

Mr. Pinkham's crisp but plastic accompaniment of recitatives, the graceful gamba playing by Alfred Zighera, and Mr. Patterson's management of the organ (a little more solid and more churchly-sounding than the instrument is ordinarily made to sound) all contributed importantly to the sum total.

Mr. Munch, invariably different in Bach from the Munch we know in French music and the standard repertory, conducted in what can be described only as a dedicated fashion. You might disagree with his tempi (I did not happen to) but they were never dragged or stretched, nor were they perfunctory.

Next week the season will end with first American performance of Henry Barroud's Te Deum in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, will participate, and the soloists will be Mariquita Moll, Marth Lipton, and Messrs. McCollum and Harrell.

262

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 25 1957

ALFRED [illegible] PATTERSON, [illegible] Chorus pro Musica [illegible] with the Boston Symphony in their final program tomorrow and Saturday.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
APR 25 1957

Music in Review

BSO Performs Bach Passion

By GERALD A. BERLIN

Before Dr. Munch assumed his duties as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's musical director the orchestra's collaboration in performance of the great Bach chorale masterpieces was rare. Then, shortly after the commencement of his career here, Dr. Munch announced that he would present Bach's St. Matthew and St. John Passions on alternate Easter seasons and he has adhered faithfully to this procedure ever since. During that time he has also conducted performances of the B minor Mass, the Christmas Oratorio and the Magnificat.

Reaction to this circumstance has been mixed, and rather violently so. To some, in whose camp this reviewer emphatically resides, the comparatively frequent renditions of these Bach works have opened new and tremendous vistas of musical experience, for which Dr. Munch is owed eternal thanks. To others, particularly among the Saturday evening audiences, this music constitutes not only an unwelcome and intrusively sectarian intrusion into the concert hall, but in the case of the Passions the perpetuation of a canard that without doubt has wrought the utmost mischief to Jews for two thousand years.

Since I am profoundly convinced that these negative reactions, however understandable, labor under a profound misconception of the nature of art in general and of Bach's art in particular, and since with each performance the same old resentments emerge, I have always felt constrained to deliver myself of a few remarks about the problem. Though the substance of these remarks is getting to be as much of an annual thing as the performance of the Passions themselves, recurrent mutterings in the community at large as well as the number of empty seats and the high incidence of intermission departures at the performance of the St. Matthew Passion last Saturday are ominous indications that the problem remains very much a vitable one.

And what is a Passion as conceived by Bach? It is the musical suffering (passion) of Jesus as told by one of the Evangelists — Matthew, John, Mark or Luke. It is customarily performed during Easter week. The Evangelist is the narrator and is sung by a tenor, whose narration breaks off at certain points when he comes to the words of any of the characters and is supplanted by one of the singers, representing that character, such as Jesus, Peter, Pilate, etc. There are reflective arias allotted to an imaginary "Daughter of Zion" and the words of Jesus are distinguished from those of other persons by an invariable string accompaniment. The choir sometimes represents the crowd of people and sometimes acts as a sort of reflective Christendom at large. It is safe to say that the St. Matthew is considered technically, emotionally and devotionally to be far and away the greatest work of its kind ever written.

The presentation of the crucifixion story in the secular setting of the concert hall—especially where the German text is accompanied by an English translation in the program—seems to provoke so adverse a reaction among so many listeners that they are unable to appreciate that any artist's work is the expression of his own experience, that this experience in turn is a product of the age in which the artist lives and that the greatness of the work of art is the extent to which it transcends the artist's own experience and age to become universal to experience in any age.

Now the fact is that Johann Sebastian Bach lived during the culmination of the religious revival of the German Reformation. For two hundred years, since the time of Martin Luther, an intense and aggressive Protestantism had shed its sombre light over the lives of the North Germans. The musical expression of this is found in the North German contrapuntal school of the 18th century, whose music is saturated with the Lutheran chorale or hymn tune.

Bach was a deeply religious person and he composed many great sacred works such as the St. Matthew Passion. Yet he is also the Bach of the Preludes and the Fugues, the Suites and the Brandenburgs. The particular sources of his inspiration are transcended by the universality of his whole work. If so, the terms "sacred" and "secular" become meaningless. Who can ascribe the inspiration of the B minor Mass to one source and that of the Well-Tempered Clavier to another? Thus it was that Bach could insert arias from his secular cantatas to his sacred ones and vice versa with such magnificent results. Indeed, the St. Matthew itself contains some sections composed of secular funeral pieces which Bach had written on commission.

It is not the subject matter of the St. Matthew, then, but its meaningfulness as a work of art that is important. Its greatness lies in the beauty of its arias, the dramatic quality of its recitatives, the power of its choruses, the gentle contemplativeness of its chorales, its endless marvels of sheer musical depiction. From them are evoked some of the noblest feelings of which humankind is capable.

In the past Dr. Munch has presented the two-part, four-and-one-half hour work in a compressed version suitable for a single concert performance as drawn from both parts. This year's version, however, consisted of the opening double chorus and practically the entire Part Two. The large forces, of course, were the same and included a soprano, contralto, tenor, two bassos, double chorus, harpsichord and organ with double orchestra. For some unhappy reason the quality of the soloists in these large BSO choral presentations has been consistently uneven. Whether it is that a performance of Bach requires a unique skill rarely encountered, or whether there is a shortage of good singers available around Easter, I cannot say, but among Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrel and James Joyce, bassos, only the singing of Mr. Harrell was of first-rank quality and even he was woefully short on volume. True, Mr. McCollum displayed eloquence of diction and sang the hapless recitatives with some feeling, but on balance Bach does not seem to be his metier. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Chorale Society, as usual, sang with tremendous verve, clarity and discipline. In contrast to that reported on Thursday afternoon, the performance on Saturday evening for some reason suffered from a certain amount of raggedness and thus never caught fire for any sustained period.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 205,271

APR 21 1957

12-Tone Composer Has Complete Works Recorded

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It is a sad confession for a music critic to have to make, but I must confess to being totally unable to find the slightest value in the music of Anton Webern. On the contrary, I know of no music that seems to me so completely devoid of any musical quality whatever in the work of the late Austrian composer who followed in the footsteps of Schoenberg as his most radical disciple in the so-called twelve-tone school of composition. And I gave it a pretty good try, too, playing through the new Columbia album of eight sides containing the complete works of Webern three times before giving up.

Anton Von Webern (he later dropped the "von") was born in Vienna in 1883. He began his career as a musicologist specializing in 15th century polyphony. He encountered Schoenberg as a 19 year old boy and immediately was won over to the school of the elder man, who had developed a system for composing music by means of using each note of the 12 tones of the scale in an arbitrary way, no note being repeated in the "row" until all 12 tones were employed. Webern went beyond it, as Berg did also, but where Berg was essentially a composer with a great vision, Webern was always the pedant. His output was trifling in numbers, for he composed some 31 one opus numbers, none of them exceeding 12 minutes in duration, though they included everything from string quartets to cantatas. Webern was killed, apparently accidentally, and probably by trigger-happy Americans who occupied Mittersill, where Webern was living, in the closing phases of the war.

12-TONE EXERCISE

Volume, of course, cannot be considered a criteria: after all, although Dunare wrote but 16 songs, they rank with the finest art songs in the literature. Yet one must wonder if Webern really had anything to say, musically. To listen to these barren, frid, contrived, totally incomprehensible exercises in the 12-one system, especially when they involve the human voice (as many of them do), is to be appalled that a man of music could be led so far astray by an arbitrary system for composing music.

This is not to damn the whole 12-tone system: many contemporary composers have learned much from it and have been influenced by it. But Webern just didn't have the genius to mould it to his own creativity, as Berg did, and I find it hard to believe that this music can communicate to enough people to give Columbia confidence in this investment, worthy though the project may be. The music involves various forces and performers and all is supervised and conducted by Robert Craft, whose own enthusiasm for Webern is reflected in the long discussion of the man and his music included in the album.

OTHER RECENT ISSUES:

MOZART: Concerto for Clarinet and orchestra; Gino Cioffi with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Munch; also Clarinet Quintet with Benny Goodman and the Boston Symphony String Quartet (Victor). Recent symphony-goers will recall the pleasure Mr. Cioffi gave in his performance of this lovely work, now available on records. It is interesting to compare Mr. Goodman's clarinet style with Mr. Cioffi's, the latter having the edge in fluency of tone.

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat, Op. 83; Friedrich Wuehrer with the Pro Musica of Stuttgart under Walter Davisson (Vox). Wuehrer's piano playing is very distinguished but the orchestra doesn't have the fullness of sound the work seems to demand. Yet it is a very fine performance.

SCHUBERT: "Unfinished" Symphony; Herbert von Karajan and the Philharmonia (Angel). This familiar work is here given a warm and radiant playing, the orchestra playing very beautiful. Brahms' Haydn Variations, superbly done, make an admirable coupling.

BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1; Igor Markevitch with the Symphony of the Air (Decca). Among the 19 previous recorded versions of this work, Markevitch's interpretation ranks high. The sound is very distinguished.

STRAVINSKY: The Soldier's

France-Amérique

April 21, 1957

BOSTON

Pierre Monteux dirige "Le Sacre"

"Le [illegible] Papa Monteux" — comme l'appellent affectueusement la plupart de ses musiciens — nous est revenu pour la deuxième fois cette saison et il a été accueilli, comme d'habitude, par une longue ovation, tout l'orchestre debout applaudissant chaleureusement.

Au programme: Ouverture, Les Hébrides (La Grotte de Fingal) de Mendelssohn; la Vême de Tchaïkowsky, si typiquement russe; "Le Sacre du Printemps", de Stravinsky, exactement 33 ans après la seconde audition à Boston dirigée par Monteux, les 11 et 12 avril 1924 (la première avait été dirigée, également par Monteux, le 25 janvier 1924) et 43 ans — à une semaine près — après la première audition mondiale en concert, au Casino de Paris, par les "Concerts Monteux".

C'est, en fait, Pierre Monteux qui est le "père" de la version de concert du Sacre car c'est à sa suggestion, après le scandale causé par la première avec les ballets de Diaghilev, que Stravinsky — "très désireux de prouver un certain nombre de points" (Monteux dixit) — arrangea une version de concert qui eut un succès immédiat. Certes, même aujourd'hui, l'oeuvre est révolutionnaire, d'avant-garde, mais on ne peut s'empêcher d'être conquis par le mysticisme profond qui s'en dégage, tout "païen" qu'il soit désigné par le sous-titre. L'orchestre était dans un de ses meilleurs jours et Pierre Monteux dirigeait comme à l'accoutumée, apparemment sans effort, mais avec grande précision et recherche du détail.

Remarqué dans la salle Danny Kaye qui, pendant l'entracte, s'intéressait très sérieusement aux problèmes de la trompette. Aspirerait-il à devenir un vrai maestro?

Maestro Danny Kaye prend la baguette

IL manquait un fleuron à la couronne de Danny Kaye et il l'a conquis de haute lice et de haute liesse mercredi soir en remplaçant Charles Münch au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Pas moinsss! Dire que ce fut hilarant serait encore au-dessous de la vérité. Le public, les membres de l'orchestre, MM. Münch et Martinon — assis au balcon et en butte aux charges du maestro improvisé — se tordaient littéralement de rire.

Après quelques mots d'introduction d'Harry Dickson (un des premiers violons), le Maître Charles Münch monte au pupitre pour diriger... "L'Apprenti Sorcier", de Dukas, tout à fait de circonstance. Sous les applaudissements nourris d'une salle archicomble, il revient traînant un Danny Kaye en pantalon rayé et veste noire auquel il remet une poignée de baguettes en lui tapant sur l'épaule pour l'encourager. Galamment, Danny Kaye lui baise la main et escalade l'estrade du chef après l'avoir manquée et être redescendu pour serrer la main du concertmaster et de son voisin (il a besoin de se concilier les bonnes grâces de l'orchestre!).

Puis les clowneries savantes commencent, agrémentées de réflexions désopilantes et d'imitations que bien des chefs auraient gagné à voir... pour ne pas les commettre. Nous voyons tour à tour le chef d'orchestre "moulin à café", "hacheur de viande", "poussant la voiture de bébé", sentimental, exalté, etc. ... Même des chefs comme Münch, Martinon, Fritz Reiner et Sir Thomas Beecham n'échappent pas à sa satire! Au passage, il envoie des baisers à Münch, qu'il appelle "Chuck", il embrasse la seule femme de l'orchestre (Mme Doriot Anthony-Dwyer, première flûte), descend dans l'orchestre pour mieux diriger et serrer encore des mains. ...

Indescriptible en paroles! Un des "clous" fut l'exécution de "Lohengrin" en montrant au public ce que d'ordinaire les musiciens voient du chef: le "veesage" et la direction des applaudissements à la baguette, en saluant gravement les musiciens. Une bonne partie des auditeurs — et c'était le public habituel (très sérieux) des grands concerts — se leva sur l'injonction de Danny Kaye et se tira en mesure du numéro d'applaudissements dirigés.

Pour finir, la marche "Stars and Stripes Forever" de Souza fut exécutée avec beaucoup de brio et la résonance d'une harmonie municipale de village, les flûtes puis les trompettes et trombones se levant pour mieux faire ressortir leurs soli.

Pour une fois, le rire était maître de Symphony Hall et le fonds de retraite de l'orchestre y gagna la coquette somme de près de 10.000 dollars. Bien entendu, le concours de Danny Kaye et celui de l'orchestre étaient gracieux. Bravo, maestro! Peu importe que vous ne sachiez "pas lire une note de musique"; les musiciens le savent et ils vous savent gré de les avoir amusés là même où d'habitude, ils travaillent très dur. Et maintenant, revenons à la Musique sérieuse.

"QUOI DE NOUVEAU? — MOLIERE" (Sacha Guitry)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
APR 27 1957

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th and last program of the series yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Mariquita Moll, soprano; Martha Lipton, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Mack Harrell, bass. Assisted by the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor. The program:

Te Deum ..... Henry Barraud
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

76th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to an end yesterday for the Friday afternooners in what may only be described as the most stunning performance of the Ninth Symphony it has ever been my privilege to hear.

Before touching on that however, we must first deal with a Te Deum for chorus and orchestra by Henry Barraud, a 57-year-old composer, who dedicated this 10-minute long work to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. It is a strange and not very agreeable piece that nonetheless suggests a sort of neo-Gothic grandeur in the solemnity of its utterance. Scored, oddly enough, for brass, woodwinds and double basses, who accompany the vocal part, but are used largely in tonal contrasts of a massive nature alternating with the voices, the sound is generally harsh, dissonant and without any suggestion of warmth or tenderness whatever.

Came Into Own

Yet, as indicated above, it does have a ring of authentic liturgical power, especially in its inner section, which suggests its roots are in those of the plainsong. It is obviously horribly difficult for the singers, for its intervals are most unusual in their jagged leaps while the dissonant contrapuntal fabric presents even so experienced a chorus as the Chorus Pro Musica with nearly insuperable problems. In fact they were insuperable: even without knowing the score at all one was aware of some shaky entrances and intonational insecurities. Still, the wonder is it did it at all. The orchestra was all right, I suppose: it didn't seem to matter much whether it was or not. Yet, I repeat, the work had a certain impact of its own.

If the chorus had little opportunity in the Barraud piece to display the quality of its tone and its balance and discipline, it certainly did in the Beethoven. Here, in the last movement, after a striking performance of the first three by Mr. Munch and the orchestra (I never heard the scherzo done so effectively) the chorus came into its own.

It was interesting to compare it, too, with the student chorus that sang the St. Matthew passion last week, for the additional maturity and experience of these young singers was telling in the absolutely accuracy and firmness of attack, as well as in the fuller, more resonant tonal quality. It had been well trained for the occasion by its director, Alfred Nash Patterson, but it was as clearly inspired by Mr. Munch's very special way with a chorus, for few orchestral conductors work with a chorus so meticulously and so graphically as he.

In any case, chorus and orchestra combined under the conductor's vivid conception of this choral finale to produce a round of bravos and prolonged loud applause as the end. It might be added, by the way, that this quartet was one of the best we've ever had in this work. All of them, Mack Harrell, John McCollum, Mariquita Moll and Martha Lipton did their own difficult parts very well and combined to give the quartet a sense of being equally matched, which is more often not the case.

Thus it was the season came to an end as it should; in an atmosphere of joy and triumph and fulfillment. And Mr. Munch may go back to France for his vacation at the end of his seventh season as conductor of the orchestra secure in the knowledge we all await his return appreciatively and gratefully.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,978
APR 27 1957

Award To Dr. Munch

At an informal ceremony following the last Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season yesterday, Baron Charles de Pampelonne, Consul General of France in Boston, presented to Dr. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francais, the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque for the RCA Victor recording of Ravel's complete "Daphnis and Chloe."

Dr. Munch will leave for France following his final Saturday evening concert tonight, returning at the beginning of July for the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 27 1957

French Recording Award Given Munch

At an informal ceremony following the last Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season yesterday, Baron Charles de Pampelonne, consul-general of France in Boston, presented to Dr. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francais, the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque for the RCA Victor recording of Ravel's complete "Daphnis and Chloe." The recording was made in January, 1955, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction, assisted by the New England Conservatory and Alumnae Chorus conducted by Robert Shaw in collaboration with Lorna Cooke de Varon.

Dr. Munch will leave for France following his final Saturday evening concert tonight, returning at the beginning of July for the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
APR 27 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Beethoven Ninth Ends Season

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 24th and last program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the first United States performance of a Te Deum by Henry Barraud, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisted in both works. Soloists for the Beethoven Symphony were Mariquita Moll, soprano; Martha Lipton, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

By CYRUS DURGIN

This year, as last, Charles Munch has chosen to end a season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. With this choice no one disagreed, for the mighty Ninth is not only one of the solitary peaks among musical masterpieces, but a work demanding somewhat more of an occasion than just a pair of concerts.

But to the general nature of yesterday's performance this chronicler must register strong exception. A year ago, Mr. Munch performed the Ninth with extraordinary care and beauty. Yesterday his reading of many pages seemed careless and perfunctory. From the outset of the first movement, the texture was course. The conductor brought up trumpets and tympani until their powerful resonance all but drowned strings and other instruments. The tympani constitute a featured instrument in the scherzo, quite properly, but here again Mr. Munch overdid a good thing.

The finale was noisier than it need have been, and the whole feeling, to my mind, was superficial rather than a sense of enormous power and exaltation. The last section of the finale, to be sure, is marked prestissimo, which means, as a wag once said, "faster than possible." But if chorus, soloists and orchestra are going to sound musical and not like a "whoop and a holler," as yesterday, the tempo must be moderated a hair.

The slow movement was happily a different story, a beautiful and sensitive traversal of extended and detailed melodic lines. Here the balance of instruments was just and the total effect deeply moving.

A Real Ovation

The performance of the Ninth, whatever it lacked in refinement as noted above, was extraordinarily exciting. The final chord had barely sounded when the applause and the cheers broke out. This was a real ovation for all concerned. As he reappeared on stage, Mr. Munch bade double-bass player Gaston Dufresne and trumpeter Marcel Lafosse come to the center of the stage for individual recognition. These two excellent musicians are retiring from the Orchestra after the Berkshire Festival. They will be missed.

The afternoon began with first United States performance of Henry Barraud's Te Deum in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. This is an interesting work, if somewhat lacking in variety of color; it is dynamic in character and moves with steady rhythmic progress. The scoring contrasts the choral voices with piccolo, two each of flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, trumpets and trombones, and four horns, plus the string bass section. Naturally this makes for more or less mass effects, with the instruments serving as a solid foundation for the play of vocal lines.

The Chorus Pro Musica gave a splendid account of itself, which in turn testified to the care with which conductor Alfred Nash Patterson had prepared his singers in both Barraud (which sounded very difficult) and the exacting Ninth Symphony. The tone was full-bodied, balanced (if one overlooks a slight thinness of tenor sound) and agreeable.

Mack Harrell shone among the soloists, both because of the prominence of the bass role in the Ninth Symphony, and because he sang with superb musical feeling. Miss Moll navigated the high soprano part but she seemed to be not in her best voice. Miss Lipton and Mr. McCollum also were creditable.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
APR 27 1957

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Beethoven Ninth Ends Season

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight, the 24th and last program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the first United States performance of a Te Deum by Henry Barraud, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisted in both works. Soloists for the Beethoven Symphony were Mariquita Moll, soprano; Martha Lipton, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

By CYRUS DURGIN

This year, as last, Charles Munch has chosen to end a season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. With this choice no one disagreed, for the mighty Ninth is not only one of the solitary peaks among musical masterpieces, but a work demanding somewhat more of an occasion than just a pair of concerts.

But to the general nature of yesterday's performance this chronicler must register strong exception. A year ago, Mr. Munch performed the Ninth with extraordinary care and beauty. Yesterday his reading of many pages seemed careless and perfunctory. From the outset of the first movement, the texture was course. The conductor brought up trumpets and tympani until their powerful resonance all but drowned strings and other instruments. The tympani constitute a featured instrument in the scherzo, quite properly, but here again Mr. Munch overdid a good thing.

The finale was noisier than it need have been, and the whole feeling, to my mind, was superficial rather than a sense of enormous power and exaltation. The last section of the finale, to be sure, is marked prestissimo, which means, as a wag once said, "faster than possible." But if chorus, soloists and orchestra are going to sound musical and not like a "whoop and a holler," as yesterday, the tempo must be moderated a hair.

The slow movement was happily a different story, a beautiful and sensitive traversal of extended and detailed melodic lines. Here the balance of instruments was just and the total effect deeply moving.

A Real Ovation

The performance of the Ninth, whatever it lacked in refinement as noted above, was extraordinarily exciting. The final chord had barely sounded when the applause and the cheers broke out. This was a real ovation for all concerned. As he reappeared on stage, Mr. Munch bade double-bass player Gaston Dufresne and trumpeter Marcel Lafosse come to the center of the stage for individual recognition. These two excellent musicians are retiring from the Orchestra after the Berkshire Festival. They will be missed.

The afternoon began with first United States performance of Henry Barraud's Te Deum in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. This is an interesting work, if somewhat lacking in variety of color; it is dynamic in character and moves with steady rhythmic progress. The scoring contrasts the choral voices with piccolo, two each of flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, trumpets and trombones, and four horns, plus the string bass section. Naturally this makes for more or less mass effects, with the instruments serving as a solid foundation for the play of vocal lines.

The Chorus Pro Musica gave a splendid account of itself, which in turn testified to the care with which conductor Alfred Nash Patterson had prepared his singers in both Barraud (which sounded very difficult) and the exacting Ninth Symphony. The tone was full-bodied, balanced (if one overlooks a slight thinness of tenor sound) and agreeable.

Mack Harrell shone among the soloists, both because of the prominence of the bass role in the Ninth Symphony, and because he sang with superb musical feeling. Miss Moll navigated the high soprano part but she seemed to be not in her best voice. Miss Lipton and Mr. McCollum also were creditable.

244

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 305,271
APR 28 1957

The 76th Symphony Season Had Program Difficulties

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The 76th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, just completed, seems on review to have hardly been a memorable one in terms of the programs it offered its subscribers. Indeed while the orchestra itself attained the absolute peak of tonal and technical perfection, the music it had to play was chosen with singular lack of imagination. An important reason for it has turned up since, back in the mid-winter, I voiced a similar point of view, but even so it does seem we could muster a far more stimulating bill of fare than we have been offered this season.

The important reason, ironically enough, is one that benefits the orchestra very considerably, particularly in the future. It is that RCA Victor, which has so long neglected this orchestra, has begun again to record its repertoire extensively. During the heyday of Arturo Toscanini, Victor brought out dozens of his recordings while granting the Boston Symphony but a few a year. These recordings have now been largely exhausted; hence the re-issues, and if any that have not been issued so far will appear and even those that do will be versions Toscanini himself refused to have released.

TOO MANY REPEATS

So Victor has now turned its attention to its second orchestral star, the Boston Symphony, and, in line with its general policy of staying pretty close to the standard repertoire, it now has a hand in the programming of the concerts. The hand is a subtle one, for while presumably Mr. Munch could record what he wants, the task of preparing one program performance, not a quite different one for Victor, obviously physical limitations on conductor and men alike that are prohibitive.

The consequence is that many works were repeated much too soon. Some of the standard classics offered this year were heard as recently as last season while many date from the two seasons before. Obviously, the hard core of the repertoirse, the symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Schumann, Schubert and so on, are worthy of frequent repetition, as are the more famous concert pieces. Yet there is no doubt the choice this season was not happy. With many of them now committed to recordings, next years selections might range a little farther afield: it is certainly to be hoped so anyway.

Nonetheless, there were a few interesting revivals. Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ" certainly deserved a re-hearing, as did Shostakovitch's Fifth Brokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Bach's B minor Suite and Mahler's Fourth. Bach's Wedding" Cantata, a charming thing, made its first appearance here and was beautifully done by Irmgaard Siefried; Schubert's fragile Third Symphony was also new. But, save for a Handel Concerto Grosso and Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, little of the enormous literature of the 18th century was done, which is a pity. There is a great treasury here and it is particularly worth examining as it provides so many opportunities for the soloists or the orchestra itself to step forth—and this should certainly be done more often.

There were, this season, but 10 new works offered in their Boston or world premiere. Of them all, by all odds the most impressive, was the "Hymne a la Vie" by Jean Martinon, who presented it himself as guest conductor. It was a work of enormous vigor and, though anything but an easy work to comprehend on a first hearing, made a great impression just the same. Two concertos by William Walton were also impressive, the Cello Concerto done by Piatigorsky, and the Viola Concerto played by Joseph Di Pasquale. Piston's Fifth Symphony, a more introspective work than the brilliant Sixth was a harder nut to crack, but revealed all this composer's mastery of the orchestra.

The First Symphony of Leo Smit also had its premiere this season and found considerable favor, as did Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation." Randall Thompson's nostalgic "A Trip to Nahant" was most enjoyable; and so too was a small work by Emil Kornsand, a member of the orchestra. The low point was certainly David Diamond's Sixth, the ugliest musical contrivance ever committed to paper. But on the whole it must be said that if the new music presented was low in quantity, it was generally high in quality, and perhaps that is all for the best.

Guest conductors were Golschmann, Monteux (twice), Markevitch, Ormandy and Martinon with the usual stalwart appearances of Richard Burgin. Golschmann was not at his best on this occasion, but Eugene Ormandy attained a terrific success while Igor Markevitch perhaps made the greatest impression of all, demonstrating an orchestral technique and an expression of musical urgency that made his visit a memorable one for all concerned, audience and orchestra alike.

There were fewer soloists than usual, but there was one who virtually staggered her audiences. This was Clara Haskill, a tiny, petite elderly woman whose performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto left everyone speechless. She alone made this a memorable season: there were other fine occasions, of course, but on the whole this would have been merely a season of perfect performances of routine programs.

ARTHUR FIEDLER, who will open the 72nd season of the Pops at Symphony Hall on Tuesday night, is shown here listening to a playback following a Pops recording session.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 27 1957

Symphony Ending Tonight

New Barraud Choral Work; Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

By Rogers

Conducting in a blaze of electrical glory, Charles Munch galvanized his musicians, his singers, and the better part of his listeners into a white heat of enthusiasm yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This program, the Boston Symphony's finale of its 76th season, will be repeated tonight.

Dr. Munch selected Beethoven's Ninth Symphony as the climactic work, and for his opening item he gave the United States premiere of Henry Barraud's Te Deum for Chorus and Orchestra, composed last year and dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Employed in both works were the singers of the Chorus Pro Musica, trained by their founder and conductor, Alfred Nash Patterson.

The Barraud Te Deum reflects the prevailing style for sacred music in France today—that of a neo-medieval austerity, bleak with consecutive fourths and fifths, evoking an aura of mysticism. The composer uses a small orchestra of brasses, woodwinds, and doublebasses, thus making the effect even more medieval. His choral writing, ingenious and scholarly, doubtless makes its appeal to those who are emotionally attuned to the moods of religious mysticism. There is no question that the performance by all concerned was excellent.

* * *

With Beethoven's mighty Ninth, however, the listener forsakes the passive contemplation of mysticism for the active participation of joy. There is an abundance of vital religion, if one chooses to look for it, in the enthusiasm of his panoramic choral finale.

Dr. Munch was caught up in the vertex of inspiration, but (as is usually the case when he is excited) he drove his musicians into areas of imprecision. It is true that the second movement is marked Molto vivace; Presto—but Dr. Munch's tempo was a dramatic prestissimo, thrilling to listen to, exciting to feel, but a little faster than some musicians can go. Yet one could be astonished and pleased by the very unconventionality of his concept. Spurred by a tickling baton, the music sped past the ear on peppery feet.

* * *

The third movement sang with all the intensity of emotion that Dr. Munch was mustering; and when he came to the finale he brought us to a realization of the incredible things this music can be made to say. Dynamics were louder than usual or softer than usual. It wasn't the solid, steady, and stately reading gained, for instance, by a group like the noted Singverein der Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna. It was surcharged with an emotional impact that called forth startling contrasts. And the results, judging by the volley of bravos at its conclusion, were eminently successful.

The quartet of soloists sang in a forthright, balanced way—Mariquita Moll, whose soprano has often been appraised in Boston; Martha Lipton, a contralto of rich intensity; John McCollum, another singer whose silvery tenor is familiar in Symphony Hall; and Mack Harrell, a baritone who has won keen appreciation over the years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
APR 30 1957

Munch Receives Award

At an informal ceremony following the concert last Friday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Baron Charles de Pampelonne, Consul General of France in Boston, presented Charles Munch the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque for the RCA Victor recording of Ravel's complete "Daphnis and Chloe." The recording was made in January, 1955, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction, assisted by the New England Conservatory and Alumnae Chorus, conducted by Robert Shaw, and together with Lorna Cooke deVaron. Baron de Pampelonne made the award on behalf of the Académie du Disque Français.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

...rkevitch, Ormandy Conduct Boston Symphony as Guests

—On March 8, 1957, just ...rs minus a day after David ...had completed his Sixth ...y in Florence, the score re... its first performance by ...ch and the Boston Sym... ...tra. These musicians, to ...core is dedicated, gave it ...y assume was a thor... ...tent performance, and ...ligent, for they had ... over this massive and luscious—which Mr. Ormandy produces from the Philadelphia Orchestra.

He gave the first Boston perfor... ances of William Schuman's "Cred... dum", a fine score, very tricky w... its cross-rhythms, and exceeding... melodic. Hindemith's "Matthias t...

...not call the symphony ...its mass of contrapuntal ...s in fierce dissonance, but ...it lacking in the crafts... ...which has distinguished ...better — of Diamond's ...is powerful, but it gets ...lack forward motion, no ...matter ...erior rhythmical ...involvement ... It is also very ...heavily ... in page after page it ... ...ally to know what is ... ...mond was present ... could have de... ...fort from ... ...not warm ...

Franck Symp... ...erformed

The Diam... Symphony stood midway between Tchaikovsky's C major Serenade, done with a big, juicy tone, and the Franck D minor Symphony. To the last-named Mr. Munch gave the full treatment of a passionate, romantic interpretation.

For two weeks before, we had enjoyed the change of pace and style attendant upon the presence of guest conductors. Igor Markevitch came first, Feb. 22 and 23, and with most musical and brilliant work put the seal of certainty upon what some of us had long believed: that he is among the great conductors of the world today. Mr. Markevitch gave us his own clever and tasteful scoring of the last (six-voice) fugue in Bach's "Musical Offering"; the Symphony No. 3 of Schubert (new to these concerts); Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" in the clearest and finest performance of it in my memory; and the Mussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition".

Munch Heard in Philadelphia

The week following, Eugene Ormandy was our guest, he and Charles Munch having "swapped pulpits". While Mr. Munch was delighting the Philadelphians in the Academy of Music, Mr. Ormandy at Symphony Hall was making more of an impression than ever he had before in this city. As guest with our orchestra, which we know so well, he put his personal talents in a sharper focus. The very sensitive Boston Symphony responded to him nobly, and even four rehearsals gave the tone something of the timbre—round, dark and

The Bach Aria Group came ... Symphony Hall (in the Boston U... versity Celebrity Series) March 1...

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Munch Introduces Overture by Walton

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. Carnegie Hall, March 23, 2:30:

"Johannesburg Festival Overture" .... Walton
(First New York performance)
Viola Concerto ..... Walton
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

The magnificent performance of Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" that capped this concert tended to overshadow the first half, but there was much to enjoy in the Walton music and in Joseph de Pasquale's sensitive performance of the solo viola part in the concerto, with admirable assistance from his colleagues in the orchestra.

The "Johannesburg Festival Overture" is a very amusing work. Its substance is prevailingly of the "Luncheon Music" or Hollywood level and Report ...ocal Company ... Philadelphia

Philadelphia. — Winter performances of opera in Philadelphia took place at the Academy of Music with less regularity than of yore. However, on Jan. 23, the Philadelphia Grand Opera staged one of the country's few performances, this season, of Verdi's "Otello". Ramon Vinay gave a superb reading of the title role and Cesare Bardelli was a razor-keen Iago. Anna Marie Kuhn sang the music of Desdemona with power and assurance. Giuseppe Bamboschek exercised authority on the podium.

On Feb. 12, the Metropolitan brought its first performance of "Die Walküre" to the Academy in nine years. Dimitri Mitropoulos led a magnificent performance, lyric and dramatic by turn, with Margaret Harshaw in excellent form as Brünnhilde and Otto Edelmann a big-voiced but rather rigid Wotan. Blanche Thebom was the admirable Fricka. New here were Marianne Schech and Wolfgang Windgassen as Sieglinde and Siegmund. Both impressed as being well-routined, rather small-scale artists by true Wagnerian standards. Kurt Boehme, also new, was a rather mild Hunding.

On Feb. 14, just 50 years to the day since Farrar and the Metropolitan gave Philadelphia its first "Madama Butterfly", the Puccini opera was presented again at the Academy by the Philadelphia Grand Opera. Dorothy Kirsten sang Cio-Cio-San for the first time here, with admirable but not sensational results. The soprano took a very tenuous high D flat at her first entrance. John Alexander was a good-looking, believable Pinkerton and sang well indeed, while John Brownlee brought his mellowed art to the role of Sharpless. Eleanor Knapp was an unusually dramatic Suzuki, and Giuseppe Bamboschek provided a definitive reading of the score.

Madeira as Carmen

On Feb. 26, the Metropolitan presented its penultimate offering of the season with a performance of "Carmen". Jean Madeira was the rather wild-and-wooly gypsy, though she sang with plenitude of tone and spirit. Richard Tucker and Ettore Bastianini made José and Escamillo solid citizens—solid citizens who sang tellingly. Lucine Amara was a charming Micaëla, and Mr. Mitropoulos conducted well.

On March 15, the Philadelphia Grand Opera came across with the city's only "La Traviata" of the season. Dolores Mari replaced Beverly Sills at the last moment as Violetta, giving a smooth account of the title role. Jon Crain was a rather vehement Alfredo, and Louis Quilico won the evening's honors with a beautifully vocalized Germont père. Mr. Bamboschek conducted.

On March 19, the Metropolitan bade farewell of the season to Philadelphia, bringing "Il Trovatore" to honor the Academy of Music centennial celebration. It was in February, 1857, that the Academy housed its first opera performance — "Trovatore". Antonietta Stella and Irene Dalis made their Philadelphia debuts on this occasion, singing Leonora and Azucena. Miss Stella delighted with her trenchant, enthusiastically projected Leonora, while Miss Dalis proved a surprise, as she offered a very dramatic and convincing Azucena. Jussi Bjoerling was the clean-voiced Manrico, and Ettore Bastianini a handsome and resonant di Luna. Nicola Moscona was Ferrando, and Max Rudolf's tempos seemed singularly right. The audience lavished applause on the performance.

William Steinberg conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra on Jan. 18. The Pittsburgh maestro gave a masterly reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and also offered Brahms's "Academic Festival Overture" and Albéniz' "Iberia", orchestrated by Enrique Arbós. The conductor was warmly received by the Friday afternoon subscribers.

Rodgers Conducts Own Music

Richard Rodgers conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in a program of his own music on Jan. 22 at the Academy. Availing himself of the support of Annamary Dickey, Clamage Turner, William Tabbert and John Russell, Mr. Rodgers gave a rousing account of a half dozen of his scores.

A tribute to the late Arturo Toscanini in the form of the Funeral Music from "Götterdämmerung", initiated the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra which marked Eugene Ormandy's return from his winter vacation. Mr. Ormandy also presented Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" and Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, the latter in the presence of the composer. The Brahms First Symphony completed the program.

Benno Moiseiwitsch was the soloist at the concerts Feb. 1 and 2. The pianist was heard in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, of which he gave a big-scale performance. New was Louis Gesensway's tone poem "Now Let the Night be Dark for all of Me". This mood picture, which leans towards Slavic brooding, was well received. Mr. Ormandy's phrasing of Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony was a delight.

Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 was the focal point of the Philadelphia Orchestra's programs of Feb. 8 and 9. The hour-long work was given a resplendent enfoldment and appreciated by many listeners. The rest of the program was labeled all-Viennese by Ormandy, which meant that one heard music by Mozart, Hellmesberger and Johann Strauss, Jr.

On Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Ormandy offered the "Manzoni" Requiem of Verdi. His soloists were Leontyne Price, Nan Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi. Mr. Tozzi walked away with the considerable honors, though Miss Price's exquisite and ethereal upper-scale pianissimos made a magical effect. Miss Merriman was adequate; Mr. Tucker, out of his element. Mr. Ormandy dominated the performance, availing himself of the combined Rutgers University Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus.

The Student Concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, on Feb. 18, had Jean Casadesus, pianist, for its solo-

Painter" and the D major Symphony of Brahms formed the remainder of the program.

This season the ... Jordan Hall ... Zimbler Sinfonietta, ... gether. At the first, Feb. ... the four pieces offered ... a decade old, two were ... and not one was ...

The most ... Racine Fric... for English horn and strings which, with Louis Speyer as soloist, received its first United States performance. I marveled that anyone could so gracelessly and colorlessly use the English horn as this young Briton has done: just monotonous, rhapsodic weavings, with little contrast of timbres. More skillful and attractive was Honegger's "Concerto da Camera" (1948), in which he contrasted flute and English horn against real string vivacities. For the Honegger the flute soloist was the estimable James Pappoutsakis, and that on English horn the same unexcelled Mr. Speyer.

The evening began with what very likely was the first concert performance in this country of Johann Bernhard Bach's animated Overture (Sinfonia of Dances) in D major. This Bach was Johann Sebastian's slightly elder second cousin (each of whom admired the other), and the music had been found in manuscript by Karl Geiringer, now of the Boston University music faculty.

There ... one novelty ... the next ... concert, March ... the violin ... to hear the contemporary Italian, ... Federico Ghedini ... this trivial, eclectic work of more-or-less moto perpetuo ... I wouldn't know, but what ... make of a piece which starts with a 12-tone row, soon is dealing with chords that sound like Brahms, and goes on in aimless buzzings thereafter? At any rate, Charles Munch guest conducted it, with Joseph Silverstein, the Symphony's highly-talented newest and youngest member, as violin soloist. Vigor and enterprise they gave the piece in full.

Hess and Rubinstein

Piano playing on the highest level in recent weeks, here, has included a magnificent concert by Myra Hess at Symphony Hall, and one by Artur Rubinstein in the same auditorium, Mr. Rubinstein appearing in the Boston University Celebrity Series. On the same level, vocally, we have enjoyed soprano Hilde Gueden at a Statler Morning Musicale; the Concordia Choir from Minnesota, and Alfred Nash Patterson's superb Chorus Pro Musica in the Bach B minor Mass. Gerald Moore also has brightened the town with his extraordinary lecture-concert about the art of piano accompaniment. Mr. Moore is multifariously gifted. Had he not become a fine musician, and very likely the greatest of all accompanists today, he could have been a good comedian.

For some reason that no one probably could explain, it has taken nearly 30 years for the Viola Concerto by Sir William Walton to enter the repertory of the Boston Symphony. But now that it has, occasional performance surely is in order, since it is a noble and beautiful work. Mr. Munch conducted it at the Symphony Hall concerts of March 15 and 16, with Joseph De Pasquale, the admirable first violist of the orchestra, as soloist. In every way this was a splendid performance.

New Walton Overture

The opening piece also was Walton, the "Johannesburg Festival Overture", written for the 70th anniversary festivities last September, of the South African city of Johannesburg. It is a cute, deft piece, with frippery decoration of assorted percussion, harmonically bright, spicy, ingratiating and ... together because, as W... ...score, it is very fa... ...

... the remainder of the concert: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser", the "Magic Fire" from "Die Walküre" and S... Rhine Journey out of "Goetterdämmerung" ...

One of the more unusual concerts of the season was ... of chamber music by Hugo ... and ... Levy, at Kresge Auditorium ... chusetts Institute of ... March 15. Two long ... program ... Mr. Kander ... Music" ... setting for ... and instrumental ... James Joyce's poe... ...ville, and the Char... ...

... Levy, Mr. ... of Boston ... ...lyna Zagarella, soprano; Margaret Danford, ... soprano; and Richard Gilley, tenor. Though quite unlike in style, each of the two works

Boston Symphony
Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 166,412 - S. 166,660
MAR 28 1957

Charles A. Sink Retires From Post With Music Unit

Special to The Blade

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 28—Retirement of Charles A. Sink as active administrator of the University of Michigan Musical Society and appointment of Gail W. Rector as executive director were announced today.

Mr. Rector will take over administrative duties performed for many years by Mr. Sink. Mr. Sink will continue as president of the board of directors. The change is effective Sept. 1.

Mr. Rector was born in North Platte, Neb., studied music in Chicago and was a member of the Chicago Civic Orchestra. He entered the University of Michigan in 1937 and was graduated in 1940. He continued post-graduate studies there.

He served as Mr. Sink's administrative assistant from 1945 to 1... ...e joined the staff of the ...hire Music Festival at ...ood, Lenox, Mass. He was appointed assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center in 1954.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Boston Orchestra Plays Diamond Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Gino Cioffi, clarinettist. Carnegie Hall, March 20:

Symphony No. ... David Diamond
(First New York performance)
Clarinet Concerto, K. 622 ..... Mozart
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

There is no need to mince words about David Diamond's Symphony No. 6, which Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced ... York audiences in this concert, for it is a sadly disappointing and uninteresting work. Composed between 1951 and 1954, it is dedicated to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, and the composer has written that it "is related stylistically and dynamically to my Psalm for orchestra (1936)".

The three-movement work is in cyclic form, its melodic material being derived from two themes of the first movement. These themes are not particularly striking or appealing on first hearing nor does the development add any facets of interest. The symphony's emotional moods are difficult to describe; except for some abrupt tempo and dynamic contrasts, the atmosphere seems neither this nor that. The scoring is also not distinctive, the main section of the first movement and the last movement being extremely noisy. On the whole, the orchestration sounded turgid.

The Mozart Clarinet Concerto followed like a breath of fresh air, and Mr. Cioffi, principal clarinettist of the orchestra, performed it with technical ease and tonal opulence, though emotional communication was sometimes lacking. The orchestra was a bit heavy-handed and the tempo too fast in the first movement, but the moving song of the second movement and the ... spirit of the final movement ... projected with simplicity. The ... Symphony is a speciality of the orchestra, and Mr. Munch whipped it into a fine frenzy in its torrential moments and never let its lyrical sections become maudlin. Needless to say, the orchestra sounded brilliant. —F. M., Jr.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

...arkevitch, Ormandy Conduct Boston Symphony as Guests

...—On March 8, 1957, just ... minus a day after David ... had completed his Sixth ... in Florence, the score re... first performance by ... luscious—which Mr. Ormandy produces from the Philadelphia Orchestra.

He gave the first Boston perform... ances of William Schuman's "Cred... dum", a fine score, very tricky with its cross-rhythms, and exceeding... melodic. Hindemith's "Matthias the ...

The Bach Aria Group came ... Symphony Hall (in the Boston Uni... versity Celebrity Series) March 1 ...

weill, and Richard Rodgers were ex... cellently done and were more than enthusiastically received.

The Cleveland Society for Strings, in its scholarship fund series, spon... sored Zara Nelsova, cellist, in a re... cital, and the bravos rang loud and clear for her work.

An outstanding contribution to the chamber-music field was made by the LaSalle Quartet of Cincinnati. This first-rate group has as its avocation the educating of very young musi... cians to the wonder of chamber mu... sic. They made it sound so intriguing —and so much fun—that the audience of children aged 6 to 12 was literally begging for more at the end of their afternoon concert at the Art Museum. Sponsored by the Musart Society, the LaSalle Quartet also gave an adult program which was a joy to hear.

The Albeneri String Trio, returning from a tour of the South and Far West, played an alumni benefit re... cital at the Cleveland Institute. The recent inclusion of Ward Davenny, pianist (also director of the Institute), makes the ensemble a two-thirds lo... cal outfit. Their recital, of musical and technical perfection, featured Leon Kirchner's Trio in Two Move... ments—a work of vigor and virility,

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Munch Introduces Overture by Walton

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. Carnegie Hall, March 23, 2:30:

"Johannesburg Festival Overture" .... Walton
(First New York performance)
Viola Concerto ..... Walton
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

The magnificent performance of Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" that capped this concert tended to overshadow the first half, but there was much to enjoy in the Walton music and in Joseph de Pasquale's sensitive performance of the solo viola part in the concerto, with admirable assistance from his colleagues in the orchestra.

The "Johannesburg Festival Overture" is a very amusing work. Its substance is prevailingly of the "Luncheon Music" or Hollywood level and type, but its treatment and working-out are highly expert and quite impressive as a technical achievement. In another world is the poignant Viola Concerto, one of Sir William's finest works, which is much more than a conventional showpiece. It succeeds in giving the soloist an interesting musical role while retaining its character as an absorbing and closely-knit tone poem.

"Ein Heldenleben" contains some bombastic pages, but what a matchless vehicle for a virtuoso orchestra it is! Nor have the glorious final pages of this gigantic score lost their emotional potency over the years. It is a work of genius, with all its flaws. I have never heard the violin solo part more delicately and imaginatively played than by Richard Burgin, and Mr. Munch's conception of the whole score was truly noble and all-encompassing. When it plays like this, the Boston Symphony is unsurpassable.

—R. S.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Metropolitan, Local Com... Give Opera in Philadelph...

Philadelphia. — Winter performances of opera in Philadelphia took place at the Academy of Music with less regularity than of yore. However, on Jan. 23, the Philadelphia Grand Opera staged one of the country's few performances, this season, of Verdi's "Otello". Ramon Vinay gave a superb reading of the title role and Cesare Bardelli was a razor-keen Iago. Anna Marie Kuhn sang the music of Desdemona with power and assurance. Giuseppe Bamboschek exercised authority on the podium.

On Feb. 12, the Metropolitan brought its first performance of "Die Walküre" to the Academy in nine years. Dimitri Mitropoulos led a magnificent performance, lyric and dramatic by turn, with Margaret Harshaw in excellent form as Brünnhilde and Otto Edelmann a big-voiced but rather rigid Wotan. Blanche Thebom was the admirable Fricka. New here were Marianne Schech and Wolfgang Windgassen as Sieglinde and Siegmund. Both impressed as being well-routined, rather small-scale artists by true Wagnerian standards. Kurt Boehme, also new, was a rather mild Hunding.

On Feb. 14, just 50 years to the day since Farrar and the Metropolitan gave Philadelphia its first "Madama Butterfly", the Puccini opera was presented again at the Academy by the Philadelphia Grand Opera. Dorothy Kirsten sang Cio-Cio-San for the first time here, with admirable but not sensational results. The soprano took a very tenuous high D flat at her first entrance. John Alexander was a good-looking, believable Pinkerton and sang well indeed, while John Brownlee brought his mellowed art to the role of Sharpless. Eleanor Knapp was an unusually dramatic Suzuki, and Giuseppe Bamboschek provided a definitive reading of the score.

Madeira as Carmen

On Feb. 26, the Metropolitan presented its penultimate offering of the season with a performance of "Carmen". Jean Madeira was the rather wild-and-wooly gypsy, though she sang with plenitude of tone and spirit. Richard Tucker and Ettore Bastianini made José and Escamillo solid citizens—solid citizens who sang tellingly. Lucine Amara was a charming Micaëla, and Mr. Mitropoulos conducted well.

On March 15, the Philadelphia Grand Opera came across with the city's only "La Traviata" of the season. Dolores Mari replaced Beverly Sills at the last moment as Violetta, giving a smooth account of the title role. Jon Crain was a rather vehement Alfredo, and Louis Quilico won the evening's honors with a beautifully vocalized Germont père. Mr. Bamboschek conducted.

On March 19, the Metropolitan bade farewell of the season to Philadelphia, bringing "Il Trovatore" to honor the Academy of Music centennial celebration. It was in February, 1857, that the Academy housed its first opera performance — "Trovatore". Antonietta Stella and Irene Dalis made their Philadelphia debuts on this occasion, singing Leonora and Azucena. Miss Stella deli... her trenchant, enthusiast... jected Leonora, while ... proved a surprise, as she ... very dramatic and convin... cena. Jussi Bjoerling was ... voiced Manrico, and Etto... nini a handsome and resona... Nicola Moscona was Ferr... Max Rudolf's tempos seem... larly right. The audience lav... plause on the performance.

William Steinberg conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra on Jan. 18. The Pittsburgh maestro gave a masterly reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and also offered Brahms's "Academic Festival Overture" and Albéniz' "Iberia", orchestrated by Enrique Arbós. The conductor was warmly received by the Friday afternoon subscribers.

Rodgers Conducts Own Music

Richard Rodgers conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in a program of his own music on Jan. 22 at the Academy. Availing himself of the support of Annamary Dickey, Clamar... Turner, William Tabbert and John Russell, Mr. Rodgers gave a rousing account of a half dozen of his scores.

A tribute to the late Arturo Toscanini in the form of the Funeral Music from "Götterdämmerung", initiated the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra which marked Eugene Ormandy's return from his winter vacation. Mr. Ormandy also presented Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" and Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, the latter in the presence of the composer. The Brahms First Symphony completed the program.

Benno Moiseiwitsch was the soloist at the concerts Feb. 1 and 2. The pianist was heard in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, of which he gave a big-scale performance. New was Louis Gesensway's tone poem "Now Let the Night be Dark for all of Me". This mood picture, which leans towards Slavic brooding, was well received. Mr. Ormandy's phrasing of Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony was a delight.

Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 was the focal point of the Philadelphia Orchestra's programs of Feb. 8 and 9. The hour-long work was given a resplendent enfoldment and appreciated by many listeners. The rest of the program was labeled all-Viennese by Ormandy, which meant that one heard music by Mozart, Hellmesberger and Johann Strauss, Jr.

On Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Ormandy offered the "Manzoni" Requiem of Verdi. His soloists were Leontyne Price, Nan Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi. Mr. Tozzi walked away with the considerable honors, though Miss Price's exquisite and ethereal upper-scale pianissimos made a magical effect. Miss Merriman was adequate; Mr. Tucker, out of his element. Mr. Ormandy dominated the performance, availing himself of the combined Rutgers University Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus.

The Student Concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, on Feb. 18, had Jean Casadesus, pianist, for its solo-

Painter" and the D major Symphony of Brahms formed the remainder of the program.

This season the ... Jordan Hall subscription ... the Zimbler Sinfonietta, ... together. At the first, Feb. 20, ... the four pieces offered ... a decade old, two were ... and not one was ...

The most ... Peter Racine Fricker ... English horn and strings which, with Louis Speyer as soloist, received its first United States performance. I marveled that anyone could so gracelessly and colorlessly use the English horn as this young Briton has done: just monotonous, rhapsodic weavings, with little contrast of timbres. More skillful and attractive was Honegger's "Concerto da Camera" (1948), in which he contrasted flute and English horn against real string vivacities. For the Honegger the flute soloist was the estimable James Pappoutsakis, and that on English horn the same unexcelled Mr. Speyer.

The evening began with what very likely was the first concert performance in this country of Johann Bernhard Bach's animated Overture (Suite of Dances) in D major. This ... irable effect ... major and ... earers. Mr. ... eethoven, ... st, playing ... nole", was ... tra on Feb. ... e very sure ... ng personal ... lso played ... Maler" and ... "Die Frau ... unch came ... a Orches... e Mr. Or... n to lead ... Mr. Munch ... und effect ... g of the ... Symphony ... nbeau de ... phony No. ... and an excerpt from Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette". The splendid discipline and integrity of the Boston conductor were always apparent; the orchestra responded nobly.

Bach was Johann Sebastian's slightly elder second cousin (each of whom admired the other), and the music had been found in manuscript by Karl Geiringer, now of the Boston University music faculty.

There ... are novelties ... the next 2 ... concerts. March ... violin ... by the contemporary Italian, ... Federico Ghedini. ... this trivial, eclectic work of more-or-less moto perpetuo ... I wouldn't know, but what ... make of a piece which starts with a 12-tone row, soon is dealing with chords that sound like Brahms, and goes on in aimless buzzings thereafter? At any rate, Charles Munch gaily conducted it, with Joseph Silverstein, the Symphony's highly-talented newest and youngest member, as violin soloist. Vigor and enterprise they gave the piece in full.

Hess and Rubinstein

Piano playing on the highest level in recent weeks, here, has included a magnificent concert by Myra Hess at Symphony Hall, and one by Artur Rubinstein in the same auditorium, Mr. Rubinstein appearing in the Boston University Celebrity Series. On the same level, vocally, we have enjoyed soprano Hilde Gueden at a Statler Morning Musicale; the Concordia Choir from Minnesota, and Alfred Nash Patterson's superb Chorus Pro Musica in the Bach B minor Mass. Gerald Moore also has brightened the town with his extraordinary lecture-concert about the art of piano accompaniment. Mr. Moore is multifariously gifted. Had he not become a fine musician, and very likely the greatest of all accompanists today, he could have been a good comedian.

For some reason, that no one probably could explain, it has taken nearly 30 years for the Viola Concerto by Sir William Walton to enter the repertory of the Boston Symphony. But now that it has, occasional performance surely is in order, since it is a noble and beautiful work. Mr. Munch conducted it at the Symphony Hall concerts of March 15 and 16, with Joseph De Pasquale, the admirable first violist of the orchestra, as soloist. In every way this was a splendid performance.

New Walton Overture

The opening piece also was Walton, the "Johannesburg Festival Overture", written for the 70th anniversary festivities, last September, of the South African city of Johannesburg. It is a cute ... piece with frippery decora... of assorted percussion, harmonically bright, spicy, ingratiating and hard to keep ... her because, as Walton ... the score, it is very fa... the remainder of the concert: the overture and ... from "Tannhaeuser", the "Magic Fire" ... from "Die Walküre", and ... Rhine Journey out of "Goetterdämmerung".

One of the more unusual concerts of the season was ... chamber music by Hugo ... Levy, at Kresge Auditorium ... chusetts Institute ... March 15. Two long ... program: Mr. Kauder's ... Music" ... setting for ... and instrumental comb... James Joyce's po... title, and the Cham... Levy, Mr. ... of Boston ... players, ... Evelyna Zaza... soprano; Margaret Danford, ... soprano, and Richard Gilley, tenor. Though quite unlike in style, each of the two works

Boston Orchestra Plays Diamond Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Gino Cioffi, clarinettist. Carnegie Hall, March 20:

Symphony No. ... David Diamond
(First New York performance)
Clarinet Concerto, K. 622 ..... Mozart
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

There is no need to mince words about David Diamond's Symphony No. 6, which Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced to New York audiences in this concert for it is a sadly disappointing and uninteresting work. Composed between 1951 and 1954, it is dedicated to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, and the composer has written that it "is related stylistically and dynamically to my Psalm for orchestra (1936)".

The three-movement work is in cyclic form, its melodic material being derived from two themes of the first movement. These themes are not particularly striking or appealing on first hearing nor does the development add any facets of interest. The symphony's emotional moods are difficult to describe; except for some abrupt tempo and dynamic contrasts, the atmosphere seems neither this nor that. The scoring is also not distinctive, the main section of the first movement and the last movement being extremely noisy. On the whole, the orchestration sounded turgid.

The Mozart Clarinet Concerto followed like a breath of fresh air, and Mr. Cioffi, principal clarinettist of the orchestra, performed it with technical ease and tonal opulence, though emotional communication was sometimes lacking. The orchestra was a bit heavy-handed and the tempo too fast in the first movement, but the moving song of the second movement and the ... spirit of the final movement ... projected with simplicity. The ... Symphony is a speciality of the orchestra, and Mr. Munch whipped it into a fine frenzy in its torrential moments and never let its lyrical sections become maudlin. Needless to say, the orchestra sounded brilliant.

—F. M., Jr.

Boston Symphony
Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. ... S. 166,660
MAR 28 1957

Charles A. Sink Retires From Post With Music Unit

Special to The Blade

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 28—Retirement of Charles A. Sink as active administrator of the University of Michigan Musical Society and appointment of Gail W. Rector as executive director were announced today.

Mr. Rector will take over administrative duties performed for many years by Mr. Sink. Mr. Sink will continue as president of the board of directors. The change is effective Sept. 1.

Mr. Rector was born in North Platte, Neb., studied music in Chicago and was a member of the Chicago Civic Orchestra. He entered the University of Michigan in 1937 and was graduated in 1940. He continued post-graduate studies there.

He served as Mr. Sink's administrative assistant from 1945 to 1954 ... joined the staff of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He was appointed assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center in 1954.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

...arkevitch, Ormandy Conduct Boston Symphony as Guests

...—On March 8, 1957, just ... minus a day after David ... had completed his Sixth ... Florence, the score re... first performance by ... luscious—which Mr. Ormandy produces from the Philadelphia Orchestra.

He gave the first Boston perfor... ances of William Schuman's "Cred... dum", a fine score, very tricky wi... its cross-rhythms, and exceedin... melodic. Hindemith's "Matthias th...

The Bach Aria Group came ... Symphony Hall (in the Boston U... versity Celebrity Series) March ...

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Munch Introduces Overture by Walton

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. Carnegie Hall, March 23, 2:30:

"Johannesburg Festival Overture" ..... Walton
(First New York performance)
Viola Concerto ..... Walton
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

The magnificent performance of Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" that capped this concert tended to overshadow the first half, but there was much to enjoy in the Walton music and in Joseph de Pasquale's sensitive performance of the solo viola part in the concerto, with admirable assistance from his colleagues in the orchestra.

The "Johannesburg Festival Overture" is a very amusing work. Its substance is prevailingly of the "Luncheon Music" or Hollywood level and ...

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Metropolitan, Local Company Give Opera in Philadelphia

Philadelphia. — Winter performances of opera in Philadelphia took place at the Academy of Music with less regularity than of yore. However, on Jan. 23, the Philadelphia Grand Opera staged one of the country's few performances, this season, of Verdi's "Otello". Ramon Vinay gave a superb reading of the title role and Cesare Bardelli was a razor-keen Iago. Anna Marie Kuhn sang the music of Desdemona with power and assurance. Giuseppe Bamboschek exercised authority on the podium.

On Feb. 12, the Metropolitan brought its first performance of "Die Walküre" to the Academy in nine years. Dimitri Mitropoulos led a magnificent performance, lyric and dramatic by turn, with Margaret Harshaw in excellent form as Brünnhilde and Otto Edelmann a big-voiced but rather rigid Wotan. Blanche Thebom was the admirable Fricka. New here were Marianne Schech and Wolfgang Windgassen as Sieglinde and Siegmund. Both impressed as being well-routined, rather small-scale artists by true Wagnerian standards. Kurt Boehme, also new, was a rather mild Hunding.

On Feb. 14, just 50 years to the day since Farrar and the Metropolitan gave Philadelphia its first "Madama Butterfly", the Puccini opera was presented again at the Academy by the Philadelphia Grand Opera. Dorothy Kirsten sang Cio-Cio-San for the first time here, with admirable but not sensational results. The soprano took a very tenuous high D flat at her first entrance. John Alexander was a good-looking, believable Pinkerton and sang well indeed, while John Brownlee brought his mellowed art to the role of Sharpless. Eleanor Knapp was an unusually dramatic Suzuki, and Giuseppe Bamboschek provided a definitive reading of the score.

Madeira as Carmen

On Feb. 26, the Metropolitan presented its penultimate offering of the season with a performance of "Carmen". Jean Madeira was the rather wild-and-wooly gypsy, though she sang with plenitude of tone and spirit. Richard Tucker and Ettore Bastianini made José and Escamillo solid citizens—solid citizens who sang tellingly. Lucine Amara was a charming Micaëla, and Mr. Mitropoulos conducted well.

On March 15, the Philadelphia Grand Opera came across with the city's only "La Traviata" of the season. Dolores Mari replaced Beverly Sills at the last moment as Violetta, giving a smooth account of the title role. Jon Crain was a rather vehement Alfredo, and Louis Quilico won the evening's honors with a beautifully vocalized Germont père. Mr. Bamboschek conducted.

On March 19, the Metropolitan bade farewell of the season to Philadelphia, bringing "Il Trovatore" to honor the Academy of Music centennial celebration. It was in February, 1857, that the Academy housed its first opera performance — "Trovatore". Antonietta Stella and Irene Dalis made their Philadelphia debuts on this occasion, singing Leonora and Azucena. Miss Stella delighted with her trenchant, enthusiastically projected Leonora, while Miss Dalis proved a surprise, as she offered a very dramatic and convincing Azucena. Jussi Bjoerling was the clean-voiced Manrico, and Ettore Bastianini a handsome and resonant di Luna. Nicola Moscona was Ferrando, and Max Rudolf's tempos seemed singularly right. The audience lavished applause on the performance.

William Steinberg conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra on Jan. 18. The Pittsburgh maestro gave a masterly reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and also offered Brahms's "Academic Festival Overture" and Albéniz' "Iberia", orchestrated by Enrique Arbós. The conductor was warmly received by the Friday afternoon subscribers.

Rodgers Conducts Own Music

Richard Rodgers conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in a program of his own music on Jan. 22 at the Academy. Availing himself of the support of Margary Dickey, Clarama Turner, William Tabbert and John Russell, Mr. Rodgers gave a rousing account of a half dozen of his scores.

A tribute to the late Arturo Toscanini in the form of the Funeral Music from "Götterdämmerung", initiated the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra which marked Eugene Ormandy's return from his winter vacation. Mr. Ormandy also presented Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" and Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, the latter in the presence of the composer. The Brahms First Symphony completed the program.

Benno Moiseiwitsch was the soloist at the concerts Feb. 1 and 2. The pianist was heard in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, of which he gave a big-scale performance. New was Louis Gesensway's tone poem "Now Let the Night be Dark for all of Me". This mood picture, which leans towards Slavic brooding, was well received. Mr. Ormandy's phrasing of Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony was a delight.

Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 was the focal point of the Philadelphia Orchestra's programs of Feb. 8 and 9. The hour-long work was given a resplendent enfoldment and appreciated by many listeners. The rest of the program was labeled all-Viennese by Ormandy, which meant that one heard music by Mozart, Hellmesberger and Johann Strauss, Jr.

On Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Ormandy offered the "Manzoni" Requiem of Verdi. His soloists were Leontyne Price, Nan Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi. Mr. Tozzi walked away with the considerable honors, though Miss Price's exquisite and ethereal upper-scale pianissimos made a magical effect. Miss Merriman was adequate; Mr. Tucker, out of his element. Mr. Ormandy dominated the performance, availing himself of the combined Rutgers University Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus.

The Student Concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, on Feb. 18, had Jean Casadesus, pianist, for its soloist. He played with admirable effect Ravel's Concerto in G major and pleased his youthful hearers. Mr. Ormandy conducted Beethoven, Strauss and Mussorgsky.

Norman Carol, violinist, playing Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole", was the soloist with the orchestra on Feb. 22. His performance, while very sure and stylistic, lacked a strong personal stamp. Mr. Ormandy also played Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and a fantasy from Strauss's "Die Frau ohne Schatten".

On March 1, Charles Munch came to conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra for the first time, while Mr. Ormandy journeyed to Boston to lead the symphony up there. Mr. Munch made a splendid and profound effect with his musicianly shaping of the music of Albert Roussel's Symphony No. 3, Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin", Honegger's Symphony No. 2, and an excerpt from Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette". The splendid discipline and integrity of the Boston conductor were always apparent; the orchestra responded nobly.

Painter" and the D major Symphony of Brahms formed the remainder of the program.

This season the ... Jordan Hall subscription ... the Zimbler Sinfonietta, ... together. At the first, Feb. ... the four pieces offered w... a decade old, two were ... and not one was really ...

The most no... Racine Fricke ... English horn and strings which, with Louis Speyer as soloist, received its first United States performance. I marveled that anyone could so gracelessly and colorlessly use the English horn as this young Briton has done: just monotonous, rhapsodic weavings, with little contrast of timbres. More skillful and attractive was Honegger's "Concerto da Camera" (1948), in which he contrasted flute and English horn against real string vivacities. For the Honegger the flute soloist was the estimable James Pappoutsakis, and that on English horn the same unexcelled Mr. Speyer.

The evening began with what very likely was the first concert performance in this country of Johann Bernhard Bach's animated Overture (Suite of Dances) in D major. This Bach was Johann Sebastian's slightly elder second cousin (each of whom admired the other), and the music had been found in manuscript by Karl Geiringer, now of the Boston University music faculty.

There was no novelty in the next ... concerto, Martinu's Violin Concerto by the contemporary Italian, ... Chedini. In this trivial, eclectic world of more-or-less moto perpetuo ... I wouldn't know, but what ... make of a piece which starts with a 12-tone row, soon is dealing with chords that sound like Brahms, and goes on in aimless buzzings thereafter? At any rate, Charles Munch ... conducted it, with Joseph Silverstein, the Symphony's highly-talented newest and youngest member, as violin soloist. Vigor and enterprise they gave the piece in full.

Hess and Rubinstein

Piano playing on the highest level in recent weeks, here, has included a magnificent concert by Myra Hess at Symphony Hall, and one by Artur Rubinstein in the same auditorium, Mr. Rubinstein appearing in the Boston University Celebrity Series. On the same level, vocally, we have enjoyed soprano Hilde Gueden at a Statler Morning Musicale; the Concordia Choir from Minnesota, and Alfred Nash Patterson's superb Chorus Pro Musica in the Bach B minor Mass. Gerald Moore also has brightened the town with his extraordinary lecture-concert about the art of piano accompaniment. Mr. Moore is multifariously gifted. Had he not become a fine musician, and very likely the greatest of all accompanists today, he could have been a good comedian.

For some reason, that no one probably could explain, it has taken nearly 30 years for the Viola Concerto by Sir William Walton to enter the repertory of the Boston Symphony. But now that it has, occasional performance surely is in order, since it is a noble and beautiful work. Mr. Munch conducted it at the Symphony Hall concerts of March 15 and 16, with Joseph De Pasquale, the admirable first violist of the orchestra, as soloist. In every way this was a splendid performance.

New Walton Overture

The opening piece also was Walton, the "Johannesburg Festival Overture", written for the 70th anniversary festivities, last September, of the South African city of Johannesburg. It is a cute, dart piece, with frippery decorations of assorted percussion, harmonically bright, spicy, ingratiating and hard to keep together because, as Walton marks the score, it is very fast and ... the remainder of the concert: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser", the "Magic Fire" ... from "Die Walküre", and Strauss's Rhine Journey out of "Goetterdaemmerung".

One of the more unusual concerts of the season was that of chamber music by Hugo Kauder and ... Levy, at Kresge Auditorium, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, March 15. Two long ... program: Mr. Kauder's "... Music" ... setting for ... and instrumental combinations of James Joyce's poems ... and the Chamber ... Levy. Mr. ... of Boston ... players, ... Evelyna Zaccaretto, soprano; Margaret Danford, ... and Richard Gilley, tenor. Though quite unlike in style, each of the two works is a sadly disappointing and uninteresting work. Composed between 1951 and 1954, it is dedicated to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, and the composer has written that it "is related stylistically and dynamically to my Psalm for orchestra (1936)".

The three-movement work is in cyclic form, its melodic material being derived from two themes of the first movement. These themes are not particularly striking or appealing on first hearing nor does the development add any facets of interest. The symphony's emotional moods are difficult to describe; except for some abrupt tempo and dynamic contrasts, the atmosphere seems neither this nor that. The scoring is also not distinctive, the main section of the first movement and the last movement being extremely noisy. On the whole, the orchestration sounded turgid.

The Mozart Clarinet Concerto followed like a breath of fresh air, and Mr. Cioffi, principal clarinettist of the orchestra, performed it with technical ease and tonal opulence, though emotional communication was sometimes lacking. The orchestra was a bit heavy-handed and the tempo too fast in the first movement, but the moving song of the second movement and the ... spirit of the final movement ... projected with simplicity. The ... Symphony is a speciality of the orchestra, and Mr. Munch whipped it into a fine frenzy in its torrential moments and never let its lyrical sections become maudlin. Needless to say, the orchestra sounded brilliant. —F. M., Jr.

Boston Orchestra Plays Diamond Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Gino Cioffi, clarinettist. Carnegie Hall, March 20:

Symphony No. ... David Diamond
(First New York performance)
Clarinet Concerto, K. 622 ..... Mozart
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

There is no need to mince words about David Diamond's Symphony No. 6, which Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced to New York audiences in this concert, for it

Boston Symphony
Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. ... 166,660
MAR 30 1957

Charles A. Sink Retires From Post With Music Unit

Special to The Blade

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 28—Retirement of Charles A. Sink as active administrator of the University of Michigan Musical Society and appointment of Gail W. Rector as executive director were announced today.

Mr. Rector will take over administrative duties performed for many years by Mr. Sink. Mr. Sink will continue as president of the board of directors. The change is effective Sept. 1.

Mr. Rector was born in North Platte, Neb., studied music in Chicago and was a member of the Chicago Civic Orchestra. He entered the University of Michigan in 1937 and was graduated in 1940. He continued post-graduate studies there.

He served as Mr. Sink's administrative assistant from 1945 to 1954. He joined the staff of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He was appointed assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center in 1954.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

...kevitch, Ormandy Conduct ...ton Symphony as Guests

...n March 8, 1957, just ...us a day after David ... completed his Sixth ...lorence, the score re... ...irst performance by ...

...ments—a work of vigor and vitality. Leon Kirchner's Trio in Two Movements, featured technical perfection, of musical outfit. Their recital, of musical pianist (also director of the Institute), makes the ensemble a two-thirds lo... recent inclusion of Ward Davenny. ...cial at the Cleveland Institute. The West, played an alumni benefit re... from a tour of the South and Far... program which was a joy to hear. The Albeneri String Trio, returning ...weill, and Richard Rodgers were ex... cellently done and were more than enthusiastically received. The Cleveland Society for Strings, in its scholarship fund series, sponsored Zara Nelsova, cellist, in a recital, and the bravos rang loud and clear for her work. An outstanding contribution to the chamber-music field was made by the LaSalle Quartet of Cincinnati. This first-rate group has as its avocation the educating of very young musicians to the wonder of chamber music. They made it sound so intriguing —and so much fun—that the audience of children aged 6 to 12 was literally begging for more at the end of their afternoon concert at the Art Museum. Sponsored by the Musart Society, the LaSalle Quartet also gave an adult program which was a joy to hear. The Albeneri String Trio, returning from a tour of the South and Far West, played an alumni benefit recital at the Cleveland Institute. The recent inclusion of Ward Davenny, pianist (also director of the Institute), makes the ensemble a two-thirds lo... cal outfit. Their recital, of musical and technical perfection, featured Leon Kirchner's Trio in Two Movements—a work of vigor and vitality,

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

1957

Metropolitan, Local Company Give Opera in Philadelphia

Philadelphia. — Winter performances of opera in Philadelphia took place at the Academy of Music with less regularity than of yore. However, on Jan. 23, the Philadelphia Grand Opera staged one of the country's few performances, this season, of Verdi's "Otello". Ramon Vinay gave a superb reading of the title role and Cesare Bardelli was a razor-keen Iago. Anna Marie Kuhn sang the music of Desdemona with power and assurance. Giuseppe Bamboschek exercised authority on the podium.

On Feb. 12, the Metropolitan brought its first performance of "Die Walküre" to the Academy in nine years. Dimitri Mitropoulos led a magnificent performance, lyric and dramatic by turn, with Margaret Harshaw in excellent form as Brünnhilde and Otto Edelmann a big-voiced but rather rigid Wotan. Blanche Thebom was the admirable Fricka. New here were Marianne Schech and Wolfgang Windgassen as Sieglinde and Siegmund. Both impressed as being well-routined, rather small-scale artists by true Wagnerian standards. Kurt Boehme, also new, was a rather mild Hunding.

On Feb. 14, just 50 years to the day since Farrar and the Metropolitan gave Philadelphia its first "Madama Butterfly", the Puccini opera was presented again at the Academy by the Philadelphia Grand Opera. Dorothy Kirsten sang Cio-Cio-San for the first time here, with admirable but not sensational results. The soprano took a very tenuous high D flat at her first entrance. John Alexander was a good-looking, believable Pinkerton and sang well indeed, while John Brownlee brought his mellowed art to the role of Sharpless. Eleanor Knapp was an unusually dramatic Suzuki, and Giuseppe Bamboschek provided a definitive reading of the score.

Madeira as Carmen

On Feb. 26, the Metropolitan presented its penultimate offering of the season with a performance of "Carmen". Jean Madeira was the rather wild-and-wooly gypsy, though she sang with plenitude of tone and spirit. Richard Tucker and Ettore Bastianini made José and Escamillo solid citizens—solid citizens who sang tellingly. Lucine Amara was a charming Micaëla, and Mr. Mitropoulos conducted well.

On March 15, the Philadelphia Grand Opera came across with the city's only "La Traviata" of the season. Dolores Mari replaced Beverly Sills at the last moment as Violetta, giving a smooth account of the title role. Jon Crain was a rather vehement Alfredo, and Louis Quilico won the evening's honors with a beautifully vocalized Germont père. Mr. Bamboschek conducted.

On March 19, the Metropolitan bade farewell of the season to Philadelphia, bringing "Il Trovatore" to honor the Academy of Music centennial celebration. It was in February, 1857, that the Academy housed its first opera performance — "Trovatore". Antonietta Stella and Irene Dalis made their Philadelphia debuts on this occasion, singing Leonora and Azucena. Miss Stella delighted with her trenchant, enthusiastically projected Leonora, while Miss Dalis proved a surprise, as she offered a very dramatic and convincing Azucena. Jussi Bjoerling was the clean-voiced Manrico, and Ettore Bastianini a handsome and resonant di Luna. Nicola Moscona was Ferrando, and Max Rudolf's tempos seemed singularly right. The audience lavished applause on the performance.

William Steinberg conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra on Jan. 18. The Pittsburgh maestro gave a masterly reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and also offered Brahms's "Academic Festival Overture" and Albéniz' "Iberia", orchestrated by Enrique Arbós. The conductor was warmly received by the Friday afternoon subscribers.

Rodgers Conducts Own Music

Richard Rodgers conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in a program of his own music on Jan. 22 at the Academy. Availing himself of the support of Annamary Dickey, Claramae Turner, William Tabbert and John Russell, Mr. Rodgers gave a rousing account of a half dozen of his scores.

A tribute to the late Arturo Toscanini in the form of the Funeral Music from "Götterdämmerung", initiated the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra which marked Eugene Ormandy's return from his winter vacation. Mr. Ormandy also presented Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" and Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, the latter in the presence of the composer. The Brahms First Symphony completed the program.

Benno Moiseiwitsch was the soloist at the concerts Feb. 1 and 2. The pianist was heard in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, of which he gave a big-scale performance. New was Louis Gesensway's tone poem "Now Let the Night be Dark for all of Me". This mood picture, which leans towards Slavic brooding, was well received. Mr. Ormandy's phrasing of Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony was a delight.

Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 was the focal point of the Philadelphia Orchestra's programs of Feb. 8 and 9. The hour-long work was given a resplendent enfoldment and appreciated by many listeners. The rest of the program was labeled all-Viennese by Ormandy, which meant that one heard music by Mozart, Hellmesberger and Johann Strauss, Jr.

On Feb. 15 and 16, Mr. Ormandy offered the "Manzoni" Requiem of Verdi. His soloists were Leontyne Price, Nan Merriman, Richard Tucker, and Giorgio Tozzi. Mr. Tozzi walked away with the considerable honors, though Miss Price's exquisite and ethereal upper-scale pianissimos made a magical effect. Miss Merriman was adequate; Mr. Tucker, out of his element. Mr. Ormandy dominated the performance, availing himself of the combined Rutgers University Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra Chorus.

The Student Concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, on Feb. 18, had Jean Casadesus, pianist, for its soloist. He played with admirable effect Ravel's Concerto in G major and pleased his youthful hearers. Mr. Ormandy conducted Beethoven, Strauss and Mussorgsky.

Norman Carol, violinist, playing Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole", was the soloist with the orchestra on Feb. 22. His performance, while very sure and stylistic, lacked a strong personal stamp. Mr. Ormandy also played Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and a fantasy from Strauss's "Die Frau ohne Schatten".

On March 1, Charles Munch came to conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra for the first time, while Mr. Ormandy journeyed to Boston to lead the symphony up there. Mr. Munch made a splendid and profound effect with his musicianly shaping of the music of Albert Roussel's Symphony No. 3, Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin", Honegger's Symphony No. 2, and an excerpt from Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette". The splendid discipline and integrity of the Boston conductor were always apparent; the orchestra responded nobly.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

957

Munch Introduces Overture by Walton

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. Carnegie Hall, March 23, 2:30:

"Johannesburg Festival Overture" ..... Walton
(First New York performance)
Viola Concerto ..... Walton
"Ein Heldenleben" ..... Strauss

The magnificent performance of Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" that capped this concert tended to overshadow the first half, but there was much to enjoy in the Walton music and in Joseph de Pasquale's sensitive performance of the solo viola part in the concerto, with admirable assistance from his colleagues in the orchestra.

The "Johannesburg Festival Overture" is a very amusing work. Its substance is prevailingly of the "Luncheon Music" or Hollywood level and ...

Painter" and the D major Symphony of Brahms formed the remainder of the program.

This season the usual three Jordan Hall subscription concerts of the Zimbler Sinfonietta, ran close together. At the first, Feb. 20, two of the four pieces offered were less than a decade old, two were 18th-century, and not one was really familiar.

The most novel work was Peter Racine Fricker's Concertante for English horn and strings which, with Louis Speyer as soloist, received its first United States performance. I marveled that anyone could so gracelessly and colorlessly use the English horn as this young Briton has done: just monotonous, rhapsodic weavings, with little contrast of timbres. More skillful and attractive was Honegger's "Concerto da Camera" (1948), in which he contrasted flute and English horn against real string vivacities. For the Honegger the flute soloist was the estimable James Pappoutsakis, and that on English horn the same unexcelled Mr. Speyer.

The evening began with what very likely was the first concert performance in this country of Johann Bernhard Bach's animated Overture (Suite of Dances) in D major. This Bach was Johann Sebastian's slightly elder second cousin (each of whom admired the other), and the music had been found in manuscript by Karl Geiringer, now of the Boston University music faculty.

There was one novelty at the next Zimbler concert, March 6, the Violin Concerto by the contemporary Italian, Giorgio Federico Ghedini. Is this trivial, eclectic work of more-or-less moto perpetuo an opera? I wouldn't know, but what does one make of a piece which starts with a 12-tone row, soon is dealing with chords that sound like Brahms, and goes on in aimless buzzings thereafter? At any rate, Charles Munch guest conducted it, with Joseph Silverstein, the Symphony's highly-talented newest and youngest member, as violin soloist. Vigor and enterprise they gave the piece in full.

Hess and Rubinstein

Piano playing on the highest level in recent weeks, here, has included a magnificent concert by Myra Hess at Symphony Hall, and one by Artur Rubinstein in the same auditorium, Mr. Rubinstein appearing in the Boston University Celebrity Series. On the same level, vocally, we have enjoyed soprano Hilde Gueden at a Statler Morning Musicale; the Concordia Choir from Minnesota, and Alfred Nash Patterson's superb Chorus Pro Musica in the Bach B minor Mass. Gerald Moore also has brightened the town with his extraordinary lecture-concert about the art of piano accompaniment. Mr. Moore is multifariously gifted. Had he not become a fine musician, and very likely the greatest of all accompanists today, he could have been a good comedian.

For some reason, that no one probably could explain, it has taken nearly 30 years for the Viola Concerto by Sir William Walton to enter the repertory of the Boston Symphony. But now that it has, occasional performance surely is in order, since it is a noble and beautiful work. Mr. Munch conducted it at the Symphony Hall concerts of March 15 and 16, with Joseph De Pasquale, the admirable first violist of the orchestra, as soloist. In every way this was a splendid performance.

New Walton Overture

The opening piece also was Walton, the "Johannesburg Festival Overture", written for the 70th anniversary festivities, last September, of the South African city of Johannesburg. It is a cute, deft piece, with frippery decoration of assorted percussion, harmonically bright, spicy, ingratiating and hard to keep together because, as Walton marked the score, it is "very fast and capricious".

Wagner provided the remainder of the concert: the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser", the "Magic Fire" music from "Die Walkuere", and Siegfried's Rhine Journey out of "Goetterdaemmerung".

One of the more unusual concerts of the season was that of chamber music by Hugo Kauder and Ernst Levy, at Kresge Auditorium, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, March 15. Two long works made the program: Mr. Kauder's "Chamber Music", a setting for various vocal and instrumental combinations of James Joyce's poems of the same title, and the Chamber Symphony by Levy. Mr. Levy conducted a group of Boston Symphony players, and Polyna Zagareto, soprano; Margaret Danford, mezzo-soprano; and Richard Gilley, tenor. Though quite unlike in style, each of the two works

Boston SymphOrch
Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660
MAR 28 1957

Charles A. Sink Retires From Post With Music Unit

Special to The Blade

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 28—Retirement of Charles A. Sink as active administrator of the University of Michigan Musical Society and appointment of Gail W. Rector as executive director were announced today.

Mr. Rector will take over administrative duties performed for many years by Mr. Sink. Mr. Sink will continue as president of the board of directors. The change is effective Sept. 1.

Mr. Rector was born in North Platte, Neb., studied music in Chicago and was a member of the Chicago Civic Orchestra. He entered the University of Michigan in 1937 and was graduated in 1940. He continued post-graduate studies there.

He served as Mr. Sink's administrative assistant from 1945 to 1954, when he joined the staff of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He was appointed assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center in 1954.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

957

Boston Orchestra Plays Diamond Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Gino Cioffi, clarinettist. Carnegie Hall, March 20:

Symphony No. 6 ..... David Diamond
(First New York performance)
Clarinet Concerto, K. 622 ..... Mozart
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

There is no need to mince words about David Diamond's Symphony No. 6, which Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced to New York audiences in this concert, for it is a sadly disappointing and uninteresting work. Composed between 1951 and 1954, it is dedicated to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, and the composer has written that it "is related stylistically and dynamically to my Psalm for orchestra (1936)".

The three-movement work is in cyclic form, its melodic material being derived from two themes of the first movement. These themes are not particularly striking or appealing on first hearing nor does the development add any facets of interest. The symphony's emotional moods are difficult to describe; except for some abrupt tempo and dynamic contrasts, the atmosphere seems neither this nor that. The scoring is also not distinctive, the main section of the first movement and the last movement being extremely noisy. On the whole, the orchestration sounded turgid.

The Mozart Clarinet Concerto followed like a breath of fresh air, and Mr. Cioffi, principal clarinettist of the orchestra, performed it with technical ease and tonal opulence, though emotional communication was sometimes lacking. The orchestra was a bit heavy-handed and the tempo too fast in the first movement, but the moving song of the second movement and the cheerful spirit of the final movement were projected with simplicity. The Franck Symphony is a speciality of the orchestra, and Mr. Munch whipped it into a fine frenzy in its torrential moments and never let its lyrical sections become maudlin. Needless to say, the orchestra sounded brilliant. —F. M., Jr.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAY 1 1957

The World's Finest

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra failed to show up for the opening of the season next fall, there would be practically an atomic outcry throughout America. Yet that will happen if something isn't done soon on a broad, popular scale.

Now that the winter season is over and the Pops have assumed the green and fragrant stage of the Hall, it is easy to forget the Symphony's dire need. The Orchestra is the world's finest, isn't it? Somehow all these years it's muddled through whatever financial crises beset the organization. It won't be let down.

And so we go our way, dismissing the situation, confident that a backlog of wealthy patrons will insure the status. The orchestra is an institution. It exists; like Plymouth Rock, the State House dome and the swan boats on the Public Garden's pond, it was shaped to endure.

But if the Symphony can be considered a great cultural and human institution, in another sense it is an instrument, an instrument that no longer is guarded zealously by a select and privileged group. The day of the wealthy patron is over (taxes, the social revolution) or, at best, waning.

And like a machine the parts wear out and in time they must be replaced. The musician is a dedicated man, but it is awfully hard to remain dedicated on a musician's salary. There is no reason why the Boston Symphony must always be the world's finest. If we do not help the Symphony, and in turn those institutions supplying the Symphony with talent, there will be, in effect, another orchestra in autumns to come at Symphony Hall.

It will be called the Boston Symphony, but a patchwork approximation only. Apathy is the deadly rust that corrodes so delicate a machine. Now, at the start of the Pops season, is a good time to consider the mortality of the best, which must be forever renewed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 2 1957

A Conductor as a Treasure Hunter

THE MUSIC of our own century interprets the preoccupations and the concerns of the world we live in. We must play it and listen to it, learn about advanced aesthetic positions, new theories of harmony, and new principles of construction, but this acquaintance is not made instantaneously.

It is certainly necessary to have heard a very large number of works of greater or lesser significance to be able to discover a masterpiece on the day of its birth. Posterity usually sorts them out for us.

Life goes so quickly these days that it takes a conscious effort to avoid being outdistanced. If we wish to function as active human beings rather than remain passive spectators, we must present to our audiences what we consider important. . . .

Young musicians always want to create a movement at any cost and they always want to impose it on others. They try to do so with ardor and often with insolence, with the expectation of freeing themselves from a past they scorn and disdain, and without the smallest concern for the masters who also sought, struggled, and suffered.

Every creative force has its roots in the past but every composer finds his own language as he works. . . .

Be that as it may, it is our duty to bring out the young composers and to encourage them, while seeking to discover as best we can their true value. A conductor must be a treasure hunter. This is a duty he too often neglects but one that may gain him the greatest recognition in his own time. . . . Tomorrow's conductors will not have to envy their elders. It will be for them to forge the glory of composers still unknown.—From "I Am a Conductor," by CHARLES MUNCH. Copyright, 1956, by Charles Munch. Oxford University Press, New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

MAY 2 1957

BSO Receives Award for Record

BOSTON — Baron Charles de Pampelonne, Consul General of France in Boston, presented Dr. Charles Munch, on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francais, the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque for the RCA Victor recording of Ravel's complete "Daphnis and Chloe."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,915

MAY 2 1957

Social Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Strawberry Hill entertained over 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their wives on Sunday afternoon of this week at their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Cabot met their guests while sailing for Europe last summer aboard the "New Amsterdam." The musicians completed a very successful European tour last fall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

MAY 1 1957

BOSTON LEADERS DISCUSS TV IN EDUCATION—Featured in a special panel last night on WGBH-TV, Channel 2, in Cambridge, on the question "What is the place of television in education?" were, front, left to right, Dr. Abram L. Sachar, Brandeis University president; Harvard President Nathan M. Pusey, Ralph Lowell, trustee of the Lowell Institute; MIT President James R. Killian, Jr., and Perry T. Rathbone, director of the Museum of Fine Arts. Standing, left to right, the Rev. Thomas F. Fleming, assistant to the president of Boston College; Thomas S. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; B.U. President Harold C. Case; Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science; Harrison Keller, president of the New England Conservatory of Music; Northeastern University President Carl S. Ell, and Tufts University President Nils Y. Wessel.

La musique

Une première d'Henry Barraud à Boston

par Pierre DARGENS

LA soixante-seizième saison de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston s'est terminée sur la première audition du "Te Deum" d'Henri Barraud, directeur musical de l'Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion française, et une interprétation splendide de la IXème de Beethoven; pour les deux oeuvres, le maître Charles Münch s'était assuré les services de la Chorale Pro Musica, dirigée par M. Alfred Nash Patterson. Les solistes de la IXème étaient: Mariquita Moll, soprano; Martha Lipton, alto; John McCollum, ténor, et Mack Harrell, basse.

Le "Te Deum", écrit pour choeur à quatre voix, orchestre d'instruments à vent et contrebasses à cordes, est de facture moderne, d'exécution plutôt difficile, mais d'une musicalité certaine. Nous l'avons entendu seulement en répétition générale et les interruptions nécessitées par la mise au point finale du chef justement exigeant qu'est M. Münch ne nous permettent pas une vue d'ensemble très claire.

"La Neuvième" nous a procuré presque autant de plaisir à regarder M. Münch transmettre sa pensée par toutes les fibres de son corps (presque littéralement!) qu'à écouter la merveilleuse sonorité de l'Orchestre et celle — très agréable — des choeurs et solistes.

Quand on a, comme nous, entendu la Chorale Pro Musica seulement dans une église, et plus souvent dans Bach, on est un peu surpris par la qualité du son dans une salle de concerts; on a l'impression que les chanteurs — les femmes, surtout — "forcent" un peu, d'autant plus que l'Ode à la Joie est loin d'un murmure! Mais cette impression est atténuée largement par la souplesse et la discipline de cet ensemble.

FRANCE-AMERIQUE
5 Mai

France-Amérique
May 5, 1957

BOS

A Charles Münch le Grand Prix du Disque

A l'issue du concert donné le vendredi 26 avril, M. Charles de Pampelonne, Consul général de France, a remis à M. Charles Münch, au cours d'une cérémonie intime dans son studio de Symphony Hall, le diplôme du "Grand Prix du Disque" qui lui a été décerné pour son enregistrement de "Daphnis et Chloé" avec l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Le Grand Prix leur avait déjà été décerné l'année dernière pour leur enregistrement du "Roméo et Juliette" de Berlioz.

Cet enregistrement complet de "Daphnis et Chloé", de Ravel, a été fait en janvier 1955 par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston avec le concours des Choeurs du Conservatoire de la Nouvelle-Angleterre (étudiants et anciens élèves) dirigés par Robert Shaw en collaboration avec Lorna Cooke de Varon.

Charles Münch en France

A peine terminée sa saison bostonienne, M. Charles Münch est parti pour la France où il restera jusqu'au début de juillet. Il nous reviendra, alors, pour diriger le Festival de Berkshire à Tanglewood.

Bal Lafayette

Samedi soir a eu lieu le "Lafayette Ball" organisé par la League of Catholic Women au profit des oeuvres de l'Archevêché de Boston. Ce bal

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAY 1 - 1957

Top Level Panelists Explore Usage of Educational TV

BOSTON'S EDUCATIONAL TV LEADERS—Left to right, front: Pres. Abram L. Sachar, Brandeis; Pres. Nathan M. Pusey, Harvard; Ralph Lowell, president WGBH Educational Foundation; Pres. James R. Killian of M.I.T.; Perry T. Rathbone, director, Museum of Fine Arts; rear, Rev. Thomas F. Fleming, S.J., Boston College; Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Pres. Harold C. Case, Boston University; Bradford Washburn, director, Museum of Science; Harrison Keller, president, N.E. Conservatory of Music; Carl S. Ell, president, Northeastern University, and Nils Y. Wessell, president, Tufts University.

By MARY CREMMEN

"What is the Place of Television in Education?" was the subject for discussion last night by a distinguished group of leaders of Greater Boston educational and cultural institutions.

Ralph Lowell, trustee of the Lowell Institute and president of the WGBH Foundation was chairman of the special telecast marking the 2d anniversary of WGBH-TV.

Rev. Thomas Fleming S.J., executive assistant to the president of Boston College, opened the panel talk.

"In discussing television and education," he began, "I must compare it to what great books mean to education. Television can bring to a whole community the great teachers of the day. It is one of the most promising channels of communication that God has given us."

Thomas Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said he "would like to follow Fr. Fleming's thoughts" by emphasizing how television "can range the entire field of human knowledge. It can go anywhere in the world—reach into any situation." Stating that the Symphony Orchestra was "not primarily an educational institution," he stressed his pleasure "that we have still joined in the great development by having concerts televised."

Dr. Harold Case, president of Boston University, introduced the thought that television "is deceptive. We are tempted with the prospect that it could help the problems of the crowded classroom." He cautioned, "But it is no substitute for the face to face, teacher-student relationship. It would dilute effort and reduce discipline. Educational television works best when used as a supplementation."

"Television in general," Pres. Abram Sacher of Brandeis University, pointed out, "has given a fresh turn to the old phrase 'seeing is believing.' Our task in educational television is to turn that phrase to seeing is learning."

In his opening remarks, Dr. Nathan Pusey, president of Harvard University, declared, "The first obstacle we are up against is the phrase 'adult education' which seems to indicate that education should be completed by a certain time. Education," he went on, "is not something that a person is supposed to be through with at a definite point in his life. It should go from beginning to end." He declared the role of WGBH "is to contribute to the education of people all through their lives."

In the words of Dr. James Killian of M.I.T., educational TV "should feed the hungry and stimulate the appetite of the well fed."

Perry Rathbone, Director of the Museum of Fine Arts told how "museums have long awaited a visual means to present treasures entrusted to our care to a greater audience. To a museum, it is the answer to reaching the public beyond its doors."

Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is the only one in the country to be "wired throughout for telecasts from all its galleries," Rathbone summed up, "We are creating a museum without walls."

It was Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science who spoke of the ability of television to stimulate a viewer's curiosity "to learn things first hand. I feel for anyone—no matter how old," he said, "who has lost his desire to learn of the unknown."

Harrison Keller, President of the New England Conservatory of Music, lauded the way television had "given music back to sight." He pointed out "the peculiar advantage the television camera has over the concert-goer is mobility. We hope the camera will also be able to capture the personality of the performing artists."

President Carl Ell of Northeastern University believed educational television could be "the greatest aid to developing and bringing to fruition the American ideal of equal educational opportunity for all. When the other 250 educational channels approved by the FCC are properly used, we could raise the moral and mental level of our whole society."

When it came his turn to speak, Niles Wessel, president of Tufts University said "the most significant point he had heard made in the discussion concerned television's great challenge in the realm of continuing education. All of us in universities are concerned with what happens to our students when they leave us."

He went on to extol the advantages of closed circuit television, mentioning in particular its use by the American Medical Center. "Forty thousand saw a surgical procedure that would normally have been seen by a handful."

A semblance of a debate appeared underway when Dr. Pusey, first acknowledging the shortage of teachers, added television could never be a substitute. "The kind of teacher a machine can substitute," he stated flatly, "should not have a place in the classroom in the first place. It is the personality of the teacher in direct contact with the student that livens and makes the educational process come awake."

Replied Dr. Killian, "If television can help us bring good teachers to more students it will have performed a service."

[illegible] great teachers. Sachar [illegible] that "too much [illegible] should be placed on the personality. We must be sure we aren't seeking the teacher with a classic profile."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

MAY 12 1957

What People Talk About

Support of Boston Symphony Orchestra Means Preservation of Great Music

To the Editor—Many of us are gravely concerned with the financial plight of our great symphony orchestras, and specifically with that of our own Boston Symphony Orchestra. Is it possible that we cannot afford to preserve great music when we have achieved such splendid success in the preservation of master works in the sister arts—painting, sculpture, and rare books?

KELLER

Public spirited and generous citizens have by gifts and bequests provided large sums to purchase the finest master works of art, each one often costing many thousands of dollars, that they may be permanently enjoyed by us and future generations. It is an extraordinary fact that the score of the greatest musical masterpiece can be purchased for a few dollars; however, this copy of musical symbols recorded by our great composers, past and present, remains a dead language unless brought alive by the skilled musician.

The problem then is to maintain this indispensable instrument, the symphony orchestra, at a standard of perfection worthy of the music it recreates, and at the same time provides a satisfactory and dignified post for the performing musical artist, without whom this medium cannot continue. The present insecurity of this profession may well deter the finest talent from undertaking a career in this field, the lack of competent artists would soon be reflected in the quality of our symphonic performances and such a deterioration is not to be quickly corrected.

Making it possible for our citizens to hear live music in the concert hall is only one service contributed, for by continuous recordings, this music becomes available throughout the world. When will the great recording and broadcasting companies recognize their responsibilities and be more generous in sharing the vast profits which are gained from this source?

We hear about the prestige our orchestra brings to the City of Boston. If this is true, and who would question it, should we not expect a united effort on the part of every city enterprise to deserve this pride?

Under the leadership of Henry Cabot, chairman of the Symphony Board, distinguished and dedicated men who have recognized the need for positive action are giving their energy and resources to this cause, and I am hopeful that the press will use the power of its columns to assist those who without glory give so generously of themselves.

HARRISON KELLER,
President, New England Conservatory of Music.
Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
MAY 5 1957

"Hymn to
Best New

By CYR

Jean Martinon's "Hym
the best new score introdu
the Boston Symphony Or amount [illegible] position to this winter. To pick the more [illegible] Sir Will the Fifth [illegible] Sy phony No. 1 and Samuel and Dance of Vengeance

★

It would be possible to cho
each and any, on differe
the fine workmans

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN 1957

Boston Pops Opens Season; Symphony Plays Barraud Work

Boston. — The nonmusical may have their own dull ideas about the change of seasons, but musical Boston knows to the moment when spring begins in the town along the Charles. It is that precise instant when Arthur Fiedler raises his baton for the opening number of an opening Pops program at Symphony Hall. Spring in the year 1957 accordingly began at 8:30:45 Tuesday evening, April 30.

The first number, to carry through this fine-pointing of facts, was Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" March in D major, No. 1. The two most solid pieces of the evening were the Grieg Concerto, played nimbly by Ozan Marsh as keyboard soloist, with good support from Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra, and Ravel's "La Valse", also done notably well. Thereafter a miscellany of favorite Pops items, from the "Fledermaus" Overture to tunes of "My Fair Lady".

Beethoven's Ninth Heard

The Boston Symphony season ended on April 27, when Charles Munch conducted Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and gave the first United States performances of the "Te Deum, in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" by Henry Barraud. The chorus for both was the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared—and very well—by Alfred Nash Patterson. Soloists for the Beethoven work were Mariquita Moll, soprano; Martha Lipton, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

Barraud's work is interesting and very difficult, scored for chorus, winds and string basses, which gives a sense of mass effect, in which the instruments serve as foundation for the play of vocal lines. The texture is stark and austere, quasi-archaic with steady rhythmic progress and decided power.

Thanks to a Conference on the Creative Arts put on by Boston University, we have been privileged to see and hear Gian-Carlo Menotti's madrigal fable, "The Unicorn, the Gorgon and the Manticore" within less than a year after its premiere. This very individual work, seen in New York last January, came as climax to a musical program given in Kresge Auditorium of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, on May 4. (Boston University's own theatre was occupied with a special Conference production of Giraudoux's "The Enchanted".)

The New York Ballet Company danced it, wearing Robert Fletcher's original costumes, upon the bare Kresge stage.

This evening began with the student orchestra, conducted by able young Russell Stanger, giving the first performance of Wallingford Riegger's "Festival Overture", commissioned by the Conference. This is a buoyant, pomposo work, obviously "occasional" but excellent of its kind, wherein harsh harmony is juxtaposed with lush, almost romantic tunes. Rather more interesting was Alan Hovhaness' Prelude and Quadruple Fugue, a solid piece of work, and, like all of Hovhaness, semi-Oriental in character. Messrs. Riegger and Hovhaness were present and bowed to applause.

Allen Lannom, who conducted Menotti's work, also led the Choral Art Society in Poulenc's fiendishly difficult, unaccompanied Mass in G. The work of the evening truly reflected high credit upon all concerned.

Martinon Makes Debut

Jean Martinon, conductor of the Lamoureux Orchestra in Paris, proved a superb master of his art when he made his American debut, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on March 29.

He is, I suspect, as much a "musicians' conductor" as one with a definite appeal to the public. His technique is thorough and not in the least pedantic; he insists upon utmost care in detail, but he is not dry; his temperament obviously is passionate, but he does not go to emotional extremes nor is he an exhibitionist. Mr. Martinon was most warmly greeted by audiences and musicians alike.

His program included first American performances of his own "Hymn to Life", composed after the last war still am willing to have another go at it. (But will Mr. Munch or anyone else be interested in presenting it again?)

Soloists invariably are the frosting upon the symphonic cake, and [illegible] reasonable amount of [illegible] outstanding was [illegible] Haskil who, late in [illegible] seems to have taken [illegible] states by storm. As a marvelously gentle [illegible] pervasive musicality, [illegible] gave a memorable per[illegible] of the Beethoven C minor [illegible], at the Tuesday con[illegible], repeated her suc[illegible] of Liszt's D minor Concerto

[illegible] guest conductors, Mr. [illegible] already has been men[illegible] Markevitch, now a [illegible] rank master of the [illegible] enthralled his Bostor[illegible] I think, will welcome [illegible] more when he next re[illegible] as pleasant to have our [illegible] Pierre Monteux, back [illegible] handy, exchanging or[illegible] with Charles Mu[illegible] early March, gave [illegible] pleasure. [illegible] Mr. [illegible] home too fortunate [illegible] little as possible be[illegible]

[illegible] KOKOFIEFF [illegible] minimum of the music [illegible], but the minimum we[illegible] Second Piano Concerto, [illegible] and Juliet" Suite and the Second Violin Concerto. The late Russian was one of the first-line composers of the first half of the 20th Century. In future we ought to hear more of his music—[illegible] not [illegible] the familiar pieces. [illegible] Second Piano Concerto, for example, is little played, but it is a large and appealing work. There is no reason whatever, save, perhaps, the reluctance of pianists to cope with its difficulties—why it should not become a favorite item.

What of the state of the union, which is to say the state of the Orchestra? Mr. Munch now has been with us eight seasons. He is still respected, still esteemed, still admired, still attacked by some for his preponderance of French music. He is a fine musician and a leader of authority. But he can be careless, and that carelessness has never been more in evidence than during his coarse performance (on Friday afternoon, at least), of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and his unaccountably slipshod and superficial Wagner performances in March.

With Bach, as in the case of the "St. Matthew" Passion, Munch is a different man and musician altogether, dedicated and scrupulous. If only he would not allow himself to be careless on occasion, he would be even more cherished than he is, and surely he is cherished by this musical community.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,535
MAY 18 1957

Saturday Chat

By Philip S. Marston

LOWELL, May 18—I suppose I can qualify as a veteran concert goer. At least I have been a regular attendant at the Friday concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra for something like 40 years. In fact my experience goes back to the old Music Hall days, when as a student I occasionally joined the seekers of "rush" seats which you could get if you stood in line on the sidewalk and were not beyond a certain mark in the wall.

On the whole, I think it has done me good. To be sure a lot of things they play still bore me stiff, and once in a while a selection seems to me deplorable enough to be called an insult to the audience. There was one of those this season, within a few weeks, but I won't specify because I might be sued for libel if I did.

However, a long experience has brought me to see worth in what was, to me, just dull stuff. I have learned to love the symphonies of Johannes Brahms, but I remember when they were so little liked that one eminent Boston critic is said to have remarked that the exits at Symphony Hall should have been marked "This way out in case of Brahms." (He told me once that he never said any such thing.)

As I grow older I find it more and more difficult to put names to perfectly familiar music. I know I've heard them and like them—but is it Beethoven's fourth, or eighth, or is it, maybe, Mozart, or Haydn? I still loathe most "modern" compositions, because I want a symphony to please my ear rather than torture it. I dislike dissonance in general, and abominate raging cacophony which sounds like lunacy in a boiler-factory, or bedlam in the nursery. It's ugly, but is it music?

Of course I'm told that this only shows my banal ignorance—often by people who really don't like the stuff any more than I do, but wish to pretend they love it because that will set them apart and prove that they're in the know. They applaud wildly when my inclination is to hiss and boo. They will call a composer who has just displeased, or disgusted, nine-tenths of the audience, to come to the platform and take a bow, not once but two or three times. I often think that Boston audiences are the politest people on earth, and I suppose it is really virtuous of them because it makes the composer feel good. Even if you haven't had a good time, say so, anyhow. One is taught this even in early childhood when one goes to juvenile parties and has a perfectly lousy time. Toujours la politesse! Lies in such cases are white lies—but one does not need to be so rapturously enthusiastic about it. There used to be a girl who sat back of me and the worse the music was the louder she clapped her hands and crowed. She was what they used to call a "flapper"—the kind of teen-ager who swoons at the mention of Elvis Presley. Far from me, it's a pose. Rather a pretty girl, too. But many's the time I yearned to throttle her. When you get to my age, you get to be a curmudgeon.

I know that some of the most eminent composers were hissed and booed when their most celebrated masterpieces were first played. Innovations are always condemned by the conservatives. If they end by pleasing the public there's a good reason. Nobody today sneers at Beethoven as a mad young innovator or at Richard Wagner, or at many another who was denounced at the first hearing of his works. They fought their way to acceptance—but it is because they had the real stuff in them. You can't maintain that every new shocker who comes along is going to do the same. Dissonance and discord have their place, but it is mainly when they rush in that harmony shall be prized. I still believe that real music is a concord of sweet sounds, rather than a discord of sour ones. Deliberately contrived ugliness does not become beauty merely because it is contrived, no matter how ingeniously. To be great music, the music must do more than merely shock you by its novelty.

Great efforts have been made to raise the public's musical taste to higher levels, notably by Arthur Fiedler with his Esplanade concerts, Boston "Pops" and other similar things. I wonder with how much success? Is it revealed in the currently popular "recordings" with which every radio station fills the gaps between its feature programs? I suppose they have to keep something going all the time, but is there nothing better than drab interludes of nauseating and repetitious jazz of the trashiest kind? Most of it seems to me perfectly terrible, and you wonder why anybody ever recorded it in the first place. But an army of disc-jockeys seem to assume that this is what the public wants and will lap up all day long as a kitten laps up cream. They may be right, but I hate to believe it. If it's true, the education of popular taste has yet a long way to go. And those who put on even the most popular shows, whether on radio or television, have a lot to answer for. The entertainment field is broader today than it ever has been in all human history, and what [illegible] of it? I'm afraid we get a die[illegible] purveying the appropriate amount of the essential vitamins, especially in the field of music. But I have undoubtedly said too much and perhaps have proved only that I'm just one more curmudgeon. I crave your pardon—and good night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
9 1957

Munch Honored For Recording

An informal ceremony following the last Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Baron Charles de-Pampelonne, Consul General of France in Boston, presented Dr. Charles Munch with the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque.

The presentation was made on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francaise in recognition of his recording of Ravel's complete "Duphnis and Chloe" with the orchestra on Jan. 1955. The Orchestra, directed by Doctor Munch, was assisted by the New England Conservatory and Alumnae Chorus conducted by [illegible] Shaw.

Dr. Munch [illegible] left for France and will return in July for the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 78,029
MAY 21 1957

JOHN HERSEY TO GET HARTT SCHOOL HONOR

HARTFORD, May 21 — The Hartt college of music announced yesterday that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 13,468
MAY 21 1957

HARTT SCHOOL HONORS JOHN HERSEY JUNE 6

HARTFORD, May 20 — The Hartt college of music announced today that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 28,235
MAY 21 1957

BSO's Richard Burgin To Get Honorary Degree

HARTFORD, Conn. (UP) — The Hartt College of Music announced here that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

MAY 5 1957

"Hymn to ... Best New ...

By CYRUS ...

Jean Martinon's "Hymn ... the best new score introduced ... the Boston Symphony Orches... amount ... competition for the ... the winner. To pick the next ... more difficult. Sir William ... the Fifth Symphony by Walter ... phony No. 1 and Samuel Barber ... and Dance of Vengeance, all me...

★ ★ ★

It would be possible to choose of Wa... each and any, on different against ... the fine workmanship polish,

...ugato and Finale—and one of its two themes is an unusual 12-tone motive, absolutely symmetrical, containing all semi-tones of the scale, and notable for the fact that but one interval is dissonant. I could have wished for a little more forward motion, and greater individuality between Jig, Fugato and Finale. It was hard to tell where one of these sections ended and the next began. Mr. Kornsand was warmly greeted for his music, which is most agreeable and refined and not without power.

"St. Matthew Passion"

At the symphony concerts of April 18 and 20, Charles Munch presented the opening chorus and most of Part Two of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion. This followed his custom, at Easter, of conducting either the "St. Matthew" or the "St. John" passions. As always with Bach, Mr. Munch was a dedicated artist, and these performances were remarkable for power and reverence and a finely integrated style.

The excellent choruses were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. This year the tone was heavier than usual and did full

(Continued on page 31)

...Philosophies in "Faust"

...William E. Smith, ... former music ... Evening ... Ledger ...

WILLIAM E. SMITH

Los Angeles.—Claude Lapham, his composer and arranger, died in Hollywood studied at Washington Mr. Lapham, the Institute of Musical Art, and the Juilliard School of Music. University, he worked with the Century-Fox, M-G-M, Paramount and Universal. Paramount did extensive research on music staffs of Hollywood. In 1934 he received a gold medal from the Japanese Government for his contributions to Japanese music. "History of Japanese Music," and "Scoring for the Modern Dance Orchestra."

...willing to have another ... (But will Mr. Munch ... be interested in pre...)

...ariably are the frost... ...symphonic cake, and ...easonable amount of ...t outstanding was ...Haskil who, late in ...ems to have taken ...ates by storm. As a ...marvelously gentle ...ervasive musicality, ...ve a memorable per... ...Beethoven C minor ...t the Tuesday con... ...repeated her suc... ...D minor Concerto

...conductors, Mr. ...ty has been men... ...arkevitch, now ... ...k master of the ...thralled his Bostor... ...ink, will welcome ...when he next re... ...asant to have our ...e Monteux, ban... ...exchanging or... ...arles Mu... ...March, ...sure. ... ...e too fortunate ...as possible be...

...IEFF

...m of the music ...e minimum wa... ...Piano Concerto, ...liet" Suite and

...the Second Violin Concerto. The late Russian was one of the first-line composers of the first half of the 20th Century. In future we ought to hear more of his music—not only the familiar pieces. Her Second Piano Concerto, for example, is little played, but it is a large and appealing work. There is no reason whatever—save, perhaps, the reluctance of pianists to cope with its difficulties—why it should not become a favorite item.

What of the state of the union, which is to say the state of the Orchestra? Mr. Munch now has been with us eight seasons. He is still respected, still esteemed, still admired, still attacked by some for his preponderance of French music. He is a fine musician and a leader of authority. But he can be careless, and that carelessness has never been more in evidence than during his coarse performance (on Friday afternoon, at least), of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and his unaccountably slipshod and superficial Wagner performances in March.

With Bach, as in the case of the "St. Matthew" Passion, Munch is a different man and musician altogether, dedicated and scrupulous. If only he would not allow himself to be careless on occasion, he would be even more cherished than he is, and surely he is cherished by this musical community.

his son. "Hymn to Life" runs in three connected movements — Prelude, Perpetual Motion, and Hymn—and it is music of high exuberance, written with enormous skill both of construction and orchestral scoring. There is constant forward motion, and while the rhythmic patterns are likely complex in many pages, complexity never gets in the way of musical flow. His use of dissonance—and there is much and strong—is actually very clever, for it serves to increase emotional tension. The brass chorale of the Hymn is an example. This is a large work, in instruments, dimensions and effect.

The week following, Charles Munch returned to the stand, to give the first performance of the "Metamorphosis" by Emil Kornsand, member of the orchestra's first violin section, and to revive Dukas's "La Peri" after a local silence of 22 years. Isaac Stern, that superlative artist of the violin, contributed gorgeous solo performances of Mozart's G major Concerto (K. 216) and the Second Concerto, in G minor, by Prokofieff.

"Metamorphosis" runs in six connected sections — Recitative, Air,

...ward unceasingly, the "Hymn to Life" deserves repetition until we have had opportunity really to know it well.

Martinson, both as conductor and composer, produced much, much more than, for one, had expected. He came here little known, an able man evidently, but seemingly nothing special. He turned out to be a very special sort of conductor and composer, among the best in each field. We should hear much more of him.

Despite some programs which were frankly dull, the season was prevailingly interesting, and, without resorting to the dullnesses of statistics, I think the new music was of generally high standard. Probably the new piece worst-liked was David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. Seldom have I heard so much vituperative audience comment as upon this. It was not the best Diamond, to be sure, and it certainly was not ingratiating music. But I apparently disliked it less than most people, and I

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly — Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAY 9 1957

Dr. Munch Honored For Recording

In an informal ceremony following the last Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Baron Charles de Pampelonne, Consul General of France in Boston, presented Dr. Charles Munch with the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque.

The presentation was made on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francaise in recognition of his recording of Ravel's complete "Duphnis and Chloe" with the orchestra, on Jan. 1955. The Orchestra, directed by Doctor Munch, was assisted by the New England Conservatory and Alumnae Chorus conducted by Roger Shaw.

Dr. Munch has left for France and will return in July for the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 78,029

MAY 21 1957

JOHN HERSEY TO GET HARTT SCHOOL HONOR

HARTFORD, May 21 — The Hartt college of music announced yesterday that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,585

MAY 18 1957

Saturday Chat

By Philip S. Marston

LOWELL, May 18—I suppose I can qualify as a veteran concert goer. At least I have been a regular attendant at the Friday concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra for something like 40 years. My experience goes back to the old Music Hall days, when as a student I occasionally joined the seekers of "rush" seats which you could get if you stood in line on the sidewalk and were not beyond a certain mark in the wall.

On the whole, I think it has done me good. To be sure a lot of things they play still bore me stiff, and once in a while a selection seems to me deplorable enough to be called an insult to the audience. There was one of those this season, within a few weeks, but I won't specify because I might be sued for libel if I did.

However, a long experience has brought me to see worth in what was, to me, just dull stuff. I have learned to love the symphonies of Johannes Brahms, but I remember when they were so little liked that one eminent Boston critic is said to have remarked that the exits at Symphony Hall should have been marked "This way out in case of Brahms." (He told me once that he never said any such thing.)

As I grow older I find it more and more difficult to put names to perfectly familiar music. I know I've heard them and like them but is it Beethoven's fourth, or eighth, or is it, maybe, Mozart, or Haydn? I still loathe most "modern" compositions, because I want a symphony to please my ear rather than torture it. I dislike dissonance in general, and abominate raging cacophony which sounds like lunacy in a boiler-factory, or bedlam in the nursery. It's ugly, but is it music?

Of course I'm told that this only shows my banal ignorance—often by people who really don't like the stuff any more than I do, but wish to pretend they love it because that will set them apart and prove that they're in the know. They applaud wildly when my inclination is to hiss and boo. They will call a composer who has just displeased, or disgusted, nine-tenths of the audience, to come to the platform and take a bow, not once but two or three times. I often think that Boston audiences are the politest people on earth, and I suppose it is really virtuous of them because it makes the composer feel good. Even if you haven't had a good time, say so, anyhow. One is taught this even in early childhood when one goes to juvenile parties and has a perfectly lousy time. Toujours la politesse! Lies in such cases are white lies—but one does not need to be so rapturously enthusiastic about it. There used to be a girl who sat back of me and the worse the music was the louder she clapped her hands and crowed. She was what they used to call a "flapper"—the kind of teen-ager who swoons at the mention of Elvis Presley. Far from me, it's a pose. Rather a pretty girl, too. But many a the time I wanted to throttle her. When you get to my age, you get to be a curmudgeon.

I know that some of the most eminent composers were hissed and booed when their most celebrated masterpieces were first played. Innovations are always condemned by the conservatives. If they end by pleasing the public there's a good reason. Nobody today sneers at Beethoven as a mad young innovator or at Richard Wagner, or at many another who was denounced at the first hearing of his works. They fought their way to acceptance—but it is because they had the real stuff in them. You can't maintain that every new shocker who comes along is going to do the same. Dissonance and discord have their place, but it is mainly when they rush in that harmony shall be prized. I still believe that real music is a concord of sweet sounds, rather than a discord of sour ones. Deliberately contrived ugliness does not become beauty merely because it is contrived, no matter how ingeniously. To be great music, the music must do more than merely shock you by its novelty.

Great efforts have been made to raise the public's musical taste to higher levels, notably by Arthur Fiedler with his Esplanade concerts, Boston "Pops" and other similar things. I wonder with how much success? Is it revealed in the currently popular "recordings" with which every radio station fills the gaps between its feature programs? I suppose they have to keep something going all the time, but is there nothing better than drab interludes of nauseating and repetitious jazz of the trashiest kind? Most of it seems to me perfectly terrible, and you wonder why anybody ever recorded it in the first place. But an army of disc-jockeys seem to assume that this is what the public wants and will lap up all day long as a kitten laps up cream. They may be right, but I hate to believe it. If it's true, the education of popular taste has yet a long way to go. And those who put on even the most popular shows, whether on radio or television, have a lot to answer for. The entertainment field is broader today than it ever was before in all human history, and what [illegible] of it? I'm afraid we get a die-[illegible] on purveying the appropriate amount of the essential vitamins, especially in the field of music. I have undoubtedly said too much and perhaps have proved only that I'm just one more curmudgeon. I crave your pardon—and good night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 13,468

MAY 21 1957

HARTT SCHOOL HONORS JOHN HERSEY JUNE 6

HARTFORD, May 20 — The Hartt college of music announced today that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 28,235

MAY 21 1957

BSO's Richard Burgin To Get Honorary Degree

HARTFORD, Conn. (UP) — The Hartt College of Music announced here that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

MAY 5 1957

"Hymn to Life" by Martinon Best New Score at Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

Jean Martinon's "Hymn to Life," in my belief, was the best new score introduced during the 76th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It had a certain amount of competition for the place, but it looks like the winner. To pick the next best new work is much more difficult. Sir William Walton's Cello Concerto, the Fifth Symphony by Walter Piston, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1 and Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" all merit consideration.

★ ★ ★

It would be possible to choose each and any, on different grounds: the fine workmanship of Walton in setting off the cello against the orchestra; the mature polish, brevity and concentrated substance of Piston's Fifth; the individuality and skill and feeling of Smit's maiden effort at the symphony, and the towering drama of Barber's revised ballet music. I find it virtually impossible to choose one over another.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS

Yet the first place can be filled only by Martinon's "Hymn to Life," a work head and shoulders over everything else. There is a formidable modern technic here, a rhythmic drive and an emotional intensity which are extraordinary. Though the scoring is oftentimes heavy, it is neither thick nor confused, clarity reigns and all moves forward unceasingly. The "Hymn to Life" deserves repetition until we have had opportunity really to know it well.

Martinson, both as conductor and composer produced much, much more than I, for one, had expected. He came here little known, an able man, evidently, but seemingly nothing special. He turned out to be a very special sort of conductor and composer, among the best in each field. We should hear much more of him.

Despite a few programs which were frankly dull, the season was prevailingly interesting, and, without resorting to the dullnesses of statistics, I think the new music was of generally high standard. Probably the new piece worst-liked was David Diamond's Sixth Symphony. Seldom have I heard so much vituperative audience comment as upon this. It was not the best Diamond, to be sure, and it certainly was not ingratiating music. But I apparently disliked it less than most people, and I still am willing to have another go at it. (But will Mr. Munch or anyone else be interested in presenting it again?)

Soloists invariably are the frosting upon the symphonic cake, and we had our reasonable amount of frosting. Most outstanding was pianist Clara Haskil who, late in her career, seems to have taken the United States by storm. As a pianist of a marvelously gentle legato and a pervasive musicality, Miss Haskil gave a memorable performance of the Beethoven C minor Concerto, and, at the Tuesday concert following, repeated her success in Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466).

Of the guest conductors, Mr Martinon already has been mentioned. Igor Markevitch, now a truly first rank master of the baton, again enthralled his Boston public, who, I think, will welcome him even more when he next returns. It was pleasant to have our old friend Pierre Monteux back. Eugene Ormandy, exchanging orchestras with Charles Munch for a week in early March, gave us unqualified pleasure. Of Mr. Golschmann's none too fortunate visit, let as little as possible be said.

PROKOFIEFF

We had a minimum of the music of Prokofieff, but the minimum was a joy—the Second Piano Concerto, the "Romeo and Juliet" Suite and the Second Violin Concerto. The late Russian was one of the first-line composers of the first half of the 20th Century. In future we ought to hear more of his music—and not alone the familiar pieces. The Second Piano Concerto, for example, is little played, but it is a large and appealing work. There is no reason whatever—save, perhaps, the reluctance of pianists to cope with its difficulties—why it should not become a favorite item.

What of the state of the union, which is to say the state of the Orchestra? Mr. Munch now has been with us eight seasons. He is still respected, still esteemed, still admired, still attacked by some for his preponderance of French music. He is a fine musician and a leader of authority. But he can be careless, and that carelessness has never been more in evidence than during his coarse performance (on Friday afternoon, at least), of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and his unaccountably slipshod and superficial Wagner performances in March.

With Bach, as in the case of the "St. Matthew" Passion, Munch is a different man and musician altogether, dedicated and scrupulous. If only he would not allow himself to be careless on occasion, he would be even more cherished than he is, and surely he is cherished by this musical community.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAY 9 1957

Dr. Munch Honored For Recording

In an informal ceremony following the last Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Baron Charles de-Pampelonne, Consul General of Frances in Boston, presented Dr. Charles Munch with the 1956-57 Grand Prix du Disque.

The presentation was made on behalf of the Academie du Disque Francaise in recognition of his recording of Ravel's complete "Duphnis and Chloe" with the orchestra on Jan. 1955. The Orchestra, directed by Doctor Munch, was assisted by the New England Conservatory and Alumnae Chorus conducted by Robert Shaw.

Dr. Munch has left for France and will return in July for the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 78,029

MAY 21 1957

JOHN HERSEY TO GET HARTT SCHOOL HONOR

HARTFORD, May 21 — The Hartt college of music announced yesterday that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,535

MAY 18 1957

Saturday Chat

By Philip S. Marden

LOWELL, May 18—I suppose I can qualify as a veteran concert goer. At least I have been a regular attendant at the Friday concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra for something like 40 years. In fact my experience goes back to the old Music Hall days, when as a student I occasionally joined the seekers of "rush" seats which you could get if you stood in line on the sidewalk and were not beyond a certain mark in the wall.

On the whole, I think it has done me good. To be sure a lot of things they play still bore me stiff, and once in a while a selection seems to me deplorable enough to be called an insult to the audience. There was one of those this season, within a few weeks, but I won't specify because I might be sued for libel if I did.

However, a long experience has brought me to see worth in what was, to me, just dull stuff. I have learned to love the symphonies of Johannes Brahms, but I remember when they were so little liked that one eminent Boston critic is said to have remarked that the exits at Symphony Hall should have been marked, "This way out in case of Brahms." (He told me once that he never said any such thing.)

As I grow older I find it more and more difficult to put names to perfectly familiar music. I know I've heard them and like them—but is it Beethoven's fourth, or eighth, or is it, maybe, Mozart, or Haydn? I still loathe most "modern" compositions, because I want a symphony to please my ear rather than torture it. I dislike dissonance in general, and abominate raging cacophony which sounds like lunacy in a boiler-factory, or bedlam in the nursery. It's ugly, but is it music?

Of course I'm told that this only shows my banal ignorance—often by people who really don't like the stuff any more than I do, but wish to pretend they love it because that will set them apart and prove that they're in the know. They applaud wildly when my inclination is to hiss and boo. They will call a composer who has just displeased, or disgusted, nine-tenths of the audience, to come to the platform and take a bow, not once but two or three times. I often think that Boston audiences are the politest people on earth, and I suppose it is really virtuous of them because it makes the composer feel good. Even if you haven't had a good time, say so, anyhow. One is taught this even in early childhood when one goes to juvenile parties and has a perfectly lousy time. Toujours la politesse! Lies in such cases are white lies—but one does not need to be so rapturously enthusiastic about it. There used to be a girl who sat back of me and the worse the music was the louder she clapped her hands and crowed. She was what they used to call a "flapper"—the kind of teen-ager who swoons at the mention of Elvis Presley. Take it from me, it's a pose. Rather a pretty girl, too. But many's the time I yearned to throttle her. When you get to my age, you get to be a curmudgeon.

I know that some of the most eminent composers were hissed and booed when their most celebrated masterpieces were first played. Innovations are always condemned by the conservatives. If they end by pleasing the public there's a good reason. Nobody today sneers at Beethoven as a mad young innovator or at Richard Wagner, or at many another who was denounced at the first hearing of his works. They fought their way to acceptance—but it is because they had the real stuff in them. You can't maintain that every new shocker who comes along is going to do the same. Dissonance and discord have their place, but it is mainly when they rush in that harmony shall be prized. I still believe that real music is a concord of sweet sounds, rather than a discord of sour ones. Deliberately contrived ugliness does not become beauty merely because it is contrived, no matter how ingeniously. To be great music, the music must do more than merely shock you by its novelty.

Great efforts have been made to raise the public's musical taste to higher levels, notably by Arthur Fiedler with his Esplanade concerts, Boston "Pops" and other similar things. I wonder with how much success? Is it revealed in the currently popular "recordings" with which every radio station fills the gaps between its feature programs? I suppose they have to keep something going all the time, but is there nothing better than drab interludes of nauseating and repetitious jazz of the trashiest kind? Most of it seems to me perfectly terrible, and you wonder why anybody ever recorded it in the first place. But an army of disc-jockeys seem to assume that this is what the public wants and will lap up all day long as a kitten laps up cream. They may be right, but I hate to believe it. If it's true, the education of popular taste has yet a long way to go. And those who put on even the most popular shows, whether on radio or television, have a lot to answer for. The entertainment field is broader today than it ever has been in all human history, and what they are making of it? I'm afraid we get a die that is far from purveying the appropriate amount of the essential vitamins, especially in the field of music. And I have undoubtedly said too much and perhaps have proved only that I'm just one more curmudgeon. I crave your pardon—and good night!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 13,468

MAY 21 1957

HARTT SCHOOL HONORS JOHN HERSEY JUNE 6

HARTFORD, May 20 — The Hartt college of music announced today that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 28,235

MAY 21 1957

BSO's Richard Burgin To Get Honorary Degree

HARTFORD, Conn. (UP) — The Hartt College of Music announced here that it will award three honorary degrees at its 17th annual commencement June 6.

The degree of doctor of music will be conferred on Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the music department at the University of California. Boyden will be the first Hartt alumnus to receive an honorary degree.

Author John Hersey of Southport, Conn., will receive an honorary doctor of fine arts degree. He will give the principal address.

BLANK PAGE

370

New England
Box 2078, Boston

Morn
BOST
Indep
Circ.
APR

Fiedler Where

By CYR

"We had a
South America
at different tim had to re-arra
ing hours, me

"We" m
Arthur Fie have just weeks in Bue
Fiedler was g
Argentinian
chestra. Bosto
tive lying mu
fice at Sympho
last-minute de
of the 72d
Tuesday nigh

"Of course,
America man
continued, "b ducted there
I discovered say from 2:30
noon, and fro
Next, their "m concerts, as th drink a lot
there—begin concerts beg eat well bef
hearsal time.
fore concerts.
ale had to be p
arranged.

"They're hic warm, friendl took me. To for us. What seekers they went, it was your autograp

"Originally
duct at the To run by the c for both oper a handsome may have rea change of ma difficulty betw ment and the
has been a st be any music
this season.

"Consequent
stead to cond
National Rad
I was very gl would have lik in the Teatro concerts in the of the Univer

"The Radio are free, but to line up at get tickets, a at the Unive on time for se served. The about 110 me
the Boston Sy although a relaxed spirit say I drill seemed to very will

"You fin generation trians and tinian musi especially you'd find wind instrum

New England
Box 2078, Bos

Ame
BOST
Inde
Circ
APR 2

Co
Fie
the in Sym
night.
from S

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

APR 26 1957

Fiedler Back From Buenos Aires, Where He Led Radio Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

"We had a wonderful trip to South America, but they do things at different times of the day, so I had to re-arrange my life—working hours, mealtimes, everything."

"We" meant Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler and his wife, who have just returned from three weeks in Buenos Aires where Mr. Fiedler was guest conductor of the Argentinian National Radio Orchestra. Boston's most famous native living musician sat in his office at Symphony Hall, working on last-minute details for the opening of the 72d season of Pops next Tuesday night.

"Of course, I've visited South America many times before," he continued, "but I'd never conducted there before. First of all, I discovered that rehearsal hours are from 2:30 to 5:30 in the afternoon, and from 9:30 to midnight. Next, their 'matinee' or 'Vermouth' concerts, as they call them—they drink a lot of vermouth down there—begin at 9:30. I like to concerts begin at 0:30. I like to eat well before concert or rehearsal time, and have a rest before concerts. So my living schedule had to be pretty thoroughly rearranged.

"They're nice pople down there, warm, friendly, hospitable. They took me 'round, did everything for us. What a race of autograph seekers they are! Everywhere I went, it was 'May I please have your autograph?'

"Originally I was invited to conduct at the Teatro Colon, which is run by the city of Buenos Aires for both opera and concerts. It's a handsome theater! But, as you may have read, there has been a change of management, and some difficulty between the new management and the musicians. There has been a strike, so there won't be any music at the Teatro Colon this season.

"Consequently they asked me instead to conduct the Argentinian National Radio Orchestra, which I was very glad to do, although I would have liked to hear the sound in the Teatro Colon. We gave six concerts in three weeks in the hall of the University of Law.

"The Radio Orchestra concerts are free, but the people first have to line up at the Radio office to get tickets, and then they repeat at the University of Law, to be on time for seats, which are unreserved. The Radio Orchestra is about 110 men, bigger, even, than the Boston Symphony. It is good, although a little 'manana' in the relaxed spirit of working. I must say I drilled them hard, but they seemed to like it, and responded very willingly.

"You find many second and third generation Italians, Germans, Austrians and so on among the Argentinian musicians. The cellos were especially good. I wouldn't say you'd find any special school of wind instrument playing there.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

"I bought several scores, and one of them is a piece I'm going to try to work into Pops if there is time to prepare it. It's a ballet suite from a work called 'The Farm,' by Alberto Ginastera, who probably is the leading Argentine composer."

As a bon vivant, Mr. Fiedler was pleased with Argentinian comestibles.

"The food down there is very good, although the fresh beef they eat was new to me. By law, Argentine beef must be sold the day it is butchered, so it is not hung to age. They make good Argentine wines, both red and white, and excellent gin, too."

The flight to Buenos Aires, which takes two nights and one day, with four stops en route, considerably upped Mr. Fiedler's mileage as a veteran air traveler. Long ago he passed the 100,00 miles tally, and has been honored by several airlines accordingly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 20 1957

Arthur Fiedler strolling in Buenos Aires, where he conducted an Argentine orchestra in six concerts during the past week. His programs were also broadcast by the National Radio.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 26 1957

72d Year of Pops Starts on Tuesday

When Arthur Fiedler open the 72nd season of the Bostoı Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, he barely will have become acclimated to the loca weather. He has just returnec from Buenos Aires, where foı three weeks he conducted the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina.

His Pop programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include Leo Litwin and Ozan Marsh, both of whom have scored in recent seasons. There also will be Kenneth Wolf, former boy prodigy pianist and composer. He is now a doctor at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

APR 21 1957

DANA HALL SOLOIST Miss Meg Bachman of Youngstown, O., yesterday discussed with Arthur Fiedler, conductor, the score of Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in G Minor which she will play with the Boston Pops May 3 at the Dana Hall-Pine Manor Pops Night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,978

APR 26 1957

CONDUCTOR Arthur Fiedler, who will re-open the Boston Pops Concerts in Symphony Hall Tuesday night, has just returned from South America.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 21 1957

Pops April 30

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the opening Pops concert of the season at Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening, Apr. 30. The famed Boston conductor returns next week from a visit to South America, where he has been directing six concerts on the Boston model in the auditorium of the School of Law and Social Sciences in Buenos Aires. His orchestra has been that of the National Radio of Argentina.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

APR 21 1957

Fiedler Giving Pop Concerts in Argentine

As a sort of antipasto to the annual series of Boston Pop Concerts which he will re-open in Symphony Hall on April 30, conductor Arthur Fiedler has been presenting six concerts on the Boston model in Argentina. Making his South American debut, he has been conducting the National Radio Orchestra in Buenos Aires, in the auditorium of the School of Law and simultaneously broadcast by the National Radio throughout Argentina and neighboring countries.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

APR 25 1957

Pops Season Next Week

When Arthur Fiedler opens the 72nd season of the Boston Pops next Tuesday night in Symphony Hall, he barely will have become acclimated to the local weather.

He has just returned from Buenos Aires where for three weeks he conducted . . . with stormy . . . the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina.

His Pops programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include the perennially popular Leo Litwin, Ozan Marsh, who has scored ovations in recent seasons, and Kenneth Wolf, the former boy prodigy pianist-composer who now is a doctor at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

REDUCTION RATIO 16x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 29 1957

Arthur Fiedler Returns From So. America For Pops

By CAMERON DEWAR

If you think the autograph hounds around here are bad you should see them in Argentina.

This is on the word of Arthur Fiedler, just back from South America on a conducting jaunt that took him more than 7,000 miles by air. He was guest baton-wielder for three weeks with the National Radio Orchestra at Buenos Aires. He found the people warm and friendly, but their devotion to collecting autographs got him down just a little.

The much touted volatile Latin temperament he found to be somewhat of a myth as far as the musicians were concerned. There was a good deal of the "manana" attitude about them, although after some hard rehearsing Fiedler managed to get them into pretty fair shape.

This will also help to get the famed conductor into condition for his own work. Tomorrow evening he begins the 72nd season of the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall. "If there is time to prepare it," he says, "there's a ballet suite by a leading Argentinian composer, Alberto Ginastera, I'm going to try to work into Pops.

He gave six concerts in three weeks with the orchestra which is bigger than the Boston Symphony. "They responded very willingly," he said, "although they probably found things harder than usual."

"You find many second and third generation Italians, Germans and Austrians among the musicians," he continued," and this may account for the so-called non-Latin temperament." He had high praise for the cellos, which he found "extremely good."

For contrasts he found the automobiles very old and the meat too new. Argentinians don't let their meat age as we do here. "The traffic problem is fantastic down there," he said, "and they gave up using traffic lights as a bad job."

Fiedler is an old hand at travel and has gone well over the 100,000-mile mark. But he'll be just as happy that [illegible] on home ground tonight [illegible] he raises his baton for [illegible] year of the famed Pops [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Pops Season Opening Tuesday

Four Soloists Listed For First Week

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will open the seventy-second season of the Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. He has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he conducted six concerts by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina during a period of three weeks.

Among the soloists chosen by Mr. Fiedler for the first week of the Pops are Ozan Marsh, who will play the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor both Tuesday and Wednesday evenings; M. Kenneth Wolf, to be heard in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 on Thursday evening; Meg Bachman, soloist in [illegible]delssohn Piano Concerto [illegible]y night; and Leo [illegible]ill appear in Ad[illegible]arsaw" Concerto [illegible] Monday evenings, [illegible]win's Rhapsody in [illegible]night. The concert [illegible]ning, May 6, will [illegible]d by Harry Ellis [illegible]

[illegible]ams for the week:

Evening, April 30

Circumstance . . . . . Elgar [illegible]nce of the 100th Anniver[illegible]e Birth of Edward Elgar) [illegible] "Die Fledermaus" Strauss

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Lenscraft

Meg Bachman, senior at Dana Hall, Wellesley, will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor Piano Concerto with the Boston Pops on Friday evening under Arthur Fiedler's direction

Sherwood Pizza Shop
363 Sherwood Ave., corner Hudson—ST 8-7908
Announces A New North Side Location
at 1412 Foster Ave.—RI 4-5943
Opening Tuesday, May 8th

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday
BOSTO
Independen
Circ.

APR 2

Subscriptions Only For Celebrity Series

The subscription offices of the Boston University Celebrity Series, 143 Newbury St., again wish to make it known that no tickets for the individual events coming next season are procurable at this time. This is emphasized because of the innumerable inquiries coming in for tickets for the Philadel-

Pop

Ballet

feature of the [illegible] and will be a and Sunday Conference on the Creative Arts in American Life, sponsored by Boston University and its Friends of Art, Music and Theater. The cast is composed of advanced students from the Boston University School of Applied Arts-Inquiries for tickets should be addressed to Conference of the Arts, Boston University, 25 Blagden St., Boston 16.

On Saturday night the Boston University Creative Arts will present "The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore," a madrigal-fable by Gian Carlo Menotti, in its New England premiere. It will be performed by the B.U. Choral Art Society, the B.U. Symphony Orchestra, and members of the New York Ballet Company, in Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge, at 8:30 p. m. Tickets are on sale at the B.U. Theater, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston.

When [illegible] 72nd se[illegible] this Tu[illegible] phony becom[illegible] weath[illegible] from [illegible] three[illegible] Nati[illegible] che[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

APR 28 1957

Pops Concerts

Arthur Fiedler, just back from Buenos Aires where he conducted . . . with overwhelming approval . . . the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina, will open the 72nd season of the Boston Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

'Gen.' Nolan Finds Salutes Easier Than Explanations

Hollywood, May 8 (UP)—Lloyd Nolan, on location at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., as an Air Force General, decided to begin returning salutes thrown at him as he walked around the base.

"If I didn't return them, they'd wonder what was wrong," he said. "And I didn't think I should stop each one and explain that I really wasn't a general."

Jane Russell has the title role in "The Revolt of Mamie Stover," which also features Richard Egan, Joan Leslie and Agnes Moorehead. The film begins with Mamie being put aboard a Honolulu-bound liner in San Francisco by detectives in 1941.

En route, Mamie meets a rich young author (Egan) and falls in love. After the ship arrives, Egan makes Mamie to $100 while she attempts to find an honest job. But Mamie wants big money and takes a job at a shady resort. She makes a fortune, but cannot break into Egan's high society circles.

When the Japanese attack Pearl Harbor, Egan realizes he is in love with Mamie and decides to marry [illegible] confesses his crime while the German police listen in.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 28 1957

Pops Open Tuesday Evening - - -

POPS OPENING—Arthur Fiedler will conduct as the famed Pops begins another season, the 72nd, at Symphony Hall Tuesday night. Here he is shown at rehearsal.

Pops Begin 72nd Season Tuesday Eve.

The 72d season of Pops concerts will begin at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening at 8:30. The audience will find the auditorium in its usual Spring and Summer dress, the lower walls painted light green, and tables placed on the floor, where smoking and refreshments may be enjoyed.

Mr. Fiedler has just returned from Buenos Aires where for three weeks he conducted the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina.

His Pops programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include the perennially popular Leo Litwin; Ozan Marsh, who has scored ovations in recent seasons; and Kenneth Wolf, former boy prodigy pianist and composer, who now is a doctor at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

The programs follow:

Tuesday at 8:30. Pomp and Circumstance (In Observance of the 100th Anniversary of the Birth of Edward Elgar); Overture to "Die Fledermaus", Strauss; Londonderry Air, Grainge; Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah," Saint Saens; Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16, Grieg; Soloist: Ozan Marsh. La Valse, Ravel; Selection from "My Fair Lady", Loewe; "Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic", Arranged by Hayman, Wedding Dance, Press.

Wednesday, Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin", Wagner; Overture to "The Gypsy Baron", Strauss; Danzon and Gigue, from "Fancy Free", Bernstein; Espanna, Rhapsody, Chabrier; Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16,

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

9.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 29 1957

Arthur Fiedler Returns From So. America For Pops

By CAMERON DEWAR

If you think the autograph hounds around here are bad you should see them in Argentina.

This is on the word of Arthur Fiedler, just back from South America on a conducting jaunt that took him more than 7,000 miles by air. He was guest baton-wielder for three weeks with the National Radio Orchestra at Buenos Aires. He found the people warm and friendly, but their devotion to collecting autographs got him down just a little.

The much touted volatile Latin temperament he found to be somewhat of a myth as far as the musicians were concerned. There was a good deal of the "manana" attitude about them, although after some hard rehearsing Fiedler managed to get them into pretty fair shape.

This will also help to get the famed conductor into condition for his own work. Tomorrow evening he begins the 72nd season of the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall. "If there is time to prepare it," he says, 'there's a ballet suite by a leading Argentinian composer, Alberto Ginastera, I'm going to try to work into Pops.

He gave six concerts in three weeks with the orchestra which is bigger than the Boston Symphony. "They responded very willingly," he said, "although they probably found things harder than usual."

"You find many second and third generation Italians, Germans and Austrians among the musicians," he continued," and this may account for the so-called non-Latin temperament." He had high praise for the cellos, which he found "extremely good."

For contrasts he found the automobiles very old and the meat too new. Argentinians don't let their meat age as we do here. "The traffic problem is fantastic down there," he said, "and they gave up using traffic lights as a bad job."

Fiedler is an old hand at travel and has gone well over the 100,000-mile mark. But he'll be just as happy thr[illegible] on home ground for the Philadel[illegible] he raises his baton [illegible] year of the [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Pops Season Opening Tuesday

Four Soloists Listed For First Week

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will open the seventy-second season of the Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. He has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he conducted six concerts by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina during a period of three weeks.

Among the soloists chosen by Mr. Fiedler for the first week of the Pops are Ozan Marsh, who will play the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor both Tuesday and Wednesday evenings; M. Kenneth Wolf, to be heard in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 on Thursday evening; Meg Bachman, soloist in [illegible]ssohn Piano Concerto [illegible]iday night; and Leo [illegible] will appear in Ad[illegible] Warsaw" Concerto [illegible]nd Monday evenings, [illegible]shwin's Rhapsody in [illegible]ay night. The concert [illegible]vening, May 6, will [illegible]cted by Harry Ellis [illegible]

[illegible]ograms for the week:

[illegible]ay Evening, April 30

[illegible]d Circumstance ..... Elgar
[illegible]rvance of the 100th Anniver[illegible] the Birth of Edward Elgar)
[illegible] to "Die Fledermaus" [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Henscraft

Meg Bachman, senior at Dana Hall, We[illegible] soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor P[illegible] Boston Pops on Friday evening unde[illegible]

Sherwood Pizza Shop
863 Sherwood Ave., corner Hudson—ST 8-7908
Announces A New North Side Location
at 1412 Foster Ave.—RI 4-5943
Opening Tuesday, May 8th

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

APR 28 1957

Pops Concerts

Arthur Fiedler, just back from Buenos Aires where he conducted . . . with overwhelming approval . . . the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina, will open the 72nd season of the Boston Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

New England Ne[illegible]
Box 2078, Boston [illegible]

Sunda[illegible]
BOST[illegible]
Independe[illegible]
Circ [illegible]

APR [illegible]

Subscriptions Only For Celebrity Series

The subscription offices of the Boston University Celebrity Series, 143 Newbury St., again wish to make it known that no tickets for the individual events coming next season are procurable at this time. This is emphasized because of the innumerable inquiries com[illegible]ing in for tickets for the [illegible]

Pop Ballet

On Saturday night the Boston [illegible]phony becon[illegible] weat[illegible] from [illegible] University Creative Arts will present "The 72nd this T[illegible] Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Wher[illegible] Manticore," a madrigal-fable by Gian Carlo Menotti, in its New England premiere. It will be performed by the B.U. Choral Art[illegible] Society, the B.U. Symphony Orchestra, and members of the New York Ballet Company, in Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge, at 8:30 p. m. Tickets are on sale at the B.U. Theater, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 28 1957

Feature of the Friday, Saturday and Sunday Conference on the Creative Arts in American Life, sponsored by Boston University and its Friends of Art, Music and Theater, The cast is composed of advanced students from the Boston University Professional School of Applied Arts. Inquiries for tickets should be addressed to Conference of the Nat[illegible] Arts, Boston University, 2[illegible] three Blagden St., Boston 16.

'Gen.' Nolan Finds Sables Easier Than Explanations

Hollywood, May 8 (UP)—Lloyd Nolan, on location at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., as an Air Force General, decided to begin returning salutes thrown at him as he walked around the base.

"If I didn't return them, they'd wonder what was wrong," he said. "And I didn't think I should stop each one and explain that I really wasn't a general."

Jane Russell has the title role in "The Revolt of Mamie Stover," which also features Richard Egan, Joan Leslie and Agnes Moorehead. The film begins with Mamie being put aboard a Honolulu-bound liner at San Francisco by detectives in 1941.

On route, Mamie meets a rich young author (Egan) and falls in love. After the ship arrives, Egan makes Mamie to $100 while she attempts to find an honest job. But Mamie wants big money and takes a job at a shady resort. She makes a fortune, but cannot break into Egan's high society circles.

When the Japanese attack Pearl Harbor, Egan realizes he is in love with Mamie and decides to marry

Pops Open Tuesday Evening - - -

work into Pops.

He gave six concerts in three weeks with the orchestra which is bigger than the Boston Sym-

Box 2078, Boston 6

Sunday
BOSTC
Independer
Circ.

APR 2

Subscriptions Only For Celebrity Series

Feature of the Friday, Saturday and Sunday Conference on the Creative Arts in American Life, sponsored by Boston University and its Friends of Art, Music and Theater. The cast is composed of advanced students from the Boston University professional School of Applied Arts. Inquiries for tickets should be addressed to Conference of the Nat Arts, Boston University, 25 Blagden St., Boston 16.

Ballet

On Saturday night the Boston phony becom weati from Creative Arts will present "The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore," a madrigal-fable by Gian Carlo Menotti, in its New England premiere. It will be performed by the B.U. Choral Art Society, the B.U. Symphony Orchestra, and members of the New York Ballet Company, in Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge, at 8:30 p. m. Tickets are on sale at the B.U. Theater, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston.

Pops

When

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 28 1957

y Evening, April 30

Circumstance ..... Elgar
vance of the 100th Anniver-he Birth of Edward Elgar) to "Die Fledermaus"
Strauss

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

APR 28 1957

Pops Concerts

Arthur Fiedler, just back from Buenos Aires where he conducted . . . with overwhelming approval . . . the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina, will open the 72nd season of the Boston Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

Lenscraft

Meg Bachman, senior at Dana Hall, Wellesley, will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor Piano Concerto with the Boston Pops on Friday evening under Arthur Fiedler's direction.

Sherwood Pizza Shop
363 Sherwood Ave., corner Hudson—ST 8-7908
Announces A New North Side Location
at 1412 Foster Ave.—RI 4-5943
Opening Tuesday, May 8th

'Gen.' Nolan Finds Salutes Easier Than Explanations

Hollywood, May 8 (UP)—Lloyd Nolan, on location at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., as an Air Force General, decided to begin returning salutes thrown at him as he walked around the base.

"If I didn't return them, they'd wonder what was wrong," he said. "And I didn't think I should stop each one and explain that I really wasn't a general."

Jane Russell has the title role in "The Revolt of Mamie Stover," which also features Richard Egan, Joan Leslie and Agnes Moorehead. The film begins with Mamie being put aboard a Honolulu-bound liner at San Francisco by detectives in 1941.

En route, Mamie meets a rich young author (Egan) and falls in love. After the ship arrives, Egan takes Mamie to $100 while she attempts to find an honest job. But Mamie wants big money and takes a job at a shady resort. She makes a fortune, but cannot break into Egan's high society circles.

When the Japanese attack Pearl Harbor, Egan realizes he is in love with Mamie and decides to marry

THE BOSTON SUNDAY

Pops Open Tuesday Evening - - -

POPS OPENING—Arthur Fiedler will conduct as the famed Pops begins another season, the 72nd, at Symphony Hall Tuesday night. Here he is shown at rehearsal.

Pops Begin 72nd Season Tuesday Eve.

The 72d season of Pops concerts will begin at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening at 8:30. The audience will find the auditorium in its usual Spring and Summer dress, the lower walls painted light green, and tables placed on the floor, where smoking and refreshments may be enjoyed.

Mr. Fiedler has just returned from Buenos Aires where for three weeks he conducted the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina.

His Pops programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include the perennially popular Leo Litwin; Ozan Marsh, who has scored ovations in recent seasons; and Kenneth Wolf, former boy prodigy pianist and composer, who now is a doctor at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

The programs follow:

Tuesday at 8:30. Pomp and Circumstance (In Observance of the 100th Anniversary of the Birth of Edward Elgar) Elgar; Overture to "Die Fledermaus", Strauss; Londonderry Air, Grainger; Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16, Grieg; Soloist: Ozan Marsh; La Valse, Ravel; Selection from "My Fair Lady", Loewe; "Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic", Arranged by Hayman; Wedding Dance, Press.

Wednesday, Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin", Wagner; Overture to "The Gypsy Baron", Strauss; Danzon and Galop, from "Fancy Free", Bernstein; Espanna, Rhapsody, Chabrier; Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 29 1957

Arthur Fiedler Returns From So. America For Pops

By CAMERON DEWAR

If you think the autograph hounds around here are bad you should see them in Argentina.

This is on the word of Arthur Fiedler, just back from South America on a conducting jaunt that took him more than 7,000 miles by air. He was guest baton-wielder for three weeks with the National Radio Orchestra at Buenos Aires. He found the people warm and friendly, but their devotion to collecting autographs got him down just a little.

The much touted volatile Latin temperament he found to be somewhat of a myth as far as the musicians were concerned. There was a good deal of the "manana" attitude about them, although after some hard rehearsing Fiedler managed to get them into pretty fair shape.

This will also help to get the famed conductor into condition for his own work. Tomorrow evening he begins the 72nd season of the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall. "If there is time to prepare it," he says, 'there's a ballet suite by a leading Argentinian composer, Alberto Ginastera, I'm going to try to work into Pops.

He gave six concerts in three weeks with the orchestra which is bigger than the Boston Symphony. "They responded very willingly," he said, "although they probably found things harder than usual."

"You find many second and third generation Italians, Germans and Austrians among the musicians," he continued," and this may account for the so-called non-Latin temperament." He had high praise for the cellos, which he found "extremely good."

For contrasts he found the automobiles very old and the meat too new. Argentinians don't let their meat age as we do here. "The traffic problem is fantastic down there," he said, "and they gave up using traffic lights as a bad job."

Fiedler is an old hand at travel and has gone well over the 100,000-mile mark. But he'll be just as happy that he'll be on home ground tonight when he raises his baton for another year of the famed Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 305,271

APR 28 1957

Pops Program

When Arthur Fiedler opens the 72nd season of the Boston Pops this Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, he will have barely become acclimated to the local weather—he has just returned from Buenos Aires, where for three weeks he conducted the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentinia.

His Pops programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include Leo Litwin, Ozan Marsh and Kenneth Wolf, former child prodigy pianist and composer who is now a doctor at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

TUESDAY

Pomp and Circumstance — Elgar
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Londonderry Air — Grainger
Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" — Saint-Saens
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 — Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
La Valse — Ravel
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" — Arranged by Hayman
Wedding Dance — Press

WEDNESDAY

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" — Wagner
Overture to "The Gypsy Baron" — Strauss
Danzon and Galop, from "Fancy Free" — Bernstein '35
España, Rhapsody — Chabrier
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 — Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
All Hail to Massachusetts — Arthur J. Marsh '13
Up the Street, March — Morse

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" — Delibes
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Largo, from "Xerxes" — Handel
Solo violin: Alfred Krips
Overture to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" — Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22 — Saint-Saens
Soloist: M. Kenneth Wolf
Suite from "Peer Gynt" — Grieg
Selection from "The King and I" — Rodgers
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing — Fain
Hungarian Dance No. 6 — Brahms

FRIDAY

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin" — Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Euryanthe" — Weber
Meditation from "Thais" — Massenet
Solo violin: Alfred Krips
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" — Strauss
Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 — Mendelssohn
Soloist: Meg Bachman, '57
Suite from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" — Mendelssohn
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Blue Tango — Anderson
Pops Polka — Mason

SATURDAY

Rakoczy March — Berlioz
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving — Valerius
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" — Nicolai
Warsaw Concerto for Piano and Orchestra — Addinsell
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Suite from "Gayne" — Khachaturian
Regis College Glee Club
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Malaguena, from "Andalucia" — Lecuona
Hungarian Dance No. 1 — Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 28 1957

Pops

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Pops Season Opening Tuesday

Four Soloists Listed For First Week

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will open the seventy-second season of the Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. He has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he conducted six concerts by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina during a period of three weeks.

Among the soloists chosen by Mr. Fiedler for the first week of the Pops are Ozan Marsh, who will play the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor both Tuesday and Wednesday evenings; M. Kenneth Wolf, to be heard in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 on Thursday evening; Meg Bachman, soloist in the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto No. 1 on Friday night; and Leo Litwin, who will appear in Addinsell's "Warsaw" Concerto Saturday and Monday evenings, and in Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue Sunday night. The concert Monday evening, May 6, will be conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The programs for the week:

Tuesday Evening, April 30

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
(In Observance of the 100th Anniversary of the Birth of Edward Elgar)
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Londonderry Air ..... Grainger
Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saëns
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ..... Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
La Valse ..... Ravel
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ..... Arr. by Hayman
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, May 1

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Danzon and Galop, from "Fancy Free" ..... Bernstein
España, Rhapsody ..... Chabrier
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ..... Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Academic Festival Overture .. Brahms
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
All Hail to Massachusetts — Arthur J. Marsh
Up the Street, March ..... Morse
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Thursday Evening, May 2

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Largo, from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Overture to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" ..... Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22 ..... Saint Saëns
Soloist: M. Kenneth Wolf
Suite from "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
Selection from "The King and I" ..... Rodgers
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain
Hungarian Dance No. 6 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, May 3

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin" — Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Euryanthe" ..... Weber
Meditation from "Thais" ... Massenet
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Blue Tango ..... Anderson
Pops Polka ..... Mason
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Saturday Evening, May 4
Regis Night

Rakóczy March ..... Berlioz
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
Warsaw Concerto for Piano and Orchestra .... Addinsell
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Suite from "Gayne" .... Khatchaturian
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Brother James' Air ..... Jacob
Beata Viscera ..... 13th century
Songs from "Hans Christian Andersen" ..... Loesser
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe
Malagueña, from "Andalucia" ..... Lecuona
Hungarian Dance No. 1 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Sunday Evening, May 5
MIT Night

Slavonic Dance in C major .. Dvořák
Toccata ..... Frescobaldi-Kindler
Classical Symphony, Op. 25..Prokofiev
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Klaus Liepmann Conducting
Polovetzian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
MIT Glee Club
All Praise to God Eternal — Arr. by Gaul
Down by the Sally Gardens — Arr. by Mishkin
Der Jäger aus Kurpfalz — Arr. by Mishkin
Selections by the Logarhythms
Tarantella ..... Thompson
Arise Ye Sons of MIT ..... John B. Wilbur '26
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ..... Arranged by Hayman
Genevieve Galop ..... Offenbach
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Monday Evening, May 6

The Stars and Stripes Forever, March ..... Sousa
Overture to "Die Fledermaus"..Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves .... Vaughan Williams
Romanian Rhapsody No. 1.....Enesco
Warsaw Concerto for Piano and Orchestra ..... Addinsell
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Scheherazade (Finale) ..... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
American Patrol ..... Meacham
Harry Ellis Dickson Conducting

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

ILenscraft

Meg Bachman, senior at Dana Hall, Wellesley, will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor Piano Concerto with the Boston Pops on Friday evening under Arthur Fiedler's direction.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR
Circ. D. 95,251 - S. 136,132

MAY 8 1956

PLAYS WITH BOSTON POPS: Miss Margaret (Meg) Bachman of 1090 Ravine Drive looks over a score with Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra. Miss Bachman was featured soloist in a Pops concert in Boston Friday night. She played the Mozart Piano Concerto in A Major, K414. She will be 17 Wednesday. Official at Dana Hall School in Wellesley, Mass., where Miss Bachman is junior, said she "gave a brilliant performance." Miss Bachman parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Tedford Bachman, attended the conce

POPS OPENING—Arthur Fiedler will conduct as the famed Pops begins another season, the 72nd, at Symphony Hall Tuesday night. Here he is shown at rehearsal.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

APR 29 1957

Arthur Fiedler Returns From So. America For Pops

By CAMERON DEWAR

If you think the autograph hounds around here are bad you should see them in Argentina.

This is on the word of Arthur Fiedler, just back from South America on a conducting jaunt that took him more than 7,000 miles by air. He was guest baton-wielder for three weeks with the National Radio Orchestra at Buenos Aires. He found the people warm and friendly, but their devotion to collecting autographs got him down just a little.

The much touted volatile Latin temperament he found to be somewhat of a myth as far as the musicians were concerned. There was a good deal of the "manana" attitude about them, although after some hard rehearsing Fiedler managed to get them into pretty fair shape.

This will also help to get the famed conductor into condition for his own work. Tomorrow evening he begins the 72nd season of the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall. "If there is time to prepare it," he says, 'there's a ballet suite by a leading Argentinian composer, Alberto Ginastera, I'm going to try to work into Pops.

He gave six concerts in three weeks with the orchestra which is bigger than the Boston Symphony. "They responded very willingly," he said, "although they probably found things harder than usual."

"You find many second and third generation Italians, Germans and Austrians among the musicians," he continued," and this may account for the so-called non-Latin temperament." He had high praise for the cellos, which he found "extremely good."

For contrasts he found the automobiles very old and the meat too new. Argentinians don't let their meat age as we do here. "The traffic problem is fantastic down there," he said, "and they gave up using traffic lights as a bad job."

Fiedler is an old hand at travel and has gone well over the 100,000-mile mark. But he'll be just as happy that he'll be on home ground tonight when he raises his baton for another year of the famed Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 305,271

APR 28 1957

Pops Program

When Arthur Fiedler opens the 72nd season of the Boston Pops this Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, he will have barely become acclimated to the local weather—he has just returned from Buenos Aires, where for three weeks he conducted the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentinia.

His Pops programs for the first week are highlighted by favorite piano concertos. The soloists include Leo Litwin, Ozan Marsh and Kenneth Wolf, former child prodigy pianist and composer who is now a doctor at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

TUESDAY

Pomp and Circumstance — Elgar
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Londonderry Air — Grainger
Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" — Saint-Saens
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 — Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
La Valse — Ravel
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" — Arranged by Hayman Press
Wedding Dance

WEDNESDAY

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" — Wagner
Overture to "The Gypsy Baron" — Strauss
Danzon and Galop, from "Fancy Free" — Bernstein '35
Espana, Rhapsody — Chabrier
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 — Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
All Hail to Massachusetts — Arthur J. Marsh '13
Up the Street, March — Morse

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" — Delibes
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Largo, from "Xerxes" — Handel
Solo violin: Alfred Krips
Overture to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" — Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22 — Saint-Saens
Soloist: M. Kenneth Wolf
Suite from "Peer Gynt" — Grieg
Selection from "The King and I" — Rodgers
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing — Fain
Hungarian Dance No. 6 — Brahms

FRIDAY

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin" — Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Euryanthe" — Weber
Meditation from "Thais" — Massenet
Solo violin: Alfred Krips
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" — Strauss
Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 — Mendelssohn
Soloist: Meg Bachman, '57
Suite from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" — Mendelssohn
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Blue Tango — Anderson
Pops Polka — Mason

SATURDAY

Rakoczy March — Berlioz
Du und Du Waltzes, from "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving — Valerius
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" — Nicolai
Warsaw Concerto for Piano and Orchestra — Addinsell
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Suite from "Gayne" — Khachaturian
Regis College Glee Club
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Malaguena, from "Andalucia" — Lecuona
Hungarian Dance No. 1 — Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

APR 28 1957

Pops

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Pops Season Opening Tuesday

Four Soloists Listed For First Week

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will open the seventy-second season of the Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. He has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he conducted six concerts by the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina during a period of three weeks.

Among the soloists chosen by Mr. Fiedler for the first week of the Pops are Ozan Marsh, who will play the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor both Tuesday and Wednesday evenings; M. Kenneth Wolf, to be heard in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 on Thursday evening; Meg Bachman, soloist in the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto No. 1 on Friday night; and Leo Litwin, who will appear in Addinsell's "Warsaw" Concerto Saturday and Monday evenings, and in Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue Sunday night. The concert Monday evening, May 6, will be conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The programs for the week:

Tuesday Evening, April 30

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
(In Observance of the 100th Anniversary of the Birth of Edward Elgar)
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" — Strauss

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 27 1957

Lenscraft

Meg Bachman, senior at Dana Hall, Wellesley, will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor Piano Concerto with the Boston Pops on Friday evening under Arthur Fiedler's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979

APR 28 1957

Pops Concerts

Arthur Fiedler, just back from Buenos Aires where he conducted . . . with overwhelming approval . . . the National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Argentina, will open the 72nd season of the Boston Pops Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR
Circ. D. 95,251 - S. 136,132

MAY 8 1956

PLAYS WITH BOSTON POPS: Miss Margaret (Meg) Bachman of 1090 Ravine Drive looks over a score with Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra. Miss Bachman was featured soloist in a Pops concert in Boston Friday night. She played the Mozart Piano Concerto in A Major, K414. She will be 17 Wednesday. Official at Dana Hall School in Wellesley, Mass., where Miss Bachman is junior, said she "gave a brilliant performance." Miss Bachman parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Tedford Bachman, attended the conce

Tuesday Ev

POPS OPENING—Arthur Fiedler will conduct as the famed Pops begins another season, the 72nd, at Symphony Hall Tuesday night. Here he is shown at rehearsal.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 30 1957

Pops Concerts Open In Boston Tonight

By JOHN A. HAHN
United Press
Staff Correspondent

BOSTON, April 30 (UP)—Musical Boston goes informal tonight with the opening of the pops concerts, light-hearted prelude to the summer music season, in Symphony Hall.

Calypso and jazz beats will mingle with a classical drum rolls during the new season which music lovers take just as seriously as the formal fall and winter concert series.

Ninety-five Boston symphony orchestra players doff summer weight clothes and play before tables instead of rows of seats but there will be more Beethoven than boogie. This, the 72nd pops season, will last until June 29.

Fiedler to Conduct

Veteran maestro Fiedler leads the pops concerts which feature lighter classics not suitable to the formal symphony season and big-orchestra arrangement of popular music of the day. Pops programs run the gamut from Tcahikovsky's 1812 overture to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

The pops musicians go out beside the Charles River for a series of esplanade concerts beginning July 2 and return, briefly, after the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., which runs from July 3 to Aug. 11, inclusive.

The Tanglewood concerts also are outdoors but under shelter and are as formal as the winter symphony series.

Noted Violinist to Play

Thousands of visitors to New England, many from neighboring New York State, will hear Charles Munch share the Boston Symphony podium with guest conductors Pierre Monteux and Carl Schuricht. Renowned violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist in a series of classic concertos.

Simultaneous with the esplanade and Tanglewood programs, the Castle Hill Foundation schedules an impressive series of concerts at Ipswich, Mass.

Ella Fitzgerald and the Oscar Peterson jazz trio will start off the series June 28 at Castle Hill, formerly the Crane estate.

Calypso Master Geoffrey Holder and his Trinidad dancers will climax the Castle Hill season which also has scheduled mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller, pianist Rudolf Serkin, Negro basso William Warfield and the Berkshire Quartet.

Even the children aren't forfotten, musically. Special small-fry Esplanade concerts will be given the mornings of July 3 and 10 and Aug. 14 in Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 30 1957

OZAN MARSH will be piano soloist at the Pops opening tonight in Symphony Hall.

Fiedler Opens Pops 72d Season Tonight

Arthur Fiedler opens the 72d season of the Boston Pops Concerts tonight at 8:30 pm. in Symphony Hall. Ozan Marsh will be soloist tonight and tomorrow night. Tonight's program is as follows:

[illegible] and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
"Londonderry Air" ..... Grainger
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saens
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ..... Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
La Valse ..... Ravel
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ..... Arr. by Hayman
Wedding Dance ..... Press

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

MAY 1 1957

Fiedler Condu[illegible]

By A. E. WATTS

The 72nd season of "Pops" opened last night at Symphony Hall with a crescendo of percussion. Ordinarily the popping of champagne bottles lends its [illegible] subdued staccato to the festivities, but last night the [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAY 1 1957

POPS START[illegible]

Fiedler and [illegible] In Fine For[illegible]

By CYR[illegible]

The Pops started pop[illegible] night, so now Spring is tru[illegible] wind blew cool yesterday, [illegible] warm last night. Condu[illegible] players were in fine form [illegible] very enthusiastic, and the [illegible] favorite pieces, old and ne[illegible]

As a haircut is likely to be lo[illegible] in front and short in back, so a Pops evening generally begins with the longer musical locks, and winds up sweet, low and brief at the end, as last night with a medley of tunes from "My Fair Lady," a Hayman arrangement of "Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic," and one of Calypso by the same Hayman, with a versicle of "Yes, We Have No Bananas" put in the middle. For the actual wind-up, Press' "Wedding Dance," a rhythmic bust-out which suggested that everybody got tired at the reception.

The opening was more sedate with Elgar's No. 1 on the Eternity-Hit-Parade, "Pomp and Circumstance"; this followed by the Overture to "Die Fledermaus," that by the "Londonderry Air," and that by Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens' old rout which, in these hotter days, might better be called "Simon and Lemonade Lucy."

A Solid Section

The middle portion was real solid, with Grieg's A minor Piano Concerto, and Ravel's depiction of the French Second Empire dancing atop a volcano, "La Valse." Soloist in Grieg was Ozan Marsh, California-born and said to be a descendant of William the Conqueror. That honorable ancestor may have taken French ideas to England (which can always use them) but I'll bet he never played the piano so well as young Ozan, who is nimble-fingered, with power and taste and musical instinct, and who gave a very good performance of a lovely Concerto underrated today.

Arthur Fiedler and the Orchestra provided an alert and musical [illegible] with all the underlying emotional jitters in the music, and played everything else with verve.

The lower side walls of Symphony Hall were painted their Springtime light green, the conductor's stand was banked with gladioli and small, potted ferns, and forsythia was placed at the far sides of the stage. Tables covered the floor of the hall, where you may smoke and enjoy refreshment liquid, solid, soft and mildly hard. The bottle-openers had not been sufficiently rehearsed, I'm sorry to say: not one of them loudly popped a cork during the music. At least I didn't hear any.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 29 1957

By a Staff Photographer.

Ozan Marsh will be piano soloist at the Boston Pops at the opening night Tuesday and again on Wednesday.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
Circ. D. 125,316 - S. 110,071

MAY 13 1956

ARTHUR FIEDLER, veteran conductor of the famed Boston Pops orchestra, conducts its new series of broadcasts on Monday nights on NBC. The concerts are broadcast from Boston's Symphony Hall.

RIVERSIDE CALIF.
SUNDAY PRESS ENTERPRISE

MAY 13 1956

POPS CONDUCTOR—Arthur Fiedler, veteran conductor of the famous Boston Pops Orchestra, conducts its new series of broadcasts Monday nights on NBC Radio. The orchestra's repertoire ranges from symphonic classics to popular show tunes and novelties.

Sec[illegible]

musician[illegible] a treme[illegible] Pianist [illegible] ee, moven[illegible] through [illegible] the th[illegible] stum[illegible] long, but [illegible] the au[illegible] nce until [illegible] estra an[illegible] the progr[illegible] climatic [illegible] from "[illegible] what had [illegible] or Pops. [illegible] and Cir[illegible] l Pops [illegible] liged wit[illegible] . The p[illegible]

[illegible] e 100th an[illegible] oser Elgar, [illegible] "Die Fle[illegible] miliar Pops [illegible] to win the [illegible] ak Polka,"

[illegible] Grainger's [illegible] and his [illegible] is an extra. [illegible] nale" from [illegible] ah" was a [illegible] with all its [illegible] "La Valse," [illegible] its exacting [illegible] ess, seemed [illegible] side after [illegible]

[illegible] "My Fair [illegible] plus a [illegible] and "Wed[illegible] ed out the [illegible] y a bit of [illegible] by Merrill [illegible] lypso" ar[illegible] . The grow[illegible] music was [illegible] udience ap[illegible] anger Hay[illegible] rom a bal[illegible]

[illegible] seat the New England Grenfell Association was again a first night sponsor and a co-sponsor was the Music Lover's Club.

Tonight Mr. Marsh will repeat his concerto and Wagner, Brahms and Bernstein will be on the program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAY 1 - 1957

POPS START POPPING

Fiedler and Orchestra In Fine Form at Opening

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Pops started popping at Symphony Hall, last night, so now Spring is truly and legitimately here. The wind blew cool yesterday, but the Pops Orchestra played warm last night. Conductor Arthur Fiedler and the players were in fine form, the audience was large and very enthusiastic, and the program was a nice blend of favorite pieces, old and new.

As a haircut is likely to be long in front and short in back, so a Pops evening generally begins with the longer musical locks, and winds up sweet, low and brief at the end, as last night with a medley of tunes from "My Fair Lady," [illegible] of "Moon[illegible]

[illegible] descendant of William the Conqueror. That honorable ancestor may have taken French ideas to England (which can always use them) but I'll bet he never played the piano so well as young Ozan, who is nimble-fingered, with power and taste and musical instinct, [illegible] who gave a very good performance of a lovely Concerto [illegible]derrated today.

[illegible]rthur Fiedler and the Orches[illegible] provided an alert and musical [illegible]ompaniment here, did "La [illegible]lse" with all the underlying [illegible]otional jitters in the music, and [illegible]yed everything else with verve. The lower side walls of Sym[illegible]ony Hall were painted their [illegible]pringtime light green, the con[illegible]ctor's stand was banked with [illegible]adioli and small, potted ferns, [illegible] forsythia was placed at the [illegible] sides of the stage. Tables [illegible] hall, [illegible] you may smoke and enjoy [illegible]freshment liquid, solid, soft and [illegible]ildly hard. The bottle-openers [illegible] not been sufficiently re[illegible]earsed, I'm sorry to say: not one of them loudly popped a cork during the music. At least I didn't hear any.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
Circ. D. 123,904 - S. 176,679

MAY 6 1956

Boston Pops Orchestra Returns to Radio Monday

The Boston Pops Orchestra will return to the air for a series of Monday evening broadcasts starting on NBC Radio at 8:15 p.m. Monday. The orchestra's distinguished conductor, Arthur Fielder, again will be on the podium, with guest soloists scheduled each week.

The Boston Pops concerts take place in Boston's Symphony Hall which is transformed in both physical appearance and atmosphere. Seats on the orchestra floor are removed and tables and chairs, where the public may have refreshments while listening to the concert from the stage, are installed for the series.

[illegible] The middle portion was real solid, with Grieg's A minor Piano Concerto, and Ravel's depiction of the French Second Empire dancing atop a "volcano, "La Valse." Soloist in Grieg was Ozan Marsh, California-born and said to be a

OTHER THEATER NEWS ON PAGE 16

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

APR 30 1957

Pops Concerts Open In Boston Tonight

By JOHN A. HAHN
United Press
Staff Correspondent

BOSTON, April 30 (UP)—Musical Boston goes informal tonight with the opening of the pops concerts, light-hearted prelude to the summer music season, in Symphony Hall.

Calypso and jazz beats will mingle with a classical drum rolls during the new season which music lovers take just as seriously as the formal fall and winter concert series.

Ninety-five Boston symphony orchestra players doff summer-weight clothes and play before tables instead of rows of seats but there will be more Beethoven than boogie. This, the 72nd pops season, will last until June 29.

Fiedler to Conduct

Veteran maestro Fiedler leads the pops concerts which feature lighter classics not suitable to the formal symphony season and big-orchestra arrangement of popular music of the day. Pops programs run the gamut from Tchaikovsky's 1812 overture to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

The pops musicians go out beside the Charles River for a series of esplanade concerts beginning July 2 and return, briefly, after the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., which runs from July 3 to Aug. 11, inclusive.

The Tanglewood concerts also are outdoors but under shelter and are as formal as the winter symphony series.

Noted Violinist to Play

Thousands of visitors to New England, many from neighboring New York State, will hear Charles Munch share the Boston Symphony podium with guest conductors Pierre Monteux and Carl Schuricht. Renowned violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist in a series of classic concertos.

Simultaneous with the esplanade and Tanglewood programs, the Castle Hill Foundation schedules an impressive series of concerts at Ipswich, Mass.

Ella Fitzgerald and the Oscar Peterson jazz trio will start off the series June 28 at Castle Hill, formerly the Crane estate.

Calypso Master Geoffrey Holder and his Trinidad dancers will climax the Castle Hill season which also has scheduled mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller, pianist Rudolf Serkin, Negro basso William Warfield and the Berkshire Quartet.

Even the children aren't forgotten, musically. Special small-fry Esplanade concerts will be given the mornings of July 3 and 10 and Aug. 14 in Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

APR 30 1957

OZAN MARSH will be piano soloist at the Pops opening tonight in Symphony Hall.

Fiedler Opens Pops 72d Season Tonight

Arthur Fiedler opens the 72d season of the Boston Pops Concerts tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Ozan Marsh will be soloist tonight and tomorrow night. Tonight's program is as follows:

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Londonderry Air ..... Grainger
Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saens
Piano Concerto in A Minor, Op. 16
Soloist: Ozan Marsh ..... Grieg
La Valse ..... Ravel
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ..... Arr. by Hayman
Wedding Dance ..... Press

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

MAY 1 1957

Fiedler Conducts Pops As 72d Season Opens

By A. E. WATTS

The 72nd season of "Pops" opened last night at Symphony Hall with a crescendo of percussion. Ordinarily the popping of champagne bottles lends its sound to subdued staccato to the festivities, but last night the state of popping fortissimo that the champagne had to settle for gurgles.

The exception was its accompaniment to Grieg's Piano Concerto in A Minor. This listener never before heard an orchestra respond as beautifully to masterly conducting and Mr. Fiedler and his musicians had no small part in a tremendous performance by Pianist Ozan Marsh. The three movements run from allegro through adagio to allegro with the third movement rising to a stunning climax in marcato.

It is long, but this performance held the audience in absolute silence until it gave soloist and orchestra an ovation. From then on the program seemed on the anti-climatic side, even with selections from "My Fair Lady" to liven what had been a serious concert for Pops.

"Pomp and Circumstance," a traditional Pops season opener, again obliged with its pleasing contrasts. The program noted that it observed the 100th anniversary of Composer Elgar, Strauss' Overture to "Die Fledermaus" another familiar Pops standby, followed, to win the first encore, "Tik Tak Polka," also by Strauss.

Familiar also were Grainger's "Londonderry [illegible] and his "Country Garden," as an extra. Saint-Saens "Bacchanale" from "Samson and Delilah" was a sombre [illegible] with all its contrasts. [illegible] "La Valse," always dif[illegible] its exacting demands for [illegible]ss, seemed a bit on th[illegible] side after the piano co[illegible]

Selections [illegible] "My Fair Lady," "Mo[illegible]" plus a theme fr[illegible] "Picnic" and "Wedding [illegible] rounded out the pro[illegible] by a bit of "Ne[illegible]wn" by Merrill and [illegible] "Calypso" arrange[illegible]. The growing trend to Calypso music was evidenced by lively audience appreciation and Arranger Hayman took a bow from a balcony seat. The New England Grieg Society Association was again a first night sponsor and a co-sponsor was the Music Lover's Club.

Tonight Mr. Marsh will repeat his concerto and Wagner, Brahms and Bernstein will be on the program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

MAY 1 1957

POPS START POPPING

Fiedler and Orchestra In Fine Form at Opening

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Pops started popping at Symphony Hall, last night, so now Spring is truly and legitimately here. The wind blew cool yesterday, but the Pops Orchestra played warm last night. Conductor Arthur Fiedler and the players were in fine form, the audience was large and very enthusiastic, and the program was a nice blend of favorite pieces, old and new.

As a haircut is likely to be long in front and short in back, so a Pops evening generally begins with the longer musical locks, and winds up sweet, low and brief at the end, as last night with a medley of tunes from "My Fair Lady," a Hayman arrangement of "Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic," and one of Calypso by the same Hayman, with a versicle of "Yes, We Have No Bananas" put in the middle. For the actual windup, Press' "Wedding Dance," a rhythmic bust-out which suggested that everybody got tired at the reception

The opening was more sedate with Elgar's No. 1 on the Eternity-Hit-Parade, "Pomp and Circumstance"; this followed by the Overture to "Die Fledermaus," that by the "Londonderry Air," and that by Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens' old rout which, in these hotter days, might better be called "Simon and Lemonade Lucy."

A Solid Section

The middle portion was real solid, with Grieg's A minor Piano Concerto, and Ravel's depiction of the French Second Empire dancing atop a volcano, "La Valse." Soloist in Grieg was Ozan Marsh, California-born and said to be a descendant of William the Conqueror. That honorable ancestor may have taken French ideas to England (which can always use them) but I'll bet he never played the piano so well as young Ozan, who is nimble-fingered, with power and taste and musical instinct, and who gave a very good performance of a lovely Concerto underrated today.

Arthur Fiedler and the Orchestra provided an alert and musical accompaniment here, did "La Valse" with all the underlying emotional jitters in the music, and played everything else with verve.

The lower side walls of Symphony Hall were painted their Springtime light green, the conductor's stand was banked with gladioli and small, potted ferns, and forsythia was placed at the far sides of the stage. Tables covered the floor of the hall, where you may smoke and enjoy refreshment liquid, solid, soft and mildly hard. The bottle-openers had not been sufficiently rehearsed, I'm sorry to say: not one of them loudly popped a cork during the music. At least I didn't hear any.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

APR 29 1957

By a Staff Photographer.

Ozan Marsh will be piano soloist at the Boston Pops at the opening night Tuesday and again on Wednesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

MAY 1 - 1957

POPS START POPPING

Fiedler and Orchestra In Fine Form at Opening

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Pops started popping at Symphony Hall, last night, so now Spring is truly and legitimately here. The wind blew cool yesterday, but the Pops Orchestra played warm last night. Conductor Arthur Fiedler and the players were in fine form, the audience was large and very enthusiastic, and the program was a nice blend of favorite pieces, old and new.

As a haircut is likely to be long in front and short in back, so a Pops evening generally begins with the longer musical locks, and winds up sweet, low and brief at the end, as last night with a medley of tunes from "My Fair Lady," a Hayman arrangement of "Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic," and one of Calypso by the same Hayman, with a versicle of "Yes, We Have No Bananas" put in the middle. For the actual windup, Press' "Wedding Dance," a rhythmic bust-out which suggested that everybody got tired at the reception

The opening was more sedate, with Elgar's No. 1 on the Eternity-Hit-Parade, "Pomp and Circumstance"; this followed by the Overture to "Die Fledermaus," that by the "Londonderry Air," and that by Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens' old rout which, in these hotter days, might better be called "Simon and Lemonade Lucy."

A Solid Section

The middle portion was real solid, with Grieg's A minor Piano Concerto, and Ravel's depiction of the French Second Empire dancing atop a volcano, "La Valse." Soloist in Grieg was Ozan Marsh, California-born and said to be a descendant of William the Conqueror. That honorable ancestor may have taken French ideas to England (which can always use them) but I'll bet he never played the piano so well as young Ozan, who is nimble-fingered, with power and taste and musical instinct, and who gave a very good performance of a lovely Concerto underrated today.

Arthur Fiedler and the Orchestra provided an alert and musical accompaniment here, did "La Valse" with all the underlying emotional jitters in the music, and played everything else with verve.

The lower side walls of Symphony Hall were painted their Springtime light green, the conductor's stand was banked with gladioli and small, potted ferns, and forsythia was placed at the far sides of the stage. Tables covered the floor of the hall, where you may smoke and enjoy refreshment liquid, solid, soft and mildly hard. The bottle-openers had not been sufficiently rehearsed, I'm sorry to say: not one of them loudly popped a cork during the music. At least I didn't hear any.

OTHER THEATER NEWS ON PAGE 16

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
Circ. D. 123,904 - S. 176,679

MAY 6 1956

279

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 184,866
MAY 1 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 1 1957

Boston Pops Opens 72d Year

(Herald Staff Photo by Calvin Campbell)

THE POPS CONCERT season opened last night at Boston Symphony Hall with Arthur Fiedler, just back from a South American tour, conducting the orchestra. This unusual photo was taken from the rear of the brass section of the orchestra looking out over the podium from which Fiedler is conducting.

Festive Season Launched Under Fiedler's Direction

By Harold Rogers

Among the pleasant harbingers of spring in Boston are the Pops concerts; and last night in Symphony Hall many Bostonians witnessed, in traditional style, the opening of the 72nd season.

Such occasions usually call forth, on behalf of the reviewer, some traditional observations. Certain things are mentioned, beginning with the sudden transformation in the appearance of Symphony Hall. One speaks of the walls that have doffed their winter maroon for a summery green. Usually it is referred to as being apple green, but this spring it is a lighter color.

* * *

One also speaks of the tables that cover the main floor, where listeners enjoy light refreshments to light conversation (when the music doesn't offer too much competition). One might mention the pretty girls who sell flowers, as well as the huge bouquet of gladioli that graces the conductor's platform. Chief among the attractions, of course, is Arthur Fiedler himself, distinguished and debonair, whose very presence adds verve and snap to the proceedings.

Last night Mr. Fiedler opened with a stately reading of "Pomp and Circumstance," played in observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of its composer, Sir Edward Elgar. With his abundant vitality he continued with a spinning version of the Overture to Johann Strauss's "Die Fledermaus," and followed it with the spirited "Tik-Tak" Polka from the same pen.

* * *

There were two arrangements by Percy Grainger—the sentimental "Londonderry Air" and the rollicking "Country Gardens"; and when Mr. Fiedler came to the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" he didn't lose a bit of the Oriental splendor in Saint-Saëns' score.

The featured soloist was Ozan Marsh, now appearing at the Pops for his third consecutive season. Originally from California and now of Bloomington, Ind., he is a pianist of many praiseworthy accomplishments. He played the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor, which he will repeat tonight, and he struck it off with dazzling power, so much so that one wondered if the piano had a microphone in it.

But he also proved he could evoke a tender tone and a poetic line, as this concerto often requires. He left the impression, however, of being a pianist with an extremely flashy technique, generally elucidated with startling clarity, but occasionally blurred by speed.

The remainder of the program continued in Mr. Fiedler's well established style — somewhat larger than life—as he gave us a medley from "My Fair Lady," a tune from "New Girl in Town," the "Banana Boat" Calypso (for which the audience demanded a repeat), "Moonglow" blended with the theme from "Picnic," and the Wedding Dance by Press. What Mr. Fiedler does with Ravel's "La Valse," however, must be heard to be believed.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Pops Opening

Last night at Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, opened its 72d season; Ozan Marsh was piano soloist.

The Boston Pops Orchestra opened its 72d season last night in a spirit of elegant and martial revelry. The floor was crowded with tables, solemn violin players permitted themselves an occasional smile, and Arthur Fiedler conducted before a bank of orange gladiolas. With his ruddy face, his white hair and his military mustache, he had the air of a distinguished and rather mournful British colonel in the Indian Army; with a brief gesture of the arm he ordered the trumpets to charge, or suggested, with a lifted eyebrow, that the strings fall back.

He had under him, of course, a splendid musical command; the orchestra played with spirit and style. Their program began with "Pomp and Circumstance," and included the Bacchanale from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah," Ravel's "La Valse," and the group of tunes from "My Fair Lady." The soloist in the longest part of the program, Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, was Ozan Marsh, a slender young man with a vigorous flair for the dramatic.

The rank and file on the floor occupied themselves according to their different desires. Wine slips were fluttered in the direction of waitresses; cigarettes were fitted into holders; and young women from the society columns, with expressions of some anxiety, gazed intently at the faces in the front rows. Every so often down the busy length of Symphony Hall, like distant gunfire from some other frontier, came the pop of a champagne cork. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra remained unruffled—it was a sound to stir the heart of any old soldier.

G.D.B.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Tonight at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall, Arthur Fielder will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra in the following program:

Introduction to Act III, from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Danzon and Galop, from "Fancy Free" ..... Bernstein '35
Espana, Rhapsody ..... Chabrier
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ..... Grieg
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Academic Festival Overture ..... Brahms
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe
All Hail to Massachusetts ..... Arthur J. Marsh '13
Up the Street, March ..... Morse

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
MAY 1 1957

Fiedler Glad to Be Home, Pops Opening Brilliant

By PEGGY DOYLE

If there seemed to be a special zing about the opening of the 72d season of Boston Pops in Symphony Hall last night could it have been because Arthur Fiedler was happy to be back in North America and again conducting this great orchestra of 95 Boston Symphony musicians?

Just returned from Buenos Aires, where he was guest conductor of the Argentinian National Radio Orchestra, the diplomatic Pops conductor last week was most complimentary of South America and the South Americans while at the same time making it plain that the Boston Symphony men are unparalleled musicians.

The open-night highlight was the brilliant playing of Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16, with youthful Ozan Marsh soloist. It was Edvard Hagerup Grieg's own playing of his popular piano concerto in Leipzig in 1879 that first brought him to the attention of the musical world in the dual capacity of composer and pianist.

Marsh, who was offered a full scholarship for study in Europe by the great Dutch pianist, Egon Petri, when he was only 15, has long since proved his worthiness of this and other honors to Boston Pops and other audiences down the years.

In observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Edward Elgar, Pops conductor Fiedler chose "Pomp and Circumstance" to open the program. Overture to "Die Fledermaus" by Strauss, Grainger's "Londonderry Air" and Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens were also heard.

No one found fault with the musical symposium that followed Grieg's Piano Concerto and no wonder.

There included "Get Me to the Church on Time," "Wouldn't It be Loverly," "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "On the Street Where You Live," "The Rain in Spain" and "With a Little Bit of Luck."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,340
MAY 2 - 1957

Musical Boston Goes Informal With Concerts

Boston (UP) — Musical Boston goes informal tonight with the opening of the Pops concerts, light-hearted prelude to the summer music season.

Calypso and jazz beats will mingle with classical drum rolls during the new series, which music lovers take just as seriously as the formal fall and winter concert season.

Ninety-five Boston Symphony orchestra players don summer-weight clothes and play before tables instead of rows of seats but there will be more Beethoven than boogie. This, the 72nd Pops season, will last until June 29.

Veteran maestro Arthur Fiedler leads the Pops concerts which feature lighter classics not suitable to the formal symphony season and big-orchestra arrangement of popular music of the day. Pops programs run the gamut from Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,340
MAY 2 - 1957

Elliot Norton

men through a variety of numbers, ranging from classics to calypso, to generally good effect. It was a pleasant evening, and a generally good beginning for another year of the Pops, which is one of Boston's most admirable institutions.

Mr. Fiedler had some trouble getting the musicians stirred up to the kind of playing we expect from the Boston Pops Orchestra. Their rendition of the early selections was a little casual. There seemed to be more circumstance than pomp in "Pomp and Circumstance," for instance.

But they came alive after a while and began to play as they have in the past. At their best, they're a remarkable orchestra, capable of playing the most difficult music with both precision and feeling, and popular music with the same rare combination of qualities.

SECOND PART BETTER

In the second part of the program, which consisted principally of Grieg's piano concerto, they distinguished themselves, as though, perhaps, they were making an extraordinary effort to support with absolute perfection the performance of the young pianist Ozan Marsh.

Making his third appearance here at the Pops, this slender, boyish and appealing musician, gave them and the audience something to admire. The orchestra worked with him gloriously, and Mr. Fiedler conducted as though he were dedicated to producing nothing less than total beauty.

Mr. Marsh seemed a little nervous in the beginning, which is reasonable enough. He attacked the keyboard with a sort of straight-arm, like a football player. But he relaxed presently and began to create lovely sounds in great rolling swells.

PLAYS WITH WARMTH

He would appear to be an excellent technician, capable of producing truthfully every note and every passage.

He also brings great warmth and color to Grieg.

In the final section of last night't performance, Mr. Fielder of its kind. Perhaps it has become too familiar. At any rate, they gave it a perfunctory reading.

BRISK AND BRIGHT

But they are interested in a selection from "New Girl in Town." That came off very well: brisk and bright.

Presently they got down to some calypso tunes in a medley that included such short-haired whoopers-up as "The Banana Boat Song." It is surprising how much fun they can get into them. It is not surprising that the audience response was enthusiastic. The banana boat had to sail twice, with brass blaring and drums rattling, and there were some auditors who joined in with the kind of ferver the full Boston Symphony Orchestra is not likely to inspire.

One gentleman in the second balcony rode the banana boat with such feeling, shaking invisible gourds in his hands the while, that it seemed reasonable to expect him down in the orchestra at any moment. The Pops Orchestra are a lot of hot cats in this kind of opus: Fiedler's Fiddling Fiends.

With Mr. Marsh at the piano the orchestra will repeat the Greig Concerto tonight and will go on from there for what should be another wonderful season. They are very much worth seeing and hearing.

279

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
MAY 1 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 1 1957

Boston Pops Opens 72d Year

by Calvin Campbell)

tra. This unusual photo was taken from the rear of the brass section of the orchestra looking out over the podium from which Fiedler is conducting.

Festive Season Launched Under Fiedler's Direction

By Harold Rogers

Among the pleasant harbingers of spring in Boston are the Pops concerts; and last night in Symphony Hall many Bostonians witnessed, in traditional style, the opening of the 72nd season.

Such occasions usually call forth, on behalf of the reviewer, some traditional observations. Certain things are mentioned, beginning with the sudden transformation in the appearance of Symphony Hall. One speaks of the walls that have doffed their winter maroon for a summery green. Usually it is referred to as being apple green, but this spring it is a lighter color.

One also speaks of the tables that cover the main floor, where listeners enjoy light refreshments to light conversation (when the music doesn't offer too much competition). One might mention the pretty girls who sell flowers, as well as the huge bouquet of gladioli that graces the conductor's platform. Chief among the attractions, of course, is Arthur Fiedler himself, distinguished and debonair, whose very presence adds verve and snap to the proceedings.

Last night Mr. Fiedler opened with a stately reading of "Pomp and Circumstance," played in observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of its composer, Sir Edward Elgar. With his abundant vitality he continued with a spinning version of the Overture to Johann Strauss's "Die Fledermaus," and followed it with the spritely "Tik-Tak" Polka from the same pen.

There were two arrangements by Percy Grainger—the sentimental "Londonderry Air" and the rollicking "Country Gardens"; and when Mr. Fiedler came to the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" he didn't lose a bit of the Oriental splendor in Saint-Saëns' score.

The featured soloist was Ozan Marsh, now appearing at the Pops for his third consecutive season. Originally from California and now of Bloomington, Ind., he is a pianist of many praiseworthy accomplishments. He played the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor, which he will repeat tonight, and he struck it off with dazzling power, so much so that one wondered if the piano had a microphone in it.

But he also proved he could evoke a tender tone and a poetic line, as this concerto often requires. He left the impression, however, of being a pianist with an extremely flashy technique, generally elucidated with startling clarity, but occasionally blurred by speed.

The remainder of the program continued in Mr. Fiedler's well established style — somewhat larger than life—as he gave us a medley from "My Fair Lady," a tune from "New Girl in Town," the "Banana Boat" Calypso (for which the audience demanded a repeat), "Moonglow" blended with the theme from "Picnic," and the Wedding Dance by Press. What Mr. Fiedler does with Ravel's "La Valse," however, must be heard to be believed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
MAY 1 1957

Fiedler Glad to Be Home, Pops Opening Brilliant

By PEGGY DOYLE

If there seemed to be a special zing about the opening of the 72d season of Boston Pops in Symphony Hall last night could it have been because Arthur Fiedler was happy to be back in North America and again conducting this great orchestra of 95 Boston Symphony musicians?

Just returned from Buenos Aires, where he was guest conductor of the Argentinian National Radio Orchestra, the diplomatic Pops conductor last week was most complimentary of South America and the South Americans while at the same time making it plain that the Boston Symphony men are unparalleled musicians.

The open-night highlight was the brilliant playing of Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16, with youthful Ozan Marsh soloist. It was Edvard Hagerup Grieg's own playing of his popular piano concerto in Leipzig in 1879 that first brought him to the attention of the musical world in the dual capacity of composer and pianist.

Marsh, who was offered a full scholarship for study in Europe by the great Dutch pianist, Egon Petri, when he was only 15, has long since proved his worthiness of this and other honors to Boston Pops and other audiences down the years.

In observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Edward Elgar, Pops conductor Fiedler chose "Pomp and Circumstance" to open the program. Overture to "Die Fledermaus" by Strauss, Grainger's "Londonderry Air" and Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens were also heard.

No one found fault with the musical symposium that followed Grieg's Piano Concerto and no wonder.

These included "Get Me to the Church on Time," "Wouldn't It be Loverly," "I'm Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "On the Street Where You Live," "The Rain in Spain" and "With a Little Bit of Luck."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
MAY 1 - 1957

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Fiedler Opens Pops Season Splendidly

Arthur Fiedler began the seventy-second season of the Pops without ceremony. Looking very handsome and a little stern, in impeccable dress clothes, he walked briskly to the Symphony Hall podium at 8:30 last night, raised his arm and launched the orchestra into Elgar's familiar "Pomp and Circumstance."

In the two and a half hours that followed, the maestro led his men through a variety of numbers, ranging from classics to calypso, to generally good effect. It was a pleasant evening, and a generally good beginning for another year of the Pops, which is one of Boston's most admirable institutions.

Elliot Norton

Mr. Fiedler had some trouble getting the musicians stirred up to the kind of playing we expect from the Boston Pops Orchestra. Their rendition of the early selections was a little casual. There seemed to be more circumstance than pomp in "Pomp and Circumstance," for instance.

But they came alive after a while and began to play as they have in the past. At their best, they're a remarkable orchestra, capable of playing the most difficult music with both precision and feeling, and popular music with the same rare combination of qualities.

SECOND PART BETTER

In the second part of the program, which consisted principally of Grieg's piano concerto, they distinguished themselves, as though, perhaps, they were making an extraordinary effort to support with absolute perfection the performance of the young pianist Ozan Marsh.

Making his third appearance here at the Pops, this slender, boyish and appealing musician, gave them and the audience something to admire. The orchestra worked with him gloriously, and Mr. Fiedler conducted as though he were dedicated to producing nothing less than total beauty.

Mr. Marsh seemed a little nervous in the beginning, which is reasonable enough. He attacked the keyboard with a sort of straight-arm, like a football player. But he relaxed presently and began to create lovely sounds in great rolling swells.

PLAYS WITH WARMTH

He would appear to be an excellent technician, capable of producing truthfully every note and every passage.

He also brings great warmth and color to Grieg.

In the final section of last night't performance, Mr. Fielder and his musicians turned to popular music, beginning with a medley from "My Fair Lady."

They apparently don't like "My Fair Lady" very much, which is strange because it is lovely music of its kind. Perhaps it has become too familiar. At any rate, they gave it a perfunctory reading.

BRISK AND BRIGHT

But they are interested in a selection from "New Girl in Town." That ca meoff very well: brisk and bright.

Presently they got down to some calypso tunes in a medley that included such short-haired whoopers-up as "The Banana Boat Song." It is surprising how much fun they can get into them. It is not surprising that the audience response was enthusiastic. The banana boat had to sail twice, with brass blaring and drums rattling, and there were some auditors who joined in with the kind of fervor the full Boston Symphony Orchestra is not likely to inspire.

One gentleman in the second balcony rode the banana boat with such feeling, shaking invisible gourds in his hands the while, that it seemed reasonable to expect him down in the orchestra at any moment. The Pops Orchestra are a lot of hot cats in this kind of opus: Fiedler's Fiddling Fiends.

With Mr. Marsh at the piano the orchestra will repeat the Greig Concerto tonight and will go on from there for what should be another wonderful season. They are very much worth seeing and hearing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,340
MAY 2 - 1957

Musical Boston Goes Informal With Concerts

Boston (AP) —Musical Boston goes informal tonight with the opening of the Pops concerts, light-hearted prelude to the summer music season.

Calypso and jazz beats will mingle with classics, drum rolls during the new season in which music lovers take just as seriously as the formal fall and winter concert season.

Ninety-five Boston Symphony orchestra players don summer-weight clothes and play before tables instead of rows of seats but there will be more Beethoven than boogie. This, the 72nd Pops season, will last until June 29.

Veteran maestro Arthur Fiedler leads the Pops concerts which feature lighter classics not suitable to the formal symphony season and big-orchestra arrangement of popular music of the day. Pops programs run the gamut from Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
NAVY POST NO. 297 A.L.
SOMERVILLE POST #19 A.L.
Wednesday May 1, 1957

Slattery MEMORIAL PARK INTERMENT SERVICE

MAX RIZEMAN
...ate of Brookline—3:15 P. M.

WESTON—In Boston, April 30th, Alice T. (Johnson), wife of the late John A. West, sister of Mrs. Hildur Thompson and Allan L. Johnson, late of 497 Huntington Ave. Funeral service at The Morrissey Brothers Funeral Home, 139 Stoughton St., Dorchester Corner, Dorchester, Friday, May the 3rd at 11 A. M. Relatives and friends invited. Visiting hours Wednesday 8 to 10 P. M. Thursday 2 to 4 and 8 to 10 P. M.

WHITEHILL—In Watertown, April 29, Jeanette W. Whitehill of 3 Clayton St. Mother of Mrs. Mable W. Bixby, Mrs. Gladys R. Weldon, Miss Elsie M. and Walter W. Whitehill. Funeral service at the Brown and Sons Chapel, 36 Trapelo Rd., Belmont, Wednesday, May 1 at 2 p.m. Friends may call at the chapel Tuesday 2 to 4 and 7 to 9.

We regret to announce the death of our comrade, P. C. Alvin B. Grissom. Legion ritual will be held at the Henderson Funeral Home, 517 Broadway, Everett, on Wed. May 1 at 8 P. M. Members please attend.

We regret to announce the death of our comrade Arthur R. Wolle, 28 Nashua St., Somerville. Funeral from the McKenna Funeral Home, 390 Medford St., Somerville. Requiem Mass at St. Ann's Church, Somerville on Thur. morning 9:45 a.m. Legion Ritual on Wed. at 8 p.m. Comrades please attend.
Walter M. Jones, Cmdr.
Grace E. Pickett, Adj't.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

MAY 2 1957

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES

Fiedler Opens Pops Season Splendidly

Arthur Fiedler began the seventy-second season of the Pops without ceremony. Looking very handsome and a little stern, in impeccable dress clothes, he walked briskly to the Symphony Hall podium at 8:30 last night, raised his arm and launched the orchestra into Elgar's familiar "Pomp and Circumstance."

In the two and a half hours that followed, the maestro led his men through a variety of numbers, ranging from classics to calypso, to generally good effect. It was a pleasant evening, and a generally good beginning for another year of the Pops, which is one of Boston's most admirable institutions.

Elliot Norton

Mr. Fiedler had some trouble getting the musicians stirred up to the kind of playing we expect from the Boston Pops Orchestra. Their rendition of the early selections was a little casual. There seemed to be more circumstance than pomp in "Pomp and Circumstance," for instance.

But they came alive after a while and began to play as they have in the past. At their best, they're a remarkable orchestra, capable of playing the most difficult music with both precision and feeling, and popular music with the same rare combination of qualities.

SECOND PART BETTER

In the second part of the program, which consisted principally of Grieg's piano concerto, they distinguished themselves, as though, perhaps, they were making an extraordinary effort to support with absolute perfection the performance of the young pianist Ozan Marsh.

Making his third appearance here at the Pops, this slender, boyish and appealing musician, gave them and the audience something to admire. The orchestra worked with him gloriously, and Mr. Fiedler conducted as though he were dedicated to producing nothing less than total beauty.

Mr. Marsh seemed a little nervous in the beginning, which is reasonable enough. He attacked the keyboard with a sort of straight-arm, like a football player. But he relaxed presently and began to create lovely sounds in great rolling swells.

PLAYS WITH WARMTH

He would appear to be an excellent technician, capable of producing truthfully every note and every passage.

He also brings great warmth and color to Grieg.

In the final section of the first night's performance, Mr. Fiedler and his musicians turned to popular music, beginning with a medley from "My Fair Lady."

They apparently don't like "My Fair Lady" very much, which is strange because it is lovely music of its kind. Perhaps it has become too familiar. At any rate, they gave it a perfunctory reading.

But they are interested in a selection from "New Girl in Town." That came off very well; brisk and bright.

Presently they got down to some calypso tunes in a medley that included such short-haired whoopers-up as "The Banana Boat Song." It is surprising how much fun they can get into them. It is not surprising that the audience response was enthusiastic. The banana boat had to sail twice, with brass blaring and drums rattling, and there were some auditors who joined in with the kind of [illegible] the full Boston Symphony Orchestra is not likely to inspire.

One gentleman [illegible] second balcony [illegible] host with such [illegible] invisible gourds in his hands the while, that it [illegible] to expect [illegible] the orchestra [illegible] The Pops Orchestra are a lot of hot cats in this kind of [illegible]pus: Fiedler's Fiddling Fiends.

And now let the orchestra go on from there for what should be another wonderful season. The Pops are very much worth seeing and hearing.

(Elliot Norton broadcasts every Friday at 9:30 p. m. on WBZ.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,974

MAY 2 1957

275

Boston 'Pops' Are Unique Springtime Experience

Springtime in these parts means flowering dogwood, forsythia, junior proms, and the Boston "Pops." For the "Pops" have long since outgrown any exclusively musical significance; they have become, for thousands of persons within driving range of Boston, virtually a rite of Spring.

Of course, since they became popular in Boston, the "Pops" have been imitated all over the country. But, as is usually the case, the imitations only make the original more attractive by contrast.

No one who has ever sat for an evening at one of the small tables on the Symphony Hall floor, sipping a suitable potation or two, and has listened to the superb "Pops" orchestra playing Strauss waltzes and polkas or selections from "South Pacific" and "Kiss Me, Kate" needs any urging to repeat the experience.

It's a unique Springtime pleasure for us New Englanders, the closest thing we have to similar concerts in Munich or Vienna.

It's an experience in which everyone participates, nobody feels left out, and everyone no matter what age feels himself sharing the tempo and enthusiasm of youth.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 7 - 1957

Joy Pottle will be piano soloist at the Pops tonight, Friday, and Sunday evenings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

MAY 11 1957

LEO LITWIN will [illegible]

Society

MARJORIE WATTS SHERMAN, editor

FAMILIAR SCENE at Symphony Hall as 72d season of Boston's famous Pops opens.

ALL PICTURES BY JOHN M. HURLEY GLOBE STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

NOT VASSAR PROSPECTS are the twin sons, Aaron and Addison, of Mrs. Owen Thomas of Cambridge, who is a Vassar alumna, as is Mrs. John Gray of Dover, whose daughter Lucinda is Class of 1976 at Vassar.

TOP:
4TH GENERATION to go to Vassar, Beatrice Gates (left) and her pretty mother, Mrs. David E. Gates, who is chairman of patronesses, talk about the Vassar Pops, May 15, at Symphony Hall, with Mrs. George B. Foote and her daughter Tamasin of Weston. Tam will be the third generation of her family to go to Vassar, whose scholarship fund will benefit from this pleasant evening.

A VASSAR MOTHER AND DAUGHTER, attractive Mrs. Thomas Gannett and Vassar freshman Nancy Gannett talk over plans for Vassar Pops at Symphony Hall, May 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
MAY 2 1957

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES

Fiedler Opens Pops Season Splendidly

Arthur Fiedler began the seventy-second season of the Pops without ceremony. Looking very handsome and a little stern, in impeccable dress clothes, he walked briskly to the Symphony Hall podium at 8:30 last night, raised his arm and launched the orchestra into Elgar's familiar "Pomp and Circumstance."

In the two and a half hours that followed, the maestro led his men through a variety of numbers, ranging from classics to calypso, to generally good effect. It was a pleasant evening, and a generally good beginning for another year of the Pops, which is one of Boston's most admirable institutions.

Elliot Norton

Mr. Fiedler had some trouble getting the musicians stirred up to the kind of playing we expect from the Boston Pops Orchestra. Their rendition of the early selections was a little casual. There seemed to be more circumstance than pomp in "Pomp and Circumstance," for instance.

But they came alive after a while and began to play as they have in the past. At their best, they're a remarkable orchestra, capable of playing the most difficult music with both precision and feeling, and popular music Town." That came off very well; brisk and bright.

Presently they got down to some calypso tunes in a medley that included such short-haired whoopers-up as "The Banana Boat Song." It is surprising how much fun they can get into them. It is not surprising that the audience response was enthusiastic. The banana boat had to sail twice, with brass blaring and drums rattling, and there were some auditors who joined in with the kind of [illegible] the full Boston Symphony Orchestra is not likely to inspire.

One gentleman in the second balcony [illegible] boat with such feeling [illegible] invisible gourds in his hands the while, that it [illegible] to expect him [illegible] the orchestra at any moment. The Pops Orchestra are a lot of hot cats in this kind of [illegible]pus: Fiedler's Fiddling Fiends.

And now let the orchestra go on from there for what should be another wonderful season. The Pops are very much worth seeing and hearing.

(Elliot Norton broadcasts every Friday at 9:30 p. m. on WBZ.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
MAY 5 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,974
MAY 2 1957

Boston 'Pops' Are Unique Springtime Experience

Springtime in these parts means flowering dogwood, forsythia, junior proms, and the Boston "Pops." For the "Pops" have long since outgrown any exclusively musical significance; they have become, for thousands of persons within driving range of Boston, virtually a rite of Spring.

Of course, since they became popular in Boston, the "Pops" have been imitated all over the country. But, as is usually the case, the imitations only make the original more attractive by contrast.

No one who has ever sat for an evening at one of the small tables on the Symphony Hall floor, sipping a potable potation or two, and has listened to the superb "Pops" orchestra playing Strauss waltzes and polkas or selections from "South Pacific" and "Kiss Me, Kate" needs any urging to repeat the experience.

It's a unique Springtime pleasure for us New Englanders, the closest thing we have to similar concerts in Munich or Vienna.

It's an experience in which everyone participates, nobody feels [illegible] and everyone no matter what age feels himself sharing the tempo and enthusiasm of youth.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 7 - 1957

Joy Pottle will be piano soloist at the Pops tonight, Friday, and Sunday evenings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411
MAY 11 1957

LEO LITWIN will be soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra Monday night at Symphony Hall in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 9 1957

George Humphrey
Robert Ripley will be cello soloist at the Pops in the Saint-Saëns Concerto No. 1 on Wednesday evening.

on Louder Than Words schoolhouse (classes are held in the town hall)?

In Africo, instead, the Christian-Democrats stuck to "bread and butter" issues. The elders of the village were called in and quizzed about local requirements and demands. They wanted roads to link the center of the village with their scattered plots of farmland. They demanded a reclamation and irrigation program to make more land available for farming. Above all, they needed new job opportunities, especially during the Winter months.

So, the Christian-Democrats of Africo got busy. With the help of provincial and national party headquarters, they managed to get work started on the roads and on the land reclamation program; as a result, the unemployment situation, too, became less tight. Those concrete achievements were allowed to speak for themselves. Rallies and electioneering in general were kept down to a minimum; much to the Reds' relief, practically no word was spent on Hungary.

But when the returns were in, the Communists' relief turned to bitter dismay. They saw their following cut down by 25 percent and lost control of Africo's municipal administration. Said a former local Communist; "When we are told something about Budapest or other far away places, we can never know if it is true or not. But what is close to us, we can see and touch, and this goes for a job, a house, a road."

To be sure, what is true in Bova and in Africo is not necessarily 100 percent true in Rome, in Naples, or in the large industrial centers of northern Italy. But surely, the results of the electoral experiment carried out in the twin Calabrian villages hold more than local significance for democracy's battle against communism.

TREAT YOUR FURS

to a cool . . safe summer in Chandler's modern vaults!

Just phone HAncock 6-7500 or IVanhoe 4-6000 and we'll send a bonded messenger to pick up your precious furs and rush them into the safety of our vaults! Storage at modest rates.

Ask about repairs and remodeling at special summer rates right now!

CHANDLER'S FUR SALON — SECOND FLOOR

Ch
Treme
Open M
Pretty . . cris
COACHMA ROBES
a perfect gift for m
8 Permanently finished cotto ingly printed in Blue on B on White; Pink o
to match in a sweet launders easily! Sizes 14
16½ to 24½.
CHANDLER'S NEGLIGE
FIFTH FLOOR
Also in Belmont at Cushing

Smart and swish!

Polished cotton printed sateen

SEPARATES

5.98

• Girls' sizes 7 to 14
• Teen sizes 8 to 14, 7.98

Separates born to go together . . .

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

MAY 16 1957

MAY 17 1957

With Monday evening of this week free, the writer succumbed to the ever-present urge for culture and betook himself with several friends to Boston and a session at the Boston Pops. Going to the Pops is an annual pastime for thousands, and it is anything but a long-hair thing, but there are those who aren't aware of that fact as the writer and his friends found out. As they scuttled in and out of traffic, thanks to the maneuverability of a little foreign car owned by one of them, they noticed some local people also headed for Boston. They pulled alongside at a stop light and exchanged greetings in the manner of neighbors meeting each other on vacation, say, in Afghanistan, with much hallooing and waving. The driver in the other car shouted over the roar of the motors, "Going to the game?" "Nope," was the reply, "going to the Boston Pops." Disappointment and a touch of unbelief registered on the faces of the other motorists, and their smiles thinned ever so slightly. The writer and his friends shrugged at the reaction and made haste for Symphony Hall where second balcony seats for the world's most glorious music are available for 50 cents on a first come-first serve basis. And the music was glorious, ranging all the way from the overture to Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," to up-to-the-minute jazz and Calypso. On their way home they stopped at a road-side coffee shop. Shortly after they entered, other local acquaintances came in and sat down at the counter alongside them. Again, pleasant greetings and the inevitable question, "Been to the game?", asked in a tone that implied, "How did you like the game?", with certainty that since the writer and friends were coming from Boston, they obviously had been at the game. The answer brought forth guarded "Oh?", slight confusion and just a hint of "what's the matter with those guys?" hanging in the atmosphere. But the writer and friend were unmoved by the reaction and were doubly assured when it became clear that (1) it had been cold at Fenway Park, and (2) the Red Sox had lost the game.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 21 1957

BU Photographic Service

Bernard Kritzman will be piano soloist at the Pops Wednesday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 22 1957

Noah Bielski will be violin soloist Thursday night at the Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 18 1957

Frederick Fennell will be guest conductor at the Pops Tuesday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 23 1957

Tana Bayson, this year's winner of the young artist's piano award given by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will play the Schumann Piano Concerto Saturday night at the Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 24 1957

Mass. Air National Guard

Nicholas Rasetzki, whose "Beacon Hill March" will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler Sunday at the Mass. Air National Guard Night at the Pops. The piece has been adopted as the group's official march. At right is Col. R. E. McLaughlin of the 102d Air Defense Wing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784

MAY 28 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 181,485

JUN 1 1957

All Fiedlers Sure to Be Fiddlers But They're Not All Kin to Arthur

... May 26, 1957

Greater Boston Irish News

Pops To Feature Gaelic

By MARY TIERNEY

A symphonic score by Irish composer Archibald J. Potter, will have its American premiere, Friday evening, June 7 at the annual Eire Society's night at Pops.

The score, entitled, "Variations on a Popular Tune," will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of conductor Arthur Fiedler.

IRELAND, ENGLAND ACCLAIM SCORE

Originally played in Dublin, the score has already won wide acclaim in both Ireland and England. It was adapted from a tune that swept Ireland in the 19th century and more recently in 1952 as "The Wild Colonial Boy."

The score was brought to Boston through the efforts of Henry Weldon of Milton, vice-president of the Eire Society and chairman of the dinner.

The composer, Archibald J. Potter, is professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin.

The Pops program will also include "The Eire Suite" commissioned for the Society and executed by Leroy Anderson. Other specially selected Irish tunes will be included.

The committee in charge of arrangements include John Cavanagh, Dr. Regina Madden and Thomas F. O'Day.

Humphrey J. Mahoney is Feis chairman.

(Mary Tierney's Irish column is published every Tuesday evening in the Boston Traveler.)

FIEDLER

Page Nine

THE MISTERS FIEDLER—William Max Fiedler, left, who will conduct a number by his father on tomorrow's Pops program, chats with conductor Arthur Fiedler.

FIEDLER

Continued from the First Page

A little research into the subject is quite apropos, for tomorrow at Symphony Hall the Boston Pops will be conducted in the playing of the Lustpiel Overture by William Max Fiedler, whose father, Max Fiedler, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed the number.

William Max Fiedler, a music teacher in California, was invited to be guest conductor by Arthur Fiedler, whose father, Emanuel Fiedler, was violinist with the Boston Symphony and Pops orchestras when Max Fiedler was conductor back in 1908.

Thoroughly confused? Be of stout heart, for the family relationships of the Fiedlers of the Boston Symphony has sent many music cognoscenti off the deep end, including one local music critic.

Responsibility for the foregoing statement is none other than Arthur Fiedler, who for years has been busy explaining that he is not related in any way, near or distant, to the descendants of the late Max Fiedler.

One German, One Austrian

"The Max Fiedlers," Arthur Fiedler points out, "are of German descent and my family is of Austrian descent. The fact that so many Fiedlers have been connected with the Boston Symphony leads a great many people to assume that we are all inter-related. However, we all have the same name, which, of course, means fiddler."

The name fits the family—Arthur's, that is—perfectly. Emanuel Fiedler was a top-fight violinist with the Boston Symphony for 25 years. He was also a member of the Adamowski Quartet and the Kneisel Quartet. Emanuel's brothers, Bernard and Gustav, were also violinists with the Boston Symphony. And Arthur payed the violin and viola in the orchestra, beginning in 1915 before he became conductor of the Pops in 1930.

All clear now? If you're still hazy, drop over to Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and see either Arthur or William Max Fiedler. Either will be glad to explain the relationship—or lack of it— to you. They've been doing just that all their lives.

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376
MAY 16 1957
MAY 17 1957

With Monday evening of this week free, the writer succumbed to the ever-present urge for culture and betook himself with several friends to Boston and a session at the Boston Pops. Going to the Pops is an annual pastime for thousands, and it is anything but a long-hair thing, but there are those who aren't aware of that fact as the writer and his friends found out. As they scuttled in and out of traffic, thanks to the maneuverability of a little foreign car owned by one of them, they noticed some local people also headed for Boston. They pulled alongside at a stop light and exchanged greetings in the manner of neighbors meeting each other on vacation, say, in Afghanistan, with much hallooing and waving. The driver in the other car shouted over the roar of the motors, "Going to the game?" "Nope," was the reply, "going to the Boston Pops." Disappointment and a touch of unbelief registered on the faces of the other motorists, and their smiles thinned ever so slightly. The writer and his friends shrugged at the reaction and made haste for Symphony Hall where second balcony seats for the world's most glorious music are available for 50 cents on a first come-first serve basis. And the music was glorious, ranging all the way from the overture to Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" to up-to-the-minute jazz and Calypso. On their way home they stopped at a road-side coffee shop. Shortly after they entered, other local acquaintances came in and sat down at the counter alongside them. Again, pleasant greetings and the inevitable question, "Been to the game?", asked in a tone that implied, "How did you like the game?", with certainty that since the writer and friends were coming from Boston, they obviously had been at the game. The answer brought forth guarded "Oh?", slight confusion and just a hint of "what's the matter with those guys?" hanging in the atmosphere. But the writer and friend were unmoved by the reaction and were doubly assured when it became clear that (1) it had been cold at Fenway Park, and (2) the Red Sox had lost the game.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 21 1957

BU Photographic Service

Bernard Kritzman will be piano soloist at the Pops Wednesday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 24 1957

Mass. Air National Guard

Nicholas Rasetzki, whose "Beacon Hill March" will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler Sunday at the Mass. Air National Guard Night at the Pops. The piece has been adopted as the group's official march. At right is Col. R. E. McLaughlin of the 102d Air Defense Wing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 22 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784
Boston Traveler, Tuesday,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
JUN 1 1957

All Fiedlers Sure to Be Fiddlers But They're Not All Kin to Arthur

By RICHARD HURT

Music lovers whose eyes are sharp and whose heads are clear are hereby invited to come along as we plunge into a fearless attempt to set down the facts on a subject that has tripped up many an expert: The relationship between Arthur Fiedler, Conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and Max Fiedler, Emanuel Fiedler Gustav Fiedler, Bernard Fiedler and William Max Fiedler.

FIEDLER
Page Nine

THE MISTERS FIEDLER—William Max Fiedler, left, who will conduct a number by his father on tomorrow's Pops program, chats with conductor Arthur Fiedler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 18 1957

Frederick Fennell will be guest conductor at the Pops Tuesday evening.

Noah Bielski will be violin soloist Thursday night at the Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 23 1957

Tana Bawden, this year's winner of the young artist's piano award given by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will play the Schumann Piano Concerto Saturday night at the Pops.

J. [illegible]
nin[illegible]

The score, entitled, "Variations on a Popular Tune," will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of conductor Arthur Fiedler.

IRELAND, ENGLAND ACCLAIM SCORE

Originally played in Dublin, the score has already won wide acclaim in both Ireland and England. It was adapted from a tune that swept Ireland in the 19th century and more recently in 1952 as "The Wild Colonial Boy."

The score was brought to Boston through the efforts of Henry Weldon of Milton, vice-president of the Eire Society and chairman of the dinner.

The composer, Archibald J. Potter, is professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin.

The Pops program will also include "The Eire Suite" commissioned for the Society and executed by Leroy Anderson. Other specially selected Irish tunes will be included.

The committee in charge of arrangements include John Cavanaugh, Dr. Regina Madden and Thomas F. O'Day.

FIEDLER

Continued from the First Page

A little research into the subject is quite apropos, for tomorrow at Symphony Hall the Boston Pops will be conducted in the playing of the Lustpiel Overture by William Max Fiedler, whose father, Max Fiedler, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed the number.

William Max Fiedler, a music teacher in California, was invited to be guest conductor by Arthur Fiedler, whose father, Emanuel Fiedler, was violinist with the Boston Symphony and Pops orchestras when Max Fiedler was conductor back in 1908.

Thoroughly confused? Be of stout heart, for the family relationships of the Fiedlers of the Boston Symphony has sent many music cognoscenti off the deep end, including one local music critic.

Responsibility for the foregoing statement is none other than Arthur Fiedler, who for years has been busy explaining that he is not related in any way, near or distant, to the descendants of the late Max Fiedler.

One German, One Austrian

"The Max Fiedlers," Arthur Fiedler points out, "are of German descent and my family is of Austrian descent. The fact that so many Fiedlers have been connected with the Boston Symphony leads a great many people to assume that we are all inter-related. However, we all have the same name, which, of course, means fiddler."

The name fits the family—Arthur's, that is—perfectly. Emanuel Fiedler was a top-fight violinist with the Boston Symphony for 25 years. He was also a member of the Adamowski Quartet and the Kneisel Quartet. Emanuel's brothers, Bernard and Gustav, were also violinists with the Boston Symphony. And Arthur played the violin and viola in the orchestra, beginning in 1915 before he became conductor of the Pops in 1930.

All clear now? If you're still hazy, drop over to Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and see either Arthur or William Max Fiedler. Either will be glad to explain the relationship—or lack of it— to you. They've been doing just that all their lives.

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

MAY 16 1957

MAY 17 1957

With Monday evening of this week free, the writer succumbed to the ever-present urge for culture and betook himself with several friends to Boston and a session at the Boston Pops. Going to the Pops is an annual pastime for thousands, and it is anything but a long-hair thing, but there are those who aren't aware of that fact as the writer and his friends found out. As they scuttled in and out of traffic, thanks to the maneuverability of a little foreign car owned by one of them, they noticed some local people also headed for Boston. They pulled alongside at a stop light and exchanged greetings in the manner of neighbors meeting each other on vacation, say, in Afghanistan, with much hallooing and waving. The driver in the other car shouted over the roar of the motors, "Going to the game?" "Nope," was the reply, "going to the Boston Pops." Disappointment and a touch of unbelief registered on the faces of the other motorists, and their smiles thinned ever so slightly. The writer and his friends shrugged at the reaction and made haste for Symphony Hall where second balcony seats for the world's most glorious music are available for 50 cents on a first come-first serve basis. And the music was glorious, ranging all the way from the overture to Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," to up-to-the-minute jazz and Calypso. On their way home they stopped at a road-side coffee shop. Shortly after they entered, other local acquaintances came in and sat down at the counter alongside them. Again, pleasant greetings and the inevitable question, "Been to the game?", asked in a tone that implied, "How did you like the game?", with certainty that since the writer and friends were coming from Boston, they obviously had been at the game. The answer brought forth guarded "Oh?", slight confusion and just a hint of "what's the matter with those guys?" hanging in the atmosphere. But the writer and friend were unmoved by the reaction and were doubly assured when it became clear that (1) it had been cold at Fenway Park, and (2) the Red Sox had lost the game.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 21 1957

BU Photographic Service

Bernard Kritzman will be piano soloist at the Pops Wednesday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 22 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 24 1957

Mass. Air National Guard

Nicholas Rasetzki, whose "Beacon Hill March" will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler Sunday at the Mass. Air National Guard Night at the Pops. The piece has been adopted as the group's official march. At right is Col. R. E. McLaughlin of the 102d Air Defense Wing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784

1957
Boston Traveler, Tuesday,

BOOTS & SADDLE
AIR-CONDITIONED
Route 119—Groton, Mass. GI 8-6371
STEAKS
Prime Rib of Beef
Choice Sea Foods
at the Console
John Emery

Officials of neither Arlington nor Brookline have received any state bills similar to that been published for a portion of the pension going to Gott and Johnson.

Gott claimed 29 years of service and Johnson 23 years. Public service was also the other three legislators with the state: Rowan, 17 years; Porter, 15 years; Cowing, 9 years.

Meanwhile the state board announced that the first retirement checks for the six House members will go out at the end of June. The checks will be for sums retroactive to May.

THE MISTERS FIEDLER—William Max Fiedler, left, who will conduct a number by his father on tomorrow's Pops program, chats with conductor Arthur Fiedler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 18 1957

Noah Bielski will be violin soloist Thursday night at the Pops.

Frederick Fennell will be guest conductor at the Pops Tuesday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 23 1957

Tana Bawden, this year's winner of the young artist's piano award given by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will play the Schumann Piano Concerto Saturday night at the Pops.

J. [illegible]
nin[illegible]

T[illegible] score, entitled, "Variations on a Popular Tune," will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of conductor Arthur Fiedler.

IRELAND, ENGLAND ACCLAIM SCORE

Originally played in Dublin, the score has already won wide acclaim in both Ireland and England. It was adapted from a tune that swept Ireland in the 19th century and more recently in 1952 as "The Wild Colonial Boy."

The score was brought to Boston through the efforts of Henry Weldon of Milton, vice-president of the Eire Society and chairman of the dinner.

The composer, Archibald J. Potter, is professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin.

The Pops program will also include "The Eire Suite" commissioned for the Society and executed by Leroy Anderson. Other specially selected Irish tunes will be included.

The committee in charge of arrangements include John Cavanaugh, Dr. Regina Madden and Thomas F. O'Day.

FIEDLER

Continued from the First Page

A little research into the subject is quite apropos, for tomorrow at Symphony Hall the Boston Pops will be conducted in the playing of the Lustpiel Overture by William Max Fiedler, whose father, Max Fiedler, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed the number.

William Max Fiedler, a music teacher in California, was invited to be guest conductor by Arthur Fiedler, whose father, Emanuel Fiedler, was violinist with the Boston Symphony and Pops orchestras when Max Fiedler was conductor back in 1908.

Thoroughly confused? Be of stout heart, for the family relationships of the Fiedlers of the Boston Symphony has sent many music cognoscenti off the deep end, including one local music critic.

Authority for the foregoing statement is none other than Arthur Fiedler, who for years has been busy explaining that he is not related in any way, near or distant, to the descendants of the late Max Fiedler.

One German, One Austrian

"The Max Fiedlers," Arthur Fiedler points out, "are of German descent and my family is of Austrian descent. The fact that so many Fiedlers have been connected with the Boston Symphony leads a great many people to assume that we are all inter-related. However, we all have the same name, which, of course, means fiddler."

The name fits the family—Arthur's, that is—perfectly. Emanuel Fiedler was a top-fight violinist with the Boston Symphony for 25 years. He was also a member of the Adamowski Quartet and the Kneisel Quartet. Emanuel's brothers, Bernard and Gustav, were also violinists with the Boston Symphony. And Arthur played the violin and viola in the orchestra, beginning in 1915 before he became conductor of the Pops in 1930.

All clear now? If you're still hazy, drop over to Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and see either Arthur or William Max Fiedler. Either will be glad to explain the relationship—or lack of it— to you. They've been doing just that all their lives.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 1 1957

Next Week at the Pops

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107
JUN 1 1957

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON will be guest conductor at the Pops Monday evening.

Pappoutsakis And Krips To Be Soloists

Two premières will occur at the Boston Pops Friday evening when the Eire Society will be represented in the audience. James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the first performance in Boston of Boccherini's Flute Concerto in D major. "Variations on a Popular Tune" ("The Wild Colonial Boy") by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dublin, will be given its first United States performance.

Soloists for the week include Leo Litwin, who will play Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on Monday. Arthur Mackenzie will play Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra on Tuesday. Alfred Krips, concertmaster of the Boston Pops, will be heard in Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 in G minor on Wednesday. The Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor by Saint-Saëns will be played by Bertica Shulman on Thursday. On Saturday Ayrton Pinto will be soloist in Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole for Violin and Orchestra.

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct Monday and part of the Saturday concert. Kenneth MacKillop, Jr., will conduct during Tufts University Night on Thursday evening, and both Renato Pacini and Lorna Cooke deVaron will conduct portions of the concert on Saturday evening, New England Conservatory Night.

Sunday concerts, beginning June 9, will be omitted for the rest of the season. The programs for the week:

Monday Evening, June 3

Wien bleibt Wien, March ... Schramml
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .. Suppé
Intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ... Mascagni
The Skaters, Waltzes ... Waldteufel
Marche Slave ... Tchaikovsky
Fledermaus Quadrille ... Strauss
Rhapsody in Blue ... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Selection from "The King and I" ... Rodgers
The Typewriter ... Anderson
Sleigh Ride ... Anderson
Tropical Merengue ... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Thursday Evening, June 6
Tufts University Night

The Thunderer, March ... Sousa
Overture to "Candide" ... Bernstein
Clair de Lune ... Debussy
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22 ... Saint-Saëns
Soloist: Bertica Shulman
Kenneth MacKillop, Jr., conducting
Allegro from the Classical Symphony ... Prokofiev
Tufts University Songs
Tuftonia's Day ... E. W. Hayes
Spell It Out for Tufts ... A. T. Williams
Dear Alma Mater .. Leo Rich Lewis
Selections from "My Fair Lady" ... Loewe
Young Love ... arr. Hayman
TViana ... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Friday Evening, June 7

Rakóczy March ... Berlioz
In the Antrim Hills and Fair Day, from "An Irish Symphony" .. Harty
Irish Tune from County Derry ... Grainger
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ... Offenbach
Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27 ... Boccherini
Soloist: James Pappoutsakis
(First Performance in Boston)
Variations on a Popular Tune ("The Wild Colonial Boy") ... Potter
(First Performance in the United States)
Eire Suite ... Anderson
Victor Herbert Favorites, ar. Sanford
The Typewriter ... Anderson
El Capitan, March ... Sousa
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Saturday Evening, June 8
New England Conservatory Night

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" ... Wagner

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 14 1957

Howe Derbyshire

Alan Barker will be piano soloist at the Pops tonight in Rimsky-Korsakov's Piano Concerto in C-sharp minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 1 1957

Ozan Marsh will be soloist at the Pops tonight and Sunday night in the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1. From the left: Alfred Krips, concertmaster; Mr. Marsh, and Arthur Fiedler.

At the Pops

Tonight

Wedding March, from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .. Mendelssohn
Suite from "The Water Music" ... Handel-Harty
Jewel Song, from "Faust" ... Gounod
Soprano: Susan Stone
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" .. Strauss
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-Flat .. Liszt
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Romeo and Juliet, Overture-Fantasia ... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" .. Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ... Arr. Hayman
The Stars and Stripes Forever, March ... Sousa
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Sunday Night

Pomp and Circumstance ... Elgar
Overture to "Prince Igor" ... Borodin
Rachel, quand du Seigneur, from "La Juive" ... Helévy
Tenor: Cantor Michal Hammerman
Lustspiel Overture ... Max Fiedler
Conducted by William Max Fiedler
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-Flat ... Liszt
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
1812, Ouverture Solennelle ... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "New Girl in Town" ... Merrill
Saraband ... Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ... Arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Program at Telepix

A short subject depicting a winter weekend in Canada heads up the program now being shown at the Telepix. Other features include newsreel clips of the events leading up to World War I, with shots of Lloyd George, the Czar, and Kaiser Wilhelm; a pictorial story of a milkman on his run; music by Buddy Rich and his orchestra; a puppet film; a "Little Rascals" skit; cartoons, and news.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 16 1957

Chong Hyo Lee, Korean pianist, will appear at the Pops Friday evening.

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 50,926
MAY 13 1957

Allen Barker
(Photo By Derbyshire)

Plays Tomorrow With Boston Orchestra

Allen Barker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis A. Barker (formerly of Portland), and nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip MacDonald and of Justice and Mrs. Walter Tapley, will appear as the soloist with the Boston Pops Tuesday. Mr. Barker will play Rimsky-Kirsakoff's concerto for piano with orchestra.

He recently returned from a European concert tour, following which he gave a recital in Washington, D.C. He was a pupil of the late Ethel Pullerton Hatch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 1 1957

Next Week at the Pops

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 1 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107
JUN 1 1957

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON will be guest conductor at the Pops Monday evening.

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 50,926
MAY 13 1957

Allen Barker
(Photo By Derbyshire)

Plays Tomorrow With Boston Orchestra

Allen Barker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis A. Barker (formerly of Portland), and nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip MacDonald and of Justice and Mrs. Walter Tapley, will appear as the soloist with the Boston Pops Tuesday. Mr. Barker will play Rimsky-Kirsakoff's concerto for piano with orchestra.

He recently returned from a European concert tour, following which he gave a recital in Washington, D.C. He was a pupil of the late Ethel Fullerton Hatch.

Pappoutsakis And Krips To Be Soloists

Two premières will occur at the Boston Pops Friday evening when the Eire Society will be represented in the audience. James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will play the first performance in Boston of Boccherini's Flute Concerto in D major. "Variations on a Popular Tune" ("The Wild Colonial Boy") by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dublin, will be given its first United States performance.

♪ ♪ ♪

Soloists for the week include Leo Litwin, who will play Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on Monday. Arthur Mackenzie will play Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra on Tuesday. Alfred Krips, concertmaster of the Boston Pops, will be heard in Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 in G minor on Wednesday. The Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor by Saint-Saëns will be played by Bertica Shulman on Thursday. On Saturday Ayrton Pinto will be soloist in Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole for Violin and Orchestra.

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct Monday and part of the Saturday concert. Kenneth MacKillop, Jr., will conduct during Tufts University Night on Thursday evening, and both Renato Pacini and Lorna Cooke deVaron will conduct portions of the concert on Saturday evening, New England Conservatory Night.

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday concerts, beginning June 9, will be omitted for the rest of the season. The programs for the week:

Monday Evening, June 3

Wien bleibt Wien, March...Schrammel
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"...Suppé
Intermezzo, from "Cavalleria Rusticana"...Mascagni
The Skaters, Waltzes...Waldteufel
Marche Slave...Tchaikovsky
Fledermaus Quadrille...Strauss
Rhapsody in Blue...Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Selection from "The King and I"...Rodgers
The Typewriter...Anderson
Look Sharp—Be Sharp...Merrick-Bennett
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

♪ ♪ ♪

Tuesday Evening, June 4
Knights Templars Night

Boston Commandery, March...Carter
Dynamiden, Waltzes...Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves...Vaughan Williams
Overture to "Mignon"...Thomas
Hungarian Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra...Liszt
Soloist: Arthur Mackenzie
Russian Easter, Overture...Rimsky-Korsakov
Berlin Bouquet...arr. Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite"...Grofé
Classical Jube Box...Anderson
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, June 5

Procession of the Sardar, from "Caucasian Sketches"...Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"...Wagner
Panis Angelicus...Franck
Artists' Life, Waltzes...Strauss
Violin Concerto No. 1 in G Minor, Op. 26...Bruch
Soloist: Alfred Krips
Finale from Symphony No. 4...Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites arr. Sanford
Sleigh Ride...Anderson
Tropical Merengue...arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, June 6
Tufts University Night

The Thunderer, March...Sousa
Overture to "Candide"...Bernstein
Clair de Lune...Debussy
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne"...Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22...Saint-Saëns
Soloist: Bertica Shulman
Kenneth MacKillop, Jr., conducting
Allegro from the Classical Symphony...Prokofiev
Tufts University Songs
Tuftonia's Day...E. W. Hayes
Spell It Out for Tufts...A. T. Williams
Dear Alma Mater...Leo Rich Lewis
Selections from "My Fair Lady"...Loewe
Young Love...arr. Hayman
TViana...arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, June 7

Rakóczy March...Berlioz
In the Antrim Hills and Fair Day, from "An Irish Symphony"...Harty
Irish Tune from County Derry...Grainger
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne"...Offenbach
Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27...Boccherini
Soloist: James Pappoutsakis
(First Performance in Boston)
Variations on a Popular Tune ("The Wild Colonial Boy")...Potter
(First Performance in the United States)
Eire Suite...Anderson
Victor Herbert Favorites, ar. Sanford
The Typewriter...Anderson
El Capitan, March...Sousa
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, June 8

New England Conservatory Night
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser"...Wagner
Overture to "Candide"...Bernstein
Symphonie Espagnole for Violin and Orchestra...Lalo
Soloist: Ayrton Pinto
Artists' Life, Waltzes...Strauss
Overture to "Oberon"...Weber
Conducted by Renato Pacini
New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Conductor
Sing Me a Song...Vacchi
Three Songs from "Alice in Wonderland"...Fine
Fourth Movement from "The Kid"...McKinley
Drinking Song...Brahms
Drinking Song, from "The Beggar's Opera"...arr. Pinkham
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Selection from "New Girl in Town"...Merrill
Fiddle-Faddle...Anderson
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne"...Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Ozan Marsh will be soloist at the Pops tonight and Sunday night in the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1. From the left: Alfred Krips, concertmaster; Mr. Marsh, and Arthur Fiedler.

At the Pops

Tonight

Wedding March, from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"...Mendelssohn
Suite from "The Water Music"...Handel-Harty
Jewel Song, from "Faust"...Gounod
Soprano: Susan Stone
Overture to "Die Fledermaus"...Strauss
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-Flat...Liszt
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
Romeo and Juliet, Overture-Fantasia...Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady"...Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic"...Arr. Hayman
The Stars and Stripes Forever, March...Sousa
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Night

Pomp and Circumstance...Elgar
Overture to "Prince Igor"...Borodin
Rachel, quand du Seigneur, from "La Juive"...Halévy
Tenor: Cantor Michal Hammerman
Lustspiel Overture...Max Fiedler
Conducted by William Max Fiedler
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-Flat...Liszt
Soloist: Ozan Marsh
1812, Ouverture Solennelle...Tchaikovsky
Selection from "New Girl in Town"...Merrill
Saraband...Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne...Arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Program at Telepix

A short subject depicting a winter weekend in Canada heads up the program now being shown at the Telepix. Other features include newsreel clips of the events leading up to World War I, with shots of Lloyd George, the Czar, and Kaiser Wilhelm; a pictorial story of a milkman on his run; music by Buddy Rich and his orchestra; a puppet film; a "Little Rascals" skit; cartoons, and news.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
MAY 16 1957

Chong Hyo Lee, Korean pianist, will appear at the Pops Friday evening.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 6 1957

DEAR EDITOR

PROGRESS

A historical footnote to G. F "Dulles and the Arab Plot Agai (NL, April 15):

"During the prolonged negotiatior Saudis," the New York Times r April 9, "the State Department tr cessfully to get the Soviets to present refusal to grant entry visas Americans, including members of forces, of Jewish faith."

In 1880, the Tsarist Government began to expel American Jews from burg (outside the pale of settlement U. S. Secretary of State James G. clared that religious discrimination American citizens could not be tolerated. Referring to the trade treaty signed between the United States and Tsarist Russia in 1832. Blaine, in a letter dated July 1881, said emphatically that the intentions of the United States in signing the treaty were not and could not have been as the Russian Government was interpreting them; that the Russian interpretation was indefensible on moral grounds; and that, on such questions, local law could not be permitted to override the express terms of a treaty.

The struggle continued for thirty years. On December 13, 1911, the Congress adopted Joint Resolution 166, which declared:

"The people of the United States assert as a fundamental principle that the right of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad because of race or religion; that the Government of the United States concludes its treaties for the equal protection of all classes of its citizens without regard to race or religion . . ."

Asserting that Russia had violated the treaty of 1832, the Congressional resolution called on the President to denounce it. On December 18, 1911, the treaty passed into history; it was formally abrogated in reprisal against the Tsarist Government's refusal "to honor American passports duly issued to American citizens, on account of race and religion."

And now?

New York City MARK VISHNIAK

LABOR TEST

In his "Employers, Unions and the 'Right to Work'" (NL, April 15), Ernest M. DiCicco refers to the Taft-Hartley Act and the "right-to-work" laws as "repressive" legislation that "ignores certain basic social and economic principles." He also says that they are "aimed at destroying union security" and that "the question of the 'right to work' seems to be

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

MAY 15 1957

Italy Honors Scores for '55 Salute

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

More than 60 organizations and individuals today were honored by the Italian Government for their part in Boston's Salute to Rome held in November, 1955.

Vittorio Ivella, first secretary of the Italian Embassy in Washington, presented medals of recognition at a breakfast sponsored by Mayor Hynes at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

The meeting was the kickoff of Rome's return salute to the City of Boston, to be observed between June 26 and July 4. The medals presented were coined in Rome itself.

Among the recipients were Representative John D. Brown (R) of Boston, official city greeter; Mark Bortman, chairman of the Salute to Rome week; Ralph Lowell, head of the Lowell Institute; Girolamo Vitelli, Italian consul in Boston; Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor; the Very Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Lally, editor of the Pilot, official Roman Catholic archdiocesan weekly; the Grand Lodge of the Sons of Italy, the Independent Sons of Italy;

Wm. Filene Sons Company, Capt. Augustus Migell of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, the Boston Public Library, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Harvard University, Boston University, Boston College, Brandeis University, Northeastern University, the Italian Historical Society;

Also, Mrs. Paul Dudley White, Judge Felix Forte, Mrs. Foster Furcolo, E. Snowden Chambers of the United States Information Service, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gabriel F. Piemonte, city councilor, Ernest Henderson, president of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce; and the Boston Atheneum.

W... ...e, however, a simple and practical test that can be made if one wants an impartial, scientific answer to the question of what effects Taft-Hartley and the "right-to-work" laws have had. It involves two simple steps:

1. A factual comparison of the strength and status (to use DiCicco's own words) of unions and union members in the U. S. prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act and since it has been passed.

2. A factual comparison of the strength and status of unions and union members in the 18 states that have right-to-work laws and in those that do not.

Facts, after all, are much better than adjectives, epithets and theories.

San Marino, Calif. STANLEY M. ARNDT

WAGNER

It is difficult to understand how THE NEW LEADER could have permitted so trite and corny a column as William Henry Chamberlin's on Wagner in the April 15 issue. Chamberlin likes Wagner because of "the sustained dramatic content of his work, the integration of poetry with music." This comment has been overworked to the point of nausea. I should also ease are...

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

er hurts!
CARE
SEND IT TO CARE, N.Y.
or your local CARE office

CHANGING YOUR ADDRESS?
At least three weeks' notice is required for all changes of address. Include your old address—or address label.
Subscription Department
NEW LEADER
7 E. 15th St., New York 3

THEATER PARTIES
All trade unions and fraternal organizations are requested when planning theater parties to do so through Bernard Feinman, Manager of The New Leader Theatrical Department, 7 East 15th St., N.Y.C. Phone, ALgonquin 5-8844.

FABIAN'S B'KLYN FOX FLATBUSH AT NEVINS TR 5-9350
JAMES STEWART
"The SPIRIT of ST. LOUIS"
CINEMASCOPE • WARNERCOLOR
plus "THE AMAZON TRADER"
JOHN SUTTON • COLOR
LATE SHOW TONIGHT!

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL
Showplace of the Nation Rockefeller Center
THE MUSIC HALL'S GREAT EASTER SHOW
AUDREY HEPBURN · FRED ASTAIRE
in
"FUNNY FACE"
Co-starring KAY THOMPSON with MICHEL AUCLAIR • ROBERT FLEMYNG
Produced by ROGER EDENS • Directed by STANLEY DONEN
Technicolor® and Vistavision® • A Paramount Picture
"Glory of Easter"—Far-famed Cathedral Spectacle . . . and
"SPRING SAILING"—Brilliant new revue . . . produced by Leonidoff, with the Rockettes, Corps de Ballet, Choral Ensemble . . . Symphony Orchestra directed by Raymond Paige.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

BH Anni

USIC

ert

OLPH ELIE
on the Pops last
irst time this sea-
ıal, I had a won-
In fact, to judge
al air of youth bout (the young bury Latin and Country Day
ery much in evi-
ld.
ler's genius as a t was also very nce, too, for the anged from the Variations of ilarious travesty ove;" from Rimflimsy (and
Piano Concerto to al charms of a
'My Fair Lady."
are night indeed
er, who increases sparkle with the t provide a mus-
xtraordinary bal-
of extraordinary
as well.
iakoff's Piano
h has been per-nce with this oren in Cambridge
such little regard easy to find any t whatever out-own autobio-
d even he didn't onfidence in it.
in it of the later
r, and what inis based largely is derived from dies. Although lifferent pianist, was a very good
for her he com-
k. But with all und and fury, it
a bringing forth
Russian accent. was interesting was done in a t and persuas-an Barker.

After this, the sonorities of Wagner and the humorous incongruities of Hayman's musical wedding of "The Banana Boat Song" and "Marianne," not to mention the parody of "Young Love" lent the typical flavor of Popsian charm that has made these affairs unique in the land for some 72 years.

Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,682

MAY 29 1957

I AM A CONDUCTOR
by Charles Munch

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has written a very enlightening essay on his experiences in the musical world and has put into words what it means to him to be a conductor. While he intended his ideas to be helpful to those who are, or would like to become, orchestra leaders, what he has to say is of great interest to the ordinary concertgoer.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the score of any work to be performed, a conductor must have the ability to interpret the composer's feeling, and to get the members of the orchestra to express it. He must also arrange rehearsals, concerts, and programs. The reader will realize that the time and energy required for all this is overwhelming. An unusual book for all music lovers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,656

JUN 7 1957

Gets Music Degree

Carmen Montano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Montano of 42 Ley Street, was graduated last evening from Hartt College of Music at the college's 17th commencement exercises in Hartford. Montano received his bachelor of music degree with a major in trumpet.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon John Hersey of Westport, noted author and writer, who received the doctor of fine arts degree; Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the Music Department at the University of California, the first Hartt College alumnus ever to be given a degree by Hartt; and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both receiving the doctor of music degree. Hersey was the principal speaker.

May 6, 1957

ex... ...entertainment happy television, but there'll be a significant exception to the rule coming up tonight on Channel 4. The exception is taking the form of a filmed documentary titled "City in a Shadow," and I think it will be worth your while to catch it during its showing from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

The special program, produced by WBZ-TV in co-operation with the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, turns the spotlight on external neighborhood conditions in the city of Boston and adjacent communities. Having seen a preview of the film, I can say that the presentation should prove quite an eye-opener to many viewers.

Actual scenes shot in and around the city are used to dramatize a Boston Planning Board report that 25 per cent of the Hub now comprises blighted areas and that 25 per cent more is headed in that deplorable direction. The accompanying commentary, narrated by Carl deSuze, stresses the pressing need for urban renewal—a physical transformation of many of the city's neighborhoods.

You shouldn't have too much difficulty recognizing the photographed scenes, some of which are not guaranteed to bolster one's civic pride.

Pops Concert Listed

TELEVISION TOPIC: Channel 2 will televise a Boston Pops Orchestra concert next Monday night at 8:30 from MIT's Kresge Auditorium. The concert, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will comprise a program ranging from a Schumann piano concerto to selections from "My Fair Lady."

a grater audience. To a museum, it is the answer to reaching the public beyond its doors." Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is the only one in the country "to be wired throughout for telecasts from all its galleries. We are creating a museum without walls."

Music and Sight

Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science, spoke of the ability of tv to stimulate a viewer's curiosity "to learn things first-hand. I feel for anyone—no matter how old," he said, "who has lost his desire to learn of the unknown."

Harrison Keller, prexy of N. E. Conservatory of Music, said:

"Television has given music back to sight." He pointed out that "the peculiar advantage the television camera has over the concertgoer is mobility. We hope the camera will also be able to capture the personality of the performing artists."

Prexy Carl Ell of Northeastern U. said he believed educational tv could be "the greatest aid to developing and bringing to fruition the American ideal of equal educational opportunity for all. When the other 250 educational channels approved by the FCC are properly used, we could raise the moral and mental level of our whole society."

On the subject of great teachers for tv, prexy Sacher of Brandeis warned that "too much emphasis could be placed on the glamour personality." "We must be sure we aren't seeking the teacher with a classic profile," he said.

...onight at the Pops

...y England Conservatory Night
...ce of the Guests into the Wart-
..., from "Tannhäuser" .. Wagner
...re to "Candide" .... Bernstein
...onie Espagnole for Violin and
...estra ..... Lalo
Soloist: Ayrton Pinto
..., Life, Waltzes ..... Strauss
...re to "Oberon" ..... Weber
...onducted by Renato Pacini
...England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Conductor
Sing Me a Song ..... Vacchi
Three Songs from "Alice in Wonderland" ..... Fine
Fourth Movement from "The Kid" ..... McKinley
Drinking Song ..... Brahms
Drinking Song, from "The Beggar's Opera" ..... arr. Pinkham
Harry Ellis Dickson, conducting
Selection from "New Girl in Town" ..... Merrill
Fiddle-Faddle ..... Anderson
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Prologue to "Pagliacci" .. Leoncavallo
Eri tu che macchiavi, from "Un Ballo in Maschera" ... Verdi
Soloist: Robert Merrill
1812, Ouverture Solennelle .. Tchaikovsky
Songs with Piano
Robert Merrill
Berlin Bouquet ..... arr. Mason
Freilachs, from "Hasseneh" ..... Press
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, June 14

National Emblem, March ..... Bagley
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Largo, from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes Strauss
Toccata ..... Frescobaldi-Kindler
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Oklahoma!" .. Rodgers
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes ..... Kern
Farandole, from "L'Arlésienne" .. Bizet
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

Saturday Evening, June 15

Boston Pops March ..... Tobin
Russian Easter, Overture Rimsky-Korsakov
Little Fugue in G minor Bach-Cailliet
Estudiantina, Waltzes Waldteufel
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 Grieg
Soloist: Minuetta Kessler
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Sleigh Ride ..... Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tuesday Evening, June 11

Triumphal March, from "Aida" Verdi
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ..... Rossini
Addio all madre, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Tenor: Giuseppe del Vento
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ..... Ponchielli
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor (first movement ..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Salvatore Sullo
Polovetzian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
Selection from "The Most Happy Fella" ..... Loesser
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Book Sharp-Be Sharp Merrick-Bennett
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, June 12
Harvard Class of 1932 Night
Closed to the Public

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Academic Festival Overture .. Brahms
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Harold C. Schmidt conducting
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" Glinka
Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor Handel
Soloist: John Woodworth
Up the Street, March ..... Morse
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Selections from "My Fair Lady" Loewe
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Harvard Fantasy ..... Anderson
Fair Harvard
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Thursday Evening, June 13
Israel Histradut Night

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Overture to "Candide" ..... Bernstein
Kol Nidrei ..... Bruch
Violoncello Solo: Jacobus Langendoen
Suite from "Gaité Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Hatikvoh
The Star-Spangled Banner
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Two Arias for Baritone and Orchestra

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6
Sunday
BOSTON
Indep. Re
Circ. 8
MAY 26 1

Rus

2d Ba
Stamp
71 Ye

Now on the evenings at Po
Hall as you re
table or your balcony, take up and salute
Light Brigade
in the second
There are most the full of the Light charge came fore you st
your seat.
You've pr that charge
The Herald night, quite it discovere cent tickets cony.

Tickets C

They com p.m. that clutch a ti bought in sures them
547 second capacity—a formance.
But what
rub. And th
hind the cha
Doors for at 7:45 p.m.
pens it's eve himself.
The galle

New England Ne
Box 2078, Boston
Sunday
BOSTON
Indep. Re
Circ. 8
JUN 9

"I'LL NEVER T
Arthur Fiedler,
bright yellow be son College sen behalf of the Tu
who will be grad degree magna
the Tufts Univ

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 6 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 15 1957

DEAR EDITOR

THE NEW LEADER welcomes comment and criticism on any of its features, but letters should not exceed 300 words.

PROGRESS

A historical footnote to G. F. Hudson's "Dulles and the Arab Plot Against Israel" (NL, April 15):

"During the prolonged negotiations with the Saudis," the New York Times reported on April 9, "the State Department tried unsuccessfully to get the Soviets to drop their present refusal to grant entry visas to certain Americans, including members of the armed forces, of Jewish faith."

In 1880, the Tsarist Government of Russia began to expel American Jews from St. Petersburg (outside the pale of settlement for Jews). U. S. Secretary of State James G. Blaine declared that religious discrimination as between American citizens could not be tolerated. Referring to the trade treaty signed between the United States and Tsarist Russia in 1832, Blaine, in a letter dated July 1881, said emphatically that the intentions of the United States in signing the treaty were not and could not have been as the Russian Government was interpreting them; that the Russian interpretation was indefensible on moral grounds; and that, on such questions, local law could not be permitted to override the express terms of a treaty.

The struggle continued for thirty years. On December 13, 1911, the Congress adopted Joint Resolution 166, which declared:

"The people of the United States assert as a fundamental principle that the right of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad because of race or religion; that the Government of the United States concludes its treaties for the equal protection of all classes of its citizens without regard to race or religion . . ."

Asserting that Russia had violated the treaty of 1832, the Congressional resolution called on the President to denounce it. On December 18, 1911, the treaty passed into history; it was formally abrogated in reprisal against the Tsarist Government's refusal "to honor American passports duly issued to American citizens, on account of race and religion."

And now?

New York City MARK VISHNIAK

LABOR TEST

In his "Employers, Unions and the 'Right to Work'" (NL, April 15), Ernest M. DiCicco refers to the Taft-Hartley Act and the "right-to-work" laws as "repressive" legislation that "ignores certain basic social and economic principles." He also says that they are "aimed at destroying union security" and that "the question of the 'right to work' seems to be constantly raised by the most vicious of the anti-union employers."

It is so simple to hurl adjectives and vituperative epithets. It is also easy to judge all unions by the ideal theoretical union and ignore Beckism, just as it is easy to tar all unions with the pitch of Beckism. And it certainly was not difficult to top Professor DiCicco's article with a blurb reading, "Is it better to be dominated by the company or by fellow workers?"; but it would have been no more difficult to ask, Is it better to be dominated by racketeers, gangsters, goons and Becks than to have the right to work?" Indeed, such loaded questions may satisfy the interrogator, but they are not likely to convince anyone of anything.

There is, however, a simple and practical test that can be made if one wants an impartial, scientific answer to the question of what effects Taft-Hartley and the "right-to-work" laws have had. It involves two simple steps:

1. A factual comparison of the strength and status (to use DiCicco's own words) of unions and union members in the U. S. prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act and since it has been passed.

2. A factual comparison of the strength and status of unions and union members in the 18 states that have right-to-work laws and in those that do not.

Facts, after all, are much better than adjectives, epithets and theories.

San Marino, Calif. STANLEY M. ARNDT

WAGNER

It is difficult to understand how THE NEW LEADER could have permitted so trite and corny a column as William Henry Chamberlin's on Wagner in the April 15 issue. Chamberlin likes Wagner because of "the sustained dramatic content of his work, the integration of poetry with music." This comment has been overworked to the point of nausea. I should also please care... hunger hurts!

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

SEND $1 TO CARE, N.Y.
or your local CARE office

CHANGING YOUR ADDRESS?
At least three weeks' notice is required for all changes of address. Include your old address—or address label.
Subscription Department
NEW LEADER
7 E. 15th St., New York 3

THEATER PARTIES
All trade unions and fraternal organizations are requested when planning theater parties to do so through Bernard Feinman, Manager of The New Leader Theatrical Department, 7 East 15th St., N.Y.C. Phone, ALgonquin 5-8844.

FABIAN'S B'KLYN FOX FLATBUSH . TR 5-
AT NEVINS 9350
JAMES STEWART
"The SPIRIT of ST. LOUIS"
CINEMASCOPE • WARNERCOLOR
plus "THE AMAZON TRADER"
JOHN SUTTON • COLOR
LATE SHOW TONIGHT!

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL
Showplace of the Nation Rockefeller Center
THE MUSIC HALL'S GREAT EASTER SHOW
AUDREY HEPBURN · FRED ASTAIRE
in
"FUNNY FACE"
Co-starring KAY THOMPSON with MICHEL AUCLAIR • ROBERT FLEMYNG
Produced by ROGER EDENS • Directed by STANLEY DONEN
Technicolor® and Vistavision® • A Paramount Picture
"Glory of Easter"—Far-famed Cathedral Spectacle . . . and "SPRING SAILING"-Brilliant new revue . . . produced by Leonidoff, with the Rockettes, Corps de Ballet, Choral Ensemble . . . Symphony Orchestra directed by Raymond Paige.

Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,682
MAY 29 1957

I AM A CONDUCTOR
by Charles Munch

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has written a very enlightening essay on his experiences in the musical world, and has put into words what it means to him to be a conductor. While he intended his ideas to be helpful to those who are, or would like to become, orchestra leaders, what he has to say is of great interest to the ordinary concert-goer.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the score of any work to be performed, a conductor must have the ability to interpret the composer's feeling, and to get the members of the orchestra to express it. He must also arrange rehearsals, concerts, and programs. The reader will realize that the time and energy required for all this is overwhelming. An unusual book for all music lovers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,656
JUN 7 1957

Gets Music Degree

Carmen Montano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Montano of 42 Ley Street, was graduated last evening from Hartt College of Music at the college's 17th commencement exercises in Hartford. Montano received his bachelor of music degree with major in trumpet.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon John Hersey of Westport, noted author and writer, who received the doctor of fine arts degree; Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the Music Department of the University of California, the first Hartt College alumnus ever to be given a degree by Hartt, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both receiving the doctor of music degree. Hersey was the principal speaker.

vision, but there'll be a significant exception to the rule coming up tonight on Channel 4. The exception is taking the form of a filmed documentary titled "City in a Shadow," and I think it will be worth your while to catch it during its showing from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

The special program, produced by WBZ-TV in co-operation with the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, turns the spotlight on external neighborhood conditions in the city of Boston and adjacent communities. Having seen a preview of the film, I can say that the presentation should prove quite an eye-opener to many viewers.

Actual scenes shot in and around the city are used to dramatize a Boston Planning Board report that 25 per cent of the Hub now comprises blighted areas and that 25 per cent more is headed in that deplorable direction. The accompanying commentary, narrated by Carl deSuze, stresses the pressing need for urban renewal—a physical transformation of many of the city's neighborhoods.

You shouldn't have too much difficulty recognizing the photographed scenes, some of which are not guaranteed to bolster one's civic pride.

Pops Concert Listed

TELEVISION TOPIC: Channel 2 will televise a Boston Pops Orchestra concert next Monday night at 8:30 from MIT's Kresge Auditorium. The concert, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will comprise a program ranging from a Schumann piano [illegible] selections from "My Fair Lady."

a greater audience. To a museum, it is the answer to reaching the public beyond its doors." Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is the only one in the country "to be wired throughout for telecasts from all its galleries. We are creating a museum without walls."

Music and Sight

Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science, spoke of the ability of tv to stimulate a viewer's curiosity "to learn things first-hand. I feel for anyone—no matter how old," he said, "who has lost his desire to learn of the unknown."

Harrison Keller, prexy of N. E. Conservatory of Music, said:

"Television has given music back to sight." He pointed out that "the peculiar advantage the television camera has over the concertgoer is mobility. We hope the camera will also be able to capture the personality of the performing artists."

Prexy Carl Ell of Northeastern U. said he believed educational tv could be "the greatest aid to developing and bringing to fruition the American ideal of equal educational opportunity for all. When the other 250 educational channels approved by the FCC are properly used, we could raise the moral and mental level of our whole society."

On the subject of great teachers for tv, prexy Sacher of Brandeis warned that "too much emphasis could be placed on the glamour personality." "We must be sure we aren't seeking the teacher with a classic profile," he said.

After this, the sonorities of Wagner and the humorous incongruities of Hayman's musical wedding of "The Banana Boat Song" and "Marianne," not to mention the parody of "Young Love" lent the typical flavor of Popsian charm that has made these affairs unique in the land for some 72 years.

Tonight at the Pops

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Tuesday Evening, June 11

Triumphal March, from "Aida" . . . Verdi
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" . . . Rossini
Addio all madre, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . Mascagni
Tenor: Giuseppe del Vento
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" . . . Ponchielli
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor (first movement) . . . Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Salvatore Sullo
Polovtsian Dances, from "Prince Igor" . . . Borodin
Selection from "The Most Happy Fella" . . . Loesser
Malouna, Gypsy Tango . . . Gade
Look Sharp-Be Sharp . . . Merrick-Bennett
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, June 12
Harvard Class of 1932 Night
Closed to the Public

Rakoczy March . . . Berlioz
Academic Festival Overture . . . Brahms
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" . . . Strauss
Harold C. Schmidt conducting
Overture to "Ruslan and Ludmilla" . . . Glinka
Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor . . . Handel
Soloist: John Woodworth
Up the Street, March . . . Morse
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" . . . Grofé
Selections from "My Fair Lady" . . . Loewe
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne . . . arr. Hayman
Harvard Fantasy . . . Anderson
Fair Harvard
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, June 13
Israel Histradut Night

Pump and Circumstance . . . Elgar
Overture to "Candide" . . . Bernstein
Kol Nidrei . . . Bruch
Violoncello Solo: Jacques Langendoen
Suite from "Gaité Parisienne" . . . Offenbach
Hatikvoh
The Star-Spangled Banner
Finlandia, Tone Poem . . . Sibelius
Two Arias for Baritone and Orchestra
Prologue to "Pagliacci" . . . Leoncavallo
Eri tu che macchiavi, from "Un Ballo in Maschera" . . . Verdi
Soloist: Robert Merrill
1812, Ouverture Solennelle . . . Tchaikovsky
Songs with Piano
Robert Merrill
Berlin Bouquet . . . arr. Mason
Freilachs, from "Hasseneh" . . . Press
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, June 14

National Emblem, March . . . Bagley
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" . . . Rossini
Largo, from "Xerxes" . . . Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Tales from the Vienna Woods . . . Waltzes . . . Strauss
Toccata . . . Frescobaldi-Kindler
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra . . . Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bolero . . . Ravel
Selection from "Oklahoma!" . . . Rodgers
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes . . . Kern
Farandole, from "L'Arlésienne" . . . Bizet
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, June 15

Boston Pops March . . . Tobin
Russian Easter, Overture . . . Rimsky-Korsakov
Little Fugue in G minor . . . Bach-Caillet
Estudiantina, Waltzes . . . Waldteufel
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 . . . Grieg
Soloist: Minuette Kessler
Bolero . . . Ravel
Selection from "Carousel" . . . Rodgers
Sleigh Ride . . . Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne . . . arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

New England Conservatory Night
Dance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" . . Wagner
Overture to "Candide" . . . . Bernstein
Rhapsodie Espagnole for Violin and Orchestra . . . . . Lalo
Soloist: Ayrton Pinto
Tales' Life, Waltzes . . . . . Strauss
Overture to "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
Conducted by Renato Pacini
New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Conductor
Sing Me a Song . . . . . Vacchi
Three Songs from "Alice in Wonderland" . . . . . Fine
Fourth Movement from "The Kid" . . . . . McKinley
Drinking Song . . . . . Brahms
Drinking Song, from "The Beggar's Opera" . . . . . arr. Pinkham
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Selection from "New Girl in Town" . . . . . Merrill
Fiddle-Faddle . . . . . Anderson
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" . . . . . Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

278

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 6 1957

CONTINUED

like to point out that the use of the word "poetry" with respect to Wagner's librettos is somewhat questionable. One needs only to read the lines aloud some time to note the ludicrous character.

But it is not Chamberlin's passion for Wagner that I would question. For there are some fine qualities about Wagner's music that should not be overlooked (although Chamberlin does not mention them). And then, after all, there are some who love Sigmund Romberg or Rodgers and Hammerstein. One cannot dispute matters of taste, as someone wisely observed long ago. Rather it is Chamberlin's juvenile approach to modern music which requires comment.

Chamberlin forgets that, when the works of "the immortal Wagner" were first performed, they were also referred to as "arid wastes of howling cacophony" by his listeners. He is unaware that his ear became accustomed to the novelties which Wagner introduced. And if he finds contemporary dissonant music too disturbing, he might try systematically—and with a little mental effort—enduring an exposure to such music with an effort to understand what it is all about. However, if he is too biased or too antiquated to be able to do this, then I would suggest that he stop pretending to be a music critic. This matter is not simply one of tastes, at least initially, but of education. Finally, he who wishes to stop his education in the culture of the past with the year 1917 is being somewhat ridiculous.

Champlin, Minn. REV. E. D. KLEMKE

Mr. Chamberlin replies:

The Reverend Klemke seems somewhat deficient in the capacity to accept deviations from his own standards of musical taste. The use of such pejorative epithets as "corny," "juvenile" and "ridiculous" does not strengthen his weak case for the blaring dissonance that passes for modern music.

Critics of somewhat wider fame than the Reverend Klemke have expressed different judgments about the poetic quality of such passages in Wagner's librettos as the "Liebestod," the Immolation Scene in Götterdämmerung, Wotan's Farewell, Hans Sachs's "Wahn, Wahn," and many others.

In a free society, the Reverend Klemke has the same right to like modern music that I have to dislike it. I must, however, dissent strongly from his view that liking modern music is just a matter of education. To my sorrow, I have been exposed to huge doses of "first performance" modern music in concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than 15 years; my aversion to it is quite unabated.

now brings —
BEN
GAZ to the screen
in his electrify portrayal of
"Jocko"!
"TI
ST
TH
LOU
BRO

be a significant exception to the rule coming up tonight on Channel 4. The exception is taking the form of a filmed documentary titled "City in a Shadow," and I think it will be worth your while to catch it during its showing from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

The special program, produced by WBZ-TV in co-operation with the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, turns the spotlight on external neighborhood conditions in the city of Boston and adjacent communities. Having seen a preview of the film, I can say that the presentation should prove quite an eye-opener to many viewers.

Actual scenes shot in and around the city are used to dramatize a Boston Planning Board report that 25 per cent of the Hub now comprises blighted areas and that 25 per cent more is headed in that deplorable direction. The accompanying commentary, narrated by Carl deSuze, stresses the pressing need for urban renewal—a physical transformation of many of the city's neighborhoods.

You shouldn't have too much difficulty recognizing the photographed scenes, some of which are not guaranteed to bolster one's civic pride.

Pops Concert Listed

TELEVISION TOPIC: Channel 2 will televise a Boston Pops Orchestra concert next Monday night at 8:30 from MIT's Kresge Auditorium. The concert, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will comprise a program ranging from a Schumann piano concerto to selections from "My Fair Lady."

165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 15 1957

College Prexies Give Educ'l TV A Report Card at Hub's WGBH Anni

Boston, May 14.

"What is the Place of Television in Education?" was the subject of a group of Greater Boston educational and cultural leaders on a special telecast marking the second anni of WGBH-TV. Opening the panel talk, Rev. Thomas Fleming, S. J., executive assistant to the prexy of Boston College, said:

"In discussing television and education, I must compare it to what great books mean to education. Television can bring to a whole community the great teachers of the day. It is one of the most promising channels of communication that God has given us."

Thomas Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said:

"I would like to follow Fr. Fleming's thoughts by emphasizing how television can range the entire field of human knowledge. It can go anywhere in the world—reach into any situation." Stating that the Boston Symphony was "not primarily an educational institution," he stressed his pleasure "that we have still joined in the great development by having concerts televised."

Dr. Harold Case, prexy of Boston U., introed the thought that tv "is deceptive. We are tempted with the prospect that it could help the problems of the crowded classroom. It could, but it is no substitute for the face-to-face teacher-student relationship. It would dilute effort and reduce discipline. Educational television works best when used as a supplementation."

'Seeing Is Learning'

"Television in general," prexy Abram Sacher of Brandeis U., pointed out, "has given a fresh turn to the old phrase 'seeing is believing.' Our task in educational television is to turn that phrase to 'seeing is learning.'"

Dr. Nathan Pusey, prexy of Harvard U., said: "The first obstacle we are up against is the phrase 'adult education' which seems to indicate that education should be completed by a certain time.

"Education is not something that a person is supposed to be through with at a definite point in his life. It should go from beginning to end." He said the role of WGBH-TV "is to contribute to the education of people all through their lives."

James Killian of M.I.T. said "educational tv should feed the hungry and stimulate the appetite of the well fed." Perry Rathbone, director of the Museum of Fine Arts, declared: "Museums have long awaited a visual means to present treasures entrusted to our care to a grater audience. To a museum, it is the answer to reaching the public beyond its doors." Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is the only one in the country "to be wired throughout for telecasts from all its galleries. We are creating a museum without walls."

Music and Sight

Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science, spoke of the ability of tv to stimulate a viewer's curiosity "to learn things first-hand. I feel for anyone—no matter how old," he said, "who has lost his desire to learn of the unknown."

Harrison Keller, prexy of N. E. Conservatory of Music, said:

"Television has given music back to sight." He pointed out that "the peculiar advantage the television camera has over the concertgoer is mobility. We hope the camera will also be able to capture the personality of the performing artists."

Prexy Carl Ell of Northeastern U. said he believed educational tv could be "the greatest aid to developing and bringing to fruition the American ideal of equal educational opportunity for all. When the other 250 educational channels approved by the FCC are properly used, we could raise the moral and mental level of our whole society."

On the subject of great teachers for tv, prexy Sacher of Brandeis warned that "too much emphasis could be placed on the glamour personality." "We must be sure we aren't seeking the teacher with a classic profile," he said.

5,255)

MUSIC

Pops Concert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I looked in on the Pops last night for the first time this season and as usual, I had a wonderful time. In fact, to judge by the general air of youth and festivity about (the young people of Roxbury Latin and the Beaver Country Day schools were very much in evidence) we all did.

Arthur Fiedler's genius as a program maker was also very much in evidence, too, for the musical fare ranged from the genial Haydn Variations of Brahms to an hilarious travesty on "Young Love;" from Rimsky-Korsakoff's flimsy (and rarely heard) Piano Concerto to the exceptional charms of a medley from "My Fair Lady." But it is a rare night indeed that Mr. Fiedler, who increases in vigor and sparkle with the years, does not provide a musical diet of extraordinary balance — and of extraordinary executive flair as well.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's Piano Concerto, which has been performed only once with this orchestra (and then in Cambridge in 1914), is of such little regard that it is not easy to find any reference to it whatever outside Rimsky's own autobiography ..... and even he didn't have much confidence in it. There is little in it of the later orchestral color, and what interest it has is based largely on the fact it is derived from Russian melodies. Although himself an indifferent pianist, Rimsky's wife was a very good one, and it was for her he composed the work. But with all the Lisztian sound and fury, it succeeds only in bringing forth a mouse with a Russian accent. Nonetheless, it was interesting to hear and it was done in a very competent and persuasive way by Alan Barker.

After this, the sonorities of Wagner and the humorous incongruities of Hayman's musical wedding of "The Banana Boat Song" and "Marianne," not to mention the parody of "Young Love" lent the typical flavor of Popsian charm that has made these affairs unique in the land for some 72 years.

Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,682
MAY 29 1957

I AM A CONDUCTOR
by Charles Munch

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has written a very enlightening essay on his experiences in the musical world, and has put into words what it means to him to be a conductor. While he intended his ideas to be helpful to those who are, or would like to become, orchestra leaders, what he has to say is of great interest to the ordinary concertgoer.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the score of any work to be performed, a conductor must have the ability to interpret the composer's feeling, and to get the members of the orchestra to express it. He must also arrange rehearsals, concerts, and programs. The reader will realize that the time and energy required for all this is overwhelming. An unusual book for all music lovers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,656
JUN 7 1957

Gets Music Degree

Carmen Montano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Montano of 42 Ley Street, was graduated last evening from Hartt College of Music at the college's 17th commencement exercises in Hartford. Montano received his bachelor of music degree with major in trumpet.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon John Hersey of Westport, noted author and writer, who received the doctor of fine arts degree; Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the Music Department of the University of California, the first Hartt College alumnus ever to be given a degree by Hartt, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both receiving the doctor of music degree. Hersey was the principal speaker.

Tonight at the Pops

...y England Conservatory Night
...nce of the Guests into the Wart-
..., from "Tannhäuser" .. Wagner
...are to "Candide" .... Bernstein
...honie Espagnole for Violin and
...estra ..... Lalo
Soloist: Arrton Pinto
..., Lilac, Waltzes ..... Strauss
...re to "Oberon" ..... Weber
Conducted by Renato Pacini
New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Conductor
Sing Me a Song ..... Vacchi
Three Songs from "Alice in Wonderland" ..... Fine
Fourth Movement from "The Kid" ..... McKinley
Drinking Song ..... Brahms
Drinking Song, from "The Beggar's Opera" ..... arr. Pinkham
Harry Ellis Dickson, conducting
Selection from "New Girl in Town" ..... Merrill
Fiddle-Faddle ..... Anderson
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Prologue to "Pagliacci" .. Leoncavallo
Eri tu che macchiavi, from "Un Ballo in Maschera" ... Verdi
Soloist: Robert Merrill
1812, Ouverture Solennelle. Tchaikovsky
Songs with Piano
Robert Merrill
Berlin Bouquet ..... arr. Mason
Freilachs, from "Rasseneh" ..... Freed
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, June 14

National Emblem, March ..... Bagley
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ..... Rossini
Largo, from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Toccata ..... Frescobaldi-Kindler
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Oklahoma!" .. Rodgers
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes ..... Kern
Farandole, from "L'Arlésienne" .. Bizet
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

Saturday Evening, June 15

Boston Pops March ..... Tobin
Russian Easter, Overture ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Little Fugue in G minor ..... Bach-Caillier
Etudiantina, Waltzes ..... Waldteufel
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ..... Grieg
Soloist: Minnette Kessler
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Sleigh Ride ..... Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tuesday Evening, June 11

Triumphal March, from "Aida" Verdi
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ..... Rossini
Addio all madre, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Tenor: Giuseppe del Vento
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ..... Ponchielli
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor (first movement ..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Salvatore Sullo
Polovetsian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
Selection from "The Most Happy Fella" ..... Loesser
Malouie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Look Sharp-Be Sharp Merrick-Bennett
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, June 12

Harvard Class of 1932 Night
Closed to the Public

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Academic Festival Overture ... Brahms
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Harold C. Schmidt conducting
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" ..... Glinka
Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor ..... Handel
Soloist: John Woodworth
Up the Street, March ..... Morse
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Selections from "My Fair Lady" .. Loewe
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Harvard Fantasy ..... Anderson
Fair Harvard
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Thursday Evening, June 13

Israel Histradut Night

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Overture to "Candide" ..... Bernstein
Kol Nidrei ..... Bruch
Violoncello Solo: Jacques Langendoen
Suite from "Gaité Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Hatikvah
The Star-Spangled Banner
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Two Arias for Baritone and Orchestra

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 6 1957

DEAR EDITOR

THE NEW LEADER
criticism on a
letters should

PROGRESS

A historical footnote to G. F. Hudson's "Dulles and the Arab Plot Against Israel" (NL, April 15):

"During the prolonged negotiations with the Saudis," the New York Times reported on April 9, "the State Department tried unsuccessfully to get the Soviets to drop their present refusal to grant entry visas to certain Americans, including members of the armed forces, of Jewish faith."

In 1880, the Tsarist Government of Russia began to expel American Jews from St. Petersburg (outside the pale of settlement for Jews). U. S. Secretary of State James G. Blaine declared that religious discrimination as between American citizens could not be tolerated. Referring to the trade treaty signed between the United States and Tsarist Russia in 1832. Blaine, in a letter dated July 1881, said emphatically that the intentions of the United States in signing the treaty were not and could not have been as the Russian Government was interpreting them; that the Russian interpretation was indefensible on moral grounds; and that, on such questions, local law could not be permitted to override the express terms of a treaty.

The struggle continued for thirty years. On December 13, 1911, the Congress adopted Joint Resolution 166, which declared:

"The people of the United States assert as a fundamental principle that the right of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or constantly raised by anti-union employer

It is so simple to h
tive epithets. It is al
by the ideal theoreti
ism, just as it is e
the pitch of Becki
not difficult to top
with a blurb read
dominated by the co
ers?"; but it would ficult to ask, "Is it
racketeers, gangster
to have the right to questions may satisf
are not likely to co
There is, however,
that can be made
scientific answer to fects Taft-Hartley a
have had. It involves
1. A factual comp
status (to use DiCi
and union members
passage of the Taf
has been passed.
2. A factual comp
status of unions a
18 states that have
those that do not.
Facts, after all, a
tives, epithets and t
San Marino, Calif.

WAGNER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 181,325
JUN 5 1957

BesTView in Town

Hub Problem Gets Airing

By ANTHONY La CAMERA

COMMUNITY PROBLEMS ordinarily get negligible exposure or consideration on entertainment-happy television, but there'll be a significant exception to the rule coming up tonight on Channel 4. The exception is taking the form of a filmed documentary titled "City in a Shadow," and I think it will be worth your while to catch it during its showing from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

The special program, produced by WBZ-TV in co-operation with the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, turns the spotlight on external neighborhood conditions in the city of Boston and adjacent communities. Having seen a preview of the film, I can say that the presentation should prove quite an eye-opener to many viewers.

Actual scenes shot in and around the city are used to dramatize a Boston Planning Board report that 25 per cent of the Hub now comprises blighted areas and that 25 per cent more is headed in that deplorable direction. The accompanying commentary, narrated by Carl deSuze, stresses the pressing need for urban renewal—a physical transformation of many of the city's neighborhoods.

You shouldn't have too much difficulty recognizing the photographed scenes, some of which are not guaranteed to bolster one's civic pride.

Pops Concert Listed

TELEVISION TOPIC: Channel 2 will televise a Boston Pops Orchestra concert next Monday night at 8:30 from MIT's Kresge Auditorium. The concert, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will comprise a program ranging from a Schumann piano concerto to selections from "My Fair Lady."

BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 15 1957

College Prexies Give Educ'l TV A Report Card at Hub's WGBH Anni

Boston, May 14.

"What is the Place of Television in Education? was the subject of a group of Greater Boston educational and cultural leaders on a special telecast marking the second anni of WGBH-TV. Opening the panel talk, Rev. Thomas Fleming, S. J., executive assistant to the prexy of Boston College, said.

"In discussing television and education, I must compare it to what great books mean to education. Television can bring to a whole community the great teachers of the day. It is one of the most promising channels of communication that God has given us."

Thomas Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said:

"I would like to follow Fr. Fleming's thoughts by emphasizing how television can range the entire field of human knowledge. It can go anywhere in the world—reach into any situation." Stating that the Boston Symphony was "not primarily an educational institution," he stressed his pleasure "that we have still joined in the great development by having concerts televised."

Dr. Harold Case, prexy of Boston U., introed the thought that tv "is deceptive. We are tempted with the prospect that it could help the problems of the crowded classroom." He cautioned, "But it is no substitute for the face-to-face teacher-student relationship. It would dilute effort and reduce discipline. Educational television works best when used as a supplementation."

'Seeing Is Learning'

"Television in general," prexy Abram Sacher of Brandeis U., pointed out, "has given a fresh turn to the old phrase 'seeing is believing.' Our task in educational television is to turn that phrase to 'seeing is learning.'"

Dr. Nathan Pusey, prexy of Harvard U., said: "The first obstacle we are up against is the phrase 'adult education' which seems to indicate that education should be completed by a certain time.

"Education is not something that a person is supposed to be through with at a definite point in his life. It should go from beginning to end." He said the role of WGBH-TV "is to contribute to the education of people all through their lives."

James Killian of M.I.T. said "educational tv should feed the hungry and stimulate the appetite of the well fed." Perry Rathbone, director of the Museum of Fine Arts, declared: "Museums have long awaited a visual means to present treasures entrusted to our care to a grater audience. To a museum, it is the answer to reaching the public beyond its doors." Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is the only one in the country "to be wired throughout for telecasts from all its galleries. We are creating a museum without walls."

Music and Sight

Bradford Washburn, director of the Museum of Science, spoke of the ability of tv to stimulate a viewer's curiosity "to learn things first-hand. I feel for anyone—no matter how old," he said, "who has lost his desire to learn of the unknown."

Harrison Keller, prexy of N. E. Conservatory of Music, said:

"Television has given music back to sight." He pointed out that "the peculiar advantage the television camera has over the concertgoer is mobility. We hope the camera will also be able to capture the personality of the performing artists."

Prexy Carl Ell of Northeastern U. said he believed educational tv could be "the greatest aid to developing and bringing to fruition the American ideal of equal educational opportunity for all. When the other 250 educational channels approved by the FCC are properly used, we could raise the moral and mental level of our whole society."

On the subject of great teachers for tv, prexy Sacher of Brandeis warned that "too much emphasis could be placed on the glamour personality." "We must be sure we aren't seeking the teacher with a classic profile," he said.

Tonight at the Pops

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tuesday Evening, June 11

Triumphal March, from "Aida" ... Verdi
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ... Rossini
Addio all madre, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ... Mascagni
Tenor: Giuseppe del Vento
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ... Ponchielli
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor (first movement ... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Salvatore Sullo
Polovetzian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ... Borodin
Selection from "The Most Happy Fella" ... Loesser
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ... Gade
Look Sharp-Be Sharp ... Merrick-Bennett
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, June 12
Harvard Class of 1932 Night
Closed to the Public

Rakóczy March ... Berlioz
Academic Festival Overture ... Brahms
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" ... Strauss
Harold C. Schmidt conducting
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" ... Glinka
Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor ... Handel
Soloist: John Woodworth
Up the Street, March ... Morse
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ... Grofé
Selections from "My Fair Lady" ... Loewe
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ... arr. Hayman
Harvard Fantasy ... Anderson
Fair Harvard
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Thursday Evening, June 13
Israel Histradut Night

Pomp and Circumstance ... Elgar
Overture to "Candide" ... Bernstein
Kol Nidrei ... Bruch
Violoncello Solo: Jacobus Langendoen
Suite from "Gaité Parisienne" ... Offenbach
Hatikvoh
The Star-Spangled Banner
Finlandia, Tone Poem ... Sibelius
Two Arias for Baritone and Orchestra
Prologue to "Pagliacci" ... Leoncavallo
Eri tu che macchiavi, from "Un Ballo in Maschera" ... Verdi
Soloist: Robert Merrill
1812, Ouverture Solennelle ... Tchaikovsky
Songs with Piano
Robert Merrill
Berlin Bouquet ... arr. Mason
Freilachs, from "Hasseneh" ... Press
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, June 14

National Emblem, March ... Bagley
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ... Rossini
Largo, from "Xerxes" ... Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes ... Strauss
Toccata ... Frescobaldi-Kindler
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bolero ... Ravel
Selection from "Oklahoma!" ... Rodgers
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes ... Kern
Farandole, from "L'Arlésienne" ... Bizet
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

Saturday Evening, June 15

Boston Pops March ... Tobin
Russian Easter, Overture ... Rimsky-Korsakov
Little Fugue in G minor ... Bach-Cailliet
Estudiantina, Waltzes ... Waldteufel
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 ... Grieg
Soloist: Minuetta Kessler
Bolero ... Ravel
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Sleigh Ride ... Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

5,2557

MUSIC

Pops Concert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I looked in on the Pops last night for the first time this season and as usual, I had a wonderful time. In fact, to judge by the general air of youth and festivity about (the young people of Roxbury Latin and the Beaver Country Day schools were very much in evidence) we all did.

Arthur Fiedler's genius as a program maker was also very much in evidence, too, for the musical fare ranged from the genial Haydn Variations of Brahms to an hilarious travesty on "Young Love;" from Rimsky-Korsakoff's flimsy (and rarely heard) Piano Concerto to the exceptional charms of a medley from "My Fair Lady." But it is a rare night indeed that Mr. Fiedler, who increases in vigor and sparkle with the years, does not provide a musical diet of extraordinary balance — and of extraordinary executive flair as well.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's Piano Concerto, which has been performed only once with this orchestra (and then in Cambridge in 1914), is of such little regard that it is not easy to find any reference to it whatever outside Rimsky's own autobiography . . . and even he didn't have much confidence in it. There is little in it of the later orchestral color, and what interest it has is based largely on the fact it is derived from Russian melodies. Although himself an indifferent pianist, Rimsky's wife was a very good one, and it was for her he composed the work. But with all the Lisztian sound and fury, it succeeds only in bringing forth a mouse with a Russian accent. Nonetheless, it was interesting to hear and it was done in a very competent and persuassive way by Alan Barker.

After this, the sonorities of Wagner and the humorous incongruities of Hayman's musical wedding of "The Banana Boat Song" and "Marianne," not to mention the parody of "Young Love" lent the typical flavor of Popsian charm that has made these affairs unique in the land for some 72 years.

Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,682
MAY 29 1957

I AM A CONDUCTOR
by Charles Munch

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has written a very enlightening essay on his experiences in the musical world and has put into words what it means to him to be a conductor. While he intended his ideas to be helpful to those who are, or would like to become, orchestra leaders, what he has to say is of great interest to the ordinary concertgoer.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the score of any work to be performed, a conductor must have the ability to interpret the composer's feeling, and to get the members of the orchestra to express it. He must also arrange rehearsals, concerts, and programs. The reader will realize that the time and energy required for all this is overwhelming. An unusual book for all music lovers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,656
JUN 7 1957

Gets Music Degree

Carmen Montano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Montano of 42 Ley Street, was graduated last evening from Hartt College of Music at the college's 17th commencement exercises in Hartford. Montano received his bachelor of music degree with a major in trumpet.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon John Hersey of Westport, noted author and writer, who received the doctor of fine arts degree; Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the Music Department at the University of California, the first Hartt College alumnus ever to be given a degree by Hartt; and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both receiving the doctor of music degree. Hersey was the principal speaker.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6
Sunday
BOSTON
Indep. Re
Circ. 3
JUN 9

"I'LL NEVER TA
Arthur Fiedler, w
bright yellow bea son College senio behalf of the Tuf
who will be gradu degree magna cu
the Tufts Univers

228

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 6 1957

DEAR EDITOR

THE NEW LEADER
criticism on a
letters should

PROGRESS

A historical footnote to G. F. Hudson's "Dulles and the Arab Plot Against Israel" (NL, April 15):

"During the prolonged negotiations with the Saudis," the New York Times reported on April 9, "the State Department tried unsuccessfully to get the Soviets to drop their present refusal to grant entry visas to certain Americans, including members of the armed forces, of Jewish faith."

In 1880, the Tsarist Government of Russia began to expel American Jews from St. Petersburg (outside the pale of settlement for Jews). U. S. Secretary of State James G. Blaine declared that religious discrimination as between American citizens could not be tolerated. Referring to the trade treaty signed between the United States and Tsarist Russia in 1832. Blaine, in a letter dated July 1881, said emphatically that the intentions of the United States in signing the treaty were not and could not have been as the Russian Government was interpreting them; that the Russian interpretation was indefensible on moral grounds; and that, on such questions, local law could not be permitted to override the express terms of a treaty.

The struggle continued for thirty years. On December 13, 1911, the Congress adopted Joint Resolution 166, which declared:

"The people of the United States assert as a fundamental principle that the right of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or

constantly raised by anti-union employer
It is so simple to h
tive epithets. It is al
by the ideal theoreti
ism, just as it is e
the pitch of Becki
not difficult to top
with a blurb read
dominated by the co
ers?"; but it would ficult to ask, "Is it
racketeers, gangster
to have the right to questions may satisf
are not likely to co
There is, however,
that can be made
scientific answer to fects Taft-Hartley a
have had. It involves
1. A factual com
status (to use DiCi
and union members
passage of the Taf
has been passed.
2. A factual com
status of unions a
18 states that have
those that do not.
Facts, after all, a
tives, epithets and t
San Marino, Calif.

WAGNER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 181,325

JUN 5 1957

BesTView in Town

Hub Problem Gets Airing

By ANTHONY La CAMERA

COMMUNITY PROBLEMS ordinarily get negligible exposure or consideration on entertainment-happy television, but there'll be a significant exception to the rule coming up tonight on Channel 4. The exception is taking the form of a filmed documentary titled "City in a Shadow," and I think it will be worth your while to catch it during its showing from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

The special program, produced by WBZ-TV in co-operation with the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, turns the spotlight on external neighborhood conditions in the city of Boston and adjacent communities. Having seen a preview of the film, I can say that the presentation should prove quite an eye-opener to many viewers.

Actual scenes shot in and around the city are used to dramatize a Boston Planning Board report that 25 per cent of the Hub now comprises blighted areas and that 25 per cent more is headed in that deplorable direction. The accompanying commentary, narrated by Carl deSuze, stresses the pressing need for urban renewal—a physical transformation of many of the city's neighborhoods.

You shouldn't have too much difficulty recognizing the photographed scenes, some of which are not guaranteed to bolster one's civic pride.

Pops Concert Listed

TELEVISION TOPIC: Channel 2 will televise a Boston Pops Orchestra concert next Monday night at 8:30 from MIT's Kresge Auditorium. The concert, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will comprise a program ranging from a Schumann piano concerto to selections from "My Fair Lady."

RING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 15 1957

College Prexies Give Educ'l TV A Report Card at Hub's WGBH Anni

Boston, May 14.

"What is the Place of Television in Education? was the subject of a group of Greater Boston educational and cultural leaders on a special telecast marking the second anni of WGBH-TV. Opening the panel talk, Rev. Thomas Fleming, S. J., executive assistant to the prexy of Boston College, said.

"In discussing television and education, I must compare it to what great books mean to education. Television can bring to a whole community the great teachers of the day. It is one of the most promising channels of communication that God has given us."

Thomas Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said:

"I would like to follow Fr. Fleming's thoughts by emphasizing how television can range the entire field of human knowledge. It can go anywhere in the world—reach into any situation." Stating that the Boston Symphony was "not primarily an educational institution," he stressed his pleasure "that we have still joined in the great development by having concerts televised."

Dr. Harold Case, prexy of Boston U., introed the thought that tv "is deceptive. We are tempted with the prospect that it could help the problems of the crowded classroom." He cautioned, "But it

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JUN 8 1957

Pops Slated For Telecast MondayNight

The Pops concerts next week include two programs closed to the public. On Monday, MIT Night will be transferred to Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge, and, although the public will not be able to attend, the concert will be televised over WGBH-TV, Channel 2. Harvard Night, to be held Wednesday in Symphony Hall at 9:15, is the other evening when there are no tickets for the public. Sunday concerts are now discontinued for the rest of the season.

The Tuesday night concert will include Italian music, with Giuseppe del Vento, tenor, and Salvatore Sullo, pianist, as soloists, Robert Merrill, baritone, will sing on Thursday evening, and Leo Litwin on Friday will play Weber's Concertstück. Minuetta Kessler, on Saturday evening, will play Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, this being the anniversary of his birth.

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct the Friday concert.

The programs for the week:

Monday Evening, June 10
MIT Night
At Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge
—Closed to Public

Polonaise, from "Eugene Onegin" ..... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
Air on the G-String... Bach-Wilhelmj
Academic Festival Overture.... Brahms
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 54 ..... Schumann
Soloist: Tana Bawden
España, Rhapsody ..... Chabrier
Selection from 'My Fair Lady".. Loewe
"Moonglow" and Theme from "Picnic" ..... arr Hayman
The Stars and Stripes Forever, March ..... Sousa
Stein Song by Frederic F. Bullard
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tuesday Evening, June 11

Triumphal March, from "Aida" Verdi
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ..... Rossini
Addio all madre, from "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Tenor: Giuseppe del Vento
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ..... Ponchielli
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor (first movement ..... Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Salvatore Sullo
Polovetzian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
Selection from "The Most Happy Fella" ..... Loesser
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Look Sharp-Be Sharp Merrick-Bennett
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Wednesday Evening, June 12
Harvard Class of 1932 Night
Closed to the Public

Rakóczy March ..... Berlioz
Academic Festival Overture.. Brahms
Treasure Waltzes, from "The Gypsy Baron" ..... Strauss
Harold C. Schmidt conducting
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" Glinka
Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor Handel
Soloist: John Woodworth
Up the Street, March ..... Morse
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Selections from "My Fair Lady".Loewe
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Harvard Fantasy ..... Anderson
Fair Harvard
Arthur Fiedler, conductor

Thursday Evening, June 13
Israel Histradut Night

Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar
Overture to "Candide" ..... Bernstein
Kol Nidrei ..... Bruch
Violoncello Solo: Jacobus Langendoen
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Hatikvoh
The Star-Spangled Banner
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Two Arias for Baritone and Orchestra

Prologue to "Pagliacci".. Leoncavallo
Eri tu che macchiavi, from "Un Ballo in Maschera"... Verdi
Soloist: Robert Merrill
1812, Ouverture Solennelle. Tchaikovsky
Songs with Piano
Robert Merrill
Berlin Bouquet ..... arr. Mason
Freilachs, from "Hasseneh" ..... Press
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Friday Evening, June 14

National Emblem, March ..... Bagley
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Largo, from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes Strauss
Toccata ..... Prescobaldi-Kindler
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Oklahoma!".. Rodgers
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes ..... Kern
Farandole, from "L'Arlésienne". Bizet
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting

Saturday Evening, June 15

Boston Pops March ..... Tobin
Russian Easter, Overture Rimsky-Korsakov
Little Fugue in G minor Bach-Cailliet
Estudiantina, Waltzes Waldteufel
Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 Grieg
Soloist: Minuetta Kessler
Bolero ..... Ravel
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Sleigh Ride ..... Anderson
Calypso: Banana Boat Song and Marianne ..... arr. Hayman
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Tonight at the Pops

New England Conservatory Night
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" .. Wagner
Overture to "Candide" .... Bernstein
Symphonie Espagnole for Violin and Orchestra ..... Lalo
Soloist: Ayrton Pinto
Artists' Life, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Overture to "Oberon" ..... Weber
Conducted by Renato Pacini
New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Conductor
Sing Me a Song ..... Vacchi
Three Songs from "Alice in Wonderland" ..... Fine
Fourth Movement from "The Kid" ..... McKinley
Drinking Song ..... Brahms
Drinking Song, from "The Beggar's Opera" ..... arr. Pinkham
Harry Ellis Dickson, conducting
Selection from "New Girl in Town" ..... Merrill
Fiddle-Faddle ..... Anderson
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,682

MAY 29 1957

I AM A CONDUCTOR
by Charles Munch

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has written a very enlightening essay on his experiences in the musical world and has put into words what it means to him to be a conductor. While he intended his ideas to be helpful to those who are, or would like to become, orchestra leaders, what he has to say is of great interest to the ordinary concert-goer.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the score of any work to be performed, a conductor must have the ability to interpret the composer's feeling, and to get the members of the orchestra to express it. He must also arrange rehearsals, concerts, and programs. The reader will realize that the time and energy required for all this is overwhelming. An unusual book for all music lovers.

5.25.57

MUSIC

Pops Concert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

I looked in on the Pops last night for the first time this season and as usual, I had a wonderful time. In fact, to judge by the general air of youth and festivity about (the young people of Roxbury Latin and the Beaver Country Day schools were very much in evidence) we all did.

Arthur Fiedler's genius as a program maker was also very much in evidence, too, for the musical fare ranged from the genial Haydn Variations of Brahms to an hilarious travesty on "Young Love;" from Rimsky-Korsakoff's flimsy (and rarely heard) Piano Concerto to the exceptional charms of a medley from "My Fair Lady." But it is a rare night indeed that Mr. Fiedler, who increases in vigor and sparkle with the years, does not provide a musical diet of extraordinary balance — and of extraordinary executive flair as well.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's Piano Concerto, which has been performed only once with this orchestra (and then in Cambridge in 1914), is of such little regard that it is not easy to find any reference to it whatever outside Rimsky's own autobiography . . . and even he didn't have much confidence in it. There is little in it of the later orchestral color, and what interest it has is based largely on the fact it is derived from Russian melodies. Although himself an indifferent pianist, Rimsky's wife was a very good one, and it was for her he composed the work. But with all the Lisztian sound and fury, it succeeds only in bringing forth a mouse with a Russian accent. Nonetheless, it was interesting to hear and it was done in a very competent and persuasive way by Alan Barker.

After this, the sonorities of Wagner and the humorous incongruities of Hayman's musical wedding of "The Banana Boat Song" and "Marianne," not to mention the parody of "Young Love" lent the typical flavor of Popsian charm that has made these affairs unique in the land for some 72 years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,656

JUN 7 1957

Gets Music Degree

Carmen Montano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Montano of 42 Ley Street, was graduated last evening from Hartt College of Music at the college's 17th commencement exercises in Hartford. Montano received his bachelor of music degree with major in trumpet.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon John Hersey of Westport, noted author and writer, who received the doctor of fine arts degree; Prof. David Boyden, chairman of the Music Department at the University of California, the first Hartt College alumnus ever to be given a degree by Hartt; and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both receiving the doctor of music degree. Hersey was the principal speaker.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C ... or the Timid

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor table or your seat in the first balcony take a moment to look up and salute the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before you strolled sedately to your seat.

You probably never seen that charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when it discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. that night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wash't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
JUN 8 1956
Society

Eire Society A ... Trip

By H ...

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. an ... O'Malley ... Bonner M. Field, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the en- ... ir daughter, ... to Norman ... on of Max W. ... mont State ... missioner of ... Mrs. Barrows ... s and her fi- ... ents at Keene ... ge. She is ma- ... economics and ... in science and ... s.

* *

...uet Tonight

... d friends of the ... will don for- ... night for the fash- ... du Muguet in the ... ballroom of the Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

Elizabeth Arden's

Norfolk County Free Press
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,100
MAY 31 1956

Night At Pops

The Eire Society is sponsoring its annual night at Pops, Friday June 8, at Symphony Hall. The proceeds will go toward a contribution of $1,000 made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Ireland.

tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

* * *

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

* * *

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor table in your seat in the first balcony, take a moment to look upward to salute the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before you strolled sedately to your seat.

You've probably never seen their charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when it discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. last night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wasn't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
JUN 8 1956
Society

Eire Society A

By H

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. an O'Malley

Bach

With memory their escor happy day gay event is the Thursday Casino-on-t fitting the Planning Wendy An B. Cabot, I ine C. Haskell, Cynthia Walton, M bell, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth Ander

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300
MAY 31 1956

Eire Society Is Sponsoring Night At Pops

The Eire Society is sponsoring its annual night at Pops, Friday, June 8, at Symphony Hall. The proceeds will go toward a contribution of $1,000 made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Ireland.

tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

y Trip

their daughter, or, to Norman son of Max W. mont State missioner of Mrs. Barrows

s and her fi- ents at Keene ge. She is ma- economics and in science and s.

*

uet Tonight

d friends of the will don for- night for the fash- du Muguet in the ballroom of the

or the Timid

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

♪ ♪ ♪

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

♪ ♪ ♪

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor table or your seat in the first balcony, take a moment to look up and salute the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before you strolled sedately to your seat.

You've probably never seen that charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when it discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. that night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wasn't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

JUN 8 1956

Society

Eire Society A

By H

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. an O'Malley

Bach

With memory their escor happy days gay events is the B Thursday Casino-on-t fitting the Planning Wendy An B. Cabot, ine C. Haskell, Cynthia Walton, bell, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the en-

Elizabeth Arden's

Citizen
BRIGHTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 9,550

MAY 31 1956

EIRE NIGHT AT POPS

Residents of Brookline and Brighton are among those who are sponsoring tables for the annual Eire Society Night at the Pops on Friday, June 8 at Symphony Hall. They include Miss Julia B. Guiney and Mr. and Mrs. John P. Cavanagh of Brighton, and Miss Lillian Hartigan and Joseph Gannon of Brookline. The proceeds will go toward a contribution of $1000 made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Ireland.

tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

Bonner M. Field, Jr.,

Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

Trip

their daughter, or, to Norman son of Max W. mont State missioner of Mrs. Barrows

s and her fi- ents at Keene ge. She is ma- economics and in science and s.

*

uet Tonight

d friends of the will don for- night for the fash- du Muguet in the ballroom of the

or the Timid

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

* * *

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

* * *

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C ... or the Timid

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor table or your seat in the first balcony, take a moment to look up and salute the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before you strolled sedately to your seat.

You've probably never seen the charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when it discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. that night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wash't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
JUN 8 1956

Society

Eire Society A ... y Trip

By K...

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. and ... O'Malley, ...

Bachel...

With fi... memory d... their escor... happy day... gay events... is the B... Thursday ... Casino-on-... fitting the ...

Planning ... Wendy An... B. Cabot, ... ine C. ... Haskell, ... Cynthia ... Walton, ... bell, Jr., Bonner M. Field, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the en... their daughter, ...nor, to Norman ..., son of Max W. ...rmont State ...mmissioner of ...d Mrs. Barrows ...

...ns and her fi... ...dents at Keene ...ege. She is ma... ... economics and ... in science and ...ts.

* * *

...uet Tonight

...d friends of the ... will don for... night for the fash... du Muguet in the ballroom of the Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
MAY 31 1956

Eire Society Night At Pops

The Eire Society is sponsoring its annual night at Pops, Friday, June 8, at Symphony Hall. The proceeds will go toward a contribution of $1000 made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

* * *

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

* * *

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor table or your seat in the first balcony take a moment to look up and salute the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before you strolled sedately to your seat.

You probably never seen the charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when we discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. that night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wash't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
JUN 8 1956

Society

Eire Society A y Trip

By kO

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. and O'Malley, a

Bachelor

With fin memory del their escort happy days gay events is the Ba Thursday Casino-on-th fitting the M Planning Wendy Ann B. Cabot, Lu ine C. Epp Haskell, E Cynthia A. Morss, Sandra Walton, Marshall F. Campbell, Jr., Bonner M. Field, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the engagement of their daughter, Eleanor, to Norman Barrows, son of Max W. Barrows, Vermont State Commissioner of and Mrs. Barrows ns and her fi- dents at Keene ge. She is ma- economics and in science and ts.

* *

uet Tonight

d friends of the will don formal dress tonight for the fashionable Bal du Muguet in the Louis XIV ballroom of the Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750
MAY 31 1956

Night At Pops

The Eire Society is sponsoring its annual night at Pops, Friday June 8, at Symphony Hall. The proceeds will go toward a contribution of $1,000 made by the Eire Society this month to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to enable the orchestra to open its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin.

or the Timid

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

* * *

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

* * *

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

Rush for 50-C

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall as you relax at your floor [illegible] or your seat in the firs[illegible] take a moment to look up and salute the Charge of the Light Brigade the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour be[illegible] they strolled sedately to [illegible]

[illegible] probably never seen the charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when it discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They come early—it was 7 p.m. last night—and they clutch a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wash't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
JUN 8 1956

Society

Eire Society Aids Symphony Trip

By ROSE WALSH

Tonight's Eire Society Evening at Pops, Symphony Hall, is of very special interest, since the proceeds will go toward the $1000 given the Boston Symphony Orchestra to enable the musicians to open their European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin. A large committee has been assisting Joseph Gannon, president of the society; Albert West, general chairman, and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, in charge of reservations.

Heading the sponsor list is Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, Bishop Jeremiah F. Minihan and Irish Consul Joseph F. Shields. Among others are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Lyne, Mr. and Mrs. Lenehan O'Connell, Judge Edward A. Counihan, Jr., Msgr. Christopher P. Griffin, the Rev. George Casey, the Rev. George Kerr, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Paul Glutting, Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Dr. and Mrs. John C. Minihan, Addis W. Dempsey, Dr. Regina Madden, Miss Lillian R. Hartigan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. O'Malley, and many others.

* * *

Bachelors Ball Benefit

With final exams just a memory debs, post-debs and their escorts are planning for happy days ahead. Among the gay events offered next week is the Bachelors Ball on Thursday evening at the Casino-on-the-Charles, benefitting the Museum of Science.

Planning to attend are Wendy Ann Adams, Margaret B. Cabot, Lucy David, Catherine C. Eppinger, Joan R. Haskell, Elizabeth Lund, Cynthia A. Morss, Sandra Walton, Marshall F. Campbell, Jr., Bonner M. Field, Jr., Timothy G. Gates, Todd Baldwin, Charles W. Goodell, John Grew, Jr., L. Draper Hill, Jr., John W. Kelsey, Laurence C. Lombard and John W. MacDuffie.

* * *

Mingins-Barrows Troth

Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mingins of Winchester and Lee, Me., announce the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy Eleanor, to Norman Earle Barrows, son of Max W. Barrows, Vermont State Deputy Commissioner of Education, and Mrs. Barrows of Montpelier.

Miss Mingins and her fiance are students at Keene Teachers College. She is majoring in home economics and he is majoring in science and mechanical arts.

* * *

Bal du Muguet Tonight

Members and friends of the French Centre will don formal dress tonight for the fashionable Bal du Muguet in the Louis XIV ballroom of the Hotel Somerset, for the benefit of the orphans of the "Medailles Militaires." One of the evening's guests greeting the new French Consul General and Mrs. Charles de Pampelonne will be Miss Suzanne Bernard, the popular French star of "New Faces" who is coming to the Bal after her performance at the Shubert Theatre.

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

or the Timid

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

♪ ♪ ♪

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

♪ ♪ ♪

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
MAY 26 1957

LB 39c Bologna
Finest Skinless - U. S. No. 1
LB 35c Frankfurt
Pound - Heavy Western Steer Beef
S
Meaty - 4½ to 6 lb. Average
LB 69c

Rush for 50-Cent Pops Seats No Sport for the Timid

2d Balcony Stampede Is 71 Years Old

Now on these fine May-soft evenings at Pops in Symphony Hall, it is relax at your floor seat or your seat in the first balcony and take a moment to look upward into the Charge of the Light Brigade—the gallery gods in the second balcony.

There are 547 of them — almost the full 600 complement of the Light Brigade. And their charge came almost an hour before they strolled sedately to their seats.

You probably never seen the charge and neither had The Herald until the other night, quite by accident, when we discovered the holders of 50-cent tickets for the second balcony.

Tickets Clutched

They came early—it was 7 p.m. that night—and they carried a ticket which can be bought in advance which assures them of a seat, since only 547 second balcony seats—the capacity—are sold for each performance.

But what seat? There's the rub. And there's the story behind the charge.

Doors for the rush seats open at 7:45 p.m. and when that happens it's every music lover for himself.

The gallery gods at Pops are half-antelope, half light-tank and half-battering ram. Of course, that makes three halves. But that's how they look running.

And running they are the split second the doors open. The other night a young lady in a pink frock outdistanced three Harvard men in cord suits and she didn't seem to be trying too hard.

But that first head start is not the whole secret. The Herald noticed a spry little lady whose pace resembled nothing so much as that of a five-gaited horse.

It was not spectacular but it was a steady clip which passed the three Harvard boys halfway up the last staircase. If somebody were to put up a Pops ticket as a prize, that little lady would win the Patriot's Day marathon.

This charge is nothing new but has been going on ever since Pops was founded in 1885, four years after the Boston Symphony, in the Boston Music Hall which was on Hamilton Place where Loew's Orpheum Theatre stands now.

The low-price seats for the gallery gods were the express wish of the symphony founder, Henry Lee Higginson, who declared that he wanted "to keep the prices low always and especially where the lighter concerts are in question, because to them may come the poorer people."

That hardly describes the gallery gods of today, however. The other night, one of the first arrivals was Frank Marble of 280 Chatham St., Lynn, and he had seven tickets, for himself and six summer camp youngsters. Next to him was a man who obviously has an excellent tailor and before he rushed away he said:

"I do it for the sport of the thing."

It's a long high climb and the average gallery god is in his seat by 7:47 unless he dawdled to admire the handsome carved balustrades. Then he settles down, usually to read and in general to comport himself a little more genteelly than Bostonians did at the concerts in 1890.

An old clipping in The Herald library says that in 1890 this went on:

New Shoes Deter

"Now a gallop, now a hurry scurry for the balcony stairs. Then, an hour before the concert. Several of the symphoniads, who had brought their crochet work, began to spin.

"Others ate bananas."

There wash't a banana in sight the other night. But then, no symphoniad—whatever that it—was crocheting—whatever that is.

Some of the gallery gods make the race nearly every night Pops is playing. Unless they have new shoes they usually make the same seat.

The other night some of them looked as though they were

ON YOUR MARK, GET SET—Two seconds after this photo you couldn't see these young people for dust. All students at Eastern Nazarene College in Wollaston, they are, left to right, Ruth Andrews, Salisbury, Md.; Clyde Haas, Warren, O., and Dell Mattmueller, Arlington, Va.

Gallery Gods Relish Thrill Of the Chase

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271
JUN 9 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!" said Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented with an out-sized bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. Miss Jacobus, who will be graduated today with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 8 1957

Pappoutsakis Pops Soloist

Boston Boccherini Debut Given by Symphony Flutist

By Harold Rogers

Since the Eire Society was among those present last night at the Pops, Arthur Fiedler's program had a definite Irish slant and was further distinguished by two premières.

The first was the very un-Irish Flute Concerto in D major, Op. 27, by a fine Italian classicist, Luigi Boccherini, heard in its first Boston performance. The second could hardly have been more Irish than it was—"Variations on a Popular Tune" by Archibald J. Potter, professor of composition and orchestration at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin. The tune chosen by Dr. Potter for embellishment was "The Wild Colonial Boy." This was the first hearing of this work in the United States.

* * *

The flute soloist for the Boccherini was James Pappoutsakis, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose suave, gentlemanly, and aristocratic playing is always a delight to appreciative ears. His performance last night came as a distinct contrast to the stimulating fortitude that Mr. Fiedler generally infuses into his concerts. For the Boccherini Mr. Fiedler reduced the orchestra in size, and the musicians played with restraint and finesse.

Mr. Pappoutsakis's flute was permitted to inscribe its lovely arabesques without hindrance. There was elegance in all he did, especially in the cadenzas of the first and second movements, and in the finale he gave us a winning tour de force. It is a little gem of a concerto, and we hope Mr. Pappoutsakis will be permitted to play it again during the winter season in Symphony Hall. He is already scheduled to play it this summer during the chamber music series at Tanglewood.

The Potter piece is somewhat puzzling in that it is not easy for an American listener to know if the composer had his tongue in his cheek or was thoroughly in earnest. First of all, he called upon the solo violin to state the tune with slurs from note to note, as if it were played by a self-taught peasant, and the same slurring statement came in again and again throughout the seven variations. To at least one listener it was laughable, which may or may not have been the reaction Dr. Potter had intended.

* * *

But whatever the final effect, the variations in themselves held much interest. At times the composer employed bitonality for off-key hurdy-gurdy effects. There was a section that reminded one of a carousel, while others were more martial, leading up to a kind of apotheosis at the conclusion.

Among the Irish items on the program were two movements from Sir Hamilton Harty's "An Irish Symphony," which was thoroughly folksy; Percy Grainger's arrangement of the ever-popular Irish Tune from County Derry; Leroy Anderson's scintillating Eire Suite, and a group of Victor Herbert favorites. Herbert was a native of Dublin.

An excellent set of program notes was provided the listeners by John P. Cavanagh of the Eire Society's Music Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 9 1957

Old Timers' Night At Pops, June 25

Arthur Fiedler announces that there will be an Old Timers' Night (everybody invited to sing) at the Pops on Tuesday, June 25. It will mark the silver anniversary of this unique Boston Pops annual feature.

Fiedler started it in 1932, and it has been repeated ever since, with groups of songs of various eras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
JUN 12 1957

BesTView in Town

Khrushchev Film Repeat

By ANTHONY La CAMERA

RETURN ENGAGEMENT—WITH ADDED ENTRY: Viewer interest in CBS-TV's now-famous Face the Nation interview with Nikita Krushchev, originally shown here on Channels 2 and 7, has prompted Channel 4 to purchase the hour-long film for second unreeling. This time, however, the film will not run without accompanying rebuttal.

The filmed interview will be re-shown next Sunday from 1:30 to 3 p. m. with the half-hour extension to allow for intermittent comments by an American panel. The panel members will be cut in immediately after points where the Soviet Communist leader has made assertions requiring replies.

Membership of the panel is not yet complete, but Erwin D. Canham already has been selected as moderator and Rod MacLeish, Washington correspondent for the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., will be one of the panellists. WBZ-TV planners are hoping to round out the group with a couple of major political figures.

For the statistical-minded, Channel 4 becomes the 23rd American television station to buy the Khrushchev interview for re-showing. The film also has been picked, at this writing, by eight foreign stations and networks.

Pops Concert Scores

PARAGRAPH PATTER: Channel 2's Monday-night telecast of the Boston Pops concert has brought forth the largest number of phone calls ever received by the local station following a single program. All of a complimentary nature, of course, and many requesting more of the same. Unfortunately, we'll have to wait until next season for a possible repeat.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,628
JUN 10 1957

"I'LL NEVER TAKE IT OFF!", said Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler, when presented an outsize bright yellow beach towel by Norinne Jacobus of Turners Falls, Jackson College senior, at Tufts Night at the Pops, in behalf of the Tufts University Band. The plain white towel which Fiedler ordinarily drapes around his neck at the end of each conducting performance will from here on be replaced by this showy gift inscribed with his name and that of the New England Intercollegiate Band which he conducted last March at its 1957 festival at Tufts. Miss Jacobus, who was graduated Sunday with a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude, is assistant manager of the Tufts University Band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUN 16 1957

As With Oil and Water, Music And Conversation Don't Mix

By CYRUS DURGIN

Oil is oil and water is water and each has its uses. But they don't mix. The same is true of music and conversation, which gets in each other's way worse than do the fluid elements. This has been on my mind for a long while, and today, it seems, is a likely time to set down some observations on the matter, together with a plea that each be reserved for its proper moments and place.

★ ★ ★

In mind especially is conversation at the Symphony Hall Pops. Several seasons ago this chronicler noticed upon several occasions that some in the audience, gathered cozily around the tables, had things to say that evidently had to be said right then. That Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra were playing made no apparent difference.

But it did make a difference to me and certain others who, as I noticed, raised some eyebrows in the direction of the unmusical ostinato which was not in the score. Same thing happened several nights ago, when it was fairly startling to note that a general hum of speech continued through nearly all the first number. Not until the second was there general silence, and that did not continue. Most of the evening, someone was talking audibly.

CLASSICS

Now sometimes talk at concerts will have its amusing side. There are two classics attributed to ladies at the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts. Each has been sworn to by friends who assure me they heard it all said, though I never happened to encounter it personally. One occurred in the silence that followed a crashing climax chord, as a lady remarked to her friend: "Well, I always fry my doughnuts in lard." The other was when a nice old party slipped a tiny radio from her handbag, held it to her ear, then beamed: "It's 2 to nothing for the Sox in the fourth."

Perhaps this really happened. But unless the effect is as comical as these situations, talk while the music is going on results only in quick, intense burns for people adjacent.

There's also the one about the late H. T. Parker of the Transcript, who was a crotchety individual. Annoyed by nearby whispers, he turned in his seat, glared and barked, "I'm very sorry, but those peope up there on the stage are making so much noise I can't hear a word you say."

Probably it is because American audiences are so well behaved, in most respects, that audiences themselves don't shush talkers. Some European audiences would turn upon offenders and quickly shut them up.

That happened within my hearing less than three weeks ago at a performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at the State Opera in Vienna. There was some conversation during the "Fidelio" Overture. Very soon, a loud chorus of "Sh-h-h!!!" put a stop to it.

W. S. Gilbert nearly touched upon the issue when, in The Mikado's song, "My Object All Sublime," he wrote that the punishment to fit the crime for "All prosy dull society sinners, who chatter and bleat and bore," was that they were sent to hear sermons from mystical Germans, who preach from 10 to 4."

Since Gilbert did not get around to codifying punishment for this offense against the Muse and the silent rest of us, let us devise our own, perhaps something like:

"People who talk at the Pops,
Whose the music they send,
Must listen to Brahms
And other such crashes
Sounds that drive you mad!"

Or like this:

"Those who chew and yak at Pops,
And spin the music sheen,
Shall be set to competing,
With no hope of scoring,
The roar of a lawn mower machine."

The line forms here, at the left, for applicants as Charter Members of the Society For the Prevention Or At Least Cure of Contagious Diseases Like Talking at the Pops. No dues, no initiation fee required. Only an oath: "I promise never to waggle my tongue while Arthur Fiedler's baton is in the air."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hellenic Chronicle
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 11,300
JUN 13 1957

Pappoutsakis Hailed at Pops

A premiere performance of the Flute Concerto in D major, Opus 27, by Luigi Boccherini, offered by James Pappoutsakis, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was one of the features of last Friday's performance of the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

With the orchestra playing with restraint, Pappoutsakis' flute inscribed its arabesques without hindrance. One of the critics described the performance as a gem of a concerto and offered the hope that Pappoutsakis would be permitted to play it again during the winter season at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 15 1957

Lenscraft

Pasquale Cardillo will be clarinet soloist at the Pops Monday night.

281

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
JUN 13 1957

Railroad Night at Pops

Sticky Valves—Conductor Arthur Fiedler dons engineer's cap to oil the tuba of Kilton Vinal Smith in preparation for "Railroad Night at the Pops" June 20. At right is Joseph J. Trifero of the sponsoring Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784
JUN 18 1957

No Sticky Valves

CONDUCTOR ARTHUR FIELDER, left, dons engineer's cap to oil the tuba of Kilton Vinal Smith in preparation for "Railroad Night at the Pops" June 20. Joseph J. Trifero, right, of the sponsoring Railroad Community Committee, turns a critical ear. Proceeds from the night's affair will be donated to the orchestra to cut the deficit.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 19 1957

Interiers

William Waterhouse will be violin soloist, together with Martin Hoberman, cellist, in the Brahms Double Concerto at the Pops tonight.

GLOBE June 16, 1957.

Summer Theater Seasc

As With Oil and Water, Music And Conversation Don't Mix

By CYRUS DURGIN

Oil is oil and water is water and each has its uses. But they don't mix. The same is true of music and conversation, which gets in each other's way worse than do the fluid elements. This has been on my mind for a long while, and today, it seems, is a likely time to set down some observations on the matter, together with a plea that each be reserved for its proper moments and place.

★ ★ ★

In mind especially is conversation at the Symphony Hall Pops. Several seasons ago this chronicler noticed upon several occasions that some in the audience, gathered cozily around the tables, had things to say that evidently had to be said right then. That Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra were playing made no apparent difference.

But it did make a difference to me and certain others who, as I noticed, raised some eyebrows in the direction of the unmusical ostinato which was not in the score. Same thing happened several nights ago, when it was fairly startling to note that a general hum of speech continued through nearly all the first number. Not until the second was there general silence, and that did not continue. Most of the evening, someone was talking audibly.

CLASSICS

Now sometimes talk at concerts will have its amusing side. There are two classics attributed to ladies at the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts. Each has been sworn to by friends who assure me they heard it all said, though I never happened to encounter it personally. One occurred in the silence that followed a crashing climax chord, as a lady remarked to her friend: "Well, I always fry my doughnuts in lard." The other was when a nice old party slipped a tiny radio from her handbag, held it to her ear, then beamed: "It's 2 to nothing for the Sox in the fourth."

Perhaps this really happened. But unless the effect is as comical as these situations, talk while the music is going on results only in quick, intense burns for people adjacent.

There's also the one about the late H. T. Parker of the Transcript, who was a crotchety individual. Annoyed by nearby whispers, he turned in his seat, glared and barked, "I'm very sorry, but those peope up there on the stage are making so much noise I can't hear a word you say."

Probably it is because American audiences are so well behaved, in most respects, that audiences themselves don't shush talkers. Some European audiences would turn upon offenders and quickly shut them up.

That happened within my hearing less than three weeks ago at a performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at the State Opera in Vienna. There was some conversation during the "Fidelio" Overture. Very soon, a loud chorus of "Sh-h-h!!!" put a stop to it.

W. S. Gilbert nearly touched upon the issue when, in The Mikado's song, "My Object All Sublime," he wrote that the punishment to fit the crime for "All prosy dull society sinners, who chatter and bleat and bore," was that they "are sent to hear sermons from mystical Germans, who preach from 10 'til 4."

Since Gilbert did not get around to codifying punishment for this offense against the Muse and the silent rest of us, let us devise our own, perhaps something like:

"People who talk and talk at Pops,
While the music's on, egad,
Must listen at Presley
And other such grisly
Sounds that drive you mad!"

Or like this:

"Those who chatter and yak at Pops,
And ruin the musics' sheen,
Shall be set to competing,
With no hope of beating,
The roar of a wind machine."

The line forms now, at the left, for applicants as Charter Members of the Society For the Prevention Or At Least Cure of Contagious Diseases Like Talking at the Pops. No dues, no initiation fee required. Only an oath: "I promise never to waggle my tongue while Arthur Fiedler's baton is in the air."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 29,196
JUN 21 1957

'Gay Nineties' Tunes Becoming U.S. Folk-Songs

BOSTON, June 20 (AP)—Are some of America's popular tunes of the "Gay Nineties" becoming American folk-songs?

A number of songs of the era have outlived their generation and become part of the American tradition — songs that everybody knows.

The continuing popularity of these tunes—on many of which copyrights have expired — is accented by an event which has become a Boston tradition. Next Tuesday marks the 25th anniversary of "Old Timer's Night" at the Boston Pops. The Pops are the spring concerts of "popular" music played each year by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Old Timer's Night" features tunes written for a generation of Americans who went to the great Chicago World's Fair of 1893, rode tandem bicycles, and volunteered for the Spanish-American War. Although most of that generation is dead, the songs they sang more than 60 years age are so popular that the clamor for seats at "Old Timer's Night" now exceeds the capacity of Symphony Hall.

Which seems to prove that today's Americans have taken

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ. D. 258,815 - S. 312,250
JUN 21 1957

Pops Orchestra Keeps Old Ban

BOSTON (UP) — First-desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
Circ. D. 63,062
JUN 19 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-Desk Men

BOSTON — UP — First-desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720
JUN 24 1957

Norwegian Sailor Pulls Boston Pops To N. Hampshire

BOSTON (UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54 - member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N.H., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor - pianist who is unable to come here.

Sven Erik Liebeck of Oslo, a midshipman aboard the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich, played for the famed conductor when the ship was in Boston.

Record on Pier

Fiedler was so impressed he decided to make a recording with the young artist, but Liebeck had left for Portsmouth and was unable to return.

Fiedler made arrangements to move the entire orchestra to the New Hampshire town and will make the recording on the pier at Fort Constitution. The young seaman is scheduled to put to sea shortly after.

EAGLE due 24

... - New York

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 444,193 - S. 469,816
JUN 21 1957

Music Chief To Quit at 'M'

Special to the Free Press

ANN ARBOR — Charles A. Sink will retire Sept. 1 as executive director of University of Michigan Musical Society.

He will be replaced by Gail W. Rector, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

Sink, who has received many international honors, will continue as president of the society.

Pianist Can't Make Boston, So Orchestra Will Travel to Him

Portsmouth, N.H. — (AP) —A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Mr. Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home today.

Mr. Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made yesterday for the Pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution today.

Wilmington, Delaware
← News Aug 20, 1957
Waukegan, Illinois
News - Sun
Sept

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006
JUN 21 1957

8

Around New England

Boston Pops to Present Old Timers' Night Tuesday

BOSTON (AP) — Are some of America's popular tunes of the "Gay Nineties" becoming American folk-songs?

A number of songs of the era have outlived their generation and become a part of the American tradition — songs that everybody knows.

The continuing popularity of these tunes — on many of which copyrights have expired — is accented by an event which has become a Boston tradition. Next Tuesday marks the 25th anniversary of "old timers' night" at the Boston Pops. The Pops are the spring concerts of "popular" music played each year by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Old timers' night" features tunes written for a generation of Americans who went to the great Chicago World's Fair of 1893, rode tandem bicycles, and volunteered for the Spanish-American war. Although most of that generation is dead, the songs they sang more than 60 years age are so popular that the clamor for seats at "old timer's night" now exceeds the capacity of Symphony Hall.

Which seems to prove that today's Americans have taken to their hearts such old songs as "Daisy Bell" — now better known as "A Bicycle Built for Two," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," and "After The Ball."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

HOPEWELL, VA.
NEWS
Circ. D. 3,739
JUN 21 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-desk Musicians

BOSTON — (U.P.) — First-deck men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestro even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

New York Herald Tribune
July 23, 1957
Hartford, Conn. News
July
West Palm Beach, Fla.
Palm Beach Times
June 20, 1957

GLOBE June 16, 1957

Summer Theater Seasc

As With Oil and Water, Music And Conversation Don't Mix

By CYRUS DURGIN

Oil is oil and water is water and each has its uses. But they don't mix. The same is true of music and conversation, which gets in each other's way worse than do the fluid elements. This has been on my mind for a long while, and today, it seems, is a likely time to set down some observations on the matter, together with a plea that each be reserved for its proper moments and place.

★ ★ ★

In mind especially is conversation at the Symphony Hall Pops. Several seasons ago this chronicler noticed upon several occasions that some in the audience, gathered cozily around the tables, had things to say that evidently had to be said right then. That Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra were playing made no apparent difference.

But it did make a difference to me and certain others who, as I noticed, raised some eyebrows in the direction of the unmusical ostinato which was not in the score. Same thing happened several nights ago, when it was fairly startling to note that a general hum of speech continued through nearly all the first number. Not until the second was there general silence, and that did not continue. Most of the evening, someone was talking audibly.

CLASSICS

Now sometimes talk at concerts will have its amusing side. There are two classics attributed to ladies at the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts. Each has been sworn to by friends who assure me they heard it all said, though I never happened to encounter it personally. One occurred in the silence that followed a crashing climax chord, as a lady remarked to her friend: "Well, I always fry my doughnuts in lard." The other was when a nice old party slipped a tiny radio from her handbag, held it to her ear, then beamed: "It's 2 to nothing for the Sox in the fourth."

Perhaps this really happened. But unless the effect is as comical as these situations, talk while the music is going on results only in quick, intense burns for people adjacent.

There's also the one about the late H. T. Parker of the Transcript, who was a crotchety individual. Annoyed by nearby whispers, he turned in his seat, glared and barked, "I'm very sorry, but those peope up there on the stage are making so much noise I can't hear a word you say."

Probably it is because American audiences are so well behaved, in most respects, that audiences themselves don't shush talkers. Some European audiences would turn upon offenders and quickly shut them up.

That happened within my hearing less than three weeks ago at a performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at the State Opera in Vienna. There was some conversation during the "Fidelio" Overture. Very soon, a loud chorus of "Sh-h-h!!!" put a stop to it.

W. S. Gilbert nearly touched upon the issue when, in The Mikado's song, "My Object All Sublime," he wrote that the punishment to fit the crime for "All prosy dull society sinners, who chatter and bleat and bore," was that they "are sent to hear sermons from mystical Germans, who preach from 10 'til 4."

Since Gilbert did not get around to codifying punishment for this offense against the Muse and the silent rest of us, let us devise our own, perhaps something like:

"People who talk and talk at Pops,
While the music's on, egad!
Must listen at Presley
And other such grisly
Sounds that drive you mad!"

Or like this:

"Those who chatter and yak at Pops,
And ruin the musics' sheen,
Shall be set to competing,
With no hope of beating,
The roar of a wind machine."

The line forms now, at the left, for applicants as Charter Members of the Society For the Prevention Or At Least Cure of Contagious Diseases Like Talking at the Pops. No dues, no initiation fee required. Only an oath: "I promise never to waggle my tongue while Arthur Fiedler's baton is in the air."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 29,196
JUN 21 1957

'Gay Nineties' Tunes Becoming U.S. Folk-Songs

BOSTON, June 20 (AP)—Are some of America's popular tunes of the "Gay Nineties" becoming American folk-songs?

A number of songs of the era have outlived their generation and become part of the American tradition — songs that everybody knows.

The continuing popularity of these tunes—on many of which copyrights have expired — is accented by an event which has become a Boston tradition. Next Tuesday marks the 25th anniversary of "Old Timer's Night" at the Boston Pops. The Pops are the spring concerts of "popular" music played each year by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Old Timer's Night" features tunes written for a generation of Americans who went to the great Chicago World's Fair of 1893, rode tandem bicycles, and volunteered for the Spanish-American War. Although most of that generation is dead, the songs they sang more than 60 years age are so popular that the clamor for seats at "Old Timer's Night" now exceeds the capacity of Symphony Hall.

Which seems to prove that today's Americans have taken to their hearts such old songs as "Daisy Bell"—now better known as "A Bicycle Built For Two," "The Sidewalks Of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," and "After The Ball."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
Circ. D. 63,062
JUN 19 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-Desk Men

BOSTON — U P — First-desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

Wilmington, Delaware News Aug. 20, 1957

Waukegan, Illinois News-Sun Sept. 1, 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006
JUN 21 1957

8

Around New England

Boston Pops to Present Old Timers' Night Tuesday

BOSTON (AP) — Are some of America's popular tunes of the "Gay Nineties" becoming American folk-songs?

A number of songs of the era have outlived their generation and become a part of the American tradition — songs that everybody knows.

The continuing popularity of these tunes — on many of which copyrights have expired — is accented by an event which has become a Boston tradition. Next Tuesday marks the 25th anniversary of "old timers' night" at the Boston Pops. The Pops are the spring concerts of "popular" music played each year by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Old timers' night" features tunes written for a generation of Americans who went to the great Chicago World's Fair of 1893, rode tandem bicycles, and volunteered for the Spanish-American war. Although most of that generation is dead, the songs they sang more than 60 years age are so popular that the clamor for seats at "old timer's night" now exceeds the capacity of Symphony Hall.

Which seems to prove that today's Americans have taken to their hearts such old songs as "Daisy Bell — now better known as "A Bicycle Built for Two," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," and "After The Ball."

JUN 21 1957

Pops Orchestra Keeps Old Ban

BOSTON (UP) — First-desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

Norwegian Sailor Pulls Boston Pops To N. Hampshire

BOSTON (UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N.H., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor-pianist who is unable to come here.

Sven Erik Liebeck of Oslo, a midshipman, aboard the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich, played for the famed conductor when the ship was in Boston.

Record on Pier

Fiedler was so impressed he decided to make a recording with the young artist, but Liebeck had left for Portsmouth and was unable to return.

Fiedler made arrangements to move the entire orchestra to the New Hampshire town and will make the recording on the pier at Fort Constitution. The young seaman is scheduled to put to sea shortly after.

EAGLE June 24

...ser - New York

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720
JUN 24 1957

Pianist Can't Make Boston, So Orchestra Will Travel to Him

Portsmouth, N.H. — (AP) —A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Mr. Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home today.

Mr. Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made yesterday for the Pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution today.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 444,193 - S. 469,816
JUN 21 1957

Music Chief To Quit at 'M'

Special to the Free Press

ANN ARBOR — Charles A. Sink will retire Sept. 1 as executive director of University of Michigan Musical Society.

He will be replaced by Gail W. Rector, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony and executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

Sink, who has received many international honors, will continue as president of the society.

New York Herald Trib. July 23, 1957

Naugatuck, Conn. News July 11, 1957

West Palm Beach, Fla. Palm Beach Times June 20, 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

HOPEWELL, VA.
NEWS
Circ. D. 3,739
JUN 21 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-desk Musicians

BOSTON — (U.P.) — First-deck men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestro even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,192
JUN 24 1957

Fiedler To Take "Pops" Orchestra To Piano Solist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. June 23 (AP)—A young pianist serving on a Norweigian training ship can't make it to Boston—so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Badich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home tomorrow.

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Then the Christian Radich—and Liebeck—will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last Dec. 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Foster's Democrat (e)
DOVER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 7,400
JUN 24 1957

Pops Comes To Portsmouth

PORTSMOUTH (AP) — The Boston Pops orchestra, with a young Norwegian pianist as soloist, today played Grieg's piano concerto on an outdoor pier with the Atlantic Ocean for a backdrop.

Eric Liebeck, 18, traveled here from Oslo, Norway, aboard the training ship, Christian Radich to make a scene with the 54-man Pops for a new Louis De Rochmont film, "Cinemiracle."

A crowd of some 200 people gathered on the wharf at Fort Constitution to hear the unusual concert, directed by Pops conductor Arthur Fielder.

The concert was played in front of the ship, tied up at the pier, while a 15-man movie crew worked in the background.

De Rochmont said the ship, which also appears in other sequences of the picture, will leave for the return trip to Oslo Wednesday or Thursday.

Liebeck said he had a small piano with him on the ship but "it is hard to keep up practice when you are pulling ropes. But then you can't make an 18-day trip without doing something to help out."

Liebeck, who has been playing the piano since he was 5 years old and practices 6 to 8 hours a day, has also had bit parts in motion pictures in Norway.

He said he is undecided on whether to follow a career as an actor or concert pianist.

Liebeck played a few selections with the Pops orchestra when his ship was in Boston recently. After hearing him play, Fielder said the youth "has talent."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622
JUN 24 1957

Fiedler Records at Portsmouth

Pops Goes to Artist, 19

PORTSMOUTH — (AP) — A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-man Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo, impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home today.

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a. m. today.

Then the Christian Radich — and Liebeck — will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last December 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops Orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 10,084
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Orchestra Goe sto Young Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 11,121
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops In Portsmouth For Recording

STATE AP NEWS

Portsmouth, June 24 — The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 9,264
JUN 24 1957

as the explosion was detonated.

* * *

BOSTON—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. B., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor-pianist who is unable to come here.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 50,926
JUN 24 1957

Pops To Record With Pianist On N.H. Dock Just Before Ship Sails

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. June (AP) — A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman [illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible]

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Then the Christian Radich — and Liebeck — will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last Dec. 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops Orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor &
New Hampshire
Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Independ. Circ. 12,067
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Plays On Pier In Portsmouth For Cinerama

PORTSMOUTH, June 24 (AP)—The Boston Pops orchestra, with a young Norwegian pianist as a soloist, today played Grieg's piano concert on an outdoor pier with the Atlantic Ocean for a backdrop.

Eric Liebeck, 18, traveled here from Oslo, Norway, aboard the training ship Christian Radich to make a scene with the 54-man Pops for a new Louis De Rochmont film, "Cinemiracle."

A crowd of some 200 people gathered on the wharf at Fort Constitution to hear the unusual concert, directed by Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler.

The concert was played in front of the ship, tied up at the pier, while a 15-man movie crew worked in the background.

De Rochmont said the ship, which also appears in other sequences of the picture, will leave for the return trip to Oslo Wednesday or Thursday.

Ilieback said he had a small piano with him on the ship but "it is hard to keep up practice when you are pulling ropes. But then you can't make an 18-day trip without doing something to help out."

(Continued on Page Five)

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 48,672 Su. 48,383
JUN 23 1957

Entertainers Wanted For Island Concerts

By PAUL MILTICH

Do you blow a horn or belt out a song so a lot of folks like it? Then Josef Cherniavsky, Saginaw Eddy Band-orchestra conductor, wants to see you.

Cherniavsky is looking for singers, actors, instrumentalists — entertainers of all kinds—to feature on the summer "Concerts-Under-The-Stars" series at Ojibway Island.

The series will start next Sunday. Concert time is 7:30 p. m.

Cherniavsky says he will give all possible assistance to any hopeful who feels he can do a good job of entertaining the hometown public. He said he will work with the entertainer to develop his stage presence, showmanship and delivery.

So all you guys and gals with a big spark of talent . . . the number to call is PL 5-6471, the City Music Library, to set up an audition.

The summer concert series is supported by the C. K. Eddy Family Memorial Trust Fund and the City Recreation Department.

* * *

DONALD BORG, Saginaw High School vocal music director, is music supervisor for the City Recreation Department playgrounds again this summer.

As such, he is looking for good, fresh voices for his All-City Summer Youth Chorus. First rehearsal is at 7:30 next Wednesday night in the Saginaw High choir room (Room 311.) Borg hopes to see all former members of the Saginaw High and Arthur Hill choirs and any other student with some singing experience.

The Youth Chorus will do its big stint during the playground finale show to be produced at the end of the summer. Borg says a TV appearance also is planned.

* * *

CONDUCTOR JOSEF CHERNIAVSKY returned last week from the annual convention of the American Symphony Orchestra League in Sioux City, Ia. He attended an as official delegate. Civic Symphony coordinator Robert L. Klepinger and several board members also attended.

* * *

MEMO FROM BOSTON: Boston Symphony first-desk men (orchestra section heads) are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra. The scoop is they get extra pay anyway.

That was the way it was when the Boston Pops was organized, and it's still that way. The Pops concerts were originally set up not for public enjoyment but to put some extra money into the pockets of Boston Symphony members who otherwise would be out of a job from May until October, the off-season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 7,201
JUN 24 1957

Musicians Go To Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,192

JUN 24 1957

Fiedler To Take "Pops" Orchestra To Piano Solist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. June 23 (AP)—A young pianist serving on a Norweigian training ship can't make it to Boston—so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Badich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home tomorrow.

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Then the Christian Radich—and Liebeck—will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last Dec. 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Foster's Democrat (e)
DOVER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 7,400

JUN 24 1957

Pops Comes To Portsmouth

PORTSMOUTH (AP) — The Boston Pops orchestra, with a young Norwegian pianist as soloist, today played Grieg's piano concerto on an outdoor pier with the Atlantic Ocean for a backdrop.

Eric Liebeck, 18, traveled here from Oslo, Norway, aboard the training ship, Christian Radich to make a scene with the 54-man Pops for a new Louis De Rochmont film, "Cinnemiracle."

A crowd of some 200 people gathered on the wharf at Fort Constitution to hear the unusual concert, directed by Pops conductor Arthur Fielder.

The concert was played in front of the ship, tied up at the pier, while a 15-man movie crew worked in the background.

De Rochmont said the ship, which also appears in other sequences of the picture, will leave for the return trip to Oslo Wednesday or Thursday.

Liebeck said he had a small piano with him on the ship but "it is hard to keep up practice when you are pulling ropes. But then you can't make an 18-day trip without doing something to help out."

Liebeck, who has been playing the piano since he was 5 years old and practices 6 to 8 hours a day, has also had bit parts in motion pictures in Norway.

He said he is undecided on whether to follow a career as an actor or concert pianist.

Liebeck played a few selections with the Pops orchestra when his ship was in Boston recently. After hearing him play, Fielder said the youth "has talent."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

JUN 24 1957

Fiedler Records at Portsmouth

Pops Goes to Artist, 19

PORTSMOUTH — (AP) — A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-man Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo, impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home today.

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a.m. today.

Then the Christian Radich — and Liebeck — will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last December 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops Orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 10,084

JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Orchestra Goe sto Young Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 9,264

JUN 24 1957

* * *

BOSTON—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. B., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor-pianist who is unable to come here.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 50,926

JUN 24 1957

Pops To Record With Pianist On N.H. Dock Just Before Ship Sails

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. June (AP) — A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston — so Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home tomorrow.

Fiedler and the ship's skipper, Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, conferred and arrangements were made today for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away.

Plans call for Liebeck to join the orchestra and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution about 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Then the Christian Radich — and Liebeck — will head out to sea to wind up a cruise begun last Dec. 8. It is the last for Capt. Kjelstrup, who is 70 and plans to retire from the sea when he reaches his home port of Oslo.

Prior to coming to Portsmouth, the ship was in Boston where Liebeck met Fiedler and played a few times with the Pops Orchestra. However, no recordings were made then.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 48,672 - S. 48,383

JUN 23 1957

Entertainers Wanted For Island Concerts

By PAUL MILTICH

Do you blow a horn or belt out a song so a lot of folks like it? Then Josef Cherniavsky, Saginaw Eddy Band-orchestra conductor, wants to see you.

Cherniavsky is looking for singers, actors, instrumentalists — entertainers of all kinds — to feature on the summer "Concerts-Under-The-Stars" series at Ojibway Island.

The series will start next Sunday. Concert time is 7:30 p. m.

Cherniavsky says he will give all possible assistance to any hopeful who feels he can do a good job of entertaining the hometown public. He said he will work with the entertainer to develop his stage presence, showmanship and delivery.

So all you guys and gals with a big spark of talent . . . the number to call is PL 5-6471, the City Music Library, to set up an audition.

The summer concert series is supported by the C. K. Eddy Family Memorial Trust Fund and the City Recreation Department.

* * *

DONALD BORG, Saginaw High School vocal music director, is music supervisor for the City Recreation Department playgrounds again this summer.

As such, he is looking for good, fresh voices for his All-City Summer Youth Chorus. First rehearsal is at 7:30 next Wednesday night in the Saginaw High choir room (Room 311.) Borg hopes to see all former members of the Saginaw High and Arthur Hill choirs and any other student with some singing experience.

The Youth Chorus will do its big stint during the playground finale show to be produced at the end of the summer. Borg says a TV appearance also is planned.

* * *

CONDUCTOR JOSEF CHERNIAVSKY returned last week from the annual convention of the American Symphony Orchestra League in Sioux City, Ia. He attended an as official delegate. Civic Symphony coordinator Robert L. Klepinger and several board members also attended.

* * *

MEMO FROM BOSTON: Boston Symphony first-desk men (orchestra section heads) are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra. The scoop is they get extra pay anyway.

That was the way it was when the Boston Pops was organized, and it's still that way. The Pops concerts were originally set up not for public enjoyment but to put some extra money into the pockets of Boston Symphony members who otherwise would be out of a job from May until October, the off-season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 7,201

JUN 24 1957

lays On Pier For Cinerama

Ocean for a backdrop.

Eric Liebeck, 18, traveled here from Oslo, Norway, aboard the training ship Christian Radich to make a scene with the 54-man Pops for a new Louis De Rochmont film, "Cinemiracle."

A crowd of some 200 people gathered on the wharf at Fort Constitution to hear the unusual concert, directed by Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler.

The concert was played in front of the ship, tied up at the pier, while a 15-man movie crew worked in the background.

De Rochmont said the ship, which also appears in other sequences of the picture, will leave for the return trip to Oslo Wednesday or Thursday.

Iieback said he had a small piano with him on the ship but "it is hard to keep up practice when you are pulling ropes. But then you can't make an 18-day trip without doing something to help out."

(Continued on Page Five)

came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec 8.

Musicians Go To Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 68,623 - S. 78,467
JUN 25 1957

MORALS AND MANNERS

A SNEAK thief stole $240 from comedian Milton Berle's hotel suite in Detroit while the entertainer and his wife were sleeping. Berle, who is currently appearing in a Windsor, Ont., night club, told police officers the burglar took the money from a pair of trousers Berle had left draped over a chair. The officer said the thief gained entry to the suite with a key.

BERLE

DALLAS POLICE have been ordered to quit picking locks — except in an emergency. Local locksmiths complained to the city manager that police often — and without charge — unlock cars for forgetful owners. Noting the protests, the police chief issued a memo instructing patrolmen to refer owners locked out of their cars to a locksmith — except in "cases of emergencies or serious inconvenience."

A YOUNG PIANIST serving on a Norwegian training ship docked in Portsmouth, N. H. can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are going to him. Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo, impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra. Liebeck, however, is scheduled to sail for home. Arrangements were made for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, 60 miles away, and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution today.

FIEDLER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 4,232
JUN 24 1957

Pops Orchestra Follows Pianist To Portsmouth

Young Norwegian Musician On Training Ship—To Make Recordings

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,526
JUN 24 1957

Boston (UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. B., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor-pianist who is unable to come here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,535
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Go to Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 24 (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra headed for Portsmouth today, because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The orchestra went to Portsmouth so 18-year-old Eric Liebeck could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the Boston Pops orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently. However, he made no recordings with the orchestra at that time.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The orchestra, under the direction of of Arthur Fiedler, agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails to return home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784
JUL 6 1957

QUIET, PLEASE, AT POPS!

I would like very much to be a charter member of the "Society fof Prevention of Contagious Diseases, Like Talking at the Pops." The Symphony Hall Pops during the season are wonderful, so please be quiet so we can hear and enjoy them.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 11,253
JUN 24 1957

Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops Here For Movie Scene

NEW CASTLE—A young Norwegian pianist had a taste of musical glory this morning when he played with the Boston Pops orchestra while movie cameras ground away on the dock at the Coast Guard station here.

The youth, Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, of Oslo played the "Grieg Concerto" with the orchestra directed by Arthur Fiedler. In the background was the Norwegian training ship, Christian Radick, which is featured in several scenes of the movie "Cinemiracle" being produced by Louis deRochemont.

The dock this morning was a tangle of cables, cameras, musicians, sailors and curious onlookers watching the painstaking intricacies of movie making. More than a dozen rehearsals were made before the cameras started rolling on the short scene with the Norwegian youth and the orchestra.

* * *

Blond, quiet and well-mannered, Liebeck was obviously pleased with his opportunity to play for Fiedler but he is not a newcomer to such work.

He said he has appeared in several movies in Oslo and has been playing the piano since he was five years old. At home, he practices six or eight hours a day, he said. He is torn between the twin ambitions of becoming an actor or a concert pianist.

This particular break for the youth came after deRochemont and his musical director, Jack Shaindlin, heard him play and decided to get Fiedley's opinion of his talent.

(Please turn to page three)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,017
JUN 24 1957

Pops Orchestra To Record With Sailor-Pianist

Boston, June 24—(UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. H. today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor - pianist who is unable to come here.

Sven Eric Liebeck of Oslo, a midshipman aboard the Christian Radich, a Norwegian training ship, played for the famed conductor when the ship was in Boston.

Fiedler was reported so impressed he decided to make a recording with the young artist, but Liebeck had left for Portsmouth and was unable to return.

Fiedler made arrangements to move the entire orchestra to the New Hampshire town and will make the recording on the pier at Fort Constitution. The young seaman was scheduled to put to sea shortly afterwards.

The record will reportedly be used in a new Louis De. Rochemont "Cinemiracle" film which will include films of the ship on his training voyage.

The orchestra's performance will be synchronized with a stereophonic sound record of music made at symphony hall earlier.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
FORT MYERS, FLA.
NEWS-PRESS
Circ. D. 9,345 - S. 9,345
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Goes To Musician When He Can't Get Off

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 23 (AP)—A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston—so Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home tomorrow.

Arrangements were made today for the pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution tomorrow.

MOVIE MAKING IN NEW CASTLE — Seated at the piano waiting for the movie cameras to roll is Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, of Oslo, Norway, who is playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra in Louis deRochemont's new movie "Cinemiracle." Standing directly behind the youth is the Pops' director, Arthur Fiedler. In the background is the Norwegian training ship, Christian Radick, tied up at the Coast Guard dock in New Castle. (Portsmouth Herald photo)

BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
Circ. D. 705,054 - S. 709,787
JUN 24 1957

New Arrangements

American impresario Sol Hurok is in Moscow finalizing arrangements for the appearance there of Metropolitan Opera singers Blanche Thebom and Leonard Warren. Soviet pianist Emil Gilels and violinist Lenid Kogan, now touring Western Europe, will come to the United States under Hurok's management . . . Arthur Fiedler and his 54 - piece Boston Pops Orchestra went to Portsmouth, N. H., and made recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution with Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, a pianist serving on the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich, before his vessel headed out to sea . . . Lee Collins, whose trumpet earned him a spot among the best of the early jazz musicians, is now a charity patient at Cook County Hospital, Ill., with a dilated lung. Phyicians

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO

Victor Sets 3-Way July Album Push

NEW YORK—RCA Victor has a three-way album push going for it in July. The outfit in addition to its special bargain Boston Pops promotion, has set several prime promotion packages in its regular monthly release.

Here are the details on the Boston Pops promotion: Dealers will offer their customers one Pops LP free with every two Pops LP's purchased at regular $3.98 price. Included in the offer will be 27 Pops LP's from the back catalog, plus four new Pops releases. Dealers themselves will buy two albums at regular wholesale and be allowed to buy every third set at 50 cents.

Uniquely, the push is for LP's only—EP's are not included. According to the diskery, EP's henceforth are being handled by a separate department, which will come up with its own promotions.

The four new Pops platters are "Hi-Fi Fiedler," with popular symphonic repertoire; Tchaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite," which was the S-O-R free bonus disk last summer; "In the Latin Flavor" and "Curtain Going Up." Dealers will be given a full-color three-dimensional Fiedler display with their orders.

The regular album release is headed by a set of excerpts from the Metopera production of Offenbach's "Perichole," a big success last season. This will be issued in the original cast series, at $4.98 list. Also at the top of the list will be a Boston Symphony version of Tchaikowsky's Serenade for Strings, with Munch conducting.

In the pop series, the line-up includes 16 assorted pop, country, jazz, sacred, Latin and international sets.

On the $1.98 Camden series, the list is headed by a John Charles Thomas regrouping, "I Hear America Singing." Also represented for the first time on the bargain label, is thrush Bidu Sayao. The monthly Budget Special, with full-treatment packaging, is "Stringin' the Standards," by guitarist Gene Bianco and his group.

In the tape line, there will be one monaural and six stereo reels marketed. The monaural is a Shorty Rogers set, and the stereos will include the "Hi-Fi Fiedler," plus some of the more popular classical performances recently issued on disks.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 68,623 - S. 78,467
JUN 25 1957

MORALS AND MANNERS

A SNEAK thief stole $240 from comedian Milton Berle's hotel suite in Detroit while the entertainer and his wife were sleeping. Berle, who is currently appearing in a Windsor, Ont., night club, told police officers the burglar took the money from a pair of trousers Berle had left draped over a chair. The officer said the thief gained entry to the suite with a key.

BERLE

DALLAS POLICE have been ordered to quit picking locks — except in an emergency. Local locksmiths complained to the city manager that police often — and without charge — unlock cars for forgetful owners. Noting the protests, the police chief issued a memo instructing patrolmen to refer owners locked out of their cars to a locksmith — except in "cases of emergencies or serious inconvenience."

A YOUNG PIANIST serving on a Norwegian training ship docked in Portsmouth, N. H. can't make it to Boston — so conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are going to him. Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo, impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the Pops Orchestra. Liebeck, however, is scheduled to sail for home. Arrangements were made for the Pops Orchestra to come from Boston, 60 miles away, and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution today.

FIEDLER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 4,232
JUN 24 1957

Pops Orchestra Follows Pianist To Portsmouth

Young Norwegian Musician On Training Ship—To Make Recordings

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra came to Portsmouth today because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The musicians made the trip so Eric Liebeck, 19, could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for Midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The musicians agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,526
JUN 24 1957

Boston (UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. B., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor-pianist who is unable to come here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,535
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Go to Pianist

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 24 (AP)—The 54-piece Boston Pops orchestra headed for Portsmouth today, because a young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship could not go to Boston.

The orchestra went to Portsmouth so 18-year-old Eric Liebeck could make some recordings with the orchestra.

Liebeck played a few selections with the Boston Pops orchestra when his vessel, the Christian Radich, was in Boston recently. However, he made no recordings with the orchestra at that time.

The training ship is scheduled to return to Oslo, Norway, today, and there would not have been enough time for midshipman Liebeck to travel the 60 miles to Boston.

The orchestra, under the direction of of Arthur Fiedler, agreed to go to Liebeck and plans were made to record some selections on the pier at Fort Constitution before the vessel sails to return home from its cruise which began last Dec. 8.

Arthur Fiedler —

(Continued from page one)

Last week Liebeck practiced with Fiedler and Saturday in Boston they made a sound recording of the scene being shot today. This sound track will be used in case harbor noises or disturbances ruin parts of the work done this morning.

Although not a member of the ship's crew, Liebeck said he "handled ropes" and performed other shipboard duties on the 18-day trip from Europe. He definitely isn't going to be a sailor, but, he said "you have to do something on a long trip."

* * *

Grieg is one of his favorite compoesrs along with Mach and Rachmaninoff. The concerto Liebeck plays in the movie is one of the most famous piano concerto ever written and Grieg is probably Norway's most important composer.

During the voyage to the United States, the young pianist practiced under difficulties on a small piano which wouldn't "stay put" during some of the stormy weather the ship hit.

The three-masted, square rigger, which is commanded by Capt. Yngvar Kjelstrup, is scheduled to set sail for Norway either on Wednesday or Thursday. Besides the 20-man crew and 42 young cadets, the ship has been carrying 15 members of the deRochemont movie company who have filmed training activities for the movie.

Despite Liebeck's "big moment," he is apparently happy to be going home. He says "there are just too many people" in the U.S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,017
JUN 24 1957

Pops Orchestra To Record With Sailor-Pianist

Boston, June 24—(UP)—Arthur Fiedler and his 54-member Boston Pops Orchestra leave for Portsmouth, N. H., today for a recording date with a 19-year old Norwegian sailor - pianist who is unable to come here.

Sven Eric Liebeck of Oslo, a midshipman aboard the Christian Radich, a Norwegian training ship, played for the famed conductor when the ship was in Boston.

Fiedler was reported so impressed he decided to make a recording with the young artist, but Liebeck had left for Portsmouth and was unable to return.

Fiedler made arrangements to move the entire orchestra to the New Hampshire town and will make the recording on the pier at Fort Constitution. The young seaman was scheduled to put to sea shortly afterwards.

The record will reportedly be used in a new Louis De. Rochemont "Cinemiracle" film which will include films of the ship on his training voyage.

The orchestra's performance will be synchronized with a stereophonic sound record of music made at symphony hall earlier.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
FORT MYERS, FLA.
NEWS-PRESS
Circ. D. 9,345 - S. 9,345
JUN 24 1957

Boston Pops Goes To Musician When He Can't Get Off

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 23 (AP)—A young pianist serving on a Norwegian training ship can't make it to Boston—so Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his 54-piece Boston Pops Orchestra are coming to him here.

Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, of Oslo impressed Fiedler and was invited by the conductor to make recordings with the pops orchestra.

Liebeck, however, is a midshipman aboard the Norwegian vessel Christian Radich, in Portsmouth the past week and scheduled to sail for home tomorrow.

Arrangements were made today for the pops orchestra to come from Boston, some 60 miles away and make recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution tomorrow.

MOVIE MAKING IN NEW CASTLE — Seated at the piano waiting for the movie cameras to roll is Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, of Oslo, Norway, who is playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra in Louis deRochemont's new movie "Cinemiracle." Standing directly behind the youth is the Pops' director, Arthur Fiedler. In the background is the Norwegian training ship, Christian Radick, tied up at the Coast Guard dock in New Castle. (Portsmouth Herald photo)

BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
Circ. D. 705,054 - S. 709,787
JUN 24 1957

New Arrangements

American impresario Sol Hurok is in Moscow finalizing arrangements for the appearance there of Metropolitan Opera singers Blanche Thebom and Leonard Warren. Soviet pianist Emil Gilels and violinist Lenid Kogan, now touring Western Europe, will come to the United States under Hurok's management . . . Arthur Fiedler and his 54 - piece Boston Pops Orchestra went to Portsmouth, N. H., and made recordings on the pier at Fort Constitution with Sven Eric Liebeck, 19, a pianist serving on the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich, before his vessel headed out to sea . . . Lee Collins, whose trumpet earned him a spot among the best of the early jazz musicians, is now a charity patient at Cook County Hospital, Ill., with a dilated lung. Phyicians say his lusty style of playing could have aggravated the condition and that he'll never play again.

3-Way July Album Push

NEW YORK—RCA Victor has a three-way album push going for it in July. The outfit in addition to its special bargain Boston Pops promotion, has set several prime promotion packages in its regular monthly release.

Here are the details on the Boston Pops promotion: Dealers will offer their customers one Pops LP free with every two Pops LP's purchased at regular $3.98 price. Included in the offer will be 27 Pops LP's from the back catalog, plus four new Pops releases. Dealers themselves will buy two albums at regular wholesale and be allowed to buy every third set at 50 cents.

Uniquely, the push is for LP's only—EP's are not included. According to the diskery, EP's henceforth are being handled by a separate department, which will come up with its own promotions.

The four new Pops platters are "Hi-Fi Fiedler," with popular symphonic repertoire; Tchaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite," which was the S-O-R free bonus disk last summer; "In the Latin Flavor" and "Curtain Going Up." Dealers will be given a full-color three-dimensional Fiedler display with their orders.

The regular album release is headed by a set of excerpts from the Metopera production of Offenbach's "Perichole," a big success last season. This will be issued in the original cast series, at $4.98 list. Also at the top of the list will be a Boston Symphony version of Tchaikowsky's Serenade for Strings, with Munch conducting.

In the pop series, the line-up includes 16 assorted pop, country, jazz, sacred, Latin and international sets.

On the $1.98 Camden series, the list is headed by a John Charles Thomas regrouping, "Hear America Singing." Also represented for the first time on the bargain label is thrush Bidu Sayao. The monthly Budget Special, with full treatment packaging, is "Stringin' the Standards," by guitarist Gene Bianco and his group.

In the tape line, there will be one monaural and six stereo reels marketed. The monaural is a Shorty Rogers set, and the stereos will include the "Hi-Fi Fiedler," plus some of the more popular classical performances recently issued on disks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 15,523

JUL 6 1957

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,859

JUL 11 1957

BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

1957

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467

JUN 29 1957

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER-POST
Circ. D. 77,080

JUN 28 1957

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 68,623 - S. 78,467

JUN 25 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-Desk Musicians

BOSTON, (UP) — First - desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

JUN 26 1957

BACK TO NORWAY

Cinemiracle Coastal Scenes End at Portsmouth, N. H.

Portsmouth, N. H., June 25. Louis de Rochemont company, shooting new process "Cine Miracle Adventure" with a Norwegian

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

Radio & Television Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.

1957

Family Pops

Bost[illegible] high points in the re[illegible] WN[illegible] and WNAC-TV Fam[illegible] Nig[illegible] Pops were shown [illegible] film yesterday 8:30-8:45 p.m. [illegible] channel 7. Included were [illegible] 2,325 guests present [illegible] Symphony Hall, the welcome [illegible] Fiedler and Fran[illegible] conducted the 95-piece Boston Pops Orchestra.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467

JUN 25 1957

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 42,936

JUL 13 1957

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,541

JUL 15 1957

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 12,670

JUL 15 1957

Hour (e)
NORWALK, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 16,281

JUL 9 - 1957

Independent Republican
Circ. 24,880

JUL 17 1957

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,150

JUL 11 1957

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,541

JUL 10 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BU[illegible]
165 Church Street - New [illegible]

TAYLORVILLE, ILL.
BREEZE-COURIER
Circ. D. 6,206

JUL 9 1957

NEW CASTLE, IND.
COURIER-TIMES

AUG 2 1957

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,628

AUG 14 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

JUN 26 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER and his Boston Pops orchestra were on the pier at Fort Constitution, New Castle, Monday, for a recording session with Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, of Oslo, Norway, and the Norwegian training ship Christian Radick, a three-masted schooner. Note background of spars of schooner. (Photo by Paul E. Marston)

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LaSALLE ILL.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JUL 9 1957

OCALA, FLA.
STAR-BANNER
Circ. D. 6,883 - S. 7,071

JUL 9 1957

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
Circ. D. 19,323

JUL 8 1957

Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Independent
Circ. 13,088

JUL 8 - 1957

Argus (e)
MONTPELIER, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 4,992

JUL 6 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 41,840

JUL 6 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006

JUN 26 1957

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,296

JUN 25 1957

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 16,711

JUN 25 1957

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

JUN 25 1957

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUN 25 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 637,561 - S. 1,124,395

JUN 25 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

JUN 29 1957

AT POPS

Works of Hovhaness And Yardumian

To the Western ear, the music of the Middle East has always had a haunting, exotic quality, now rhythmic, now langorous, replete with plaintive melodies.

That was the sound, embellished and refined, that rolled through Symphony Hall last night, contrasting effectively with the tinkling classical melodies of Mozart, the romanticism of Mendelssohn, and the modern gaiety of Richard Rodger's "South Pacific."

It was the annual Armenian Night at the Pops—the second last concert of the season, incidentally—and two highly regarded American composers of Armenian ancestry share honors.

Alan Scott Hovhaness, Somerville-born and Boston-schooled, was represented by his vigorous rhythmic piece "Kohar," given its first Symphony Hall performance. It was written in 1947 and named in memory of his paternal grandmother.

Evocative of the land of his ancestors and yet clever and modern, the work exemplifies Hovhaness' unique quality of turning the tunes and rhythms of the Near East into sophisticated and winning symphonic works.

The composer was in the audience and was given an ovation from the capacity audience.

Delightful the Word

Richard Yardumian, a member of the bassoon section of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and a widely-recognized American composer, was represented by three sections of his lively "Armenian Suite"—the second dance, the lullaby and the first dance.

This is a delightful capturing of the essence of a people's folk music. The tender lullaby contrasts with the quick vigor of the dance rhythms. One wished the entire suite could have been played.

An impressive moment in the evening came when the audience rose and sang in Armenian "Hayr Mer"—"The Lord's Prayer"—based on an ancient song of the Armenians.

The Armenian section of the evening concluded with "Crimean Sketches" by Spendiarian. Dr. Keran J. Chobanian was chairman of the evening, sponsored by the Friends of Armenian Culture Society.—G.E.M.

PIER SIDE CONCERT — Arthur Fiedler conducts the Boston Pops Orchestra alongside the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich moored in Portsmouth, N. H. Concert was played in honor of Eric Liebeck, at piano, talented 18-year-old pianist aboard the sailing ship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 15,523

JUL 6 1957

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,859

JUL 11 1957

Buxrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

1957

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 534,376 - S. 1,149,467

JUN 29 1957

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER-POST
Circ. D. 77,080

JUN 28 1957

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 68,623 - S. 78,467

JUN 25 1957

Boston Pops Bars First-Desk Musicians

BOSTON, (UP) — First - desk men are barred from playing with the Boston Pops Orchestra even if they want to.

The Pops concerts were begun, not for public enjoyment, but for the benefit of Boston Symphony personnel who would otherwise be unemployed from May until October.

When the orchestra was organized, first-desk men, the principal performers in each chair of the orchestra, were banned from participation because they received extra salary anyway. The ban has continued and first-desk men may appear only as guest soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

JUN 26 1957

BACK TO NORWAY

Cinemiracle Coastal Scenes End at Portsmouth, N. H.

Portsmouth, N. H., June 25.

Louis de Rochemont company, shooting new process "Cine Miracle Adventure" with a Norwegian school ship pulled in for two days of filming here yesterday (24) and today. Arthur Fiedler and Boston Pops Orch, 50 pieces, was brought in for scenes on the pier where the ship is berthed.

Cinemiracle photographed Mayflower II at sea and at Plymouth, Mass. Other scenes were shot in New London, Conn. Ship heads back to Norway after finishing locally.

Buxrelle's
1 6 1957

Family Pops

Boston—High points in the recent WNAC and WNAC-TV Family Night at Pops were shown on [illegible] yesterday 8:30-8:45 p.m. on channel 7. Included were scenes of the 2,325 guests present at Symphony Hall, the welcome by [illegible] director of [illegible] Arthur Fiedler and Fran[illegible] conducted the 95-piece Boston Pops Orchestra.

Buxrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.
DEMOCRAT
Circ. D. 14,732 - S. 14,331

CHANUTE, KAN.
TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 5,942

JUL 31 1957

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 10,391

JUL 18 1957

Advocate (e)
STAMFORD, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 24,880

JUL 17 1957

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,150

JUL 11 1957

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,541

JUL 10 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

TAYLORVILLE, ILL.
BREEZE-COURIER
Circ. D. 6,206

JUL 9 1957

NEW CASTLE, IND.
COURIER-TIMES

AUG 2 1957

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,628

AUG 14 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

JUN 26 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER and his Boston Pops orchestra were on the pier at Fort Constitution, New Castle, Monday, for a recording session with Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, of Oslo, Norway, and the Norwegian training ship Christian Radick, a three-masted schooner. Note background of spars of schooner. (Photo by Paul E. Marston)

Buxrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LaSALLE ILL.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JUL 9 1957

OCALA, FLA.
STAR-BANNER
Circ. D. 6,883 - S. 7,071

JUL 9 1957

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
Circ. D. 19,323

JUL 8 1957

Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Independent
Circ. 13,088

JUL 8 1957

Argus (e)
MONTPELIER, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 4,992

JUL 6 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 41,840

JUL 6 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006

JUN 26 1957

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,296

JUN 25 1957

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 16,711

JUN 25 1957

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 55,720

JUN 25 1957

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUN 25 1957

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 637,561 - S. 1,124,395

JUN 25 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

JUN 29 1957

AT POPS

Works of Hovhaness And Yardumian

To the Western ear, the music of the Middle East has always had a haunting, exotic quality, now rhythmic, now languorous, replete with plaintive melodies.

That was the sound, embellished and refined, that rolled through Symphony Hall last night, contrasting effectively with the tinkling classical melodies of Mozart, the romanticism of Mendelssohn and the modern gaiety of Richard Rodger's "South Pacific."

It was the annual Armenian Night at the Pops—the second last concert of the season, incidentally—and two highly regarded American composers of Armenian ancestry share honors.

Alan Scott Hovhaness, Somerville-born and Boston-schooled, was represented by his vigorous rhythmic piece "Kohar," given its first Symphony Hall performance. It was written in 1947 and named in memory of his paternal grandmother.

Evocative of the land of his ancestors and yet clever and modern, the work exemplifies Hovhaness' unique quality of turning the tunes and rhythms of the Near East into sophisticated and winning symphonic works.

The composer was in the audience and was given an ovation from the capacity audience.

Delightful the Word

Richard Yardumian, a member of the bassoon section of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and a widely-recognized American composer, was represented by three sections of his lively "Armenian Suite"—the second dance, the lullaby and the first dance.

This is a delightful capturing of the essence of a people's folk music. The tender lullaby contrasts with the quick vigor of the dance rhythms. One wished the entire suite could have been played.

An impressive moment in the evening came when the audience rose and sang in Armenian "Hayr Mer"—"The Lord's Prayer"—based on an ancient song of the Armenians.

The Armenian section of the evening concluded with "Crimean Sketches" by Spendiarian. Dr. Keran J. Chobanian was chairman of the evening, sponsored by the Friends of Armenian Culture Society.—G.E.M.

PIER SIDE CONCERT — Arthur Fiedler conducts the Boston Pops Orchestra along-side the Norwegian training ship Christian Radich moored in Portsmouth, N. H. Concert was played in honor of Eric Liebeck, at piano, talented 18-year-old pianist aboard the sailing ship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 25 1957

Portsmouth Pier Sequence

Movie Making Under the Sun

Lieback Rehearses

Conductor Fiedler, Lieback, and Coaching Cameraman

Uniform of the Day

Cellist's Shade

Sun Hat

All photographs by Gordon N. Converse, Chief Photographer

Hollywood and Sea Rendezvous at Portsmouth

By Emilie Tavel
Staff Writer of
The Christian Science Monitor

Portsmouth, N.H.

The stage, the screen, and the sea held a romantic rendezvous yesterdhy here in Portsmouth, N.H.

Movie-making on location—always an exciting magnet for local residents—suddenly mushroomed on Fort Constitution Pier early in the morning, where sea gulls squawk and the Pisquataqua River flows out to meet the ocean.

A white square-rigger out of another age, the Boston Pops Orchestra, a sandy-haired 18-year-old Norwegian pianist, and the cameraman of "Cinemiracle Adventure"—these were the components of yesterday's dockside performance.

Under a brilliant, broiling sun, they drew an audience in bathing suits, shorts, and dungarees. These spectators leaned on railings, sat on the dock, and ultimately scrambled all over the Norwegian eastern training vessel, the Christian Radich. Tied up to the dock, the ship is an authentic backdrop for this scene.

"Cinemiracle Adventure," is being produced by Louis de Rochemont of New York, who made "Cinerama Holiday." He says the Cinemiracle process eliminates the two lines sometimes apparent in Cinerama and is therefore a more highly perfected three-camera, wide-screen technique.

The picture, which began production last Dec. 8 and is expected to be finished late this fall, is the story of how the Norwegians develop character in their young men by training them under sail for the nation's merchant marine.

"It is the story," Mr. de Rochemont says, "of how, in a year's time, little boys who come aboard develop into men's stature."

Last December the immaculate three-masted square-rigger set sail from Oslo with a crew of 42 boys. Instead of taking the usual summer cruise or a race with another ship, the vessel headed across the Atlantic in the manner of Christopher Columbus.

Norwegian Actors

Good sailors are not necessarily good actors. Therefore, the de Rochemont Productions fortified itself for this new adventure with four young Norwegian actors who have been acting since childhood.

And just for good measure, Mr. de Rochemont tucked away a fine-looking young boy named Sven Eric Lieback from Oslo who has been playing the piano since age five.

What happened in Portsmouth yesterday was the climax to that first plan to film young Eric playing the first movement of Grieg's Piano Concerto.

Originally it had been intended to drop anchor in Caracas, Venezuela, and have the boy play there in a concert hall. But all of a sudden, it seemed much more fun to bring Arthur Fiedler's ever-popular and peregrinating Boston Pops Orchestra into the act on the water front here.

'O.K., Roll It!'

If Portsmouth residents—from babes in arms to grandads—learned nothing else yesterday, they witnessed the tedium of movie making.

Sun-tanned technicians in shorts and sandals picked their way through a snake-pit of black wires coiled on the pier. After endless rehearsals, a megaphoned voice commanded: "Dead quiet on the dock, please. O.K., roll it!"

A moment of silence and of orchestra tuning. Then the impeccably dressed Mr. Fiedler raised his baton. Out of the stillness came the thunderous crescendo of the kettle drums, gleaming in the sunlight, and then the brilliant opening piano chords as Eric bent over the keys, squinting.

The glorious melody of the score poured forth—over the dock and over the water out to sea. Just as the audience began to think it had never heard anything so lovely, the whole thing stopped, the cameras stopped grinding and a loud voice broke in rudely "Ten minute break."

But that is how movies are made. Later this week, Wednesday or Thursday, the Christian Radich will set sail for home.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
JUN 25 1957

Gordon N. Converse, Staff Photographer

Portsmouth Hears a Seaside Symphony

Sven Eric Liebeck, 18-year-old Norwegian pianist, has a most unusual first major public appearance as a musician as he plays the first movement of Grieg's Piano Concerto with conductor Arthur Fiedler and the 50-man Boston Pops Orchestra on Fort Constitution Pier at Portsmouth, N.H. Yesterday the Norwegian training vessel, the Christian Radich, docked here for a sequence of the filming of the Louis de Rochemont production, "Cinemiracle Adventure." Local residents gathered to watch the proceedings. Pictures and story: [Page 2.]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622
JUN 26 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER, and Sven Eric Liebeck, 18, Oslo, Norway, actor-pianist, at dock recording session. (Photo by Paul E. Marston)

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
Circ. D. 167,795 - S. 244,150
JUL 27 1957

S. F. Musician to Conduct The Boston 'Pops' Twice

Earl Bernard Murray, associate conductor of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, has been invited to conduct the Boston "Pops" Orchestra in two "Esplanade Concerts" on the Charles River in Boston, it was announced yesterday.

The invitation came from Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston "Pops" who is currently conducting the annual "pops" concerts of the San Francisco Symphony.

The works to be conducted in Boston by Murray include Franck's Symphony in D minor and Dvorak's "New World" symphony. Tonight at 8:30 in the Civic Auditorium, Fiedler will conduct the local orchestra in a program featuring the Sibelius Violin Concerto, with William Pynchon as soloist, and works by Offenbach, Irving Berlin and other composers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Medford Messenger
MEDFORD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 16,500
JUN 27 1957

DISCUSSING PLANS for the Armenian Night at the Pops, to be held Friday evening at Symphony Hall in Boston, are (left to right) Rouben Gregorian, former leader of the Iranian State Symphony Orchestra who will serve as guest conductor; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and Dr. Keran M. Chobanian who served as physician-on-tour when the Boston Symphony toured Russia last year.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
Circ. D. 121,929
JUN 27 1957

Fennell To Conduct In Boston

Frederick Fennell, conductor of the Eastman Chamber Orchestra, opening its fourth season of summer concerts in Kilbourn Hall tonight, will fly to Boston after the concert on July 5 to make his appearance as guest conductor at a pair of concerts on the Esplanade.

The famous concerts are presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River and draw as many as 25,000 people on the weekends in July.

Fennell returned to the city recently following an intensive guest conducting tour which took him to Iowa, Texas and Oklahoma. Oklahoma City University awarded him an honorary Doctor of Music degree during this trip.

The Boston concerts which he will conduct will include the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikowsky, the Eighth Symphony by Beethoven, the Haydn Variations by Brahms as well as shorter pieces by Dvorak, Faure and Wagner.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 28,235
JUL 21 1957

'Pop' Question: Corks or Music

TWO SCHOOLS of thought are extant on the derivation of the term "pop" as applied to musical programs. The original idea was to popularize semi-classical music by playing it informally, providing tables, food and drinks for the audience. One school believes "pop" refers to popularizing the programs; the other that the popping of wine corks imparted the name. The very first pop concert was played in London, England, in 1830. In 1853 the idea was tried here, and later became a regular feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Boston and later in Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566

JUN 27 1957

Trumpet Soloist Comes Into His Own

Ghitalla Plays New Farberman Concerto

By Harold Rogers

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra was touring the United States a few years back, Armando Ghitalla could usually be found backstage before the concerts, seated on a suitcase, a box, or a keg, warming up his trumpet with sad little tunes. He presented the picture of a disconsolate trumpeter, and it sometimes seemed to me that he was disconsolate because he had never truly been heard.

Well, Armando Ghitalla has now been heard—in the full glory of his fabulous tone and fantastic technique. Some of us have long known of his remarkable abilities. Last night an audience that filled Symphony Hall was completely convinced, judging by the rapturous applause, of the scope of his accomplishment.

* * *

The vehicle for Mr. Ghitalla's dazzling display was provided by a colleague from the orchestra, the young and energetic percussionist Harold Farberman. Most of Boston's music lovers do not have to be told that Mr. Farberman has made a considerable splash during the past two or three seasons by his exuberant, if somewhat intemperate, compositions; and the première last night of his Double Concerto for Single Trumpet proved no exception.

If this tricky title gives the reader a double-take, it is a title that makes sense as the piece unfolds, section by section by section. True, Mr. Ghitalla had bring two trumpets on stage a bigger one and a littler one—and he did play both of them, but not, or course, at the same time as Egyptian flutists have been depicted as doing. The "double" in Mr. Farberman's concerto refers to the contrast of "hot" trumpet-playing with "cool" trumpet-playing, to state it in the vernacular, or the jazz style with the classic.

The piece therefore is a trumpeter's dream come true—that is, if the trumpeter, like Mr. Ghitalla, has the flexibility to blow on both sides of the fence. (There was one effective phrase in which he blew first to the right and then to the left!) He proved that he can tear off a blistering rip (or glissando, if you prefer) or the neatest kind of triple-tonguing imaginable in true "Carnival of Venice" style. He hopped around the scale with incredible ease, playing with either his lovely golden tone which few can emulate, or with a night club blat, which many can imitate. And he wound the whole thing up with a piercing high F that brought down the house. What cannot this Ghitalla man do?

* * *

To Mr. Farberman must go the credit for bringing Mr. Ghitalla so brilliantly to the fore. Yet if one can praise his Double Concerto for Single Trumpet as a vehicle, one is left with less to praise when considering the piece itself. Its form (and Mr. Farberman at present is notably weak in form) is simply a chain of somewhat unrelated sections of differing rhythmic structure. He has a flair for rhythms, especially those of show business, and he can establish an appealing rumba or beguine over which he designs the trumpet embroidery.

But he is profligate with sound. He splatters notes over his scores with a prodigal pen. We do not wish to deprive him of his youthful vigor, but his writing would gain in power if subjected to the artistry of restraint.

* * *

Arthur Fiedler added further interest to this Pops concert by calling upon another Boston composer, Margaret Starr McLain, who also appeared as soloist in her Concertino for Piano and Orchestra. Though one may have looked in vain for some sign of originality, he could nevertheless muster some respect for Miss McLain's eclecticism—a style that appeared to derive slightly from Gershwin and more than slightly from Rachmaninov.

There was one sweeping theme that was well written, if reminiscent, and there were pages when one could hear the music as an effective accompaniment to a travelogue to some of the more glamorous countries in the South Seas. Pleasant music, pleasantly played.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107

JUN 27 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUL 5 1957

Orchestra Notes 29th Jubilee of Esplanade Music

Some 15,000 helped Arthur Fiedler and his Esplanade orchestra celebrate a double anniversary at their holiday concert last evening.

It was the 39th anniversary of the popular outdoor concerts and the audience joined the 80-piece orchestra in "the Star Spangled Banner" to open the second half of the program. Then they sang "America," on the 125th anniversary of its first performance at Park Street Church.

Pianist Leo Litwin was soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," feature of an all-American second half that ended with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784

JUL 9 1957

Take It From Me

Pops' Fans Demand Those Old Chestnuts

By Arthur Fiedler

(Neal O'Hara is on vacation. Columns are being contributed by guest writers during his absence. Today's is by Arthur Fiedler, maestro of the Pops.)

TODAY'S QUIZ FOR ADULTS TRYING TO BE AS BRIGHT AS THOSE WONDER KIDS ON TV: No. 1—What is catgut made of? No. 2—What is the really correct spelling of the plural of Stradivarius, meaning a violin? No. 3—What is a kit? (The answers await you in the last half of this performance.)

One appeal about guest-conducting your column, Neal, is the intermission. In regular conducting I get a break of 20 minutes or so. You allow an entire year. Well, now that the intermission is over, let's see what's next on the program. First, congratulations on the wedding anniversary of the O'Haras. This season brought the Boston Pops to an interesting anniversary—the 25th of Old Timers' Night. Your readers probably include fans of that entertainment. But anyway, here are some facts on the subject. It's something I started in my third year as Pops conductor. On a program called "Gay Nineties Night," the audience was invited to sing a group of "Popular College Songs," and "A Grand Selection of Song Favorites." This idea went over so well that it was repeated with a change of material. One new feature started Neal O'Hara in "News Flashes of the Nineties—by Magic Lantern." A set of slides projected on a huge screen across the organ front displayed quaint fashions in dress, furniture, and transportation, with witty O'Hara captions. The program wound up with a group of "Popular Song Hits." They went over so well that they have had to be repeated in every season since then. Not only the oldsters, but their sons and daughters—and even the orchestra players—sing those chestnuts. Here are some of the titles: "Ta-ra-ra-Boom-de-ay," "The Bowery," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "A Bicycle Built for Two," "The Band Played On," "After the Ball."

FIEDLER

Hits of later vintage have been added, but it would make trouble to leave out those oldies. Maybe your readers can explain the secret of their success. The addicts storm the box office every year by letter, 'phone, and personal call, eager to buy tickets not only before the date is settled, but even before the Pops season starts. As a warm-up for this year's Pops, I conducted the National Argentine Radio Orchestra for three weeks in Buenos Aires, Well, it proved to be a warm-up in very cool weather (in the month of May). Would you believe the following? It's all true. There are no traffic lights in the Argentine capital. And motorists don't use horns. They don't even have them on their cars. When I needed a taxi horn that is called for in Gershwin's "An American in Paris," it took an intensive search to turn up even a motorbike horn, which had to suffice. ANSWERS TO TODAY'S QUESTIONS: No. 1. The dried and twisted intestines of Sheep. No. 2. Stradivarii. No. 3. A miniature violin easily carried in the coat pocket of the itinerant 18th century dancing master. The Buenos Aires concerts brought me some gratifying newspaper reviews and letters of compliment from officials. Also, a remarkable letter in Portuguese from a Brazilian who heard the music by radio, and understood the commentator's Spanish. The writer stated he was a musician down on his luck, and had a sick mother. He was too poor to help her. Now, since Arthur Fiedler was a foremost conductor, he must be a good-hearted man, for he could not maintain that position. Accordingly, the writer was seeking financial assistance. Of course, being poor, he could not pay me back. But—God would repay me. I am cogitating.

BARBS

By HAL COCHRAN

When some husbands make the wife's relatives feel right at home, they're hypocrites.

* * *

Any wealthy man who has really worked for all he's worth is an exception.

* * *

No matter what time you take your vacation, it's always followed by a fall.

* * *

An Illinois woman who lives in a three-room apartment gave birth to triplets. There'll be changes made.

THE MOUNTAIN BOYS By Paul Webb

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

SEP 8 - 1957

'Rail Night' Aids Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

When it was learned early this year that our magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra required $250,000 to carry out its 1957 program, the newspapers of this city rallied behind the orchestra and urged their readers to contribute generously. The Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston responded by sponsoring "Railroad Night at the Pops" June 20. Six hundred railroaders, their families and friends attended, and our organization was able to turn over to the Boston Symphony $1,482 of which $482.50 was profit from the sale of tickets.

Our 1958 Railroad Night at the Pops will be held May 19 and our community committee has reserved the entire floor of Symphony Hall—about 1200 seats—and thus we shall be able to double the amount to be made available to the Symphony for its financial requirements.

"Railroad Night at the Pops" is the type of civic-betterment project the Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston exists to carry out. Should any Greater Boston business, civic or fraternal organizations wish to similarly help the Symphony Orchestra, and is at a loss as to how to proceed with organizing such a project, our committee would be most happy to loan them manpower to assist with ticket sales, promotion and the many other details.

HERBERT H. HARWOOD,
Railroad Community
Committee Chairman
Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUN 27 1957

THE POPS

Ghitalla Plays New Farberman Concerto

By CYRUS DURGIN

Conductor Arthur Fiedler introduced to the Pops public at Symphony Hall last night what will likely be a new Pops favorite. This was Harold Farberman's Double Concerto for Single Trumpet, and the solo player was the superb master of the instrument, Armando Ghitalla. Unfortunately the piece comes too late in the season to be heard much more, but it should be repeated plenty next Spring.

Mr. Farberman, Boston Symphony percussionist who already has made a reputation with his modern-style music, has here written a blues concerto, melodically speaking. The solo instrument is asked to play in popular style, with the character of tone and articulation peculiar to that style. The tunes come one after another, interspersed periodically with trumpet fireworks, and the last one ends way up on a high note which, last night, set off a roar of applause.

Margaret Starr McLain, the Boston composer, was the other soloist, in her own late-Romantic style Piano Concertino. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra accompanied her admirably.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

AUG 29 1957

Railroads Plan 1958 Night At Boston Pops

When it was learned early this year that the Boston Symphony Orchestra required $250,000 to carry out its 1957 program, the newspapers of the city rallied behind the orchestra and urged their readers to contribute generously.

The Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston responded by sponsoring "Railroad Night at the Pops" June 20. Six hundred railroaders, their families and friends attended, and the committee was able to turn over to the Boston Symphony $1,482, of which $482.50 was profit from the sale of tickets.

The 1958 Railroad Night at the Pops will be held May 19 and the community committee has reserved the entire floor of Symphony Hall—about 1200 seats—an thus we shall be able to double the amount to be made available to the Symphony for its financial requirements.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566

JUN 27 1957

Trumpet Soloist Comes Into His Own

Ghitalla Plays New Farberman Concerto

By Harold Rogers

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra was touring the United States a few years back, Armando Ghitalla could usually be found backstage before the concerts, seated on a suitcase, a box, or a keg, warming up his trumpet with sad little tunes. He presented the picture of a disconsolate trumpeter, and it sometimes seemed to me that he was disconsolate because he had never truly been heard.

Well, Armando Ghitalla has now been heard—in the full glory of his fabulous tone and fantastic technique. Some of us have long known of his remarkable abilities. Last night an audience that filled Symphony Hall was completely convinced, judging by the rapturous applause, of the scope of his accomplishment.

* * *

The vehicle for Mr. Ghitalla's dazzling display was provided by a colleague from the orchestra, the young and energetic percussionist Harold Farberman. Most of Boston's music lovers do not have to be told that Mr. Farberman has made a considerable splash during the past two or three seasons by his exuberant, if somewhat eccentric, compositions; and the premiere last night of his Double Concerto for Single Trumpet proved no exception.

If this tricky title gives the reader a double-take, it is a title that makes sense as the piece unfolds, section by section by section. True, Mr. Ghitalla had bring two trumpets on stage—a bigger one and a littler one—and he did play both of them, but not, or course, at the same time as Egyptian flutists have been depicted as doing. The "double" in Mr. Farberman's concerto refers to the contrast of "hot" trumpet-playing with "cool" trumpet-playing, to state it in the vernacular, or the jazz style with the classic.

The piece therefore is a trumpeter's dream come true—that is, if the trumpeter, like Mr. Ghitalla, has the flexibility to blow on both sides of the fence. (There was one effective phrase in which he blew first to the right and then to the left!) He proved that he can tear off a blistering rip (or glissando, if you prefer) or the neatest kind of triple-tonguing imaginable in true "Carnival of Venice" style. He hopped around the scale with incredible ease, playing with either his lovely golden tone which few can emulate, or with a night club blat, which many can imitate. And he wound the whole thing up with a piercing high F that brought down the house. What cannot this Ghitalla man do?

* * *

To Mr. Farberman must go the credit for bringing Mr. Ghitalla so brilliantly to the fore. Yet if one can praise his Double Concerto for Single Trumpet as a vehicle, one is left with less to praise when considering the piece itself. Its form (and Mr. Farberman at present is notably weak in form) is simply a chain of somewhat unrelated sections of differing rhythmic structure. He has a flair for rhythms, especially those of show business, and he can establish an appealing rumba or beguine over which he designs the trumpet embroidery.

But he is profligate with sound. He splatters notes over his scores with a prodigal pen. We do not wish to deprive him of his youthful vigor, but his writing would gain in power if subjected to the artistry of restraint.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUL 5 1957

Orchestra Notes 29th Jubilee of Esplanade Music

Some 15,000 helped Arthur Fiedler and his Esplanade orchestra celebrate a double anniversary at their holiday concert last evening.

It was the 29th anniversary of the popular outdoor concerts and the audience joined the 80-piece orchestra in "the Star Spangled Banner" to open the second half of the program. Then they sang "America," on the 125th anniversary of its first performance at Park Street Church.

Pianist Leo Litwin was soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," feature of an all-American second half that ended with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107

JUN 27 1957

The Pops

By RUDOLPH ELIE

As is its custom from time to time, the Pops came up with a new piece in the off-beat category last night and, as is so often the case, it proved itself a hit from the outset.

The new work was Harold Farberman's Double Concerto for Single Trumpet, an engagingly titled piece to begin with. The soloist was Armando Ghitalla, the Pop's extraordinary first trumpet, a man who masters every style on his instrument from the classic line of Bach in the Brandenburg Concertos to the coolest style of contemporary jazz. As virtually every style is called for in Mr. Farberman's 10-minute essay, the results were spectacular to say the least.

Actually, the work of Mr. Farberman, a percussionist in the orchestra, held more promise than fulfillment. Writing in the vein of Gershwin with added elements from Milhaud and of course, himself, he here attempts a sort of wedding of the classic and the jazz vernacular of the day, the trumpet alternating its style from page to page as if in comment on each preceding reference. The beginning is exceptionally effective with strong melodic and rhythmic materials presented in a very colorful way.

As the work approaches its finale, however, it lets down in interest and, despite a loud final climax in the highest register of the instrument, it conveys the impression of not having been really thought out. Given a more sustained inspiration and a stronger finish, this interesting work could well become the Rhapsody in Blue for the trumpet. Indeed to judge by the reception it received in Mr. Ghitalla's marvelous performance, it came pretty close to doing it on its first time out. A little back stage research, incidentally, revealed that the switch from the C to the D trumpet in the middle was merely to facilitate the fingering necessary to the work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUN 27 1957

THE POPS

Ghitalla Plays New Farberman Concerto

By CYRUS DURGIN

Conductor Arthur Fiedler introduced to the Pops public at Symphony Hall last night what will likely be a new Pops favorite. This was Harold Farberman's Double Concerto for Single Trumpet, and the solo player was the superb master of the instrument, Armando Ghitalla. Unfortunately the piece comes too late in the season to be heard much more, but it should be repeated plenty next Spring.

Mr. Farberman, Boston Symphony percussionist who already has made a reputation with his modern-style music, has here written a blues concerto, melodically speaking. The solo instrument is asked to play in popular style, with the character of tone and articulation peculiar to that style. The tunes come one after another, interspersed periodically with trumpet fireworks, and the last one ends way up on a high note which, last night, set off a roar of applause.

Margaret Starr McLain, the Boston composer, was the other soloist, in her own late-Romantic style Piano Concertino. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra accompanied her admirably.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784

JUL 9 1957

Take It From Me

Pops' Fans Demand Those Old Chestnuts

By Arthur Fiedler

(Neal O'Hara is on vacation. Columns are being contributed by guest writers during his absence. Today's is by Arthur Fiedler, maestro of the Pops.)

TODAY'S QUIZ FOR ADULTS TRYING TO BE AS BRIGHT AS THOSE WONDER KIDS ON TV: No. 1—What is catgut made of? No. 2—What is the really correct spelling of the plural of Stradivarius, meaning a violin? No. 3—What is a kit? (The answers await you in the last half of this performance.)

FIEDLER

One appeal about guest-conducting your column, Neal, is the intermission. In regular conducting I get a break of 20 minutes or so. You allow an entire year. Well, now that the intermission is over, let's see what's next on the program. First, congratulations on the wedding anniversary of the O'Haras. This season brought the Boston Pops to an interesting anniversary—the 25th of Old Timers' Night. Your readers probably include fans of that entertainment. But anyway, here are some facts on the subject. It's something I started in my third year as Pops conductor. On a program called "Gay Nineties Night," the audience was invited to sing a group of "Popular College Songs," and "A Grand Selection of Song Favorites." This idea went over so well that it was repeated with a change of material. One new feature started Neal O'Hara in "News Flashes of the Nineties—by Magic Lantern." A set of slides projected on a huge screen across the organ front displayed quaint fashions in dress, furniture, and transportation, with witty O'Hara captions. The program wound up with a group of "Popular Song Hits." They went over so well that they have had to be repeated in every season since then. Not only the oldsters, but their sons and daughters—and even the orchestra players—sing those chestnuts. Here are some of the titles: "Ta-ra-ra-Boom-de-ay," "The Bowery," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "A Bicycle Built for Two," "The Band Played On," "After the Ball."

Hits of later vintage have been added, but it would make trouble to leave out those oldies. Maybe your readers can explain the secret of their success. The addicts storm the box office every year by letter, 'phone, and personal call, eager to buy tickets not only before the date is settled, but even before the Pops season starts. As a warm-up for this year's Pops, I conducted the National Argentine Radio Orchestra for three weeks in Buenos Aires. Well, it proved to be a warm-up in very cool weather (in the month of May). Would you believe the following? It's all true. There are no traffic lights in the Argentine capital. And motorists don't use horns. They don't even have them on their cars. When I needed a taxi horn that is called for in Gershwin's "An American in Paris," it took an intensive search to turn up even a motorbike horn, which had to suffice. ANSWERS TO TODAY'S QUESTIONS: No. 1. The dried and twisted intestines of Sheep. No. 2. Stradivarii. No. 3. A miniature violin easily carried in the coat pocket of the itinerant 18th century dancing master. The Buenos Aires concerts brought me some gratifying newspaper reviews and letters of compliment from officials. Also, a remarkable letter in Portuguese from a Brazilian who heard the music by radio, and understood the commentator's Spanish. The writer stated he was a musician down on his luck, and had a sick mother. He was too poor to help her. Now, since Arthur Fiedler was a foremost conductor, he must be a good-hearted man, or he could not maintain that position. Accordingly, the writer was seeking financial assistance. Of course, being poor, he could not pay me back. But—God would repay me. I am cogitating.

BARBS

By HAL COCHRAN

When some husbands make the wife's relatives feel right at home, they're hypocrites.

* * *

Any wealthy man who has really worked for all he's worth is an exception.

* * *

No matter what time you take your vacation, it's always followed by a fall.

* * *

An Illinois woman who lives in a three-room apartment gave birth to triplets. There'll be changes made.

THE MOUNTAIN BOYS By Paul Webb

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 305,271

SEP 8 - 1957

'Rail Night' Aids Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

When it was learned early this year that our magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra required $250,000 to carry out its 1957 program, the newspapers of this city rallied behind the orchestra and urged their readers to contribute generously. The Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston responded by sponsoring "Railroad Night at the Pops" June 20. Six hundred railroaders, their families and friends attended, and our organization was able to turn over to the Boston Symphony $1,482 of which $482.50 was profit from the sale of tickets.

Our 1958 Railroad Night at the Pops will be held May 19 and our community committee has reserved the entire floor of Symphony Hall—about 1200 seats—and thus we shall be able to double the amount to be made available to the Symphony for its financial requirements.

"Railroad Night at the Pops" is the type of civic-betterment project the Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston exists to carry out. Should any Greater Boston business, civic or fraternal organizations wish to similarly help the Symphony Orchestra, and is at a loss as to how to proceed with organizing such a project, our committee would be most happy to loan them manpower to assist with ticket sales, promotion and the many other details.

HERBERT H. HARWOOD,
Railroad Community
Committee Chairman
Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

AUG 29 1957

Railroads Plan 1958 Night At Boston Pops

When it was learned early this year that the Boston Symphony Orchestra required $250,000 to carry out its 1957 program, the newspapers of the city rallied behind the orchestra and urged their readers to contribute generously.

The Railroad Community Committee of Greater Boston responded by sponsoring "Rail road Night at the Pops" June 20. Six hundred railroaders, their families and friends attended, and the committee was able to turn over to the Boston Symphony $1,482, of which $482.50 was profit from the sale of tickets.

The 1958 Railroad Night at the Pops will be held May 19 and the community committee has reserved the entire floor of Symphony Hall—about 1200 seats—an thus we shall be able to double the amount to be made available to the Symphony for its financial requirements.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566

JUL 3 1957

Esplanade Concerts Open 29th Year

Tana Bawden Piano Soloist Under Fiedler's Direction

By Harold Rogers

Last night was ideal for the opening of the Esplanade Concerts. A crowd of listeners—numbering between 8,000 and 10,000—converged on the lawn before the Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the first program of the 29th season.

Arthur Fiedler, who founded the series, was on hand of course to conduct. According to Laning Humphrey, publicist for the concerts, Mr. Fiedler had "just taken a rest from the Pops by flying to San Francisco over the weekend to conduct two concerts in the Cow Palace."

A roseate sunset turned the sparse clouds to silver and pink, and there was a melon-slice of a moon overhead. Several couples in launches motored up to the shore, dropped anchor, and settled back to enjoy the music in regal ease. Others either rented chairs or spread their blankets on the lawn. One couple brought their baby, who with a bottle tucked in his mouth, presented a picture of bliss. You can't start 'em too young on good music.

The soloist for the evening was Tana Bawden, at attractive young woman in a white gown, floor-length and bouffant. She played the Schumann A minor Piano Concerto with a clean, crisp touch, and plenty of aplomb. It was impossible, of course, to make a thorough judgment of her playing, since the piano was amplified several times larger than life; yet even so, one could note a certain dynamic sensitivity.

It is difficult even to appraise the full talents of a pianist when he is playing but one concerto in Symphony Hall without a public address system. Only in a solo recital can an artist be heard for what he truly is; and yet Miss Bawden has already passed one of the stiffest tests of this nature. This spring she won the young artist's award for piano from the National Federation of Music Clubs, the same award won by McHenry Boatwright in voice at the same auditions.

Mr. Fiedler opened his program with "Pomp and Circumstance," played in observance of the 100th anniversary of Sir Edward Elgar's birth. This piece and the "Enigma" Variations are perhaps the finest things that Elgar turned out.

Mr. Fiedler gave a pleasant performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, after which Miss Bawden came forward for her stint. The program also included "The Star-Spangled Banner" and Tchaikovsky's "1812, Ouverture Solennelle." Thus the weight of the program was evenly distributed between the serious and the lighter classics, an ideal balance for thousands of listeners who seldom hear the Boston Symphony or the Boston Pops.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566

JUL 3 1957

Gordon N. Converse, Staff Photographer

Twilight, Tchaikovsky, and Two Among Thousands

As darkness enveloped the Hatch Memorial Shell and the Charles River area last night, thousands of Greater Boston music lovers gathered for the opening of the 29th season of free Esplanade concerts. [Story: Page 6.]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 181,325

JUL 5 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566

JUL 2 1957

Lenscraft

Arthur Fiedler will open the 29th season of the Esplanade Concerts tonight at the Hatch Memorial Shell.

ESPLANADE INTERLUDE—Enjoying Esplanade near Hatch Shell while waiting for Pops concert are, l. to r., Anisia Allen, Boston; George Gifford, Barbara and Bill Allen, all of Cambridge. Like many others, quartet chose one of city's most beautiful places for picnic before concert by members of Arthur Fiedler's great orchestra.

(Record American Photo by Ray Wallman)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 194,784

JUL 5 1957

Music and Starlight

BOSTON'S own peculiar blend for pure outdoor summer evening enjoyment is once again available.

And anyone who cares to obtain a full measure of this free refreshment need only visit the Hatch Shell on the Charles River.

There the 29th season of the open air Esplanade concerts, founded by Arthur Fiedler, is under way.

As in the past, the concerts are attracting huge crowds—visitors here and local residents alike.

Why not? When music and starlight are combined with balmy summer air, flickering lights reflecting on the river and a carpet of grass for relaxing.

And the musicians in the Shell provide everything from classical numbers and stirring marches to delightfully arranged pop tunes.

The Esplanade will be alive with these sounds every night through July 14 with the exception of Monday. Then the concerts will be resumed from August 12 through 17.

They are a treat that no one in the area should miss.

290

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 4 1957

Parkway Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 7,717

JUL 11 1957

Pianists at Esplanade

Arthur MacKenzie and Beth Flanagan of West Roxbury, duo-pianists, will appear at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade with the Boston Pops Orchestra next Sunday evening. Arthur Fiedler will conduct.

They appeared yesterday morning at the children's concert at the Hatch Shell.

West Roxbury Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,717

JUL 11 1957

Pianists at Esplanade

Arthur MacKenzie and Beth Flanagan of West Roxbury, duo-pianists, will appear at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade with the Boston Pops Orchestra next Sunday evening. Arthur Fiedler will conduct.

They appeared yesterday morning at the children's concert at the Hatch Shell.

SOLOIST a[illegible] Smith, 11, [illegible] lighted audience at the [illegible] Orchestra concert for children at Esplanade. She's daughter of Charles Smith, Symphony's first percussionist.

(Record-American, Louis Teton)

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
dependent Republican
Circ. 201,107

JUL 5 1957

CITED FOR contributions to the Esplanade concerts, Morris Silver, left, president of the Cott Bottling Co., and Henry Silver, right, treasurer, receive citation from Conductor Arthur Fiedler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

JUL 11 1957

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1957

11-Year-Old Piano Soloist Plays Concerto At Children's Concert

Eleven-year-old Joanne Smith was guest piano soloist at the first Esplanade "Children's Concert" held last week at the Hatch Memorial Shell—and two other musicians were on hand to cheer her on, without the slightest show of professional jealousy.

Her most ardent fans are her father Charles Smith, first percussionist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and her mother, a former violinist with Phil Spitalny's orchestra.

Joanne played Mozart's Concerto No. 23 with all the skill of a finished musician.

Joanne began to study music when she was five years old and advanced so rapidly, her parents deemed it necessary to build a soundproofed room on the back of their Wellesley home.

"Now the music comes through all the ventilators in the house," says Joanne's father.

Though her major instrument is the piano, Joanne has been teaching herself the violin. And to prove her knowledge of musical structure, she has done some composing.

Joanne's mother, says her daughter learns quickly and even has perfect pitch. Her father says his daughter has an excellent sense of rhythm and "can pick up a mambo beat with the best of them."

In preparing for her concert

Continued on Page Five

(Herald Staff Photo by E. O. MacLean)

OPENING NIGHT crowd at the Esplanade Concert is pictured in the background. [illegible] night's performance ushered in the 29th [illegible] season of open air free concerts on the Charles River bank. Arthur Fiedler, [illegible] the concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 5 1957

11-Yr.-Old Girl Plays Mozart On Esplanade

Charles Smith, first percussionist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is proud of his 11-year-old daughter, Joanne, who was piano soloist at the first Esplanade, "Children's Concert"

Young Miss Smith, who played Mozart's concerto No. 23, performed the work at an earlier age than did the composer himself.

Since Joanne began to study music when she was five, she has advanced so rapidly that her parents found it necessary to build a soundproofed room on the back of their Wellesley home. "Now the music comes through all the ventilators in the house," says Joanne's father.

Though her instrument is the piano, Joanne has been teaching herself the violin. And to prove her knowledge of music structure, she has also done some composing.

Joanne's mother, who played violin in Phil Spitalny's Orchestra, says Joanne learns quickly, has perfect pitch. Her father says his daughter has an excellent sense of rhythm and "can pick up a mambo beat with the best of them."

Joanne will spend the summer at Ted Mack's camp, which is close to Tanglewood — the summer home of the Boston Symphony.

290

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 4 1957

SOLOIST at piano is Joanne Smith, 11, of Wellesley who delighted audience at the Pops Orchestra concert for children at Esplanade. She's daughter of Charles Smith, Symphony's first percussionist.

(Record-American, Louis Teton)

FINEAPPLE-GRAPEFRUIT
DRINK
2 46-ounce Cans
Del Monte, Fancy Quality
PRUNE
WELCH'S Fancy Quality
TOMATO
NEW PACK IS IN! "Cates" Famous Quality
KOSHER
DILL PICKLES

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107

JUL 5 1957

CITED FOR contributions to the Esplanade concerts, Morris Silver, left, president of the Cott Bottling Co., and Henry Silver, right, treasurer, receive citation from Conductor Arthur Fiedler.

(Herald Staff Photo by E. O. MacLean)

OPENING NIGHT crowd at the Esplanade Concert is pictured in the background, as last night's performance ushered in the 29th season of open air free concerts on the Charles River bank. Arthur Fiedler, conductor, [illegible] the concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 5 1957

11-Yr.-Old Girl Plays Mozart On Esplanade

Charles Smith, first percussionist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is proud of his 11-year-old daughter, Joanne, who was piano soloist at the first Esplanade, "Children's Concert"

Young Miss Smith, who played Mozart's concerto No. 23, performed the work at an earlier age than did the composer himself.

Since Joanne began to study music when she was five, she has advanced so rapidly that her parents found it necessary to build a soundproofed room on the back of their Wellesley home. "Now the music comes through all the ventilators in the house," says Joanne's father.

Though her instrument is the piano, Joanne has been teaching herself the violin. And to prove her knowledge of music structure, she has also done some composing.

Joanne's mother, who played violin in Phil Spitalny's Orchestra, says Joanne learns quickly, has perfect pitch. Her father says his daughter has an excellent sense of rhythm and "can pick up a mambo beat with the best of them."

Joanne will spend the summer at Ted Mack's camp, which is close to Tanglewood — the summer home of the Boston Symphony.

290

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 4 1957

SOLOIST at piano is Joanne Smith, 11, of Wellesley who delighted audience at the Pops Orchestra concert for children at Esplanade. She's daughter of Charles Smith, Symphony's first percussionist.

(Record-American, Louis Teton)

DILL PICKLES
NEW PACK IS IN!
"Cates" Famous Quality
KOSHER
TOMATO JUICE
WELCH'S Fancy Quality New York State
PRUNE JUICE
Del Monte Fancy Quality
Quart Bottle
DRINK
2 46-ounce cans 49¢
46 OUNCE GIANT CAN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 201,107

JUL 5 1957

CITED FOR contributions to the Esplanade concerts, Morris Silver, left, president of the Cott Bottling Co., and Henry Silver, right, treasurer, receive citation from Conductor Arthur Fiedler.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1957

Children's Concert

Continued from Page One

on the Esplanade, Joanne studied both Clara Haskil's and Walter Gieseking's recordings of the concerto. Listening to Joanne practice one day, her mother asked if that was the way she had been playing the work. Joanne answered, "No, but that's the way Gieseking does it.

Joanne will spend the summer at Ted Mack's camp which is close to Tanglewood — the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

(Herald Staff Photo by E. G. MacLean)

OPENING NIGHT crowd at the Esplanade Concert is pictured in this overhead shot with the Hatch Shell and the Charles River in the background. Last night's performance ushered in the 29th season of open air free concerts on the Charles River bank. Arthur Fiedler, conductor, conducted the concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 5 1957

11-Yr.-Old Girl Plays Mozart On Esplanade

Charles Smith, first percussionist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is proud of his 11-year-old daughter, Joanne, who was piano soloist at the first Esplanade, "Children's Concert"

Young Miss Smith, who played Mozart's concerto No. 23, performed the work at an earlier age than did the composer himself.

Since Joanne began to study music when she was five, she has advanced so rapidly that her parents found it necessary to build a soundproofed room on the back of their Wellesley home. "Now the music comes through all the ventilators in the house," says Joanne's father.

Though her instrument is the piano, Joanne has been teaching herself the violin. And to prove her knowledge of music she has also done some composing.

Joanne's mother, who plays violin in Phil Spitalny's Orchestra, says Joanne learns quickly, has perfect pitch. Her father says his daughter has an excellent sense of rhythm and "can pick up a mambo beat with the best of them."

Joanne will spend the summer at Ted Mack's camp, which is close to Tanglewood — the summer home of the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310

JUL 19 1957

BOTTLERS GET AWARD

CITATION OF appreciation award for the Cott Bottling Company, Inc., of Manchester, N. H., is given by Arthur Fiedler, Pops Orchestra conductor, to Henry R. Silver, Cott treasurer. At left is Cott Pres. Morris Silver. Presentation was made recently during the annual Cott-sponsored concert at the Hatch Memorial Shell, Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUL 6 1957

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

BOTTLING INDUSTRY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 30 1957

Cott Plant Cited . . .

BOSTON, Mass. — Cited for his firm's contributions to concerts here, Henry R. Silver (l.), treasurer of the Cott Bottling Co. of Manchester, N.H. receives a citation from Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUN 13 1957

MUSIC CITATION TO BREWERY

Arthur Fiedler (left), conductor of the Esplanade concerts, presents Symphony Orchestra citation to Ellis Moore (center) vice president of the Schaefer Brewing Co., and John Gorman, Boston zone manager, for company's concert sponsorship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,951

JUL 12 1957

JORDAN MARSH SPONSORS CONCERT—In keeping with its tradition of active community leadership, Jordan Marsh sponsored the Esplanade concert last night. James H. Fairclough Jr., Jordan Marsh vice president, accepts a certificate of acknowledgement from Arthur Fiedler (right), conductor of the concerts at the Hatch Shell in recognition of the store's sponsorship of the musical program.

Society: Many Have Made Donations To Esplanade Concert Fund

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A Boston tradition long associated with the Fourth of July week is the beginning of the Esplanade concerts. This week, at the Hatch Memorial Shell, Arthur Fiedler and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their 29th year.

The famed free concerts are made possible by donations. Among the many whose gifts are helping to make music along the Charles this season are Mr. and Mrs. Frederic H. Curtis, Louis Curtis, Miss Marion E. Chase, Rev. C. R. Bowler, Miss Sylvia H. Watson, Mrs. Paul I. Richards, Mrs. Franklin T. Towle, Vincent P. Roberts, Fred N. Robinson, Charles F. Rowley, Harold R. White and Miss Evelyn Sears.

Also among friends of the Esplanade Concerts are Edward A. Taft, Dr. Rudolph Toch, Miss Marion L. Tyler, Miss Elizabeth Schneider, Miss Alice Sylvester, Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. George G. Watson, Mark A. DeWolfe Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Haynes Smith, Mrs. C. G. Haskell, Miss Emily Hallowell, Miss Olive B. Gilchrist, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Granfield, Joseph Gannon, Miss Sarah F. Fisher and Mrs. Henry Endicott.

Gifts have been received also from Miss Mabel E. Emerson, John Druker, Miss Marjorie R. Long, Dr. Samuel A. Levine, Miss Marjorie C. Loring, Mrs. L. W. Macomber, John A. Maloney, Mr. and Mrs. Henry K. Metcalf, Miss Madeline D. Morgan, Horace Morrison, Miss Charlotte G. S. Morse, Mrs. James A. Munroe, Mrs. John Murdock, Gino L. Perera, Edward F. Pierce, Charles L. Barlow, S. J. Barnet, Mrs. William A. Barron, Charles H. Boardman and Rev. C. R. Boucher.

(Bachrach)
MRS. ANTHONY DONEGAN (Ann G. Warner) was married July 4 at Sacred Heart Church, Watertown.

A MANTILLA of delicate lace and a portrait dress of white organza were worn by Miss Ann G. Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Warner of Watertown, for her wedding to Anthony J. Donegan, son of Mrs. Anthony Donegan of Jamaica Plain. Rev. Joseph Brennan performed the morning ceremony at the Sacred Heart Church in Watertown on July 4, and the bride's father gave her in marriage. Her flowers were tiny white orchids and lilies-of-the-valley. A reception followed at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

Miss Maureen O'Connell of Cambridge was the bride's only attendant. She wore white organdy over pale blue taffeta to match her sash and carried a colonial bouquet of blue and white flowers.

Peter V. Donegan of Jamaica Plain was best man, and ushers were Joseph P. Warner of Watertown, and Stephen Donegan of Jamaica Plain.

After a wedding trip to the Pocono Mountains, Mr. and Mrs. Donegan will live in Boston.

(Eaton)
MARRIED IN MONTREAL today was Miss Lucille Hebert of Montreal, formerly of Cambridge. Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Hebert, she became the bride of Guy Portebois, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Portebois of Paris.

A SECOND SON, Stephen Stuart, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Green of Auburndale on June 25. The grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stuart Bassett of Springfield, and Mr. and Mrs. James Green of Brookline.

IN DEDHAM, Mr. and Mrs. H. Felix DeC. Pereira are announcing the marriage of their daughter, Penelope, to Jonathan Schorr-Kon, which took place on July 1. Mr. Schorr-Kon is the son of Makar Kon of London, Eng., and Mrs. Felicia Canova of New York. He and his bride will live in Cambridge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411

JUL 15 1957

12,000 at Concert On Esplanade Hear All-French Program

Some 12,000 persons attended last night's Esplanade Concert, conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

It was the final concert in the two-week July series. One more week, Aug. 12-17, will complete the orchestra's summer schedule.

Since yesterday was Bastille Day—the French equivalent of this country's Fourth of July—Fiedler presented an all-French program. During intermission the audience was addressed by Boston's French consul general, Baron Charles de Pampelonne.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970

JUL 14 1957

Last July Concert On Esplanade to Mark Bastille Day

The concluding Esplanade concert of the July series will be held tonight, starting at 8:30, with a program devoted to music of French composers to mark the observance of Bastille Day, the equivalent of the American Fourth of July.

Baron Charles de Pampelonne, French consul general in Boston, will address the audience at tonight's concert, which is also part of a nation-wide celebration of the 180th anniversary of the birth of the Marquis de Lafayette by people of French descent.

Members of the Esplanade Orchestra will leave tomorrow to participate for four weeks in the Tanglewood concerts at Lenox. They will return to Boston for an additional week of Esplanade concerts from Aug. 12-17.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,310
JUL 19 1957

BOTTLERS GET AWARD

CITATION OF appreciation award for the Cott Bottling Company, Inc., of Manchester, N. H., is given by Arthur Fiedler, Pops Orchestra conductor, to Henry R. Silver, Cott treasurer. At left is Cott Pres. Morris Silver. Presentation was made recently during the annual Cott-sponsored concert at the Hatch Memorial Shell, Boston.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
BOTTLING INDUSTRY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 30 1957

Cott Plant Cited . . .

BOSTON, Mass. — Cited for his firm's contributions to concerts here, Henry R. Silver (l.), treasurer of the Cott Bottling Co. of Manchester, N.H. receives a citation from Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411
JUL 6 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411
JUL 15 1957

12,000 at Concert On Esplanade Hear All-French Program

Some 12,000 persons attended last night's Esplanade Concert, conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

It was the final concert in the two-week July series. One more week, Aug. 12-17, will complete the orchestra's summer schedule.

Since yesterday was Bastille Day—the French equivalent of this country's Fourth of July—Fiedler presented an all-French program. During intermission the audience was addressed by Boston's French consul general, Baron Charles de Pampelonne.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 225,411
JUN 13 1957

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 442,970
JUL 14 1957

Last July Concert On Esplanade to Mark Bastille Day

The concluding Esplanade concert of the July series will be held tonight, starting at 8:30, with a program devoted to music of French composers to mark the observance of Bastille Day, the equivalent of the American Fourth of July.

Baron Charles de Pampelonne, French consul general in Boston, will address the audience at tonight's concert, which is also part of a nation-wide celebration of the 180th anniversary of the birth of the Marquis de Lafayette by people of French descent.

Members of the Esplanade Orchestra will leave tomorrow to participate for four weeks in the Tanglewood concerts at Lenox. They will return to Boston for an additional week of Esplanade concerts from Aug. 12-17.

MUSIC CITATION TO BREWERY

Arthur Fiedler (left), conductor of the Esplanade concerts, presents Symphony Orchestra citation to Elma Moore (center), vice president of the Schaefer Brewing Co., and John Gorman, Boston zone manager, for company's concert sponsorship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,951
JUL 12 1957

JORDAN MARSH SPONSORS CONCERT—In keeping with its tradition of active community leadership, Jordan Marsh sponsored the Esplanade concert last night. James H. Fairclough Jr., Jordan Marsh vice president, accepts a certificate of acknowledgement from Arthur Fiedler (right), conductor of the concerts at the Hatch Shell in recognition of the store's sponsorship of the musical program.

Society: Many Have Made Donations To Esplanade Concert Fund

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A Boston tradition long associated with the Fourth of July week is the beginning of the Esplanade concerts. This week, at the Hatch Memorial Shell, Arthur Fiedler and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their 29th year.

The famed free concerts are made possible by donations. Among the many whose gifts are helping to make music along the Charles this season are Mr. and Mrs. Frederic H. Curtis, Louis Curtis, Miss Marion E. Chase, Rev. C. R. Bowler, Miss Sylvia H. Watson, Mrs. Paul I. Richards, Mrs. Franklin T. Towle, Vincent P. Roberts, Fred N. Robinson, Charles F. Rowley, Harold R. White and Miss Evelyn Sears.

Also among friends of the Esplanade Concerts are Edward A. Taft, Dr. Rudolph Toch, Miss Marion L. Tyler, Miss Elizabeth Schneider, Miss Alice Sylvester, Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. George G. Watson, Mark A. DeWolfe Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Haynes Smith, Mrs. C. G. Haskell, Miss Emily Hallowell, Miss Olive B. Gilchrist, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Granfield, Joseph Gannon, Miss Sarah F. Fisher and Mrs. Henry Endicott.

Gifts have been received also from Miss Mabel E. Emerson, John Druker, Miss Marjorie R. Long, Dr. Samuel A. Levine, Miss Marjorie C. Loring, Mrs. L. W. Macomber, John A. Maloney, Mr. and Mrs. Henry K. Metcalf, Miss Madeline D. Morgan, Horace Morrison, Miss Charlotte G. S. Morse, Mrs. James A. Munroe, Mrs. John Murdock, Gino L. Perera, Edward F. Pierce, Charles L. Barlow, S. J. Barnet, Mrs. William A. Barron, Charles H. Boardman and Rev. C. R. Boucher.

(Bachrach)

MRS. ANTHONY DONEGAN (Ann G. Warner) was married July 4 at Sacred Heart Church, Watertown.

A MANTILLA of delicate lace and a portrait dress of white organza were worn by Miss Ann G. Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Warner of Watertown, for her wedding to Anthony J. Donegan, son of Mrs. Anthony Donegan of Jamaica Plain. Rev. Joseph Brennan performed the morning ceremony at the Sacred Heart Church in Watertown on July 4, and the bride's father gave her in marriage. Her flowers were tiny white orchids and lilies-of-the-valley. A reception followed at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

Miss Maureen O'Connell of Cambridge was the bride's only attendant. She wore white organdy over pale blue taffeta to match her sash and carried a colonial bouquet of blue and white flowers.

Peter V. Donegan of Jamaica Plain was best man, and ushers were Joseph F. Warner of Watertown, and Stephen Donegan of Jamaica Plain.

After a wedding trip to the Pocono Mountains, Mr. and Mrs. Donegan will live in Boston.

(Eaton)

MARRIED IN MONTREAL today was Miss Lucille Hebert of Montreal, formerly of Cambridge. Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Hebert, she became the bride of Guy Portebois, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Portebois of Paris.

A SECOND SON, Stephen [illegible], was born to Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] J. Green of Auburndale [illegible] 25. The grandparents [illegible] and Mrs. Charles Stuart [illegible] of Springfield, and Mr. [illegible] James Green of Brook[illegible]

IN DEDHAM, Mr. [illegible] Mrs. H. Felix DeC. Per[illegible] announcing the marriage [illegible] daughter, Penelope, to [illegible] Schorr-Kon, which took [illegible] July 1. Mr. Schorr-Kon is the son of Makar [illegible] of London, Eng., and Mrs. Felicia Canova of New York. He and his bride will live in Cambridge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

AUG 8 - 1957

Music Out Under The Stars

THE FAMED ESPLANADE CONCERTS will resume at the Hatch Memorial Shell Monday evening. This will be the third series of the 29th season. Thousands of Bostonians and visitors from all parts of the nation throng the pleasant summer concerts under the summer stars on the banks of the Charles River.

Esplanade Concerts Return To Hatch Shell Next Week

Third of Summer Series to Open Aug. 12 Two Guest Conductors Will Direct

The third series of Esplanade Concerts will open at the Hatch Memorial Shell on Monday, Aug. 12, with G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Choral Society, as guest director.

The opening concert will consist of Saint-Saens' French Military March; Eine Kleine Nachtmusik of Mozart; the 'Nocturne' from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' by Mendelssohn; Academic Festival Over-

Continued on Page One

ture of Brahms; the Slavonic Dance No. 3 in A flat by Dvorak; Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck, and the Finale from Symphony

Continued on Page Ten

No. 4 by Tchaikovsky.

Earl Murray will be the guest conductor on Thursday evening and Harry Ellis Dickson will take over the podium for the remaining concerts through the week.

In connection with this series the Third Children's Concert will be held on Wednesday morning, Aug. 14, at 10:15 a.m. Leon Gregorian will be the piano soloist playing Edward Greig's Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 (First Movement).

Arthur Fiedler, the regular conductor of the series, has commitments on the West Coast to direct a summer concert group in San Francisco and will not be on hand for the closing week of the 29th season of the popular outdoor concerts.

The series will be conducted every night Monday through Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 6,000

JUN 1957

BOSTON POPS AT HATCH SHELL

GREATER BOSTON BUSINESS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006

AUG 16 1957

Esplanade Concerts To Close Saturday

BOSTON, (AP)—The 29th annual series of Esplanade concerts beside the Charles River will close Saturday with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting Beethovens Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68.

A concert official said yesterday attendance has dropped off sharply since the start of the newspaper strike in Boston. For years the Boston papers have published the nightly program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8,288

AUG 1 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER of Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents Mr. Franklin Jerome, a vice president of Old Colony Trust, a citation in recognition of his bank's sponsorship of an esplanade concert. Mr. Jerome is a resident of Waban.

ADE CONCERTS NEXT WEEK or two to sustain an ideal personal, more reciprocal unconcerned water.

the Hatch Memorial Shell, the week of August 12 gh 17, Arthur Fiedler will the final series of the lanade Concerts' 29th season. concerts, though free of rge, are not, unfortunately, free of debt. Generous business organizations join with the public to relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to individuals.

If the residents of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

AUG 8 - 1957

Coins Aid Gratification Of Bostonians' Wish

By Thomas L. Gaffney

Rome has its Fountain of Trevi where, according to legend, your secret wish will be gratified if you toss a coin into its sparkling waters.

Travelers passing to and from the Eternal City often pause at the Fountain for a relaxing moment, meditate, and blithely toss coins to the unaffected myth. Such persons, induced by an appealing story, throw money into a pool. They are truly well-wishers.

Boston has fountains too. Spillways of music are many in this city. The Esplanade Concerts are among Boston's "Music Fountains" dedicated, not to a myth, but to the reality that art comes from the people and naturally belong to them. The Esplanade concerts are free.

Certainly it is not wrong to assume that the well-wisher from Rome, after listening to an Esplanade Concert, would gladly volunteer a coin or two to sustain an ideal more personal and more reciprocal than unconcerned water.

At the Hatch Memorial Shell, August 12 through 17, the final series of the Esplanade Concert's 29th season will be held. These concerts, though free of charge, are not, unfortunately, free of debt.

During the past series generous business organizations joined with the public to help relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to the individuals for their continued generosity.

If the people of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality. A well-wisher in Rome is glad to throw a coin for a fantasy. Could not Esplanade audiences give coins for what is theirs without asking?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
AUG 8 - 1957

Music Out Under The Stars

THE FAMED ESPLANADE CONCERTS will resume at the Hatch Memorial Shell Monday evening. This will be the third series of the 29th season. Thousands of Bostonians and visitors from all parts of the nation throng the pleasant summer concerts under the summer stars on the banks of the Charles Riv...

Esplanade Concerts Return To Hatch Shell Next Week

Third of Summer Series to Open Aug. 12 Two Guest Conductors Will Direct

The third series of Esplanade Concerts will open at the Hatch Memorial Shell on Mond... Aug. 12, with G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Choral Society, as guest director.

The opening concert will consist of Saint-Saens' French Military March; Eine Kleine Nachtmusik of Mozart; the 'Nocturne' from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' by Mendelssohn; Academic Festival Overture by Brahms; Slavonic Dance No. 3 in A flat by Dvorak; Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck, and the Finale from Symphony

Continued on Page Ten

No. 4 by Tchaikovsky.

Earl Murray will be the guest conductor on Thursday evening and Harry Ellis Dickson will take over the podium for the remaining concerts through the week.

In connection with this series the Third Children's Concert will be held on Wednesday morning, Aug. 14, at 10:15 a.m. Leon Gregorian will be the piano soloist playing Edward Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 (First Movement).

Arthur Fiedler, the regular conductor of the series, has commitments on the West Coast to direct a summer concert group in San Francisco and will not be on hand for the closing week of the 29th season of the popular outdoor concerts.

The series will be conducted every night Monday through Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 6,000
JUN 1957

BOSTON POPS AT HATCH SHELL

GREATER BOSTON BUSINESS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006
AUG 16 1957

Esplanade Concerts To Close Saturday

BOSTON, (AP)—The 29th annual series of Esplanade concerts beside the Charles River will close Saturday with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting Beethovens Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68.

A concert official said yesterday attendance has dropped off sharply since the start of the newspaper strike in Boston. For years the Boston papers have published the nightly program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8,288
AUG 1 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER of Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents Mr. Franklin Jerome, a vice president of Old Colony Trust, a citation in recognition of his bank's sponsorship of an esplanade concert. Mr. Jerome is a resident of Waban.

... CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

...o sustain an ideal ...l, more reciprocal ...erned water.

...tch Memorial Shell, ... week of August 12 ...7, Arthur Fiedler will ... the final series of the ...e Concerts' 29th season. ... concerts, though free of ...e, are not, unfortunately, free of debt.

During the past series generous business organizations joined with the public to help relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to individuals.

If the residents of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
AUG 8 - 1957

Coins Aid Gratification Of Bostonians' Wish

By Thomas L. Gaffney

Rome has its Fountain of Trevi where, according to legend, your secret wish will be gratified if you toss a coin into its sparkling waters.

Travelers passing to and from the Eternal City often pause at the Fountain for a relaxing moment, meditate, and blithely toss coins to the unaffected myth. Such persons, induced by an appealing story, throw money into a pool. They are truly well-wishers.

Boston has fountains too. Spillways of music are many in this city. The Esplanade Concerts are among Boston's "Music Fountains" dedicated, not to a myth, but to the reality that art comes from the people and naturally belong to them. The Esplanade concerts are free.

Certainly it is not wrong to assume that the well-wisher from Rome, after listening to an Esplanade Concert, would gladly volunteer a coin or two to sustain an ideal more personal and more reciprocal than unconcerned water.

At the Hatch Memorial Shell, August 12 through 17, the final series of the Esplanade Concert's 29th season will be held. These concerts, though free of charge, are not, unfortunately, free of debt.

During the past series generous business organizations joined with the public to help relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to the individuals for their continued generosity.

If the people of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality. A well-wisher in Rome is glad to throw a coin for a fantasy. Could not Esplanade audiences give coins for what is theirs without coins?

292

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
AUG 8 - 1957

Music Out Under The Stars

THE FAMED ESPLANADE CONCERTS will resume at the Hatch Memorial Shell Monday evening. This will be the third series of the 29th season. Thousands of Bostonians and visitors from all parts of the nation throng the pleasant summer concerts under the summer stars on the banks of the Charles River.

Esplanade Concerts Return To Hatch Shell Next Week

Third of Summer Series to Open Aug. 12 Two Guest Conductors Will Direct

The third series of Esplanade Concerts will open at the Hatch Memorial Shell on Monday, Aug. 12, with G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Choral Society, as guest director.

The opening concert will consist of Saint-Saens' French Military March; Eine Kleine Nachtmusik of Mozart; the 'Nocturne' from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' by Mendelssohn; Academic Festival Over-

Continued from Page One

No. 4 by Tchaikovsky.

Earl Murray will be the guest conductor on Thursday evening and Harry Ellis Dickson will take over the podium for the remaining concerts through the week.

In connection with this series the Third Children's Concert will be held on Wednesday morning, Aug. 14, at 10:15 a.m. Leon Gregorian will be the piano soloist playing Edward Greig's Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 (First Movement).

Arthur Fiedler, the regular conductor of the series, has commitments on the West Coast to direct a summer concert group in San Francisco and will not be on hand for the closing week of the 29th season of the popular outdoor concerts.

The series will be conducted every night Monday through Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

ture of Brahms' the Slavonic Dance No. 3 in A flat by Dvorak; Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck, and the Finale from Symphony

Continued on Page Ten

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 6,000
JUN 1957

BOSTON POPS AT HATCH SHELL

GREATER BOSTON BUSINESS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 57,006
AUG 16 1957

Esplanade Concerts To Close Saturday

BOSTON, (AP)—The 29th annual series of Esplanade concerts beside the Charles River will close Saturday with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting Beethovens Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68.

A concert official said yesterday attendance has dropped off sharply since the start of the newspaper strike in Boston. For years the Boston papers have published the nightly program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8,288
AUG 1 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER of Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents Mr. Franklin Jerome, a vice president of Old Colony Trust, a citation in recognition of his bank's sponsorship of an esplanade concert. Mr. Jerome is a resident of Waban.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
AUG 8 - 1957

Coins Aid Gratification Of Bostonians' Wish

By Thomas L. Gaffney

Rome has its Fountain of Trevi where, according to legend, your secret wish will be gratified if you toss a coin into its sparkling waters.

Travelers passing to and from the Eternal City often pause at the Fountain for a relaxing moment, meditate, and blithely toss coins to the unaffected myth. Such persons, induced by an appealing story, throw money into a pool. They are truly well-wishers.

Boston has fountains too. Spillways of music are many in this city. The Esplanade Concerts are among Boston's "Music Fountains" dedicated, not to a myth, but to the reality that art comes from the people and naturally belong to them. The Esplanade concerts are free.

Certainly it is not wrong to assume that the well-wisher from Rome, after listening to an Esplanade Concert, would gladly volunteer a coin or two to sustain an ideal more personal and more reciprocal than unconcerned water.

At the Hatch Memorial Shell, August 12 through 17, the final series of the Esplanade Concert's 29th season will be held. These concerts, though free of charge, are not, unfortunately, free of debt.

During the past series generous business organizations joined with the public to help relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to the individuals for their continued generosity.

If the people of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality. A well-wisher in Rome is glad to throw a coin for a fantasy. Could not Esplanade audiences give coins for what is theirs without asking?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 401,810
AUG 7 1957

ARTHUR FIEDLER RESUMES ESPLANADE CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Rome's famous Fountain of Trevi, according to legend, promises to obtain the secret wish of anyone who surrenders a coin to the water. Travelers in the Eternal City pause at the fountain and blithely toss coins to the myth.

Boston has fountains too, spillways of music. The Esplanade Concerts are among Boston's "Music Fountains" dedicated, not to a myth, but to the reality that art comes from the people and naturally belongs to them. No admission fee is charged for the Esplanade concerts.

The well-wisher from Rome after listening to an Esplanade Concert, would gladly volunteer a coin or two to sustain an ideal, more personal, more reciprocal than unconcerned water.

At the Hatch Memorial Shell, during the week of August 12 through 17, Arthur Fiedler will conduct the final series of the Esplanade Concerts' 29th season. These concerts, though free of charge, are not, unfortunately, free of debt. Generous business organizations join with the public to relieve financial obligations. However, for its concluding series this year the Esplanade fund again appeals to individuals.

If the residents of Boston wish to enjoy what is theirs without a myth, they must support the reality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,566
JUL 11 1957

Photos by Gordon N. Conveys, Staff Photographer

Melody Under a Morning Sun

Musical Magnet: Concerts On The Charles

Since 1938 summertime in Boston has meant concerts for children by the Boston Pops Orchestra. Yesterday morning at Hatch Memorial Shell they reclined, danced, smiled, and slept to the music of the masters.

'Box Seat' on Pop's Socks

Does His Own Conducting

Grinning Rhythm

Music Makes Dancers

293

BLANK PAGE

394

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

MAY 31 1956

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

MARION BOCH of the Norwood Young Republican Club and member of the Pops Committee presents ticket to Senator Furbush, President of the Massachusetts Senate, for the twentieth annual Young Republican Night at Pops at Symphony Hall on June 3. Also pictured from left to right are J. Malcolm Whitney of the Watertown Young Republican Club and Chairman of the Pops Committee, Robert C. Hagopian also from the Watertown Young Republican Club and recently elected Treasurer of the Town of Watertown, Mrs. Boch, Lillian J. Bonneau of the Greater Boston Young Republican Club, Senator Furbush, Joan Kaufmann of the Waltham Young Republican Club and a student at Brandeis University, Audrey Ann Cronin of the Medford Young Republican Club, Richard Cummings of the Worcester Young Men's Republican Club, and Richard Mastrangelo of the Boston University Young Republican Club.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Be Soloist At Pops

JOHN HORNOR OF WATERTOWN and Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops discuss program for Sunday evening, June 3, when Mr. Hornor will be guest soloist.

John L. Hornor, bass-baritone, of 24 Appleton St. will make his debut at the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, on Sunday evening, June 3.

He will sing "Song to the Evening Star" from "Tannhauser" by Wagner and "You'll Never Walk Alone."

It will be young Republican night, with Governor Herter in attendance. Many persons from Watertown will be present and the local delegation will drive in on the antique fire engine with Watertown's pride, Mr. Hornor aboard.

Included on the local delegation will be: J. Malcolm Whitney, Chairman; Edna and Harriet Bogosian, Betty Doherty, Joanne Carey; the Junior Fire-Fighters of America, Frank and Chester Jepson, Jack and Arthur Jones and Norman Eldredge; Supervisor of apparatus Edmund Higgins and Robert Hagopian.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JUN 5 1956

WITH THE POPS—Just back from a European tour, pianist Arthur MacKenzie will play Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with the Boston Pops Orchestra in Symphony Hall today.

played pieces in the whole repertoire, exceeded only by "Jalousie" itself, but it provided the youthful Mr. MacKenzie with an admirable show piece for a first outing with this orchestra.

He demonstrated a great deal of keyboard authority, a fine sense of style and a vitality of approach that speaks well for the future. It is impossible to appraise a pianist's equipment from an esthetic point of view in a first appearance with an orchestra, or even to suggest his possibilities as a solo performer, yet Mr. MacKenzie seemed to have a lot of assurance, a lot of confidence and a lot of technical ability. He may appear in a solo performance in a future season and it will be interesting to see if his promise with an orchestra can be fulfilled in the severer platform of the recital stage. A capacity audience, as usual, was on hand to give him—and everything else—a cordial reception.

R.E.

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

Attended Eastern Star Night At Pops

Eastern Star night at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, was attended by 17 members and guests from Wellesley Chapter #166, and was supported by all the Chapters in Massachusetts. The proceeds are used for benevolent purposes.

Those attending from Wellesley were Mr. and Mrs. W. Frederic Hartwell, Mrs. David Wegg, Mr. and Mrs. George Burchell, Col. and Mrs. James Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Whitcomb, Mrs. Lorne Wright and two guests, Mrs. William Aldrich and guest, Mrs. Ella Lowe, Mrs. George Kay and Mrs. W. B. Pray.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

JUN 6 1956

Reeds Ferry Girl Is Chorus Member

REED'S FERRY—Miss Janice Mianne Watkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Watkins of Mill street, will be a member of the New England Conservatory chorus when it sings at the Boston Pops concert Saturday, June 3. The second Saturday night in June has been New England Conservatory night at Pops since 1930 when Mr. Fielder became Pops conductor.

Miss Watkins is an alto. She has just completed her junior year at the New England conservatory, where she is majoring in organ. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the conservatory chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

land Conservatory Chorus when it sings at the Boston Pops Concert Saturday.

Miss Kessel is an alto. She has just completed her Sophomore year at the New England Conservatory, where she is majoring in Music Education.

came Pops conductor.

Miss Melvin is a soprano. She has just completed her Freshman year at the New England Conservatory where she is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

Conservatory, where he is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory Chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

versity alumni and administration, and Dr. James R. Houghton of the music faculty will direct the singing of the University's alma mater.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039

JUN 2 1956

graduation.

* * * *

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Perkins, South Main st., attended the Pops, under the sponsorship of Boston University, in Symphony hall, Boston, last night. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins will attend the clam bake by Boston University Alumni at the college field today. They will attend the graduation exercises of Boston University at the college field tomorrow afternoon.

* * * *

students one of whom lives in Watertown, will perform with the Boston Pops orchestra on June 1, Boston University Night, and a third will have his composition performed.

Miss Shirley Merrill, Bangor, Me., a 20-year-old senior, will be the piano soloist for the Pops presentation of Edvard Grieg's Piano Concerto, 1st movement.

Another senior, Salvatore A. Rabbio of 546 Worcester St., Watertown, will be the tympanist for "Ngoma Invocation and Dance for tympani and orches-

Sunday, June 3, 1956 by Mellon Miller, Composer

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

JUN 3 1956

SPONSOR POPS NIGHT

The alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., will sponsor the second annual "Alumnae Night at the Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, at Symphony Hall. Miss Mary M. Ryan is in charge of reservations.

Transcript
WINTHROP, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,060

MAY 31 1956

Street School.

* * *

The 18th Evening at Pops, sponsored annually by the Beth Israel Hospital Junior Auxiliary witz, senior during the

of 42 Na-

ay evening,

June 16 at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

The Beth Israel Hospital junior Auxiliary's traditional Pops Night enables the group to obtain added revenue for the clinic through the sale of tickets, jewels and sponsors.

Ticket co-chairmen are Rena Hyman and Felice Miller.

Pops chairman is Estelle Levine. Jewels and sponsors co-chairmen are Mildred Blum and Arlene Oransky. Publicity is being handled by Esta Cohen.

Flower corsages will be sold during the evening by members of the auxiliary under the chairmanship of Bernice Greene and Evelyn Mason.

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

Mr. William C. Marshall of 192 Hartford street will give a solo performance of "Violin Symphonie Espagnole" by Lalo on Wednesday Night, June 6, with the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Citizen
NT, Mass.
Non-partisan
4,129

MAY 25 1956

Mrs. Eliza A. Melkon of 105 Clifton St. will be a sponsor of the May 26 "Night at Pops" to be held at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the New England Hospital in Roxbury.

odside
ay 26
y Hall
ngland

N. - W. Hospital Alumnae Night At Pops June 19

The Alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc. will sponsor their second annual "Alumnae Night at Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, 1956 at Symphony Hall.

For reservations please contact Miss Mary M. Ryan at BI 4-2800 by June 10th.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

MAY 31 1956

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

MARION BOCH of the Norwood Young Republican Club and member of the Pops Committee presents ticket to Senator Furbush, President of the Massachusetts Senate, for the twentieth annual Young Republican Night at Pops at Symphony Hall on June 3. Also pictured from left to right are J. Malcolm Whitney of the Watertown Young Republican Club and Chairman of the Pops Committee, Robert C. Hagopian also from the Watertown Young Republican Club and recently elected Treasurer of the Town of Watertown, Mrs. Boch, Lillian J. Bonneau of the Greater Boston Young Republican Club, Senator Furbush, Joan Kaufmann of the Waltham Young Republican Club and a student at Brandeis University, Audrey Ann Cronin of the Medford Young Republican Club, [illegible] of the Worcester Young Men's Republican Club, and Richard [illegible] University Young Republican Club.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Be Soloist At Pops

JOHN HORNOR OF WATERTOWN and Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops discuss program for Sunday evening, June 3, when Mr. Hornor will be guest soloist.

John L. Hornor, bass-baritone, of 24 Appleton St. will make his debut at the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, on Sunday evening, June 3.

He will sing "Song to the Evening Star" from "Tannhauser" by Wagner and "You'll Never Walk Alone."

It will be young Republican night, with Governor Herter in attendance. Many persons from Watertown will be present and the local delegation will drive in on the antique fire engine with Watertown's pride, Mr. Hornor aboard.

Included on the local delegation will be: J. Malcolm Whitney, Chairman; Edna and Harriet Bogosian, Betty Doherty, Joanne Carey; the Junior Fire-Fighters of America, Frank and Chester Jepson, Jack and Arthur Jones and Norman Eldredge; Supervisor of apparatus Edmund Higgins and Robert Hagopian.

MUSIC

The Pops

A random mid-week check up on the Pops found us admiring a pianist making his debut last night, a young man by the name of Arthur MacKenzie.

It was a typical program and a typical audience, informal, relaxed and obviously in good spirits what with such Popsiana on the program as "Where the Citrons Bloom," Ravel's "Bolero," "Jalousie," the "Boston Commandery" march and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." The last named undoubtedly ranks with the most often-played pieces in the whole repertoire, exceeded only by "Jalousie" itself, but it provided the youthful Mr. MacKenzie with an admirable show piece for a first outing with this orchestra.

He demonstrated a great deal of keyboard authority, a fine sense of style and a vitality of approach that speaks well for the future. It is impossible to appraise a pianist's equipment from an esthetic point of view in a first appearance with an orchestra, or even to suggest his possibilities as a solo performer, yet Mr. MacKenzie seemed to have a lot of assurance, a lot of confidence and a lot of technical ability. He may appear in a solo performance in a future season and it will be interesting to see if his promise with an orchestra can be fulfilled in the severer platform of the recital stage. A capacity audience, as usual, was on hand to give him—and everything else—a cordial reception.

R.E.

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

Attended Eastern Star Night At Pops

Eastern Star night at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, was attended by 17 members and guests from Wellesley Chapter #166, and was supported by all the Chapters in Massachusetts. The proceeds are used for benevolent purposes.

Those attending from Wellesley were Mr. and Mrs. W. Frederic Hartwell, Mrs. David Wegg, Mr. and Mrs. George Burchell, Col. and Mrs. James Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Whitcomb, Mrs. Lorne Wright and two guests, Mrs. William Aldrich and guest, Mrs. Ella Lowe, Mrs. George Kay and Mrs. W. B. Pray.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

JUN 6 1956

FAI

[illegible] where she is major-[illegible] in organ. Under the direc-[illegible]tion of Lorna Cooke deVaron, [illegible] its permanent conductor, the [illegible]

[illegible] it sings at the Boston [illegible] cert Saturday.

Miss Kessel is an alto. She has just completed her Sophomore year at the New England Conservatory, where she is majoring in Music Education.

[illegible] came Pops conductor.

Miss Melvin is a soprano. She has just completed her Freshman year at the New England Conservatory where she is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

[illegible] Conservatory, where he is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory Chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Play With Pops Orchestra

Two Boston University music students one of whom lives in Watertown, will perform with the Boston Pops orchestra on June 1, Boston University Night, and a third will have his composition performed.

Miss Shirley Merrill, Bangor, Me., a 20-year-old senior, will be the piano soloist for the Pops presentation of Edvard Grieg's Piano Concerto, 1st movement.

Another senior, Salvatore A. Rabbio of 546 Worcester St., Watertown, will be the tympanist for "Ngoma Invocation and Dance for tympani and orchestra" by Malloy Miller. Composer Miller, of Pueblo, Colorado, will receive his Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Boston University at the June 3 Commencement. Guest conductor for this number will be Russell Stanger, conductor of the Boston University Symphony Orchestra.

B. U. President Harold C. Case will greet the audience of University alumni, students, faculty and administration, and Dr. James R. Houghton of the music faculty will direct the singing of the University's alma mater.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

JUN 3 1956

SPONSOR POPS NIGHT

The alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., will sponsor the second annual "Alumnae Night at the Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, at Symphony Hall. Miss Mary M. Ryan is in charge of reservations.

Transcript
WINTHROP, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,060

MAY 31 1956

Street School.

* * *

The 13th Evening at Pops, sponsored annually by the Beth Israel Hospital Junior Auxiliary to raise funds for the Tumor and Cancer Clinic of the Beth Israel Hospital, will be held Saturday evening, June 16th at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

* * *

Marshall M. Kaplan of 42 Na- [illegible] will be held Saturday evening, June 16 at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

The Beth Israel Hospital junior Auxiliary's traditional Pops Night enables the group to obtain added revenue for the clinic through the sale of tickets, jewels and sponsors.

Ticket co-chairmen are Rena Hyman and Felice Miller.

Pops chairman is Estelle Levine. Jewels and sponsors co-chairmen are Mildred Blum and Arlene Oransky. Publicity is being handled by Esta Cohen.

Flower corsages will be sold during the evening by members of the auxiliary under the chairmanship of Bernice Greene and Evelyn Mason.

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

Mr. William C. Marshall of 192 Hartford street will give a solo performance of "Violin Symphonie Espagnole" by Lalo on Wednesday Night, June 6, with the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Citizen
BELMONT, Mass.
Weekly Non-partisan
Circ. 4,129

MAY 25 1956

Dr. Eliza A. Melkon of 105 Clifton St. will be a sponsor of the May 26 "Night at Pops" to be held at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the New England Hospital in Roxbury.

N. - W. Hospital Alumnae Night At Pops June 19

The Alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc. will sponsor their second annual "Alumnae Night at Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, 1956 at Symphony Hall.

For reservations please contact Miss Mary M. Ryan at BI 4-2800 by June 10th.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

MAY 31 1956

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

MARION BOCH of the Norwood Young Republican Club and member of the Pops Committee presents ticket to Senator Furbush, President of the Massachusetts Senate, for the twentieth annual Young Republican Night at Pops, at Symphony Hall on June 3. Also pictured from left to right are J. Malcolm Whitney of the Watertown Young Republican Club and Chairman of the Pops Committee, Robert C. Hagopian also from the Watertown Young Republican Club and recently elected Treasurer of the Town of Watertown, Mrs. Boch, Lillian J. Bonneau of the Greater Boston Young Republican Club, Senator Furbush, Joan Kaufmann of the Waltham Young Republican Club and a student at Brandeis University, Audrey Ann Cronin of the Medford Young Republican Club [illegible] ings of the Worcester Young Men's Republican Club, and Richard [illegible] University Young Republican Club.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Be Soloist At Pops

JOHN HORNOR OF WATERTOWN and Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops discuss program for Sunday evening, June 3, when Mr. Hornor will be guest soloist.

John L. Hornor, bass-baritone, of 24 Appleton St. will make his debut at the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, on Sunday evening, June 3.

the local delegation will drive in on the antique fire engine with Watertown's pride, Mr. Hornor aboard.

Included on the local delegation will be: J. Malcolm Whitney, Chairman; Edna and Harriet [illegible]ogosian, Betty Doherty, Joanne [illegible]arey; the Junior Fire-Fighters [illegible]f America, Frank and Chester [illegible]epson, Jack and Arthur Jones [illegible]nd Norman Eldredge; Super[illegible]visor of apparatus Edmund [illegible]Higgins and Robert Hagopian.

[illegible]rgaret Clapp, announced a [illegible]nd bequests and plans to doub[illegible]

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

Attended Eastern Star Night At Pops

Eastern Star night at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, was attended by 17 members and guests from Wellesley Chapter #166, and was supported by all the Chapters in Massachusetts. The proceeds are used for benevolent purposes.

Those attending from Wellesley were Mr. and Mrs. W. Frederic Hartwell, Mrs. David Wegg, Mr. and Mrs. George Burchell, Col. and Mrs. James Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley [illegible]

MUSIC

The Pops

A random mid-week check up on the Pops found us admiring a pianist making his debut last night, a young man by the name of Arthur MacKenzie.

It was a typical program and a typical audience, informal, relaxed and obviously in good spirits what with such Popsiana on the program as "Where the Citrons Bloom," Ravel's "Bolero," "Jalousie," the "Boston Commandery" march and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." The last named undoubtedly ranks with the most often-played pieces in the whole repertoire, exceeded only by "Jalousie" itself, but it provided the youthful Mr. MacKenzie with an admirable show piece for a first outing with this orchestra.

He demonstrated a great deal of keyboard authority, a fine sense of style and a vitality of approach that speaks well for the future. It is impossible to appraise a pianist's equipment from an esthetic point of view in a first appearance with an orchestra, or even to suggest his possibilities as a solo performer, yet Mr. MacKenzie seemed to have a lot of assurance, a lot of confidence and a lot of technical ability. He may appear in a solo performance in a future season and it will be interesting to see if his promise with an orchestra can be fulfilled in the severer platform of the recital stage. A capacity audience, as usual, was on hand to give him—and everything else—a cordial reception.

R.E.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Play With Pops Orchestra

Two Boston University music students one of whom lives in Watertown, will perform with the Boston Pops orchestra on June 1, Boston University Night, and a third will have his composition performed.

Miss Shirley Merrill, Bangor, Me., a 20-year-old senior, will be the piano soloist for the Pops presentation of Edvard Grieg's Piano Concerto, 1st movement.

Another senior, Salvatore A. Rabbio of 546 Worcester St., Watertown, will be the tympanist for "Ngoma Invocation and Dance for tympani and orchestra" by Malloy Miller. Composer Miller, of Pueblo, Colorado, will receive his Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Boston University at the June 3 Commencement. Guest conductor for this number will be Russell Stanger, conductor of the Boston University Symphony Orchestra.

B. U. President Harold C. Case will greet the audience of University alumni, students, faculty and administration, and Dr. James R. Houghton of the music faculty will direct the singing of the University's alma mater.

Telegram-News (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Democrat
Circ. 21,784

JUN 5 1956

MEMBER OF CHORUS

Carol A. Kessel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Kessel, 520 Puritan road, Swampscott, will be a member of the New England Conservatory Chorus when it sings at the Boston Pops Concert Saturday.

Miss Kessel is an alto. She has just completed her Sophomore year at the New England Conservatory, where she is majoring in Music Education.

came Pops conductor.

Miss Melvin is a soprano. She has just completed her Freshman year at the New England Conservatory where she is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

[illegible] Conservatory, where he is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory Chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

JUN 3 1956

SPONSOR POPS NIGHT

The alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., will sponsor the second annual "Alumnae Night at the Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, at Symphony Hall. Miss Mary M. Ryan is in charge of reservations.

Record (e)
CHELSEA, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 5,384

JUN 1 1956

Jr. Auxiliary To Attend Pops

The 13th Evening at Pops, sponsored by the Israel Hospital Junior Auxiliary to raise funds for the Tumor and Cancer Clinic of the Beth Israel Hospital, will be held Saturday evening, June 16 at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

The Beth Israel Hospital junior Auxiliary's traditional Pops Night enables the group to obtain added revenue for the clinic through the sale of tickets, jewels and sponsors.

Ticket co-chairmen are Rena Hyman and Felice Miller.

Pops chairman is Estelle Levine. Jewels and sponsors co-chairmen are Mildred Blum and Arlene Oransky. Publicity is being handled by Esta Cohen.

Flower corsages will be sold during the evening by members of the auxiliary under the chairmanship of Bernice Greene and Evelyn Mason.

Sun
WINTHROP, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Circ. 3,500

JUN 2 1956

Dr. Sallie H. Saunders of Woodside Park was a sponsor of the May 26 "Night at Pops" at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the New England Hospital in Roxbury.

MAY 31 1956

N. - W. Hospital Alumnae Night At Pops June 19

The Alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc. will sponsor their second annual "Alumnae Night at Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, 1956 at Symphony Hall.

For reservations please contact Miss Mary M. Ryan at BI 4-2800 by June 10th.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

MAY 31 1956

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

MARION BOCH of the Norwood Young Republican Club and member of the Pops Committee presents ticket to Senator Furbush, President of the Massachusetts Senate, for the twentieth annual Young Republican Night at Pops at Symphony Hall on June 2. Also pictured from left to right are J. Malcolm Whitney of the Watertown Young Republican Club and Chairman of the Pops Committee, Robert C. Hagopian also from the Watertown Young Republican Club and recently elected Treasurer of the Town of Watertown, Mrs. Boch, Lillian J. Bonneau of the Greater Boston Young Republican Club, Senator Furbush, Joan Kaufmann of the Waltham Young Republican Club and a student at Brandeis University, Audrey Ann Cronin of the Medford Young Republican Club, [illegible] of the Worcester Young Men's Republican Club, and Richard [illegible] University Young Republican Club.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Be Soloist At Pops

JOHN HORNOR OF WATERTOWN and Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops discuss program for Sunday evening, June 3, when Mr. Hornor will be guest soloist.

John L. Hornor, bass-baritone, of 24 Appleton St. will make his debut at the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, on Sunday evening, June 3.

the local delegation will drive in on the antique fire engine with Watertown's pride, Mr. Hornor aboard.

Included on the local delegation will be; J. Malcolm Whitney, Chairman; Edna and Harriet [illegible]ogosian, Betty Doherty, Joanne [illegible]arey; the Junior Fire-Fighters [illegible] America, Frank and Chester [illegible]epson, Jack and Arthur Jones and Norman Eldredge; Supervisor of apparatus Edmund Higgins and Robert Hagopian.

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

Attended Eastern Star Night At Pops

Eastern Star night at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, was attended by 17 members and guests from Wellesley Chapter #166, and was supported by all the Chapters in Massachusetts. The proceeds are used for benevolent purposes.

Those attending from Wellesley were Mr. and Mrs. W. Frederic Hartwell, Mrs. David Wegg, Mr. and Mrs. George Burchell, [illegible]

DOUGHERTY'S — LY 2-3149
Silver, Household Articles. No too small or large. Call anytime.

MUSIC

The Pops

A random mid-week check up on the Pops found us admiring a pianist making his debut last night, a young man by the name of Arthur MacKenzie.

It was a typical program and a typical audience, informal, relaxed and obviously in good spirits what with such Popsiana on the program as "Where the Citrons Bloom," Ravel's "Bolero," "Jalousie," the "Boston Commandery" march and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." The last named undoubtedly ranks with the most often-played pieces in the whole repertoire, exceeded only by "Jalousie" itself, but it provided the youthful Mr. MacKenzie with an admirable show piece for a first outing with this orchestra.

He demonstrated a great deal of keyboard authority, a fine sense of style and a vitality of approach that speaks well for the future. It is impossible to appraise a pianist's equipment from an esthetic point of view in a first appearance with an orchestra, or even to suggest his possibilities as a solo performer, yet Mr. MacKenzie seemed to have a lot of assurance, a lot of confidence and a lot of technical ability. He may appear in a solo performance in a future season and it will be interesting to see if his promise with an orchestra can be fulfilled in the severer platform of the recital stage. A capacity audience, as usual, was on hand to give him—and everything else—a cordial reception.

R.E.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 11,200

JUN 6 1956

Sings at Boston Pops

Judith A. Melvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis H. Melvin of 26 Pleasant street, Hopkinton, will be a member of the New England Conservatory chorus when it sings at the Boston Pops concert Saturday, June 9. The second Saturday night in June has been New England Conservatory night at Pops since 1930 when Mr. Fiedler became Pops conductor.

Miss Melvin is a soprano. She has just completed her Freshman year at the New England Conservatory where she is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

[illegible] Conservatory, where he is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory Chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Play With Pops Orchestra

Two Boston University music students one of whom lives in Watertown, will perform with the Boston Pops orchestra on June 1, Boston University Night, and a third will have his composition performed.

Miss Shirley Merrill, Bangor, Me., a 20-year-old senior, will be the piano soloist for the Pops presentation of Edvard Grieg's Piano Concerto, 1st movement.

Another senior, Salvatore A. Rabbio of 546 Worcester St., Watertown, will be the tympanist for "Ngoma Invocation and Dance for tympani and orchestra" by Malloy Miller. Composer Miller, of Pueblo, Colorado, will receive his Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Boston University at the June 3 Commencement. Guest conductor for this number will be Russell Stanger, conductor of the Boston University Symphony Orchestra.

B. U. President Harold C. Case will greet the audience of University alumni, students, faculty and administration, and Dr. James R. Houghton of the music faculty will direct the singing of the University's alma mater.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

JUN 3 1956

SPONSOR POPS NIGHT

The alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., will sponsor the second annual "Alumnae Night at the Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, at Symphony Hall. Miss Mary M. Ryan is in charge of reservations.

Record (e)
CHELSEA, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 5,384

JUN 1 1956

Jr. Auxiliary To Attend Pops

The 13th Evening at Pops, sponsored by the Israel Hospital Junior Auxiliary to raise funds for the Tumor and Cancer Clinic of the Beth Israel Hospital, will be held Saturday evening, June 16 at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

The Beth Israel Hospital junior Auxiliary's traditional Pops Night enables the group to obtain added revenue for the clinic through the sale of tickets, jewels and sponsors.

Ticket co-chairmen are Rena Hyman and Felice Miller.

Pops chairman is Estelle Levine. Jewels and sponsors co-chairmen are Mildred Blum and Arlene Oransky. Publicity is being handled by Esta Cohen.

Flower corsages will be sold during the evening by members of the auxiliary under the chairmanship of Bernice Greene and Evelyn Mason.

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

N. - W. Hospital Alumnae Night At Pops June 19

The Alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc. will sponsor their second annual "Alumnae Night at Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, 1956 at Symphony Hall.

For reservations please contact Miss Mary M. Ryan at BI 4-2800 by June 10th.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

MAY 31 1956

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

MAY 31 1956

MARION BOCH of the Norwood Young Republican Club and member of the Pops Committee presents ticket to Senator Furbush, President of the Massachusetts Senate, for the twentieth annual Young Republican Night at Pops at Symphony Hall on June 3. Also pictured from left to right are J. Malcolm Whitney of the Watertown Young Republican Club and Chairman of the Pops Committee, Robert C. Hagopian also from the Watertown Young Republican Club and recently elected Treasurer of the Town of Watertown, Mrs. Boch, Lillian J. Bonneau of the Greater Boston Young Republican Club, Senator Furbush, Joan Kaufmann of the Waltham Young Republican Club and a student at Brandeis University, Audrey Ann Cronin of the Medford Young Republican Club [illegible] ings of the Worcester Young Men's Republican Club, and Richard [illegible] University Young Republican Club.

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

Will Be Soloist At Pops

JOHN HORNOR OF WATERTOWN and Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops discuss program for Sunday evening, June 3, when Mr. Hornor will be guest soloist.

John L. Hornor, bass-baritone, of 24 Appleton St. will make his debut at the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, on Sunday evening, June 3.

[illegible] Board of Selectmen, Albert [illegible] avenue has been appointed [illegible]

the local delegation will drive in on the antique fire engine with Watertown's pride, Mr. Hornor aboard.

Included on the local delegation will be: J. Malcolm Whitney, Chairman; Edna and Harriet [illegible]logosian, Betty Doherty, Joanne [illegible]arey; the Junior Fire-Fighters [illegible]f America, Frank and Chester [illegible]epson, Jack and Arthur Jones and Norman Eldredge; Supervisor of apparatus Edmund Higgins and Robert Hagopian.

[illegible]garet Clapp, announced a [illegible]nd bequests and plans to doub[illegible]

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

Attended Eastern Star Night At Pops

Eastern Star night at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, was attended by 17 members and guests from Wellesley Chapter #166, and was supported by all the Chapters in Ma[illegible] The proceeds are use[illegible]

Herald
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,000 Free

MAY 31 1956

MUSIC

The Pops

A random mid-week check up on the Pops found us admiring a pianist making his debut last night, a young man by the name of Arthur MacKenzie.

It was a typical program and a typical audience, informal, relaxed and obviously in good spirits what with such Popsiana on the program as "Where the Citrons Bloom," Ravel's "Bolero," "Jalousie," the "Boston Commandery" march and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." The last named undoubtedly ranks with the most often-played pieces in the whole repertoire, exceeded only by "Jalousie" itself, but it provided the youthful Mr. MacKenzie with an admirable show piece for a first outing with this orchestra.

He demonstrated a great deal of keyboard authority, a fine sense of style and a vitality of approach that speaks well for the future. It is impossible to appraise a pianist's equipment from an esthetic point of view in a first appearance with an orchestra, or even to suggest his possibilities as a solo performer, yet Mr. MacKenzie seemed to have a lot of assurance, a lot of confidence and a lot of technical ability. He may appear in a solo performance in a future season and it will be interesting to see if his promise with an orchestra can be fulfilled in the seyerer platform of the recital stage. A capacity audience, as usual, was on hand to give him—and everything else—a cordial reception.

R.E.

See Our Big Selection of Baker, and Kayl[illegible]
Including the famous BEA[illegible] and extra firm. Musco-p[illegible]

Record (e)
CHELSEA, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 5,384

JUN 7 1956

Kekligian To Participate In Concert

Peter G. Kekligian, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kekligian of 893 Broadway, will be a member of the New England Conservatory Chorus when it sings at the Boston Pops Concert Saturday.

Kekligian is a tenor. He has just completed his Junior year at the New England Conservatory, where he is majoring in Music Education. Under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron, its permanent conductor, the Conservatory Chorus will sing English, Latin-American and modern American songs.

Will Play With Pops Orchestra

Two Boston University music students one of whom lives in Watertown, will perform with the Boston Pops orchestra on June 1, Boston University Night, and a third will have his composition performed.

Miss Shirley Merrill, Bangor, Me., a 20-year-old senior, will be the piano soloist for the Pops presentation of Edvard Grieg's Piano Concerto, 1st movement.

Another senior, Salvatore A. Rabbio of 546 Worcester St., Watertown, will be the tympanist for "Ngoma Invocation and Dance for tympani and orchestra" by Malloy Miller. Composer Miller, of Pueblo, Colorado, will receive his Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Boston University at the June 3 Commencement. Guest conductor for this number will be Russell Stanger, conductor of the Boston University Symphony Orchestra.

B. U. President Harold C. Case will greet the audience of University alumni, students, faculty and administration, and Dr. James R. Houghton of the music faculty will direct the singing of the University's alma mater.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

JUN 3 1956

SPONSOR POPS NIGHT

The alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., will sponsor the second annual "Alumnae Night at the Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, at Symphony Hall. Miss Mary M. Ryan is in charge of reservations.

Record (e)
CHELSEA, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 5,384

JUN 1 1956

Jr. Auxiliary To Attend Pops

The 13th Evening at Pops, sponsored by the Israel Hospital Junior Auxiliary to raise funds for the Tumor and Cancer Clinic of the Beth Israel Hospital, will be held Saturday evening, June 16 at Symphony Hall. This year's program book will be dedicated to Mrs. Samuel Rabinowitz, senior advisor to the group during the past eight years.

The Beth Israel Hospital junior Auxiliary's traditional Pops Night enables the group to obtain added revenue for the clinic through the sale of tickets, jewels and sponsors.

Ticket co-chairmen are Rena Hyman and Felice Miller.

Pops chairman is Estelle Levine. Jewels and sponsors co-chairmen are Mildred Blum and Arlene Oransky. Publicity is being handled by Esta Cohen.

Flower corsages will be sold during the evening by members of the auxiliary under the chairmanship of Bernice Greene and Evelyn Mason.

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

MAY 31 1956

N. - W. Hospital Alumnae Night At Pops June 19

The Alumnae of Newton-Wellesley Hospital School of Nursing, Inc. will sponsor their second annual "Alumnae Night at Pops" on Tuesday, June 19, 1956 at Symphony Hall.

For reservations please contact Miss Mary M. Ryan at BI 4-2800 by June 10th.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 21,298

JUL 6 1957

Music Under The Stars

All over the country orchestras are tuning up beneath the stars these nights. The sound of music elsewhere gives emphasis to New Haven's own loss in terms of the suspension of Pop Concerts at the Yale Bowl this summer. But this season's lack may spur the revival of this summertime institution before next July rolls around.

At any rate, in places away from New Haven thousands of Americans begin their "musical vacations" during the first week of July — which ushers in music festivals at Lenox, Mass., at Ipswich, and at many of the quiet Berkshire villages in Connecticut and Massachusetts. And not to be outdone by their long-haired cousins, jazz aficionados will set sedate Newport, R. I., rocking in the annual four-day hot-music festival that started Independence Day.

These al fresco concerts are getting to be the central events around which many vacations are planned. More than 80 festivals of music are held during the summer months, and that doesn't take into account the municipal outdoor concerts.

Attendance at the annual Tanglewood Festival at Lenox, Mass., has grown from 15,000 to more than 136,000 since its first season in 1936. The six-week program, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra in weekend performances, extends through Aug. 11.

And when the main show closes at Tanglewood this year, the hot men will take over on Aug. 12 for the first session of the School of Jazz at the Berkshire Music Barn, adjacent to Tanglewood. Lecturing will be such jazz stars as Duke Ellington, Wilbur de Paris, and Lennie Tristano.

The king of the jazz summer festivals, though, is the one at Newport. This year more than 125 instrumentalists and singers will perform in the seven concerts. Louis Armstrong, who played at Newport July 4, moves on to Lewisohn Stadium, New York City, where Satchmo's fans are whomping up a delayed birthday celebration today to climax what they're calling "Satchmo Festival Week."

The stay-at-homes aren't being neglected, either — except, perhaps, on a temporary basis here in New Haven. but this summer's cessation in Pops scheduling is — we all hope — not a permanent thing. And some of the loss is soothed by the pleasant enlargement of the Festival of Chamber Music at the Yale Art Gallery.

Elsewhere in the East the last week in June ushered in New York City's two major outdoor concert series, the Lewisohn Stadium performances, organized by Mrs. Charles S. "Minnie" Guggenheimer, and the Goldman Band concerts in Central Park Mall. Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell is expanding its series this summer.

The Detroit Symphony gets $25,000 from the municipal parks and recreation department to meet costs of summer concerts. The Boston Pops Orchestra will be back at the shell on the Charles, and the concerts on the Potomac have been resumed at Washington's Watergate shell.

This summer's nights most certainly shall be filled with music, whether it's the three B's or Satch Armstrong blasting out that righteous jazz.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

JUN 6 1956

KAPPA NIGHT AT POPS will be Saturday, June 23, in Symphony Hall. Since its founding in 1870, the symbol of Kappa Kappa Gamma fraternity everywhere has been the Key. Alumnae in the New England area are keying their time this month to Kappa Night at the Pops. Proceeds from the sale of flowers, as well as from the concert, will go towards the 50 scholarships and fellowships which are given annually by the sorority. Included in the audience will be not only local alumnae and their guests, but also Kappas from all over the United States, Canada, Hawii and the British Isles who'll be attending the Fraternity's 41st biennial convention at the New Ocean House in Swampscott, June 21-29. These delegates represent the 85 undergraduate chapters and more than 300 alumnae organizations whose memberships total more than 55,000. Mrs. E. Granville Crabtree, a former Bostonian, is the Fraternity's 26th president and a resident of Wellesley Hills. Mrs. Richard A. Whitney is the national vice-president. Also attending will be tennis champion, Mrs. Hazel Hotchkiss Wightman of Chestnut Hill; Judge Emma Fall Schofield of Malden; Mrs. Erwin Griswold of Belmont, wife of the dean of the Harvard Law School and in whose honor a fellowship is given to a foreign student for study in Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation of the New York University-Bellevue Medical Center. Co-chairmen of Kappa Night at the Pops are Mrs. Roy A. Merritt of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. Sidney A. Dimond of Needham.

* * *

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN 19 1957

Boston

By Guy Livingston
(344 Little Bldg.; HAncock 6-8386)

"Boy Friend" opens the North Shore Music Theatre's third season Monday (24).

Baker Sisters booked for Revere Frolic opening Sunday (23). Jerry Vale set for July 8.

Lady Sheree and her Calypso Lords current at the Hotel Bradford Carousel Room.

Robert Merrill in for appearance with Boston Pops Orch concert for Israel Histadrut Night.

Somerset Hotel opens its pool for outdoor dancing Friday (21) with Teddy Phillips Orch.

School supers and principals hosted by Beacon Hill Theatre at special preshowing of "Saint Joan."

Ella Fitzgerald and the Oscar Peterson Trio booked for jazz nights June 28-29 at Castle Hill, Ipswich.

Falmouth Playhouse starts its ninth season with a 10 week sked Monday (24) presenting "Desk Set" with Nancy Walker.

New Surf $250,000 dancery at Nantasket unveiled Friday (14) with Guy Lombardo and celeb party of state and local dignitaries.

Don Dennis, singing emcee at Steuben's, leaves with closing of the room Saturday (22) for two weeks at Chaudier Country Club, Hull, Quebec.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 11,200

JUN 5 1956

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

JUN 7 1956

Tucker at the Pops

Richard Tucker, a leading tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will appear as guest soloist for the 28th annual Histadrut Night at the Pops Thursday, June 21. Proceeds will be turned over to the Histadrut Medical Organization—Kupat Holim.

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Catholic
Circ. 85,613

JUN 9 1956

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,150

AUG 1 1957

Music and Art

By MIRIAM EVERTS

Miss Everts

Last week was an unusually rich one for music lovers in Vermont. On Tuesday, 14 members of the Boston Symphony presented a Pops Concert, the second concert in the George Bishop Lane Summer Series at the University of Vermont in Burlington. The small orchestra which featured music of Mozart, Brahms, Hayden, Vaughan and Williams and Strauss was conducted by Hermon Silberman, a first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Roger Voisin, solo trumpet with the Boston Symphony played Hayden's "Concerto for Trumpet in E Flat."

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,137

JUL 12 1957

Boston Violinist Will Entertain Beach Club

WOLFEBORO—William Waterhouse, first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is scheduled to entertain the Amy Cheney Beach club at the First Christian church Monday evening, July 15, at 8:00 o'clock, with the following program: Fugue in A, Tartini - Kreisler; Siciliano, Marie von Paradis; Romance in G, Beethoven; Sonata in C minor, Beethoven; Legende, Delius; Sonata in F, Greig-Opus 8; Valse Bluette, Drigo; Guitarre, Moszkowski; Berceuse, Tor Aulin; Berceuse, Cesar Cui and Prelude and Allegro by Kreisler.

Mr. Waterhouse was born in Winnipeg, Canada, both his parents being professional musicians. They gave him his first lessons. He is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of London, and has also studied with Franz Kneisel.

His accompanist, Arlene Gerstenberger, a native of Lawrence, Mass., is the daughter of a violinist.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR
Circ. D. 16,526

JUN 19 1957

Margaret I. Wefer Earns Lasell A. C.

Miss Margaret Isabelle Wefer daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A Ralph C. Wefer of 76 Maywood Road, Woods of Larchmont, has received an Associate in Science degree, with a major in general studies, at Lasell Junior College, Auburndale, Mass.

She was a member of the Orpheum Choral Society which sings each year with the Boston Pops Orchestra, a member of the Decorating Committee for thd proms, chairman of the Building Fund of Cushing House, and member of the Lasell Crew for two years.

THREE COLLEGES plan a joint evening at Pops on Saturday, June 16 at 8:30 P.M. for the benefit of their respective Alumnae Associations. Co-chairmen are (l. to r.): Mary Lou McCarthy, New Rochelle College; Mrs. John Lawler, Mt. St. Vincent College; and Mary M. Donahoe, Mt. St. Mary College.

"TELEPHONE NIGHT" at the "Pops" was recently enjoyed by 63 members and guests of the Framingham Council, Pioneers of America, under the leadership of President Sibson and entertainment chairman Gordon Croft. The entire floor was reserved for the Pioneers and their guests.

Boston's famed Esplanade concerts have drawn millions to the Shell on the Charles where relaxed informality blends with the dignity of the world's great music

The incomparable Fiedler at rehearsal.

It never fails to astonish a first-time spectator at Boston's celebrated concerts on the Charles that 20,000 heterogeneous individuals can become united, momentarily, by the magic common denominator of fine music into one homogeneous body. Dungareed teenagers, pince-nezed patrons of culture, weary office workers, professed calypso devotees—all sit in enraptured silence when Arthur Fiedler mounts the podium. No program rattles. Those who dare to whisper are quickly hushed by their neighbors. At these unique concerts pick-your-spot seating arrangements (either a rented folding chair, a blanket, newspaper, or, if you're hardy, the grass) and general informality seem to be conducive to complete concentration and utmost enjoyment.

With the concerts' world-renown today, it's hard to imagine that they almost flopped dismally at the start.

Premiere performance was July 4, 1929. The scene was set, with a fresh breeze rippling the reflected light-images in the river, the audience attentive and expectant sitting in a rose-gold twilight. Hush fell on the embankment of the Charles. The baton was raised, the music swelled forth on the downbeat. But the not-so-gentle zephyrs that were making the water look so picturesque played havoc with Tschaikovsky—and Bach—and Rimski-Korsakov—and everything else the orchestra played.

It got off to an auspicious beginning when a mighty gust whipped the music from the stands and sent a band of embarrassed musicians scrambling to retrieve the

TOPICS JULY, 1957

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
JUL 6 1957

(Globe Photo by Herbert Caprwell)

SEAGOING CONCERT-GOERS—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard of Hingham enjoy Esplanade concert in their boat after voyaging from Quincy Bay to Charles River Lagoon.

From Quincy in Outboard
Couple Take Easy Route To Esplanade Concert

BY PAUL BENZAQUIN

The Leonards of Hingham attended the Esplanade Concert last night—without once setting foot on dry land.

There is certainly nothing unusual about visiting the Hatch Shell of a Summer's night to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra fill the air with music. But to do so in a 16-foot outboard, starting from Town River Yacht Club, Quincy, puts an edge on the event which renders it far more Summery than could be expected—even from an Esplanade Concert.

The trip to the Esplanade area was almost entirely uneventful for Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard. They started out shortly after 6 on a placid Quincy Bay in their Bristol Bluefish.

After passing under the long steel finger of the Long Island Bridge, they began to see the wondrous sights of Boston Harbor on a warm Summer night.

Near Castle Island a Greek freighter, her paint work fresh sparkling, nestled close to the dock for unloading.

Further on, the great hull of the aircraft carrier Wasp nestled ominously against her berth. Aboard, her watches waved to the outboard enviously, then leaned again on their stanchions.

Beyond was Constitution Wharf, Coast Guard cutters, and the Boston and Maine Railroad bridges, snuggling close against the water in the high tide.

Here the Leonards exercised one of the distinct advantages of the small but commodious outboard. Whereas the cruiser would have to wait for the fall of the tide, Leonard carefully nosed his boat up to the understructure of the bridge, threw the motor to neutral, and pulled the boat under the low structure.

At the entrance to the Charles, they passed through the lock at the Lower Basin. From there it was only a short ride to the lagoon from which the concert could be heard as well as from the choice seats up front.

The Leonards had a distinct advantage over the regular Esplanade crowd—for they had a lobster salad supper with them, which they ate during the playing of Tschaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony—as admirable a piece of music as ever was written to accompany the eating of lobster.

Following the concert the Leonards headed their Bristol toward home, this time following the myriad of lights which described the outline of Boston Harbor.

While the major portion of the Esplanade audience bucked the stream of traffic crossing Storrow Drive, guiding sleepy children carrying heavy blankets and obeying stodgy traffic signals, the Leonards zipped across the bay at a pace only slow enough to pick out the sometimes dangerous flotsam from Boston Harbor.

They arrived home without having stopped at a single traffic light, waiting in a creeping line of cars, or inhaling a single lungful of noxious fumes.

The incomparable Fiedler at rehearsal.

It never fails to astonish a first-time spectator at Boston's celebrated concerts on the Charles that 20,000 heterogeneous individuals can become united, momentarily, by the magic common denominator of fine music into one homogeneous body. Dungareed teenagers, pince-nezed patrons of culture, weary office workers, professed calypso devotees—all sit in enraptured silence when Arthur Fiedler mounts the podium. No program rattles. Those who dare to whisper are quickly hushed by their neighbors. At these unique concerts pick-your-spot seating arrangements (either a rented folding chair, a blanket, newspaper, or, if you're hardy, the grass) and general informality seem to be conducive to complete concentration and utmost enjoyment.

With the concerts' world-renown today, it's hard to imagine that they almost flopped dismally at the start.

Premiere performance was July 4, 1929. The scene was set, with a fresh breeze rippling the reflected light-images in the river, the audience attentive and expectant sitting in a rose-gold twilight. Hush fell on the embankment of the Charles. The baton was raised, the music swelled forth on the downbeat. But the not-so-gentle zephyrs that were making the water look so picturesque played havoc with Tschaikovsky—and Bach—and Rimski-Korsakov—and everything else the orchestra played.

It got off to an auspicious beginning when a mighty gust whipped the music from the stands and sent a band of embarrassed musicians scrambling to retrieve the

TOPICS JULY, 1957

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
JUL 6 1957

(Globe Photo by Herbert Carroll)
SEAGOING CONCERT-GOERS—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard of Hingham enjoy Esplanade concert in their boat after voyaging from Quincy Bay to Charles River Lagoon.

From Quincy in Outboard
Couple Take Easy Route To Esplanade Concert

By PAUL BENZAQUIN

The Leonards of Hingham attended the Esplanade Concert last night—without once setting foot on dry land.

There is certainly nothing unusual about visiting the Hatch Shell of a Summer's night to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Orchestra fill the air with music. But [illegible] 18-foot outboard, starting from Town River Yacht Club, Quincy, puts an edge on the event which renders it far more Summery than could be expected—even from an Esplanade Concert.

The trip to the Esplanade area was almost entirely uneventful for Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard. They started out shortly after [illegible] on a placid Quincy Bay in their Bristol Bluefish.

After passing under the long steel finger of the Long Island Bridge, they began to see the wondrous lights of Boston Harbor on a warm Summer night.

Near Castle Island a Greek freighter, her paint work fresh [illegible] sparkling, nestled close to the dock for unloading.

Further on, the great hull of the aircraft carrier Wasp nestled ominously against her berth. Aboard, her watches waved to the outboard enviously, then leaned again on their stanchions.

Beyond was Constitution Wharf, Coast Guard cutters, and the Boston and Maine Railroad bridges, snuggling close against the water in the high tide.

Here the Leonards exercised one of the distinct advantages of the small but commodious outboard. Whereas the cruiser would have [illegible] the tide, Leonard carefully nosed his boat up to the understructure of the bridge, threw the motor to neutral, and pulled the boat under the low structure.

At the entrance to the Charles, they passed through the lock at the Lower Basin. From there it was only a short ride to the lagoon from which the concert could be heard as well as from the choice seats up front.

The Leonards had a distinct advantage over the regular Esplanade crowd—for they had a lobster salad supper with them, which they ate during the playing of Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony—as admirable a piece of music as ever was written to accompany the eating of lobster.

Following the concert the Leonards headed their Bristol toward home, this time following the myriad of lights which describe the outline of Boston Harbor.

While the major portion of the Esplanade audience bucked the stream of traffic crossing Storrow Drive, guiding sleepy children carrying heavy blankets and obeying traffic signals, the Leonards zipped across the bay at a pace only slow enough to pick out the sometimes dangerous flotsam from Boston Harbor.

They arrived home without incident, stopped at a single traffic light, waiting in a creeping line of cars, or inhaling a single lungful of noxious fumes.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,800
JUL 6 1957

(Globe Photo by Herbert Caswell)

SEAGOING CONCERT-GOERS—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard of Hingham enjoy Esplanade concert in their boat after voyaging from Quincy Bay to Charles River Lagoon.

From Quincy in Outboard

Couple Take Easy Route To Esplanade Concert

By PAUL BENZAQUIN

The Leonards of Hingham attended the Esplanade Concert last night—without once setting foot on dry land.

There is certainly nothing unusual about visiting the Hatch Shell of a Summer's night to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Orchestra fill the air with music. But [illegible] starting from Town River Yacht Club, Quincy, puts an edge on the event which renders it far more Summery than could be expected—even from an Esplanade Concert.

The trip to the Esplanade area was almost entirely uneventful for Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard. They started out shortly after [illegible] on a placid Quincy Bay in their [illegible] 16-foot outboard. Bristol Blueish.

After passing under the long steel finger of the Long Island Bridge, they began to see the wondrous sights of Boston Harbor on a warm Summer night.

Near Castle Island a Greek freighter, her paint work fresh sparkling, nestled close to the dock for unloading.

Further on, the great hull of the aircraft carrier Wasp nested ominously against her berth. Aboard, her watches waved to the outboard envviously, then leaned again on their stanchions.

Beyond was Constitution Wharf. Coast Guard cutters, and the Boston and Maine Railroad bridges, snuggling close against the water in the high tide.

Here the Leonards exercised one of the distinct advantages of the small but commodious outboard. Whereas the cruiser would have to wait [illegible] of the tide, Leonard carefully nosed his boat up to the understructure of the bridge, threw the motor to neutral, and pulled the boat under the low structure.

At the entrance to the Charles, they passed through the lock at the Lower Basin. From there it was only a short ride to the lagoon from which the concert could be heard as well as from the choice seats up front.

The Leonards had a distinct advantage over the regular Esplanade crowd—for they had a lobster salad supper with them, which they ate during the playing of Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony—as admirable a piece of music as ever was written to accompany the eating of lobster.

Following the concert the Leonards headed their Bristol toward home, this time following the myriad of lights which described the outline of Boston Harbor.

While the major portion of the Esplanade audience bucked the stream of traffic crossing Storrow Drive, guiding sleepy children carrying heavy blankets and obeying stodgy traffic signals, the Leonards zipped across the bay at a pace only slow enough to pick out the sometimes dangerous flotsam from Boston Harbor.

They arrived home without having stopped at a single traffic light, waiting in a creeping line of cars, or inhaling a single lungful of noxious fumes.

capricious sheets. Finally, with music anchored securely, they began anew. The wind at times swept the sound entirely into the Charles. At others it seemed to pick up certain parts of the orchestra and blare them into the audience's ears. All the instruments that were supposed to predominate faded to a whisper, leaving what appeared to be an orchestra composed solely of piccolos and drums. For a while it looked as if the noble experiment would be forever dubbed Fiedler's Folly. Clearly something had to be done.

Dr. William Barss, then head of M.I.T.'s acoustical laboratory, was hastily consulted. After studying the location of the shell, placement of the instruments within it, and the streets bordering the area, he concluded that the seating plan (the customary Symphony Hall arrangement) was the main cause of the trouble. Instruments with the greatest carrying power happened to be seated in the most sensitive part of the shell, and the brick apartment buildings across the street were bouncing the sound right back. The seating plan was hastily reversed, but not in time to advise the musicians before the next performance. It was a harried Arthur Fiedler who called to each man, "No, no, not there, sit over here." The new arrangement was, according to Fiedler, "like conducting in a mirror. Every time I gestured to the violins they were oboes." But the result was an acoustical triumph of blended sound.

Relieved of the responsibility of being concerned with "box-office," Fiedler is free to line up programs of really good music. The Esplanade programs are somewhat more classical than the Pops. Full symphonies, chorales, suites, ballets, tone poems and every other musical form appear from time to time.

The concerts themselves are the culmination of a long-cherished dream of Arthur Fiedler. During his studies at the Berlin Royal Academy of Music and years of residence with his family in Austria and Germany (although he was born in Boston) young Fiedler became familiar with the famed Biergartens where patrons could dine and drink to the accompaniment of a brass band. And traveling in England he admired that country's promenade concerts where listeners mixed music with soft drinks and sandwiches.

At the outbreak of World War I the Fiedlers returned to Boston where 19-year-old Arthur became a member of the Boston Symphony first as a second violinist, then as violinist, while also doubling on celesta, piano and organ. Later he organized, in 1924, a sinfonietta of 25 pieces, with which he toured extensively.

It was his habit to stroll nightly to Symphony Hall along the Charles River embankment. The sight of the lights of Cambridge blinking across the water impressed him that here was an ideal spot for European-style concerts, but ones with a classical theme. But convincing

(Continued on next page)

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

JUL 6 1957

(Globe Photo by Herbert Capwell)

SEAGOING CONCERT-GOERS—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard of Hingham enjoy Esplanade concert in their boat after voyaging from Quincy Bay to Charles River Lagoon.

From Quincy in Outboard

Couple Take Easy Route To Esplanade Concert

By PAUL BENZAQUIN

The Leonards of Hingham attended the Esplanade Concert last night—without once setting foot on dry land.

There is certainly nothing unusual about visiting the Hatch Shell of a Summer's night to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra fill the air with music. But to do so in a 16-foot outboard, starting from Town River Yacht Club, Quincy, puts an edge on the event which renders it far more Summery than could be expected—even from an Esplanade Concert.

The trip to the Esplanade area was almost entirely uneventful for Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard. They started out shortly after 6 on a placid Quincy Bay in their Bristol Bluefish.

After passing under the long steel finger of the Long Island Bridge, they began to see the wondrous sights of Boston Harbor on a warm Summer night.

Near Castle Island a Greek freighter, her paint work fresh and sparkling, nestled close to the dock for unloading.

Further on, the great hull of the aircraft carrier Wasp nestled ominously against her berth. Aboard, her watches waved to the outboard enviously, then leaned again on their stanchions.

Beyond was Constitution Wharf, Coast Guard cutters, and the Boston and Maine Railroad bridges, snuggling close against the water in the high tide.

Here the Leonards exercised one of the distinct advantages of the small but commodious outboard. Whereas the cruiser would have to wait for the fall of the tide, Leonard carefully nosed his boat up to the understructure of the bridge, threw the motor to neutral, and pulled the boat under the low structure.

At the entrance to the Charles, they passed through the lock at the Lower Basin. From there it was only a short ride to the lagoon from which the concert could be heard as well as from the choice seats up front.

The Leonards had a distinct advantage over the regular Esplanade crowd—for they had a lobster salad supper with them, which they ate during the playing of Tschaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony—as admirable a piece of music as ever was written to accompany the eating of lobster.

Following the concert the Leonards headed their Bristol toward home, this time following the myriad of lights which describe the outline of Boston Harbor.

While the major portion of the Esplanade audience bucked the stream of traffic crossing Storrow Drive, guiding sleepy children carrying heavy blankets and obeying stodgy traffic signals, the Leonards zipped across the bay at a pace only slow enough to pick out the sometimes dangerous flotsam from Boston Harbor.

They arrived home without having stopped at a single traffic light, waiting in a creeping line of cars, or inhaling a single lungful of noxious fumes.

capricious sheets. Finally, with music anchored securely, they began anew. The wind at times swept the sound entirely into the Charles. At others it seemed to pick up certain parts of the orchestra and blare them into the audiences' ears. All the instruments that were supposed to predominate faded to a whisper, leaving what appeared to be an orchestra composed solely of piccolos and drums. For a while it looked as if the noble experiment would be forever dubbed Fiedler's Folly. Clearly something had to be done.

Dr. William Burss, then head of MIT's acoustical laboratory, was hastily consulted. After studying the location of the shell, placement of the instruments within it, and the streets bordering the area, he concluded that the seating plan (the customary Symphony Hall arrangement) was the main cause of the trouble. Instruments with the greatest carrying power happened to be seated in the most sensitive part of the shell, and the brick apartment buildings across the street were bouncing the sound right back. The seating plan was hastily reversed, but not in time to advise the musicians before the next performance. It was a harried Arthur Fiedler who called to each man, "No, no, not there, sit over here." The new arrangement was, according to Fiedler, "like conducting in a mirror. Every time I gestured to the violins they were oboes." But the result was an acoustical triumph of blended sound.

Relieved of the responsibility of being concerned with "box-office," Fiedler is free to line up programs of really good music. The Esplanade programs are somewhat more classical than the Pops. Full symphonies, chorales, suites, ballets, tone poems and every other musical form appear from time to time.

The concerts themselves are the culmination of a long-cherished dream of Arthur Fiedler. During his studies at the Berlin Royal Academy of Music and years of residence with his family in Austria and Germany (although he was born in Boston) young Fiedler became familiar with the famed Biergartens where patrons could dine and drink to the accompaniment of a brass band. And traveling in England he admired that country's promenade concerts where listeners mixed music with soft drinks and sandwiches.

At the outbreak of World War I the Fiedlers returned to Boston where 19-year-old Arthur became a member of the Boston Symphony first as a second violinist, then as violinist, while also doubling on celesta, piano and organ. Later he organized, in 1924, a sinfonietta of 25 pieces, with which he toured extensively.

It was his habit to stroll nightly to Symphony Hall along the Charles River embankment. The sight of the lights of Cambridge blinking across the water impressed him that here was an ideal spot for European-style concerts, but ones with a classical theme. But convincing the right people wasn't easy. They felt that this type of entertainment simply wouldn't click with the American public, already perfectly pleased with the more frivolous music of the outdoor band concert. Long-hair stuff, they said, would hang heavy in the summer night air. Fiedler was undaunted. For four years he personally campaigned in the homes of the wealthy where the sinfonietta gave private concerts. Donations solicited from these music lovers provided enough for him to begin the new battle to persuade the Metropolitan District Commission, owners of the Esplanade property. There were additional problems to contend with here, like insuring public safety. Officials feared that since there would be no formal entrances or exits there might be a question of traffic snarls, not to mention possible rowdyism. The Chief of Police warned that his men might have to "use the wood" on unruly ones. But at length, dubiously, they agreed.

(Continued on next page)

Shirtsleeve Symphonies

(Continued)

The present shell, known as the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell, is the fourth to stand on that spot. The first shell was a wooden one, considerably smaller and made in sections to be disassembled and stored for the winter. With the concerts such a success, Fiedler wanted to increase its size by adding an apron with a sounding board projection. Engineers' calculations, however, indicated this might succeed only in toppling the whole thing over. Thus, the original shell was "retired." Shell No. 2 was larger, of steel plates bolted together and lined with wood. In another five years it was followed by No. 3. A few years later Attorney General Paul Dever (later governor) came across a forgotten fund left by one Maria Hatch to be invested in creating a public beauty spot in perpetuation of the memory of her brother. The MDC suggested to Fiedler that a beautiful new music shell would fulfill all the requirements of the bequest.

So, in 1940, the Hatch Memorial Shell was dedicated. It is constructed of granite lined in teakwood. The facing is of pink and green marble. Underground are dressing rooms, air conditioning and heating units and a rehearsal studio. If you're one of those compulsive counters who pass waiting time by estimating the number of bricks in a wall or pipes in the church organ, perhaps you've discovered there are 50 famous musical names inscribed on the Hatch Shell, chosen by ballot of 70 musicians from a list of 97 possibles (only deceased composers to avoid controversy).

The Esplanade concerts depend nowadays solely on the generosity of the public and on a percentage of the chair rental intake. In the past few years, too, Boston business has joined in sponsorship. It's possible at year's end to dip into the Symphony treasury, but that also has a dismaying penchant for dwindling away.

This year's season begins July 2 for two weeks (excepting the 8th) and resumes on August 12-17.

A morning children's concert on The Esplanade, Fiedler conducting.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
JUL 6 1957

(Globe Photo by Herbert Caswell)
SEAGOING CONCERT-GOERS—Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leonard of Hingham enjoy Esplanade concert in their boat after voyaging from Quincy Bay to Charles River Lagoon.

From Quincy in Outboard
Couple Take Easy Route To Esplanade Concert

BY PAUL BENZAQUIN

The Leonards of Hingham attended the Esplanade Concert last night—without once setting foot on dry land.

There is certainly nothing unusual about visiting the Hatch Shell of a Summer night to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Orchestra fill the air with music. Starting from Town River Yacht Club, Quincy, puts an edge on the event which renders it far more Summery than could be expected—even from an Esplanade Concert.

The trip to the Esplanade area was almost entirely uneventful for Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leo-

3rd. They started out shortly after 5 on a placid Quincy Bay in their Bristol Bluefish.

After passing under the long steel finger of the Long Island Bridge, they began to see the wondrous sights of Boston Harbor on a warm Summer night.

Near Castle Island a Greek freighter, her paint work fresh and sparkling, nestled close to the dock for unloading.

Further on, the great hull of the aircraft carrier Wasp nestled ominously against her berth. Aboard, her watches waved to the outboard enviously, then leaned again on their stanchions.

Beyond was Constitution Wharf, Coast Guard cutters, and the Boston and Maine Railroad bridges, snuggling close against the water in the high tide.

Here the Leonards exercised one of the distinct advantages of the small but commodious outboard. Whereas the cruiser would have to wait for half of the tide, Leonard carefully nosed his boat up to the understructure of the bridge, threw the motor to neutral, and pulled the boat under the low structure.

At the entrance to the Charles, they passed through the lock at the Lower Basin. From there it was only a short ride to the lagoon from which the concert could be heard as well as from the choice seats up front.

The Leonards had a distinct advantage over the regular Esplanade crowd—for they had a lobster salad supper with them, which they ate during the playing of Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphony—as admirable a piece of music as ever was written to accompany the setting of lobster.

Following the concert the Leonards headed their Bristol toward home, this time following the myriad of lights which described the outline of Boston Harbor.

While the major portion of the Esplanade audience bucked the stream of traffic crossing Storrow Drive, guiding sleepy children carrying heavy blankets and obeying stodgy traffic signals, the Leonards zipped across the bay at a pace only slow enough to pick out the sometimes dangerous flotsam from Boston Harbor.

They arrived home without having stopped at a single traffic light, waiting in a creeping line of cars, or inhaling a single lungful of noxious fumes.

BLANK PAGE

299

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

300

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

302

BLANK PAGE

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE

REWIND